Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor,

I read with interest the letter of Raylee Stevens regarding the question of origins which appeared in the February 3, 1994 issue of the Seahawk. I should like to quote from a book which I happen to be reading, Cosmos, Bios, Theos: Scientists Reflect on Science, God, and the Origins of the Universe, Life, and Homo Sapiens, edited by H. Margenau and R. A. Varghese. This anthology presents the perspective on the relationship between the scientific enterprise and the religious view of reality. Contributors include over twenty Nobel Prize winners and distinguished scientists from different disciplines.

1) "God created the universe out of nothing in an act which also brought time into existence....The occurrence of life arose in perfect accordance with the laws of nature....Homo sapiens is physically an evolutionary follower of the two-legged ape....But God endowed man with a soul." H. Margenau, Professor of Physics (Yale University).

2) "The ultimate origin of the universe may not be not only unknown but unknowable...there is no real way to find out what came before the Big Bang....Even if the origin of life can eventually be broken down to a series of chemical steps, subject to known physical laws, it will still be marvelous that those powerful laws have such enormous potential....there is excellent evidence that evolution did occur....But whatever is found can be understood as God's way of producing humans." A.L. Schawlow, Noble Prize for Physics (Stanford University).

3) "It is true physicists hope to look behind the 'Big Bang' and possible to explain the origin of our universe as, for example, a type of fluctuation. But, then, of what is it a fluctuation and how did this turn begin to exist?...I do not know how life originated....mankind developed in the more of less accepted evolutionary way from early forms of life....we do not understand this evolution very well—for example, the apparently large evolutionary jump which led to man's facility with language, mathematics, and related ideas." C.H. Townes, Noble Prize for Physics (University of California, Berkeley).

4) "The origin of the universe, at present, does not seem to me to be a scientific question. Scientific theories are usually validated by consistency tests, and predicative power, all of which are hardly applicable to the origin of the universe." E. Segre, Noble Prize for Physics (University of California, Berkeley).

5) "The origin of the universe is a mystery for science, surely for the present one. It is a disturbing mystery....The same applies to the origin of life and of Homo sapiens....The concept of God...helps us to make decisions in the right direction. We should be very different. I fear, if I did not have that concept." E.P. Wigner, Noble Prize for Physics (Princeton University).

6) "I cannot help but believe the conclusions that grow out of...work on the Big Bang....The origin of life was an inevitable consequence of the evolution of the universe, physically speaking....Homo sapiens, in my view, developed from lower forms by...processes of mutation and selection. I think only an idiot can be an atheist. We must admit that there exists an incomprehensible power or force with limitless foresight and knowledge that started the whole universe going in the first place." C.B. Anfinsen, Noble Prize for Chemistry (Johns Hopkins University).

7) "...life only starts at the level of a functional cell....How such already quite complex structures may have come together, remains a mystery to me. The possibility of the existence of a Creator, of God, represents to me a satisfactory solution to this problem." W. Arber, Nobel Prize for Physiology/Medicine (University of Basel).

8) "...if you look at the whole evolutionary process from the Big Bang onwards—the evolution of the cosmos and the evolution of biological life—I have a feeling that it all seems to make sense. It was as if there was a purpose in it all....the conscious self is not in the Darwinian evolutionary process at all. I think it is a divine creation." Sir J. Eccles, Nobel Prize for Physiology/Medicine (Switzerland).

9) "I am a Darwinian, even though convinced that neo-Darwinism only contains parts of the full explanation....Aware of the limitations of science, I have a religious attitude toward the unknown." R. Grant, Nobel Prize for Physiology/Medicine (Karolinska Institute, Stockholm).

10) "I seem to see some properties of matter, life, and our world that suggest design....I am impressed with the apparent evidence that reality is not pure accident. While science presumably will continue to provide evidence relevant to the existence or non-existence of design, I do not see how it can shed light on the origins of design, if such there be." G.D. Snell, Nobel Prize for Physiology/Medicine (Jackson Laboratory, Maine).

11) "My agnosticism goes so far that I am not even certain whether I am an agnostic....I often cite Max Planck: 'God is at the beginning of every religion and at the end of the natural sciences'....The search for these foundations (for instance, the structure of matter or the molecular evolution) which, as Isaac Rabi said, brings us closer to God, is in my opinion the noblest task of the sciences." V. Prelog, Nobel Prize for Chemistry (Laboratory of Organic Chemistry, ETH, Zurich).

12) "For the scientist who has lived by his faith in the power of reason, the story ends like a bad dream. He has scaled the mountain of ignorance; he is about to conquer the highest peak; as he pulls himself over the final rock, he is greeted by a band of theologians who have been sitting there for centuries." Professor R. Jastrow (Goddard Institute of Space Studies and Dartmouth College).

Unquantifiable, Intuitive, Mysterious Needs

Norman Lear, the television producer and founder of People of the American Way, in speaking to the National Press Club said, "Walter Lippman once spoke of the institutions of church, the family, education and civil authority as that old ancestral quarter which was largely responsible for purveying values to the society. As those institutions and their impact have waned, it is my belief that inadvertently, American business has come to fill the vacuum.... It is the overwhelming commitment of American business to not qualitative values but to quantitative values, to numbers.... Over the course of my career in television I have seen the rise of this pernicious dictatorship of numbers, this escalating need to feed the bottom line.... We define ourselves, our values by S.A.T. scores, by Nielson Ratings, Box Office grosses, cost-benefit analyses, quarterly profits, bottom lines, and poles, all of which exert an iron grip on our sense of the possible in or among our land and on our very identities."

The point he is getting to is that, "We have become a numbers-oriented culture that places its faith on what we can graph, chart or count, and is suspicious of the unquantifiable, the intuitive, the mysterious. A culture that has become a stranger to its own human, inner needs—which are, for better or for worse, unquantifiable, intuitive, mysterious—is a culture that has lost touch with the best of its humanity.... For want of a better term, one can call it the spirit-led or spiritual life of our species. Whatever we call it, we have long recognized its presence and accepted that it sets us apart; and yet as a student of the American Psyche, at no time in my life can I remember our culture being so estranged from this essential part of itself. One can see it is the loss of faith in leaders and institutions, the cynicism, selfishness and erosion of civility, and the hunger for connectedness that stalks our nation today."

Norman Lear supports and clarifies my own thinking as I find myself constantly bombarded by horrible stories of violence and abuse that daily confirm my belief that we have lost touch with some dimension of our humanness that is essential to our individual and corporate well-being. And I believe it is our personal and communal spirituality that has become either lost or marginalized in religious institutions that have not found a way to connect with the new level of challenges brought on by our evolving society.

Most of us realize that the era of individual nation states able to be self-sufficient in meeting their economic and social needs is over. Our religious structures have not seriously begun to grapple with that reality and still appear to our world as separate and distinct and often antagonistic one to another. As such they have not yet been able to become the vehicles that adequately address the spiritual hunger that Norman Lear discerns and names. New global realities have forced upon our economic perspectives and our national defense perspectives. Our religious institutions need to open themselves to the new realities of the inner-connectedness of the human family, on one hand, and the incredible struggle, anguish and despair of vast segments of our own society that have no connection with denominational perspectives or theological constraints.

Spirituality is a term that has taken on new life and is in danger of being overused, but, at the same time, it does point to a broader understanding of a dimension of human existence that all people share, broader than the present connotation that we give to the term "religion" or "religious." I believe Norman Lear is correct in identifying this malaise at the heart of our number-oriented society. I also believe that all of the spirituality that we are hearing about, labeling and often discarding as "New Age" or "Far Out" represent our human search for meaning in a world that seems to have lost just that reality.

Norman Lear challenges me and I think all people who claim to be religious to open our heart and minds to new ways of thinking, ways of thinking that are marked by inclusiveness, redefinition of theological terms, new interpretations of biblical principles and a radical willingness to give up certainty in order to join, not with like minded people, but with persons who think and behave in ways radically different from our own, all in a quest to discover the nature of our common spiritual journey.

To focus on our own personal spirituality is self-serving. To move beyond our personal spirituality into new coalitions of persons acknowledging the value of a communal quest for meaning is the most effective avenue towards helping humankind meet our deep human unquantifiable, intuitive, mysterious needs and "the hunger for connectedness that stalks our nation today."

Television Violence Out of Control

ATLANTA — "In my field of psychology, there's a lot of ambiguity," Arnold P. Goldstein admits. "But after a while, there's enough research to say we have facts."

This, he says, is a fact: Television violence begets real-world violence.

Goldstein, director of the Center for Research on Aggression at Syracuse University, is here as the featured consultant at a two-day conference on school violence. He has made a major sideline of instructing professionals—this time members of the National Association of School Psychologists—in ways of reducing violence. His books on teaching social skills to anti-social youth—"skill streaming," he calls it—are respected across the nation.

But he believes his work would be a good deal easier if television weren't so doggedly violent.

"There's just no question of the effect of television," he tells me. "Literally hundreds of studies all point to this conclusion. The only people who seriously question the link—like the tobacco industry questioning the link between cigarette smoking and cancer—are the TV people themselves, and even many of them are coming around."

Goldstein lists three main categories of effects: The aggression effect, the victim effect and the bystander effect.

The first includes so-called copycat violence. "There are 188 separate studies, involving 244,000 viewers, showing that a substantial number of viewers will become more aggressive, more violent after watching violent TV shows. Younger children are affected more than older ones, boys more than girls. In terms of types of show, the violently erotic are the worst."

He said studies show that there is more copying of violent acts when the violence is justified and/or rewarded in the script, when it involves how-to specifics and when it is shown as relatively painless, or when victims of violence are shown quickly recovering from their injuries.

"The 'victim effect' principally involves an 'increased level of fearfulness about the world in general,' according to Goldstein. "What troubles me the most, though, is the bystander effect. You know, the Kitty Genovese syndrome. Televised violence increases the degree of callousness and indifference to actual violence. People who watch TV violence become less helping toward the victims of violence and display more tolerance for higher and higher levels of aggression."

Most of us know—or have strongly suspected—what Goldstein's meta-analysis of reams of studies demonstrates. Television knows it, too. The question is what to do about it.

For Goldstein the answer is something short of official censorship but "something beyond the tips-to-parents advice—sitting with your children, talking about the violence, monitoring their viewing, that sort of thing." But he doesn't know just what.

I don't either. The violence-content labeling recently adopted by the industry (following a major public outcry and congressional hearings) is a help, but principally for at-home parents of small children. Older children, including "latchkey kids" who babysit themselves until their parents get home, won't bother with the labels—except, perhaps, as a guide to which are the really cool shows.

Various channel-blocking devices could be helpful in locking out, say, certain cable channels. But what parent would take the time to check each day's listing and block out specific objectionable shows (assuming it was clear which shows were objectionable and assuming there were machines capable of such selective blocking)? And who, in households where parents can't tape tonight's "Jeopardy" show without help from the kids, would program those machines? (Okay, Mom, I've got it set so it'll only get PBS and the Gospel Hour. You and Dad have a nice evening.")

The violent influence cited by Goldstein—he says there are, on average, eight violent acts per prime-time hour on television—may be beyond the means of technology to control.

Indeed, it's hard to see what, within the confines of the First Amendment, might control it. The most frequently mentioned alternative is a boycott of sponsors of worst-offending programs. But there are two problems with that. First, many cable shows (including some of the raunchiest and most gratuitously violent on television) are unsponsored. And second, the reason TV operators keep bringing us this stuff that is scaring us, numbing us and, yes, killing us is that they are privy to our dirty little secret.

North Crosses The Delaware?

WASHINGTON— Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe. And now Oliver North.

"Heaven forbid!" say many Virginians about the prospect of North joining the ranks of famous Virginians seen north of the Potomac to serve high in the national government. The dismayed include the Republican senator who would be North's colleague if Virginia Republicans nominate and then the voters elect North.

Sen. John Warner says, in the around way some senators speak, that electing someone convicted on three felony counts would be wrong: "At the very time this nation is struggling against crime, what sort of signal does that send to the younger generations?" A signal they won't notice, senator, but never mind.

Warner was speaking or many senators who think North would lower the tone of their institution. Is that possible? Probably. Would he? Probably, but let's be clear about why. The problem is not just that he lied to Congress, which contains many people who lied to the public. The problem is not what North did but what he is.

His true convictions were overturned because testimony he gave to Congress under a grant of immunity may have influenced his trial. He has admitted that he lied to Congress, altered historical records and destroyed documents. However, what makes North fascinating and dismaying—like a wreck at the side of the road, at which you can't help staring, although it isn't pretty—is less that he often does not tell the truth, but that he sometimes seems unable to tell what the truth is.

He has vividly described one-on-one intimacies with President Reagan, although Reagan never met with him one-on-one. He claims to have had a dinner with Israeli General Sharon that Sharon says never happened, and on a day it could not have happened. North tells of a trip he took to a day it could not have happened. North tells of a trip he took to Argentina with Secretary of State Haig, a trip North did not go on. North has said that the late Bill Casey, the CIA director, was like a father to him, and that he, North, visited at Casey's house. Casey's widow, Sophia, says she never saw him. North says he attended Casey's wake "at the suggestion" of Mrs. Casey. "Absolutely untrue," she says. For more, see Rachel Wildavsky's compilation of Northisms in last June's Reader's Digest.

It seems that the only way to acquit North of being dishonest is to convict him of being loopy. Whatever, he is terrific on television and in the blather business of direct-mail fund raising.

He announced his candidacy on "Larry King Live," did network morning shows, "Nightline" and "Face the Nation"—quite a splash for someone trying to become one-hundredth of one half of one of three branches of the national government. On "Face the Nation" he was read a paragraph from one of his fur f-r-a-i-s-i-n-g letters, in which he says "an arrogant army of ultra-feminists, opposed to traditional family values, has captured the political process." Challenged to name even one, North hemmed and hawed and then declared the subject "irrelevant." There will be many such moments between now and the June nominating convention.

Some conservatives want North elected because they like him. Other conservatives want him elected because they dislike the Senate. But some people could want North elected because they dislike conservatism.

Identifying conservatism with this loose cannon on the pitching deck of American politics is a recipe for recurring embarrassments on the right. And it is particularly perverse for Virginia conservatives to contemplate nominating him, considering that his rival for the nomination is the most qualified and intellectually interesting non-incumbent Senate candidate of either party anywhere in the nation this year.

James C. Miller was Reagan's head of the Office of Management of Budget from 1985 on. He has a Ph.D. in economics from the University of Virginia and a shelf of his published works—seven books, with and eighth due out soon, two monographs, more than 50 scholarly articles (for example, "Marginal Revenue and Pigovian Second Degree Price Discrimination" in "Microeconomics"), and a stream of solid journalistic commentary. He knows the nuances of, as well as the large questions about, the federal government. Parsimonious, and skeptical about most federal undertakings, he is the closest thing to a Jeffersonian that the modern age can produce.

Unless Virginia Republicans are, as one newspaper tartly says, so celebrity-struck that if Madonna were living in Virginia and craving a Senate seat they would try to oblige her, Miller will be nominated and the incumbent, Charles Robb, may wind up wishing North had been.

Bats Out of Hell and Other Valentine Stories

You would not believe how many people think I'm needy, a regular charity case—just because I'm single.

Friends, family and people I don't even know are forever trying to fix me up with someone. They make me feel like a television set that's not a television set because I don't have a remote control accessory. (I thought about using a vacuum cleaner metaphor here, but worried some smart ass would make a wisecrack about a vacuum cleaner's function).

My already degreed friends ask me, "Don't you meet any men in your classes?"

Why, am I supposed to? Why do they ask such stupid questions? Now that I think about it, how'd they ever get their degrees? Yeah, sure, there are actually men in my classes. But I'd probably be arrested if I dated any of them—they're all younger than me. That usually shuts them up.

What do people want me to do? Waddle on down to Social Services and apply for welfare Valentines? Give me a break. There's no such thing as a "heart stamps" good at select stores near me. I already checked.

My own mother is guilty. One time last year, she kept bugging me about meeting eligible doctors. I said, "Ugh, where have their hands been?"

"Now, June Grey, don't be rude." She always calls me both names when I'm in trouble (therefore, she always calls me June Grey). She was driving me crazy about this bloody doctor business.

Just to satisfy her, JoAnn (a co-hort in divorcees) and I signed up for these golf lessons. My mother was thrilled. Off she toddled and got me a set of golf clubs to use. Like I knew what to do with them.

JoAnn and I trudged on down to the meg-bunt site looking as cute as cutie-could be. Yeah, Mighty Mom was right, nothing but MEN there. And yes, so were the good ole doc-our age, too, the raunchy old dinosaurs. It was a regular stampede.

Everything seemed semi-okay. JoAnn flirts like there's no tomorrow. Too bad it can't be bottled. My golf swing gets pretty good, but not ole JoAnn's. Suddenly, doctors are lining up everywhere to help her with her swing. Practicing their diagnostic abilities, I'm sure.

Finally, one guy starts trying to be friendly with me. I'm practicing chipping. "I'm a doctor," he announces.

"Uh humm," I reply. "That's my Jag over there," and he swings his club in the general vicinity of the parking lot.

"Uh humm," I reply. "Damn, look at my ball go. Great chip shot!" I'm busy here, son, I think. The doctor fella wanders off.

At the end of the week, JoAnn's swing is better in the old hips than with an actual golf club. The pro says I've got a great swing. I smirk at JoAnn, she just turns and bats her stupid eyelashes at this tall red-haired freckled guy. I figure him for a gynecologist and decide JoAnn can have him.

On the last day, the golf pro allows us on his precious putting green or whatever they call it. I'm so amazed at the perfect little blades of grass I plop my butt on the ground and start grilling him about how they get grass that way. His eyes roll and he walks away. I'm batting a thousand here, folks.

Figuring, hey, this is just like croquet, I go to town on that old putting green place. I'm having a grand old time. That dumb JoAnn starts hitting her golf ball next to the guys' golf balls. Having explained my croquet theory to her, she must think that's what she's supposed to do. And she has a degree? Lordy!

JoAnn, the helpless female, doesn't seem at all daunted by her erratic golf game. As for me, Miss Independence, I'm improving without benefit of the good of doctors' prescriptive advice. But then came the pool table theory. Again, my idea.

I share this theory with JoAnn that one needs proper English on the golf ball to get it in the little hole. That cracks her up and we end up stretched out on the ground, laughing like demented witches, calling out shots: eight ball in the corner pocket, stuff like that. We pretend to chalk up our golf clubs, balls start flying every which-way.

The doctors don't seem to appreciate our wit. The pro rubs the top of his head, checking I think, for any stray strands of hair. Maybe he's using Hair Renew or something. Anyway, he announces the end of lessons and tells me and JoAnn we've done so well we don't need any future lessons. Unhuh, and there's real hair growing on your butt, son, right?

My mother hasn't forgiven me for this little escapade. She even took my golf clubs away from me the last time she came to visit. Apparently one of the docs at the golf course was someone she knew.

Now that Valentine Day is almost here, she's at it again. Why don't you meet some nice man and settle down, she urges—on and on and on—AARGH! I've tried explaining to her I'm okay and actually pretty happy. I'm even somewhat well-adjusted. "But you're not married," she moans.

"And I don't want to be ever again," I insist.

"What self-respecting woman can do without a man?"

"Mom, if I want one, I'll get one, okay?" Jeze, you'd think we were talking about staple guns or something. Then I bit her with the big one and get her where it hurts the most, I brag, "I can put gas in my car all by myself."

"Oh," she sighs. "Well, that's different."

The Verge by Susan Glaspell

Does being on the verge represent being on the edge, brink, or margin of becoming a personal and free individual, or does it define the limiting, enclosing line that may drive an individual seeking unique individual sovereignty into chaos?

The Verge is an extremely important play that led the way with Eugene O'Neill's work, into the Broadway investigation of new dramatic forms. It is a fascinating infusion of realism with expressionism. This play has been mostly attributed to O'Neill but the Verge does question O'Neill's solitary claim to the creative drive of the new stage craft which is highlighted in the 1920s.

The Verge has been called Glaspell's most controversial play as she experimented with symbolism and an expressionistic set driven to explore her own individualistic fulfillment and her search for abstract idealism.

The characters are vivid and interesting not only as symbols but as human beings caught in a vortex of stress created by a culture that is on the verge of exploding against the immediate demands of set behavior. This play's cry for personal freedom in a sensitive world is as up-to-date as any current drive for acceptance and understanding of the uniqueness of any individual or group that seeks human respect!

Smile, It's Friday!

HAPPY FRIDAY! Now I realize that the statistical chances that you are in fact reading this column on a Friday would seem to be about roughly one in seven. However, in the words of one of my more astute professors, "everyday is Friday!!" Now think about that. If everyone went about everyday of the week as if it were Friday then things would go a lot smoother and the week would pass by much more quickly. There would be no Monday exams or quizzes, and no papers due in the middle of the week. After all, every test, quiz, and term-paper due date would be on Friday, where they belong. So, instead of spending four days a week wondering how you are going to make it through, worry instead about what fun you'll have (ie: reading a literal cornucopia of Biochemistry chapters) during the weekend. And by all means have a happy, supercalifragilisticexpialidocious Friday!

Moving now to local news, I have a story of bravery and persistence unmatched. I was alerted by former lab partner and semi-coherent reader Vince Bowman that his roommate and fellow semi-coherent reader Phil Wolf recently assisted with the recovery of a stolen bicycle. It seems that Phil (no relation) was driving down South Kerr (pronounced either "Kerr" or "Kern") when he spotted a suspicious man riding on a bike that bore an amazing resemblance to one that had been stolen from a friend of his. He then, in a move indicative of a future career in Campus Law enforcement, decided to follow the man on the bicycle. He jumped out of the car and commandeered the telephone at TCBY yogurt to alert the police.

Phil then pursued the criminal in a high speed chase (unlike the Wilmington police, he did not wreck his car) over to the Kmart parking lot, where he entered Smash video and this time alerted the UNCW Campus police. Just as he began to explain, the alleged bike thief ACTUALLY ENTERED smash video to rent a movie.—I promise I'm not making this up. The clerk, already alerted as to the situation, stalled the man until Campus Police could surround the building and move in. The suspect was interrogated and arrested, both for the bike theft as well as a plethora of other outstanding warrants. A special "Crime Stopper" HAT'S OFF award goes to Phil Wolf this week for his valiant efforts. By the way, if you happen to see a gray Huffy Yosemite 21-speed bike around, please feel free to recover it for me.

Moving to sports, congratulations are again in order for the UNCW Men's basketball team. They are still at the top of the conference, and in a great position to finish number one. I cannot mention basketball however, without addressing an increasingly noticeable problem. Last week at the Chicago State game, the visitors were wearing Green jerseys with Gold trim. The Seahawks were clad in their White jerseys with a Navy Blue trim. Why then, does the Nationally ranked UNCW cheerleading squad do the "Green-Gold" cheer at such a game (or any game for that matter). Our colors are no longer green and gold. No one knows exactly what they are, but they are definitely no longer green and gold. Could I say it again; our colors are NO LONGER GREEN AND GOLD. Now please don't make me out to be a anti-cheerleader, I'm not even upset that they NEVER throw me a shirt or can hugger. I just think something needs to be done about the green-gold cheer.

In national news, I saw on some talk show the other day that there is a group of hermaphrodites that are going to form a private colony somewhere out in Oklahoma. This group of androgynes (I'm a Biology major, you'll probably have to look that word up) citizens haven't made a name yet for their town, but I can imagine a few. I guess it would be an interesting place though, with no need for separate bathrooms, nor a separate men's and women's department at the local Walmart (do they wear briefs, boxers, or panties??). Anyhow, I imagine that the character "Pa" from Saturday Night Live (and perhaps even Michael Jackson) may have finally found his/her place in life.

The HAT'S OFF award this week goes to—are you ready for this—a member of the registrar's office. I recently had to get some more transcripts sent to the medical schools because of a grade change. Ms. Kay McClan, records clerk with the registrar's office, was more than pleasant and attentive to my needs. Besides that, she even admitted that she was a semi-coherent reader. Hat's Off to Kay for the excellent job she does, and for the way she does it. I always give credit where it's due.

There is no SHOE'S OFF award this week because heck, it's Friday. No one should get a Shoe's Off award on Friday.

I must give special mention this week about Dr. Gerald Shimm, who was ill at the end of last semester and during the holidays. Dr. Shimm is back and, in his own words, "glad to be vertical." Well wishes for a complete recovery.

Well, that about wraps things up for this week's edition. Tune in next time for more exciting stories and commentary thereon. As is customary your comments, criticisms and homemade deserts are always welcomed. And just as a reminder, there are only about twenty more shopping days until my February 28 birthday. Until next time... keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

"Thank Goodness We Can't Shovel Rain!"

A review of Charlie Rivenbark's Restaurant

By D. Neal Leeper
Entertainment Editor

For months, I have been driving past the infamous "Charlie Rivenbark's Restaurant" on South College Road. I have been intrigued by the ever-changing signage but never dropped by.

On Monday night, after reading the "Thank Goodness we don't shovel rain," I finally bit the bullet and made my dinner plans at the "Cafe de Rivenbark!"

I walked in the restaurant around 6:30pm and I noticed several things right off hand. First, the sanitation rating was an A. This fact is quite important and should always be considered before eating in an establishment. Second, the setting is very cozy and clean. The carpets were vacuumed and unused tables were cleared off. Third, the wait staff all wore these cute little country straw hats that implied the "down South" attitude and atmosphere.

The "Tonight's Specials" board was clearly displayed at the head of the restaurant. My friend and I quickly found a booth and absorbed the atmosphere.

Soon after we sat down, the waitress, for whom we will call Rhonda (because that's her name) took our drink orders. My friend ordered a Coke, but Rivenbark's serves only Pepsi products. He settled for a tea, which was quite good.

The menu was very easy to read and had many options to choose from. Items present ranged from ribeye steaks to blackened chicken sandwiches. A special insert listed all of the fresh vegetables of the day. My favorite, okra, was on the menu, but, unfortunately,

Service: A (friendly and efficient)
Signage: A++++ (very funny stuff on the board outside)
Food Quality: B+ (nothing in Wilmington is THAT good) Pricing: B+ (could be a little bit cheaper)
Overall Grade: A

were mixed with tomatoes, my least favorite.

Anyway, I took advantage of one of the specials, chicken salad with my choice of three vegetables. I picked the green beans, candied yams, and mashed potatoes with gravy and paid $5.95 for it.

The food was delivered quickly and everything that should be warm, was warm. The chicken salad, which was supposed to be cold, was cold. The refills of Diet Pepsi kept coming and I was very satisfied, in general, with the meal.

Anyway, after good conversation, Rhonda asked if we were interested in dessert. I can't remember all the items on the dessert menu, but there were about nine homemade pies available. I chose the Hershey Bar Pie. Excellent.

Over all, the experience at Charlie Rivenbark's Restaurant was wonderful. I checked around with a few people for some other opinions and found one student, Jason Thompson, who said, "It's just a revamped Salt Works."

So, I leave it up to you, my faithful readers, to make your own opinions. Charlie Rivenbark's Restaurant is located on South College Road and takes Visa, MasterCard, and Discover.

A Little "Texas Tattoo"

By D. Neal Leeper
Entertainment Editor

Was the admission price of $10.00 to The Gibson/Miller Band last Friday at the Palomino worth the price? Definitely.

As the band took the stage around 10:45pm, the crowd went crazy. No sooner had they picked up their instruments, the strong sound of the new country funk filled the air. The band members took the stage "like a turbo-charged John Deere, mixing the aggressiveness of rock with traditional country's homespun simplicity and sincerity, creating a hybrid that's especially pleasing to the ears."

The band played their hottest hits, "Where There's Smoke," "Texas Tattoo," "Stoos Cold Country," and more for close to two hours. When they finished, they were brought back on stage for a couple more hits. They eventually left the stage around 12:45 and the DJ took over.

I have only heard the Gibson/Miller Band's CD once, but the sound of them in concert caused me to purchase my own copy. If you missed the band in Wilmington, you can catch them at The Palomino in Greensboro, N.C. on February 18th.

Concert Rating: A

Here Comes Dave!

For Dave Matthews, the band's namesake and lead guitarist, making music is about "lifting spirits. It's a good focus: to try to bring people together rather than to separate them." Says one critic, "The Dave Matthews Band strike a unique pose somewhere between Appalachian folk, laid back neo-hippie rock and double-jointed pop jazz." Describe it how you will, The Dave Matthews Band plays from the heart. Their music is expression in the highest order. What happens on stage between these five musicians is magic.

Dave Matthews began to assemble the players in 1991 to accompany him on a demo tape of original song. Then a bartender at a Charlottesville, Virginia, jazz venue, Matthews says he aimed high, approaching the musicians he respected the most.

Seasoned jazz players LeRoi Moore and Carter Beauford agreed to help out. The trio then approached Stefan Lessard, who at sixteen was already an accomplished upright bass player, about playing electric bass guitar for the band. When one of the tunes seemed to need a violin, they enlisted the string expertise of Boyd Tinsley. And the band was born.

Matthews says the band's vitality comes from the association of five strong individuals, each with his own interpretation of a song. His band members agree. "We take a lot of different influences and make something new out of them by playing each song the best we can play it. We're very American, as Dave says. Jazz, fiddle-style rock, it's almost a melting pot of American music," says Boyd Tinsley. It is this blend of influences that creates the band's rich texture. "Our music is written to be clear and simple," says Dave Matthews, who is the band's chief songwriter. "It's pop music with a pretty positive message. I hope it's accessible to everyone."

Dave Matthews (vocals and lead guitar) is a self-taught, lifelong lover of music who left his native South Africa as a young child and returned there for his teenage years after living in the United States and England. He credits his family with instilling in him an interest in music: Pop, rock, folk, and classical. Matthews draws from the traditions of many cultures from around the globe, finding common themes among their complex rhythms. For Matthews, making music is about uniting people.

Carter Beauford (percussion and vocals) is the band's chief songwriter. The son of a jazz trumpet player, he is himself a renowned musician, and has appeared regularly on Black Entertainment Television's "BET on Jazz with Ramsey Lewis." I was raised on jazz," says Beauford, whose jazz influence is evident in the makeup of The Dave Matthews Band. "Except for Stefan's bass guitar, we're an acoustic band," he says. "That comes from the early days of jazz and from the classical influence, too." The result is a multi-textured sound that offers new challenges to Beauford and the other band members. "There are so many different elements in our music," he says. "You really can't put a label on it, and that's why I love it so much."

Stefan Lessard (bass guitar) is a musician whose age belies his talent. An upright bass player who has played clubs since age fifteen, he was taped by Matthews because he "just had a feeling about him, his spirit, his sense of music, it's so much beyond his years." Lessard admits he feels lucky, but his band members say it's talent, not luck, that has brought him so far so soon. "The best thing about this band is that you get this potpourri of different styles."

Boyd Tinsley (violin, vocals) finds it strange sometimes that he abandoned the reserved precision of classical violin for the spontaneity of contemporary musical performance. "This was an area that I hadn't explored before," says Tinsley, who has been playing popular music since 1985. See Tinsley on stage with the Dave Matthews Band and it is apparent he feels the music. Boyd cuts loose and the stage is electrified. "When I'm really into the music my whole body, my whole soul is into it." The best thing, though, he says, is how much it matters to the audience, and to the players. "People are drawn to it," he says. "There is passion here."

The Dave Matthews Band will be at the Mad Monk on Thursday, February 17, 1994.

More Than Just A Bed And Breakfast

On Friday, February 11, at 11:00 a.m., Dr. Alan Watson, Professor of History at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, will present "More than Just a Bed and Breakfast: The Role of taverns in Colonial Society," during Cape Fear Museum's "A Bit of History" lecture series.

Colonial taverns offered their customers lodging, food and drink. They also provide a place where people could meet to share news and gossip, sometimes taverns served as the community's post office and they frequently furnished a forum for political discussion. Travelers found that taverns varied in quality with accommodations ranging from a crude atmosphere to cozy genteel surroundings.

Dr. Alan D. Watson, a scholar of colonial history, has taught at UNCW for twenty-three years. He is the author or editor of numerous articles and several books including Society in Colonial North Carolina: The North Carolina Experience: An Interpretive and Documentary History: A History of New Bern and Craven Counties and Wilmington Port of North Carolina. He is a member of the North Carolina Historical Commission and the N.C. National Register Advisory Committee. "A Bit of History" lecture series, presented on the second Friday of every month, provides a lighthearted look at various aspects of North Carolina and lower Cape Fear history. Lectures are free and open to the public.

Cape Fear Museum is located at 814 Market Street. The museum is open to the public Tuesday through Saturday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m. Admission is $1.00 for college students with valid I.D. Free days are the first day of each month and the first and third Sundays.

Dr. Thomas Loftfield's lecture on Charles Town and Barbados, originally scheduled for February 11th, has been rescheduled for April.

Richardson will go to Washington, D.C. in April for the National Design Competition. The final winner will receive a free trip to New York to work with Broadway fashion designers.

It will be two to three weeks before UNCW is notified about other possible awards from the regional festival. Frank Trimble, the show's director and photographer said the production was given high marks from the loading judge. "The students represented the school with incredible proficiency and efficiency. They were incredible," Trimble said.

Fly Wright! is an operetta in two acts. It tells the story of Wilbur and Orville Wright and their quest toward human-powered flight. The show is a living scrapbook. It incorporates projected slides to introduce the audience to these men and the details of their journey. The music in the production is a mixture of pop, rock, jazz, blues, gospel, and country.

Dec. 17 1993 was the 90th anniversary of human flight.

"Our Voices"

BY ROLANDA BURNLEY
PR Intern

The UNCW Black Student Leadership Network capped off its second annual North Carolina African-American Student Leadership Conference with a banquet featuring the hosts of Black Entertainment Television's prime time talk show "Our Voices," Bev Smith, Saturday, Feb. 5.

Smith has received more than 200 awards and citations including the University of Miami Outstanding Journalist Award (1984) and the distinguished AIR Crystal Award (1990). She expanded on the leadership network's theme, "Empowered by our past to build a strong foundation for our future." Her call to order emphasized African-American knowledge of self as a means of increased strength, perseverance, and self-esteem.

"Know yourself," Smith urged, "and you'll be free." She also cautioned there are no failures, just many different roads to success, and warned students not to give up when confronted with disappointment.

Smith concluded by reminding the audience it is a "serious business about being black" and long past time to get down to business.

English Majors Fear No More!

BY MATTHEW BLACKSTONE
Contributing Reporter

English majors fear no more. The waiting list for writing classes will shrink in the fall. The UNCW administration has allocated money to the English department to hire three more writing instructors. The positions open are for fiction, poetry and composition writing.

These three types of courses have been traditionally hard for students to get into. Waiting lists are sometimes as long as ten students. Only five creative writing classes were offered last semester, and many of the openings were filled by non-english majors who are simply interested in writing.

"Writing courses because of their nature must be small in size," says Richard Veit, the English department chairman.

Students generally like writing classes to have a seat capacity around 20 because it allows for more attention to each individual writer.

There have been over 100 applicants for the three positions. The openings were advertised in professional journals across the nation. Applicants sent in their Dossiers, and then two committees narrowed down the number of applicants to seven.

Both committees consist of five members. Phillip Gerard is the head of the fiction and poetry committee, and John Clifford heads the composition hiring squad. After telephone or conference interviews, each narrowed the seven applicants down to two or three.

The last few applicants are then invited to the UNCW campus.

"It's hard to decide who to pick for the positions, and there is much competition from other universities such as UNC-CH and the University of Texas. We have our advantages though, an exceptional staff and a great location," boasts Veit.

The committees will begin making their final decisions Friday, a process that will take at least a week. The new instructors will be a welcome sight to English Majors. There are 300 English Majors plus 50 English graduate students, the new English Minor offered for the first time this year, will put an additional strain on the situation.

Financial Aid Awareness Month

James B Hunt N.C. Governor

Financial aid has helped thousands of North Carolinians obtain an education. Many of our state's leaders—including former governors of North Carolina, judges, civic leaders, educators, and other professionals—were financial aid recipients. Those who have benefited from financial aid over the years are now repaying the state through their talents, services and increased tax revenues.

Since its inception, student aid has helped qualified students in need of financial assistance to attend post-secondary educational institutions. Because student financial aid programs have changed with recent legislation, prospective students and parents need updated information about funds for which they may be eligible.

The North Carolina Association of Financial Aid Administrators, Inc. sponsors workshops and seminars to help school seniors and current financial aid recipients during this time to make families aware of aid that is available and the process for applying for that aid. The work this association does is important, and should be encouraged.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JAMES B. HUNT JR., Governor of the State of North Carolina, do hereby proclaim February, 1994, as "Financial Aid Awareness Month" in North Carolina, and urge our citizens and our students to learn more about the process of applying for financial assistance in order that even more individuals may have the opportunity to further their education in North Carolina.

From Cartoons to College

BY JOHN ZIMMERMAN
Contributing Reporter

Ned T. Crigler, child prodigy, went from elementary school to college in just two years. His parents took him out of Belamy Elementary school, here in Wilmington, two years ago and started home-schooling him.

Not even a teenager, Ned has already learned algebra, geometry, and five computer languages, including Logo, Pascal, Basic, C, and C++." The reason we took Ned out of the public school," says T.P. Crigler, Ned's father, "is because he was excelling extremely fast in certain subjects that neither the school nor was I able to teach him."

At 18 months, Ned was flipping through one book after the other. He learned to read before he could walk. He became interested in computers when he was four years old, after seeing his dad playing around on his home computer. "Ned instantly picked up on it," his father said, "and taught himself to program in Basic by reading an IBM computer manual."

Ned is going to pursue a B.S. degree in computer science at UNCW. He wants to go after a master's degree eventually. He hopes to be behind a terminal typing computer games and working for a large company, possibly IBM, by the time he is 18. Ned said he likes UNCW a lot. He likes the atmosphere and he thinks the girls here are very pretty. Besides being a little above average for his age, Ned says he's basically like any other 12-year-old. "I like to play with my next door neighbor's kid and jump on beds, scream, yell, you know, kid stuff."

Ned's favorite T.V. shows are "Get Smart" and "Star Trek: The Next Generation."

When asked if he ever felt pressured, Ned said, "Yeah, sometimes my dad makes me do 10 hours of algebra straight." He added with a grin, "He puts the questions and formulas on my head, my arms, all over...you, you know, I'm joking right? I take life as it comes, and I use my brain to fight it!"

If You Are Not On A Cereal Box, Who Cares

BY JIM CLARK
Seahawk Reporter

As a sports fan, the 1990s have been one load of crap after another. There have been some bright spots, but they are few and far between. Where the British have a royal family, America has sports. It is utterly ridiculous the amount of exposure sports figures have. Most of the athletes are only considered stars after they have a commercial on television. When will Americans wake up to the fact it is being brainwashed?

The latest "news" in sports has been the Tonya Harding-Nancy Kerrigan story. Somehow, I think this story has received so much attention because of the fact CBS lost the NFL, and its only hope to make money on sports this year is the Winter Olympics.

Who really cares about figure skating anyway? The gold medal winner in women's figure skating in the 1992 Winter games was who? I'll bet you don't know. It was Kristi Yamaguchi.

Because of the Harding incident, people will watch to see if Kerrigan will rebound and win the gold. The biggest loser in this will be Harding but Kerrigan will have to adjust to this ordeal as well. Most people know who she is now because of the exposure this has given her, but it is fair!

No, it is not. But the endorsement money has to go somewhere. When would we be without the daily dose of Shaquille O'Neal rapping for us when he should be out practicing his free throws? I am not taking away from his size, but he does not dominate a game like he should. Shaq will always make the highlight reel for his overrated dunks, but when the game is on the line, who do you think Magic coach Brian Hill doesn't want on the line? Shaq can rap, Shaq can dunk, Shaq can block, but Shaq shoots free throws like Chris Dudley.

You want to know who the best young center in the NBA is? It's Alonzo Mourning. In five years, let's compare the statistics of Shaq and Zo and see who is the better team player. By team player, I mean the one who helps his team win and when it counts most.

Speaking of "team players," do you think the Michael mystique has been overdone? I do. Michael Jordan was probably the greatest basketball talent ever to play the game. But he was not the greatest team player of all-time. That distinction is split between Magic Johnson and Larry Bird.

If Michael was such an integral part of the team, don't you think the Bulls would have a losing record right now? Michael was great, but he could still be playing if he hadn't tried to do it all by himself. This year's Bulls team shows that the talent was there, Michael did it his way.

Michael was great, but all the commercials he did were a joke. For goodness sake, he played basketball. It's not like he discovered a cure or negotiated peace or did anything that will be looked back on as significant.

Now Michael is trying to be the latest athlete to compete in two major league sports. I guess Michael just played third base for the Toronto Blue Jays before moving to Boston to play with the Celtics.

Many of you reading this probably believe Bo was the first athlete to overplay two professional sports. Not quite. Chuck Connors, who many might remember as Lucas McCain on the TV show The Rifleman, played for the Celtics and baseball for the Dodgers before moving to Hollywood. Jim Thorpe was an outstanding athlete in his day. The phenomena of two sports athletes is new to most only because of commercials.

One athlete who has reaped millions for his efforts has been Deion Sanders. Does he deserve all that money? Some yes, but all no way. Deion is an average baseball player (276 hits with a little power and no arm in the outfield) and a good football player as long as you don't want him to tackle anyone.

IdiDeon was such a great player in baseball, why did Bobby Cox start Otis Nixon? If you want to know who the best comeback/kick returner is, go to Pittsburgh and ask for Ron Woodson.

The athletes being paid large amounts of money to represent a product are doing the right thing. If someone wants to give you money and project you in a positive way, take the money. But don't expect everyone to jump on the bandwagon praising you. Today's athlete is judged too much by what commercials say about them and less on their actual accomplishments on the field.

I am looking forward to the day when athletes won't be looked up to as much as they are today and their overall impact on the game is left to the numbers they put on the stats sheet. Anyone playing professional sports is an outstanding athlete and deserves a pat on the back for their effort and dedication, but for fans to go gaga over an athlete is ridiculous. I hope Nancy Kerrigan wins the gold in Lillehammer, but I really could care less if she goes to Disneyland or has her picture on the Wheaties display next to the commemorative Michael one.

LovWell Week Feb. 14 - 18

BY ERICA BRANDON
Seahawk Reporter

LovWell week will be held Feb. 14-18. The purpose of this week, presented by the LovWell Center, is to show UNCW students how to cope with challenges of having healthy relationships in the 90s.

On Monday, Feb. 14 there will be an informational display and cartoon sale in the Hawk's Nest from 11-2 p.m. During this time you can register to win a framed intimacy print from ColorWell Frame and Poster Shop or a LovWell picnic basket. From 11:15-12:00 p.m. Dr. Paul Johnston from the Student Development Center, will speak about "246 Ways to Say I Love You" in the University Union Glass Dining Room. From 12:15-1:00 p.m. he will speak about "327 Ways to be Romantic." It will be repeated on Tuesday. Door prizes will be awarded. LovWell t-shirts will be thrown out later that night at the basketball game.

On Tuesday, there will be a presentation by Diane Edwards from the Reach Out Program, on "What's Love Got to Do With It" in the University Center Ballroom. Students will be encouraged to look at current, past and future relationships to determine how those relationships can become healthy.

On Wednesday, Feb. 16, in the University Union Glass Dining Room, Barbara Jackson from the Student Development Center, will speak on "Baggage, Bondage, and Bottom Lines," from 11:15-12:00 p.m. The purpose for this presentation is to learn how to set healthy boundaries in relationships. At 8:30 p.m. in the Housing and Residence buildings, "No Greater Love," will be shown. A thought-provoking video on safe sex. Speakers will be Deborah Haywood from the LovWell Center and Diane Edwards from the Reach Out Program.

On Thursday, Feb. 17, there will be a presentation at 7:30 p.m. in the Housing and Residence Life building by Carlie Barbour from the Student Development Center called "Picking Up the Pieces After the Breakup." Students will be taught to walk through the different stages of a break up.

A note from the Financial Aid Office...To be considered for SEOG or Grants for NC Residents, you must send in your complete, accurate application by mid February so you have time to get your SAR into the Financial Aid Office by March 15. Contact the Financial Aid office about Financial Aid information sessions.

"Globalization and the Local Community"

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

Dr. John Eade of Roehampton Institute in London, England will be giving a lecture titled "Globalization and the Local Community" at 7 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 24, in the Randall Library auditorium.

According to Dr. Diane Levy, professor of sociology at UNCW, globalization implies a world focus. This topic is relevant to the Wilmington area because of its large port and being a tourist destination.

Dr. Eade is a member of the sociology faculty of Roehampton Institute in London. His areas of expertise are globalization, the sociology of travel and tourism, and contemporary ethnic group relations in London.

Dr. Eade will spend two weeks at UNCW guest lecturing in several sociology classes Feb. 16 - March 2 as a participant in a teaching exchange with Dr. Levy, who will be lecturing from Feb. 26 - March 13 at Roehampton.

The lecture is free and open to the public. For more information contact Dr. Diane Levy at 395-3420.

Small Business Center Award

BY GINA MATTHEWS
Media Relations

Supporting the growth and development of this region's economy, the Small Business and Technology Development Center (SBTDC) and its Marine Trades Special Emphasis Program, sponsored by UNCW, have received two monetary awards totaling $186,700.

SBTDC encourages entrepreneurial ventures and assists in the creation and expansion of small business. With 15 offices statewide, SBTDC provides managerial and technical assistance to thousands of new and established small business owners. The service is confidential and in the past seven years more than 2,500 clients, in this area, have called on SBTDC's expertise. Most clients are referred to SBTDC through banks, chambers of commerce, existing/former clients and community colleges with small business centers.

"We strive to achieve 'good' to 'excellent' on more than 90 percent of the evaluations received from clients," stated Ted Jans, director of SBTDC. "National statistics show that 75 percent of small businesses fail within the first 5 years; however, history at SBTDC indicates a 75 percent chance of survival for small businesses that go through our program."

For more information feel free to contact Ted Jans, director of the Small Business and Technology Development Center at (910) 395-3744.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Seahawk,

Last week's issue of the Seahawk contained a letter which I wish to comment on. It referred to the poor temperature regulation in buildings on campus. It seems as if most, if not all, buildings have this problem. Either the heat is too warm, prompting the need to open windows to allow the heat to escape and cool the room, or the air conditioning is so cool that you must wear a sweater or jacket to keep from freezing.

The problem of inefficient temperature regulation is certainly costing the university lots of money; money which could be used for more constructive purposes. Therefore, I echo the need to remedy this problem—right now, we're just throwing money out the window! As the great American Ben Franklin declared, "a penny saved, is a penny earned."

I also wish to applaud the person who submitted that letter to the newspaper. Unfortunately, that individual did not sign their name, as indicated by the footnote from the editor. I, along with the editor, wonder why that person avoided providing his or her identification. I suspect that the person did not feel comfortable speaking out, and therefore decided to remain their anonymity. It is unfortunate that so many students at UNCW feel reluctant to speak out about change, even when change is as non-threatening as the issue of temperature regulation in buildings on campus.

This matter of temperature regulation is certainly an important one. But what is even more concerning is the larger issue of why so many UNCW students feel reluctant to express what's on their minds, and then to sign their name to their thoughts. It would be a great benefit to the university if more students were willing to participate in public dialogs on how to improve the school environment, and to speak out for what they believe in. In the words of another great American, "can we talk?"

Sincerely,

John Coffey
UNCW Student

Dear Seahawk Editor,

The Big Turn Off, (not 'the big take off'), is a great idea for northern schools, and also those below the no longer existing Mason-Dixon line! Unfortunately it seems some people are over looking some important details regarding the Energy Conservation Contest. It is an effort to reduce heat, electricity, and water consumption. Heat is not only used to make buildings warmer during the cold months. Heat is also required to make water hot! People in the south do use hot water don't they? Or is it so hot that people prefer cold showers, washing their face with cold water, and soapy dishes with food particles on them?

Too often buildings are too hot or too cold, and people open the windows. This is not a new revelation, it is a problem! A problem that is literally throwing our heat and electricity right out the window! In addition this leads to the wasting of millions of gallons of water used by the air conditioning units. My suggestion is to call the physical plant at 395-3401.

My other suggestion is to conserve and recycle, each individual can make a difference. For questions on The Big Turn Off, currently going on and running through April 30, contact Joelle, at 313-0588.

Because I feel so strongly about these issues, my name will follow!

UNCW MEN TIED FOR FIRST IN CAA

BY ERIK TOTTEN
Sports Editor

UNCW (19-6, 7-2 in CAA) held on to a share of first place Tuesday night by defeating George Mason for the second time this season, 80-79. UNCW is tied for first place in the CAA with James Madison, who defeated William & Mary, Monday, 89-85.

With the win UNCW held George Mason in the low-70s for the second time this season and also notched their second victory over the Dukes this season.

UNCW starters scored all but two of the Seahawks points and four of the starters were in double figures. Corey Stewart scored career highs with 23 points and 13 rebounds and El-Sanadly pitched in 17 points and nine rebounds. John Spann was the sole contributor of the bench with a lay-up scored with 11 left in the game.

UNCW shot only 43.3 percent from the field but were saved by a surprisingly good 22-31 free throw shooting. George Mason was held to only 2-20 3-point shooting. The Dukes went 0-12 on three pointers earlier this season when the teams played at Trask Coliseum.

The Seahawks next game will be this Saturday at 7:30 when UNCW takes on William & Mary at Trask Coliseum.

WOMEN DEFEAT EAST CAROLINA

UNC Wilmington concludes a three-game road swing with a pair of Colonial Athletic Association matchups this weekend at George Mason on Friday (Feb. 11) and American on Sunday (Feb. 13).

The Seahawks women recorded their first conference win of the season with a 68-60 victory at East Carolina on Thursday, outscoring the Pirates 19-2 over the game's final seven minutes for the win.

Sophomore guard Amber Blank led four Seahawk players in double figures with 15 points as UNCW held ECU to just 31 percent shooting from the field. Myra Horton added 12, Kelly Norton 12 and Hannah Grady 10 points for the Seahawks, who connected on a season-high 28-of-32 free throws, including 13 in a row down the stretch.

The victory snapped a four-game losing streak for UNCW, which returns home on Friday, Feb. 18 for a CAA matchup with conference leader Old Dominion at 7:30 p.m.

Statistically, Myra Horton leads the Seahawks women in scoring (12.7 ppg), steals (2.9), blocks (7), minutes played (29.2 avg) and three-point field goal accuracy (.348).

Junior transfer Kelly Norton has been one of UNCW's top performers recently, averaging 10.8 points and 8.2 rebounds over the last six games.

As a team, the Seahawks women are shooting 39 percent from the field, 28 percent from three-point range, and 71 percent at the free throw line. Opponents are shooting 42 percent from the field, 39 percent from three-point range, and 68 percent at the line.

SWIMMERS FALL TO WOLFPACK

BY SHANNON MCBRIDE
SPORTS WRITER

The UNCW Swimming and Diving teams were defeated by N.C. state last Saturday, in their last dual meet of the season. The men lost 138-94, and the women fell 170-127.

The women swam a long 16-Event meet, winning six of the events. Top finishers for the women were Cameron King, 1000 Freestyle (10:35.62); Christel Smith, 200 Freestyle (1:57.62); Deb Kresho, 50 Freestyle (25.25) and 100 Freestyle (54.49); and Karla Zick, 200 Breaststroke (2:26.43).

On the men's side, Drew Whorley won the 200 Butterfly (1:56.95) and Greg Warren took second (1:57.78). Burak Erdem won the 200 Backstroke (1:53.56) edging the competition by 1/100th of a second.

The Seahawks next meet will be the CAA Conference Championships, held at East Carolina, Feb. 16-19.

SIX RECORDS SET AT CLEMSON

The Seahawks established six school records at the Clemson Invitational last Saturday, competing with Anderson College, Appalachian State, Brevard, The Citadel, Clemson, Florida A&M, Furman, Jacksonville, UNC Chapel Hill, UNC Asheville, N.C. State, Shorter, South Carolina State, Spelman, Western Carolina and Winthrop in UNCW's third meet of the indoor season.

The 4X400 relay team of John Fernandez, Steve Benfield, Chris Bailey, and Terrell Macklin smashed the old UNCW record in the event by nearly four seasons with a second-place time of 3:20.2. Macklin also bettered the school mark in the 400 Meters, finishing second in 50.13.

Heather Fenton finished second with a school record 5:07.5 in the mile, while teammate Amy Jackson was third (5:12.4). Winifred Winston established a new standard in the 800 Meters, finished second in 2:22.94, while Fenton finished third in 2:23.17.

Cameron McIver established new heights in the pole vault (14-0); Michael McDuffie leaped 45-2 1/2 to finish third in the triple jump; and Cynthia Peters was third in the 400 Meters (59.97). Personal bests were turned in by Frank Ingrassia in the Mile (4:20.6), Thomas Coughlin in the 3,000 Meters (9:00.5) and Tricia Callison in the 3,000 Meters (10:59.0).

Senior Athlete Profile

BY JOELLE KIBLER
Sports Writer

Brian Smith is a senior pitcher on this year's UNCW Men's Baseball team. This native of Salisbury, North Carolina will graduate in the Spring of 1995 with a degree in Physical Education.

Brian got interested in playing baseball at the age of five from his dad, who happened to be his "Pee-Wee" baseball coach. Brian started pitching when he was eight years old on the Little League Baseball team. In Junior High Brian played shortstop and was voted Most Improved Player. Entering High School, Brian tried out for outfield instead of a pitcher, so he would be about to hit. But on the first day of try-outs, Brian broke his left ankle running bases and missed the entire try-out period. He still made the Junior Varsity team as an outfielder and after five games, Brian was asked to be the starting pitcher on the Varsity team. (This was a surprise to Brian because no one on the High School level had ever seen him pitch.) But unfortunately on that Sunday before going to the Varsity team, Brian hurt his ankle again playing basketball.

Therefore he finished that year playing the last couple games - the season in the outfield for the Junior Varsity team. Brian's last two years of High School, he played on the Varsity team mainly as a pitcher, but also some in the outfield. After High School graduation, Brian was recruited by Carolina and Wake Forest. By the beginning of August, Brian thought those universities weren't pursuing him like he heard Coach Scalf was scouting the Legion teams over the summer. Brian became interested in UNCW. A couple days after Coach Scalf saw Brian play, he offered Brian a scholarship. "It was so late and I was scared to wait around for any other offers, so I signed with UNCW," stated Brian.

Brian feels he has realistic expectations for the team this season. He hopes the team will win at least twenty of their sixty games. "We don't have the hitting and defense that we have had in the past, but the experienced pitching staff is the key to our success," comments Brian. Brian's personal goal for his final season is to stay healthy and have a winning pitching record. Brian feels that he has benefited from being a part of the UNCW athletic program. Brian would like to see the UNCW Baseball team travel further. He believes the school would get more exposure and praise if they go out to the Carolina's and Virginia to play.

Academically, Brian struggled his first two years because he only did just enough to get by. After he had elbow surgery prior to his Junior year at UNCW, Brian realized that academics were a priority instead of baseball, because he thought he might not be able to pitch again. So Brian worked to get his grades up and pulled his G.P.A. up by a letter grade these last three semesters. Brian states, "Coach Scalf has helped me a lot with academics by keeping grade reports and always on us about staying on top of our grades."

Brian has been very influenced throughout his academic career by Dr. John Bennett. "He has taught me to be inspirational and enthusiastic with what I want to do (teach and coach physical education). You can't be passive about it; you got to be excited, because if you are not, your students or whoever is watching you is not either," spoke Brian highly of Dr. Bennett. Brian's mom has also been supportive of him, especially during his elbow surgery, and she comes to as many of his baseball games as possible.

Brian's ultimate future goal is to be drafted by a professional baseball team, and if that doesn't happen or depending on how long that lasts, Brian would like to be a coach. "Basically it depends on my financial job situation as a dental hygienist. I may go on to get my Masters in Physical Education and coach at the collegiate level," Brian states. Brian also confidently comments about his future by saying: "I want to be a role model to the community. I think if I teach it will take care of itself, because I'll get the job done."

Brian has great leadership qualities in the weight room during conditioning, running, and on the field. He is the type of person that leads by example, instead of verbally. "I've always tried to pick the guys up and motivate them despite some of the negative things the coaches might say and try to emphasize the positive side of things," comments Brian.

Brian is a member of the P.E. Majors Club and is an athletic representative. He was voted Most Valuable Player his sophomore year and is a scholar athlete.

Brian sums up his UNCW experience by saying: "I've enjoyed the atmosphere and the environment of the campus. If I had to go somewhere and not play baseball, I think UNCW would be a great choice."

Tales From The Dumpster

BY ERIK TOTTEN
Sports Editor

This week we have a special episode of the Dumpster. I'm sure all of you are asking yourself, "What's so special about this Dumpster?" I thought they were all special. Well, right you are. This episode is EXTRA special because this week, for the first time ever, I am giving an award away. This award has been widely acclaimed in most social circles but until now I have never found an occasion to bestow such an honor.

Well, the occasion is here and (envelope please) the inaugural "Dumbass Fan Award" will now be bestowed. The award goes to... drum roll please... the two "fans" who sat behind me at the men's basketball game last Wednesday night! I will withhold their names to protect their infamous standing on campus, for now we will just call them "Beavis" and "Butthead".

Beavis and Butthead, as I said, sat behind me at the last home game. I was trying to concentrate on the game but the sheer stupidity of what these two were saying completely overwhelmed me. There is cheering and there is being stupid but these two journeyed far beyond "being stupid" to a level I will call the "Land of People Who are Barely Breathe".

Their vocabulary seemed to consist of about two words - Scrub and Suck. I took count the second half of how many times "Beavis" and "Butthead" said these scholarly words.

Scrub came out on top with a total of 147 utterances but suck wasn't far behind with 97. Everybody in our team and most of the people on our team, for that matter, were told that they were scrubs and that they sucked at least a couple times each. I could also give some actual quotes by these two but I couldn't stand to see it in print, there are journalistic standards.

I hope "Beavis" and "Butthead" are proud - this is an honor not easily attained - Congratulations... I guess. I have to hand it to them on one count though - at least they were trying to cheer, as pathetic as it was.

Before I close I have to mention one more thing about the game last Wednesday night. I went to offer a hearty GOOD JOB to our cheerleaders who still seem to forget our colors. On behalf of Chicago State I would like to say thank you for doing that wonderful GREEN-GOLD cheer. I am sure Chicago State appreciated it... since those are their colors and they were so far from home. All of you have hearts of Gold for giving the other team support like that, again, thank you.

That's it for now, the men's B-ball team is 7-2 and tied for first in the CAA, so come out and give them some support (rather than yelling Scrub and Suck). They deserve it. See you next week, same time same place.

Kayak Sampler

If you've ever wanted to try kayaking, here's your chance: "Beginner Kayak Sampler" with Scott Hornsby, the Southeastern Prison Representative, is being sponsored by the Office of Campus Recreation, Discover Outdoor Programs, HPER and the Office of Diving and Water Safety, and The Ship Store-equipment provider. You can learn about equipment, basic strokes, entry and exit in a controlled environment, and we will work with anyone who has a roll. This event will be held Sunday, February 20 from 1:00 p.m. until 5:00 p.m. in the Trask Swimming Pool. The cost is FREE!!! Registration in advance is required. Sign up in the Discover Outdoor Programs office in the University Center, room 138. This clinic is limited to 15 participants, so sign up now. All levels welcome. Please come join us in this new and exciting event.

News Briefs

TULSA, Okla. — A gunman opened fire inside a Wendy's Tuesday. The man, an ex-employee, apparently entered the restaurant, had an argument and then went back out and got a gun. He shot six people, critically injuring two. The gunman ran to the restaurant parking lot and started shooting at a nearby Taco Bell before police wrestled him to the ground.

WASHINGTON — Frank Kelso, Chief of Naval Operations, announced he will retire on April 30, two months early. The announcement comes on the heels of allegations that he saw and overlooked misconduct at the 1991 Tailhook convention in Las Vegas. Kelso said Tuesday he will retire early in exchange for a tribute from Defense Secretary William Perry that would absolve him. The Defense Department has recommended Adm. Jeremy Borda, the NATO military commander, to replace Kelso.

WASHINGTON — U.S. Trade officials fired a warning shot at Japan Tuesday, accusing it of violating a 1989 agreement opening its cellular phone markets to foreign competitors. The announcement could lead to sanctions and higher tariffs on Japanese telecommunications equipment. Other actions U.S. officials are considering include filing anti-trust suits in U.S. courts against U.S. subsidiaries of Japanese companies. The subsidies could be charged with helping keep Japanese markets closed.

TOKYO — In a surprise move, North Korea agreed Tuesday to let the International Atomic Energy Agency inspect seven sites believed to be part of a nuclear weapons program. The agency's board is set to meet next week in Vienna. The board was expected to declare North Korea's refusal to allow inspections in violation of international accords. North Korea had said threats of economic sanctions would be regarded as an act of war had it continued to refuse inspections.

WILMINGTON — Gov. Jim Hunt met with parents, students, educators and business people Tuesday night to discuss boosting academic standards. Corporations are able to fill only half their job openings due to a lack of qualified applicants. The forum at Roland-Grise Middle School was sponsored by Hunt's Standards and Accountability Commission. Hunt said, "There is a gap between what is coming out of our schools and what employers need." The commission was created to boost academic requirements. One goal is to develop a test by the year 2000, which students would have to pass to graduate.

President's Budget Proposal Eliminates UNCW's National Undersea Research Center If Passed By Congress

BY TREY CHEEK
Seahawk Reporter

President Clinton's 1995 budget proposal will eliminate UNCW's National Undersea Research Center if the proposal is passed by Congress. The UNCW center has a $3.57 million budget and a staff of fifteen.

An official at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said that UNCW's Center stands "a good chance" of surviving. Past administrations have attempted to kill the program, but Congress has refused to stop the program's funding.

The biggest controversy in the budget for North Carolinians is the president's proposal to increase the tax on a pack of cigarettes from 24 to 99 cents. This proposal is expected to bring in $67 billion over the next six years, according to Star News reports.

Cigarettes have been targeted for a tax increase because they are unhealthy and are considered by many to be a cause of the American health care problem. Rep. Mel Watt, D-N.C., said the tax is too heavy on cigarettes and should be spread more equally among other "sins".

Many Republicans do not believe the cigarette tax will be approved because President Clinton has not gained enough support for his health care plan. "I think health care, as Clinton is thinking about it, is a dead issue," said Sen. Lauch Faircloth, R-N.C.

Gov. Jim Hunt says that N.C. will lose tens of thousands of jobs if a 75-cent tax increase is approved. Tobacco is grown, warehoused, manufactured, or wholesaled by about 260,000 people nationally, according to Star News figures.

The president's budget does not provide money for a planned Environmental Protection Agency lab at the Research Triangle Park in Raleigh. A $1.5 million project at the Health Effects Research Lab in the research park is expected to begin its study of pesticide effects in children if the president's budget proposal passes.

Although the budget makes major cuts in military construction projects across the country, N.C. will receive the fourth highest amount. Construction at N.C. Defense Department installations would total $171.3 million N.C. under Clinton's budget.

The president's budget can be examined via computer VAX accounts.

May Graduation To Be Held Outside?

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

Years ago, UNCW's spring graduation ceremony was held on the steps of Hogarth Hall. The graduates, professors, and audience sat in the open field where the flags and cannons are. At that time, the university was much smaller than it is today.

Commencement has been held in Trask Coliseum for many years now. Paul Chamberlin, a senior biology major, is attempting to change that. He wants to see the May graduation ceremony held in Brooks Field across from Hanover Gym and Trask.

Four to eight petitions will be placed in each of the buildings on campus by Monday or Tuesday of next week. Although all decisions about the ceremony are made by the Commencement Advisory Committee, Chamberlin hopes that a show of student support for the outdoor graduation will influence the committee's decision. The committee is made up of 15 staff members.

The outdoor ceremony has benefits. UNCW's groundskeepers work hard keeping the school looking good. The grounds are a beautiful setting for graduation. An outdoor ceremony would also allow more observers. Students would still only receive five tickets, but there would be standing room for extra guests. Only ticket holders would be allowed to sit.

The outdoor ceremony also has drawbacks. According to Dolores Harvey, UNCW's Facilities Use Planner, there are two major problems with the idea: cost and logistics. Trask would still have to be set up for the ceremony in case of rain on May 14. There are four workers who prepare the entire coliseum every semester. The preparation takes many hours. Setting up both places would require additional time and effort which means higher cost.

There are over 900 graduating seniors this May. Add in about 250 faculty and five guests for each senior and that's nearly 5,000 people that need seats. In Trask, guest seating is already provided in the stands. The university only has to rent folding chairs for faculty and graduates. To set up Brooks field, all the seats would have to be rented as well as an extra sound system.

Harvey said the Commencement Committee's budget is tight. "We simply cannot afford it," she said.

Logistically, there is the fact that graduation announcements are already being printed. Trask Coliseum is the location listed on the announcements. According to the UNCW Bookstore, which handles the announcements, the process of designing, ordering, and printing takes at least a year.

Another problem is weather and health. Although May can be pleasant in North Carolina, hot weather is not unheard of. People with health problems or disabilities may have trouble sitting outside. Harvey noted wheelchair access as an important consideration. In Trask there are special seating arrangements for the physically disabled and hearing impaired. A signer will be available for the hearing impaired. "Comfort - wise it's not nearly as pleasant as Trask," Harvey said.

Seniors have a mixed response to the proposal. Most agree it would be beautiful outside. However, they see problems as well. One female student said she didn't like the idea because she planned to wear heels for the ceremony. "Have you ever tried to walk through dirt or grass in heels? You sink right in and your shoes get messed up. I know that sounds petty, but it's something to think about," she said.

The initial graduation ceremony will last approximately two hours. The seniors will be recognized as a group by degree. After that ceremony, each academic department will host a reception for their graduates and their guests. Diplomas are presented at these receptions. Some departments hold these smaller ceremonies outside.

Chamberlin will present his proposal to the Commencement Advisory Committee the first week in March. The petitions supporting the outdoor graduation ceremony will be in buildings until approximately March 28.

Black History Month

BY RENEE HILL
Seahawk Reporter

Black History Month is observed in February to coincide with the birthdays of Frederick Douglass (1818-1895) and Abraham Lincoln (1809-1865). These two men made outstanding contributions to the advancement of the black race.

Douglass was an orator for the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society. He favored women's rights, temperance, better working conditions and the abolition of slavery. He unceasingly opposed racial discrimination and spoke against the prevalence of lynching, the crop-lien system and anti-Negro rulings of the Supreme Court.

Lincoln's contributions include writing and issuing the Emancipation Proclamation, which signaled the end of slavery in the U.S. Despite controversy, the Emancipation Proclamation was promulgated on January 1, 1863.

Summit Focuses On College Pollution, Use of Resources

BY COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Universities and colleges waste millions of gallons of water and fuel every year while producing thousands of tons of toxic waste and carbon dioxide, environmental protection groups charge. In fact, the average student generates about 640 pounds of garbage a year.

Yet there are many things that campuses could be doing to change their environmental policies in order to reduce waste and to encourage recycling efforts.

That's the point of the Campus Earth Summit, scheduled Feb. 18-20, at Yale University in New Haven, Conn. Students, faculty and administrators from more than 125 campuses, including 17 foreign universities, will meet to craft a blueprint for environmental reform.

The summit marks the first time administrators will work with students and environmental leaders to create campus guidelines that can be replicated nationally.

Carol Browner, head of the Environmental Protection Agency, will be the keynote speaker. A special one-hour college edition of "Rock and the Environment" radio show, produced by the Yale Student Environmental Coalition and the Campus Green Vote, will be broadcast to more than 300 colleges the week of the summit to reach students who can't attend.

"From solid waste to radioactive waste, campus policies reflect society's poor environmental practices," said Jeff Courcy, chairman of the 1994 Campus Earth Summit and the Yale Student Environment Coalition, host of the conference. "Universities must lead us into the 21st century by becoming responsible consumers and educators."

Teresa Heinz, chairwoman and chief executive officer of the Heinz Family Foundation, lead sponsor of the summit, says campuses must accept a leadership role in environmental reform.

"Universities wield real power as major consumers of goods and services with significant environmental impacts, as educators with the opportunity to graduate ecologically literate citizens and as paragons whose behavior speaks loudly to their communities and countries," she said.

The biggest environmental culprits on campuses are solid waste, energy use, water use and poor procurement policies. Radioactive substances, toxic chemicals, medical waste, pesticides and air pollution are also pressing problems.

Here are some examples of how campuses use resources and what some colleges have done to reduce the waste, according to the Student Environmental Action Coalition:

•Only about 5 percent of the 640 pounds of waste produced by an average student is recycled. Paper makes up about 40 to 50 percent of the waste stream. Yet a University of California-Los Angeles recycling program saved an estimated 1,133 trees and 200 cubic yards of landfill space in its first seven months of operation. Rutgers University in New Jersey recycles more than 32 percent of its waste, saving more than $26,000 a year. Distributing reusable coffee mugs at Potsdam University in New York cut use of polystyrene cups by 58 percent.

•New York's Buffalo campus generates more than 200,000 tons of carbon dioxide, seven tons per person, through its use of electricity. However, reducing room temperature by 1 degree saved 20,000 gallons of fuel and $8,000 a year at Connecticut College. Yale University's switch from incandescent to fluorescent lighting is expected to save about $3.5 million over the next 10 years.

•The University of Mississippi uses up to 5 million gallons of water a day, and Brown University is the second largest user of water in Rhode Island. Research shows that "low flow" shower heads can save 11 million gallons of water annually.

UNCW Among the Top Choice of Incoming Freshman

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

The number of incoming students who rank UNCW as their top choice among schools is on the rise.

According to an institutional research survey, more students are also coming from families with college-educated parents. More students also plan to complete bachelor's degrees in four years and more plan to attend graduate school.

Bob Fry, director of institutional research, recently sent survey results to administrators. The results will be used to develop admissions material. Of 1,419 incoming freshmen during the fall semester, 1,311 completed at least part of the survey. Fry said that though students may exaggerate some information, such as how much they will work during their first semester, most of the results are accurate.

Seventy-six percent of freshmen listed UNCW as their first choice in 1993, up slightly from 1991, when 68 percent ranked UNCW first. Twenty-five percent said they applied only to UNCW. Twenty-seven percent cited its academic reputation as their reason for picking UNCW. Sixty-three percent ranked location as the top factor.

Chancellor James Leutze said, "The reputation of the institution is improving and students are in larger numbers viewing this as their first choice of institutions where they want to come to school and stay."

Fry said UNCW has undergone an image change, partly because of increased statewide coverage and a strong freshman recruitment program.

UNCW students seeking higher degrees is part of a nationwide trend, Fry said. "We're seeing that nationally," he said. "Students are more interested in going to graduate school than they were five years ago." Fry said this trend had increased steadily among science majors, but is extending to other majors. Thirty-five percent of students said they planned to pursue master's degrees in 1991. In 1993, the number was up to 40 percent.

Based on an article in The Wilmington Morning-Star.

Dealing with Uncertainty

One of the disservices that our culture does for us is to train us to think in terms of either/or. It is either black or white, good or evil, liberal or conservative, free or slave, introvert or extrovert, etc.

I don't think we live in that kind of world any more. We are in a state of change and flux in so very many ways. So many boundaries have broken down or dissolved and left us in some kind of grey in-between state of being, trying to find your way towards some certainties that will allow us to have enough boundaries to cease being afraid. The boundaries between East and West have come down. The boundaries in Yugoslavia, in South Africa are crumbling. The boundaries of patriarchal religion and a patriarchal South Africa are crumbling. Look what has happened to the boundaries defining the American family. Also, it wasn't too long ago that being an American had a fairly simple definition that included being white; that being black was easily defined in terms of the slave origin; that being gay was commonly understood to include being sick.

It is scary to live in the midst of such wide ranging uncertainty. We feel vulnerable and exposed and nervous, if not scared. Nothing is simple. We no longer live in an either/or world with clearly defined categories into which people and organizations fit. A lot of young adults I know are really struggling to understand how you define a good relationship and what does it mean to be masculine or feminine. How do you define a good marriage?

If you will excuse the biblical illustration, we are much like Abraham in the Bible who was called by God to leave his familiar hometown and settled life to go on a journey into the wilderness to some new place. The verse reads, "And Abraham set forth on a journey, not knowing where he was to go." We are much like Abraham setting forth, much like our pioneer forefathers and mothers setting out into the unknown. Seniors particularly know what I am talking about!

Some folks seem to be dealing with this kind of stress by hanging on to old boundaries for all they are worth, insisting that old images of family, old images of being a man, old images about homosexuals, old images of what is right and wrong are still valid. At the other extreme would be those who seem hungry for change and ready to give up old categories and leap right into the arms of the "New Age" Movement.

Most of us do not fit in this either/or description either. Most of us find both anxiety and anticipation as we try to move into our own futures. Often times I hunger for the simplicity of stable family life, stable church, stable professional life. At other times, I am truly excited by the adventure of continually redefining all these elements of my life and believing that there is increased well being in letting go of the known for the sake of something better that seems to lurk just beyond the far horizon.

What enables me to live in this kind of world and live with malleable boundaries is that there are a few basic things that are truly secure for me. One is God, not a God whom I control by being able to describe and define, but a God whose experience is as solid as a rock. Also, at the core of a growing, changing marriage there is a rock-like love that all feels solid and dependable. Thirdly, in the midst of a profession that is always changing and redefining itself, there is the same rock-like center that is caught up in the conviction of being called to do what I do.

Therefore, I would suggest that the most effective way of dealing with our changing lives and changing world is to invest significant energy in finding the rock in which we can ground ourselves at the very centering of our being. There are some fundamental certainties that we can find and rely on that will sustain us internally with shifting boundaries all around us. Do you have such a rock to sustain you? I hope you do.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor,

After leaving the game on Monday night, disappointment was the only thing I felt. Disappointment not in the team because they played a great game against the very tough ODU club, but disappointment in the fans. I'm not sure what happened between last season and this season, but the fans are just not behind the players. "Fair-weather fans" is what I would call most of the students who come to see the games. Monday night, our own fans "booed" the players as they left the court. Old Dominion played full-court press almost the entire game and we played very well against it. Also, ODU missed very few shots the first half; sportsfans, you can't rebound a made basket. Why didn't anyone notice that we played well and got beat? We didn't lose that game on Monday night. By the end of the contest, there were very few fans left to see that we closed the gap to ten points after being down twenty-five. So what's my point? We have two home games left; JMU Wednesday, February 23; ECU Saturday, February 26 both at 7:30 in Trask (that's the big building in the front of the campus). Maybe we, the students could show the team that we know they work hard, get to the game, and get on our feet when the are doing a good job. The last two minutes is just not enough. Have some school spirit, and support for the athletes.

Sincerely,

Debbie Coles
Senior, Biology Student

Dear Editor,

Scanning the front page of the Feb. 10 Seahawk, I noticed a disturbing article on the low standards of education in the U.S. and the low ranking of our country against others in test scores. Then I saw another article that gave the perfect solution - make students pay more for enjoying "extended stays" at the university and raise the full-time requirement to 15 hours.

By implementing this enlightened reform, students may finally get the message that the university is not the place for leisurely study, self-exploration, and well-rounded education. If that's what they want, send them back to Ancient Greece. No, the university is the place where you get the necessary credits and get out, so you can do the civilized thing and work. Why should the state fork out money for students to take an extra literature or philosophy class? That crap isn't going to help the economy. And by raising the minimum to 15 hours for full-timers, those of us who have to work can learn the American way - quick memorization, quickly forgotten.

I was worried there for a while that we might take some examples from those barbaric foreign lands (you know, the ones with higher test scores - not to mention lower crime, illegitimacy, and unemployment rates) and put more money into education. Instead, I'm glad to see that this country is getting its priorities straight about education and making it harder for students.

Rethinking Affirmative Action

WASHINGTON—Critics of affirmative action (or "diversity," as it is called these days) make two key arguments. The first is that efforts to recruit women and minorities lead to lowered standards; the second, that they encourage "reverse discrimination" and quotas. Why, they demand, can't we simply judge people on their merits?

Supporters of diversity respond that they, like their critics, would love to see the day when color-blind merit is the rule, but given America's history of discrimination it will take a period of explicit color-consciousness to reach that goal. What is needed, they say, is a period of deliberately fostered opportunity for those formerly shut out. After that, affirmative action will no longer be necessary.

The trouble, of course, is deciding when enough. Advocates say we'll just know; it'll be obvious. Critics fear that once race and gender preferences are accepted, those who benefit from them will never say "enough." How does affirmative action end?

It will a long time before this issue is resolved, either philosophically or practically. But the first year of the Clinton cabinet may hold a lesson or two.

To begin with, Clinton is the first president to make diversity a stated goal in forming his administration. His cabinet, he promised during the presidential campaign, would "look like America."

You remember the outraged reaction, particularly from the right. People who never lifted a finger on behalf of equal opportunity were suddenly solicitous of it. Gender and race don't matter, they insisted. It's time to end the hyperbation of America. Besides, minorities chosen because they are minorities will always wonder whether they could have made it on merit.

Yet here was Clinton, saying (as these critics thought they heard him) that the most important jobs in his administration would be parceled out on a quota basis: so many blacks, so many Hispanics, so many women, even a homosexual or two, with scant regard for competency. Wrong, wrong, wrong. But look at what has happened: a cabinet that looks startlingly like America. Five women, four blacks, two Latinos. And not just in the traditional posts. A Chicano at Transportation, a black man at Commerce, a woman attorney general.

pened. There's been scarcely a peep about the competency of any of the cabinet officers, and scarcely a complaint about numbers. Hardly anyone knows the precise numbers. They simply don't matter anymore.

What does matter is that Clinton has managed to convey the sense that no job in his administration is closed to anyone on account of gender, race or other irrelevancy. That is a breakthrough of the first order. And while it took an affirmative effort on the president's part—a deliberate decision to take sex and ethnicity into account—the result is not the feared Balkanization of the government but the exact opposite.

It will take another presidential term or two to confirm that the barriers to high office have in fact been removed, and there will be some prodding to name a Native American or an Asian American to an important post. But this administration has, I believe, brought us close to the answer to that troubling question: When is enough enough?

The cabinet, granted, is an appointive body, with no entrance exams or competency test or other ranking devices. Obviously diversity is more difficult to accomplish when spelled-out qualifications have to be taken into account. Presidential cabinets, that is to say, are not medical schools or corporate offices or newsmen.

Still, a year of the Clinton approach suggests, encouragingly, that when diversity is seen as a worthy goal, and when it is pursued unapologetically, with a view to dismantling artificial barriers, the people—the beneficiaries as well as the skeptics—come around.

How does affirmative action end? Certainly not with a trumpet flourish and an announcement from civil rights groups that some magic threshold has been reached.

It will end, I believe, when people really come to believe not that the numbers are perfect but that the system is open. It will end when we can, with confidence, simply stop counting and turn our attention to more important things.

ERA Debate Resumes

WASHINGTON—Were Madison alive he would die of embarrassment about what his state is considering doing to his Constitution.

In Richmond and some other state capitals, women's groups are attempting to resuscitate the Equal Rights Amendment. A Virginia legislative committee has refused summarily to dismiss, with the derision it deserves, the pretense that the ERA is still alive and can be ratified. The committee will consider the matter next year. By then perhaps the legislators will have refreshed their memories regarding the ERA and constitutional values.

On March 22, 1972, Congress sent the ERA to the states to be rejected by March 22, 1979. As has been customary since the 18th Amendment, Congress stipulated a seven-year period of deliberation in order to ensure that ratification would reflect a "contemporaneous" consensus of supporters said in 1972, if 38 states did not ratify in seven years, "we must begin the entire process once again." ERA supporters in Congress have implicitly conceded that point by regularly reintroducing the ERA, which no longer commands sufficient support even to get out of Congress.

State legislature responded to the ERA cavalierly, in several senses. Most of the 22 states that rushed to ratify in 1972—20 in three months—dispensed with hearings. Hawaii ratified it the day Congress passed it. Nebraska, hot to be the second, did it improperly and had to do it again. Then states began to have second — actually, first — thoughts, and the ERA's surge stalled.

As the seven-year deadline neared, ERA supporters sought and got unequal treatment: Congress chivalrously extended the deadline to 1982. And, stacking the deck, Congress extended it only for states that had not ratified in order to prevent any state from rescinding its ratification. This extension, which changed ratification rules after some states had rendered decisions, was declared unconstitutional by the only court to rule on it.

Seventeen years ago, in January 1977, four years and 10 months after the ERA was sent to the states, Indiana became the last state to ratify it. Indiana was the 35th state, so ERA supporters say that if the ratification process can be declared to be continuing, they are just three votes from victory.

However, five states, including pell-mell Nebraska, rescinded their ratifications before the 1979 deadline passed. Surely states had a right to reconsider while the amendment was still a live issue.

The extremists trying to breathe life back into the ERA make two arguments, the first of which is weak and the second is weaker still. The first is that a state's ratification of an amendment in a sacramental act, impervious to attempts to rescind it. The second is the 27th Amendment, which Madison wrote.

That amendment, limiting increases in the compensation of members of Congress, suddenly was brought back to life by the anti-Congress fever of 192, when after 203 years, a 38th state ratified it. Timidity prevented political leaders from vigorously challenging its validity on the ground that state decisions made 203 years apart hardly constitute "contemporaneous" consensus. However, this episode does not vindicate today's ERA supporters because Madison's Congress did not attach a deadline to deliberations about Madison's amendment.

The first 10 amendments were ratified in 27 months. The average time for subsequent amendments, other than the 27th, has been 19 months. No ratification, other than that of the 27th, has taken even four years. The 26th Amendment, lowering the voting age, took less than four months. Yet ERA supporters demand more than 22 years.

Today, nearly 22 years after Congress passed the ERA with a deliberation deadline, nearly 15 years after that deadline passed, and nearly 12 years after the extended deadline passed, ERA supporters want Congress to repeal the original deadline, rewriting the rules of the process a generation after it began. It is fitting that ERA supporters are contemptuous of constitutional process: their amendment radiates impatience with Democracy.

The ERA says: "Equal rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex." What would it do? No one knows.

Either it is a constitutional redundancy, adding nothing to the "equal protection" and other guarantees the Constitution affords to all "persons," or it is a license for judicial legislating. Judges might be persuaded to do many things with it, and one aim of its supporters is to set social policy by judicial fiat rather than by the deliberation of representative institutions.

ERA supporters also say it is a "consciousness-raising symbol." It is appropriate that people who would clutter the Constitution with such a thing also treat the Constitution contemptuously regarding the ratification process.

Phil Smith

UNCW Represented By Phil Smith At Littlehammer

First off this week, some news out of the sports world/police blotter. It appears that championship figure skater and alleged assault conspirator Tonya Harding will actually be allowed to skate in the winter Olympics near Lillehammer, Norway. It seems that the US Olympic Committee, with less spine than an early protochordate, has given in to the threatening tactics of Harding and the offices of Shaf, Shaf, Finagler, and Gilbooly. Can you say "EXTORTION?" Harding's twenty billion dollar law suit against the United States Olympic Committee was enough to make them back down and allow her to compete on the same ice as the very person she supposedly wanted to rough up. Ges, she'll sue her country for twenty million, but wants to skate for us. You figure.

In my opinion, which is what we're looking at here, she will be about as welcome at the Olympics as Bill Clinton would be at a GOP (that's Republican, for the politically impaired) rally. Furthermore, I think she has about as much of a chance at winning a medal as UNCW does winning the 1994 NCAA basketball crown. Anyhow, she is wearing our flag so I guess I will have to pull for her, even if I don't like her. I realize that she hasn't been found guilty of anything, but she hasn't won any personality points either. I can see perhaps the Serbian judges giving her high marks, but considering their discernment of right and wrong, that's not surprising.

In campus news, have you heard the latest out of the UNCW "Academic" Computing Services. It goes something like, "Holy microprocessors Batman! and countless others are overburdened."

"Right you are, boy out....a way...to...get them....off....bat...droppings."

"Holy budget crunches Batman, of the residents of Gotham University." "That's it, Robin, we'll warn them not to use the BatVax, then they will (another, longer dramatic pause) be'll avoid a peasant uprising. Quick, to threaten students when they log on."

Okay, enough BatBull, there current Vax system and even a deeper tier of what's "academic." Many of UNCW Vax system are not only educational, but allow with other college students around "cybersex" or whatever you call it, such things as Religion, Medicine, goes on. I'm still investigating this SHOE's OFF award will likely soon.

In other local news, a new book is causing quite a stir. The book, called Cape Fear Rising, has locals up in arms and river front property owners scrambling for insurance. I contacted the US Department of Rivers, Lakes, Streams, and Ponds and they informed me that the Cape Fear River IS NOT RISING. Therefore, residents can rest assured of their property, and I advise the author to consult his sources before predicting another tragedy. (I'm sure it's a great book, however.)

The HAT's OFF award this week goes to the folks I was sitting with at the disappointing loss to Old Dominion last Monday evening. Despite the fact that we were down by twenty or so points, they cheered, screamed, jumped, hollered, sang, cheered on the referees (by the way, I understand that the real referees were found tied up in a locker room after the game and the three impostors who called the game got away), and yelled, screamed, hollered and jumped some more. If only more fans, especially those sitting in the senior citizens/perfumed mummy section behind the students, would act accordingly, then we'd truly have a rough place for opponents to enter. (Perhaps a machine to check for a pulse as people enter would be helpful.) Anyhow, I say Hat's Off to the loud guys and the three girls on the East end of the lower North bleacher.

A hearty SHOE's OFF award this week goes to the people who make the ticket rules for students at Trask Coliseum. I fail to understand how a student can go and get a ticket two days early and then come to the game, and they won't let anyone get a ticket at 6:15 p.m., leave and come back for the game after supper. That makes absolutely no sense whatsoever. This happened to me last year and to a friend recently. Fearing that tickets may be gone by 7:00 p.m., he went at 6:15 to get a ticket, and they told him he had to enter then, despite the fact that some people had tickets for two days. I say Shoe's Off to whoever made that policy, because it stinks.

Well, that about wraps up this exciting and informative edition. Be sure to tune in next time when I discuss my upcoming graduation and the "How To Have a Hassle Free Tassel Day" pamphlet found in senior's mailboxes recently. Before I go, let me thank Semi-Coherent reader Scott Williams for input on this issue. Thanks, Scott. Also, a special mention to Semi-Coherent reader and lady killer Daniel Willis who sent a valentine signed "UNCW Campus Police." (I have a feeling he sent the Christmas card, too.) I am however, expecting a real Birthday card from my friends down at Headquarters (February 28 is less than two weeks away!). As always, your comments, criticisms, and belated valentine candy are certainly welcome. Address them to me here at The Fishwrap. Until next time... keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Phil Smith is a NoBull Prize winning columnist with The Seahawk, and he wonders if he could extort the US Olympic Committee into letting him skate in Lillehammer.

June Oravits

The Accidental Tourist

"Can I talk to you about something? I'm pregnant, I haven't even told Mom and Dad. It's just between you and me, promise?"

"Want to meet me at Stennerman's tonight? Don't worry about getting in without an ID, here's what you do..."

"We had a candlelight dinner to-night, I ain't never had one of those 'fore."

These are just a few examples of telephone calls made this past weekend. If you used a cordless or cellular phone to make those calls, forget anything you said being secret. Someone, somewhere, is listening to your conversations.

This past weekend that someone listening was me, although I was an unintentional eavesdropper. My father bought my mother a new police scanner recently. She gave me the old one so that I, June Oravits, Cherry Reporter, could listen to all the merry mayhem going on in bad old Wilmington.

Friday night, I plugged the scanner in and turned it on, fully expecting to hear about ten-forties or nine-fifties-nines, or whatever police codes are tripping across the airwaves. Instead, I heard weird mashes of strange conversations. I called my mother.

"Change the channel," she advised. "How do I do that?" It's a machine, for God's sake. She actually expects me to know how it works?

"Push the seek button." I comply. Little red numbers start flashing and then fluctuating in sequence, 3-5-9-11 and so on. Staring over the scanner stops at eight and again, instead of the police, I pick up someone talking. I hold my phone receiver to the scanner, so my mother can hear.

Both of us listen to some grown woman bragging to a friend about how she's watching Bugs Bunny cartoons. "You gotta hear this, just listen to Bugs Bunny talk. No, that's the Indian, here it is, here it is—here's Bugs Bunny! Gosh, you can get next stuff on cable, I've got cable here."

Well, gosh, my mother and I are like aooooo thrilled. I want murder and mayhem, instead, I get Bugs Bunny.

"I never picked up phone calls when I had the scanner," my mother says. Yeah, but she lives in Jacksonville, not Wilmington. We do things differently down here. "Isn't it illegal to listen to other people's calls?"

"Like I planned this, Mom. I just want to know how to fit it."

She gives me some advice about cry-sis and programming and other stuff that makes no sense. "Forget it," I tell her. "I'm bringing the bloody thing back to you this weekend."

What really scares me about the whole thing is that I, too, have a cordless telephone. And the thought that scanners everywhere may have picked up on some of my more, well...risque conversations and soul-baring thoughts makes me want to just shrivel up and die of embarrassment.

Good grief! Another scary thought just popped in my head. What about all the times you ordered something from a catalog and used your credit card number? Has some scam artist picked up on this little listening trick?

Just think of all the horrible things that have been discussed on the phone. Maybe a collection agency called you about your vulcanized checkbook—perfect strangers now know about your predilection for things you can't afford.

So, word to the wise. The next time you're feeling amorous, use a regular wired phone before you breathlessly yamp into your cordless. "Honey, we're gonna do something different tonight."

Oooh, how kinky! We're all ears.

UNCW Theatre

The Verge by Susan Glaspell

Feb. 23-26, 8 p.m.

Feb. 27, 3 p.m.

UNCW students Free with valid ID.

Does being on the verge represent being on the edge, brink, or margin of becoming a personal and free individual, or does it define the limiting, enclosing line that may drive an individual seeking unique individual sovereignty into chaos?

The Verge is an extremely important play that led the way with Eugene O'Neill's work, into the Broadway investigation of new dramatic forms. It is a fascinating infusion of realism with expressionism. This style has been mostly attributed to O'Neill but the Verge does question O'Neill's solitary claim to the creative drive of the new stage craft which is highlighted in the 1920s.

The Verge has been called Glaspell's most controversial play as she experimented with symbolism and an expressionistic set driven to explore her own individualistic fulfillment and her search for abstract idealism.

The characters are vivid and interesting not only as symbols but as human beings caught in a vortex of stress created by a culture that is on the verge of exploding against the immediate demands of sex behavior. This play's cry for personal freedom in a sensitive world is as up-to-date as any current drive for acceptance and understanding of the uniqueness of any individual or group that seeks human respect!

UNCW Photography Exhibit

Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. - 5 p.m. through Feb. 28, Kenan Hall Gallery.

The UNCW Department of Fine Arts is presenting a photography exhibit by photographer Philip H. Morgan. It focuses on the human condition, a major photographic theme of Philip Morgan for over 35 years. The portfolio includes a photographic journal of Morgan's wife, Sandy, a UNCW student in 1980.

Green Apple Quick Step and Fishbone Perform at Monk

Attitude. You either got it or you don't. It doesn't matter where you're from, what you wear or how you comb your hair. Attitude is about what you feel. And how you let it out.

And that's what Green Apple Quick Step is all about. Sure, they're one of the hottest new signing on the alternative scene, with a word-of-mouth reputation that won't quit. Sure, they made a splash in Seattle, blowing away even the jaded denizens of the overexposed scene. Sure, they've made a dazzling major label debut with Wonderful Virus for hit brand new Medicine label. But it's all happened for Green Apple Quick Step by doing what comes naturally. That's the whole point.

Green Apple Quick Step will be performing with Fishbone at the Mad Monk on Saturday, February 19th.

THE FINAL INSULT

From Entertainment Weekly, February 18/25, 1994

Coming This March! Be Prepared!

Hot From The Mailbox.....

In the past few issues of The Seahawk, I have noticed at least one of your articles has centered around a certain country western club. (I chose to omit the name because I have seen it grace the pages of this paper one too many times.) I understand that personal interest may lead you to consistently report about one of your favorite night spots, but as Entertainment Editor, you more than anyone should realize that your series (for that is what they have become) of articles is showing personal bias and not fair representation of the night life in Wilmington.

I realize that the night life in Wilmington may be somewhat limited, but I feel that if your articles would provide broader coverage, people would realize more of their options. For example, I have yet to read a review of a show at The Park Inn or Tiajuana Fats. Also, it seems as though the "Arts In Action" series (especially the FREE concerts given in the Hawk's Nest) are given little, if any, of your valuable entertainment page space.

I do not consider it unreasonable to think that you could include reviews of concerts beyond the Wilmington city limits as well. Many UNCW students often take a "road trip" to the Chapel Hill area, Raleigh, Greensboro, and even Winston-Salem and Charlotte just to see an artist whose tour does not stop in Wilmington. Recent examples include Bo Diddley and Jawbox (at the Cat's Cradle in Carrboro), Smashing Pumpkins (at the Ritz in Raleigh), and George Jones (at LJM Coliseum in Winston-Salem). These shows attracted many college students, all willing to sacrifice time, money, and gas to see their favorite performers. Since The Seahawk is "The student paper of UNCW," I would think that it would want to cover all aspects of student life.

I thank you for your time and hope that you will seriously consider my suggestions in future issues of The Seahawk.

Sincerely,

Gee Barger

Punk Rock is Alive and Well

By Sam Culler
Entertainment Writer

Lately, it seems that it is a rare show indeed which can honestly be called a "must-see". With the loss of Wilmington's major cutting-edge music venue, sometimes our local scene appears to be weak, if not virtually non-existent. Saturday night's punk rock benefit, however, allayed any fears concerning the demise of worthwhile music in Wilmington.

The show, which took place in a house on Randall Drive, featuring Yelton Cornelius, Wretched Sun, Chagaling, Resol, and Rights Reserved. Canned goods and clothing were collected for donation to Mother Hubbard's Cupboard and the Rescue Mission, and a donation for traveling bands was used in lieu of a cover charge.

The house was crowded when Yelton Cornelius (a Wilmington band) took the stage (or rather, the living room) at 6 p.m. After hearing lots of rumors about these guys, I was extremely glad to finally get to see them play. One thing must be said - Mike Dail can play the hell out of a bass. How he did it while jumping around like that, I'll never know.

Wretched Sun (another Wilmington band) took the stage next. Wretched Sun used to play fairly often downtown, but I think this was their first appearance in a while. Congratulations to Josh, for somehow managing to do double-duty on the drums for the first two acts.

Chagaling, Resol, and Rights Reserved are from Raleigh, Raleigh, and Greensboro, respectively. The house was starting to get extremely crowded by this point, so I couldn't get quite as close as I would have liked, but you didn't have to see the musicians to enjoy the music.

One of the coolest things about this show was that you didn't need a backstage pass in order to hang out with the band members. Between and after acts, everybody stuck around and introduced themselves, giving ample opportunity to get acquainted and make connections with both local and out-of-town personalities. (Try that at a club and see how long it takes for the bouncers to start roughing you up.)

This show was a grand coming together of many different people, in order to provide a night of corporate-free listening enjoyment, as well as a new musical experience for people (like me) who hadn't seen any of these bands play before.

One last note - I heard that another show of this sort may take place on campus in the next few months - keep your ears tuned and your fingers crossed.

Although slavery had ended, blacks still had to bear segregation and Jim Crow discrimination laws. Blacks' contributions to America's development were either marginalized or completely ignored. By the 1920s, blacks were striving to claim their place in American society through the publication of black newspapers, the Harlem renaissance (an era that signaled the emergence of black writers, singers, musicians, actors, actresses and artists), the introduction of the Anti-lynching bill in Congress in 1921, and in 1926, the first commemoration of Negro History Week, which would later become known as Black History Month.

Negro History Week was initiated by Carter Godwin Woodson (1875-1950), founder of the Journal of Negro History. Woodson earned his B.A. and M.A. degrees at the University of Chicago. He travelled to North Africa, Europe and Asia before completing his doctorate at Harvard. His travel, study and research experience taught Woodson that historians had ignored blacks' contributions to the development of America. In 1915, he decided to form the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History.

The first commemoration of Negro History Week was during the second week of February in 1926. This particular week was chosen to coincide with the birthdates of Abraham Lincoln and Frederick Douglass.

It was not until the 1970s, the peak years of the civil rights era, that an increasing demand was made by a wide cross-section of the African-American community to extend the week-long celebration. This led to expanding the observance to all four weeks of February, which then became known as Black History Month.

What Is An Alternative Open House?

BY RENEE HILL
Seahawk Reporter

Alternatives! opened their doors to faculty, residence assistants, and various other perspective patrons earlier this month.

Alternatives! is the campus-wide alcohol and other substance abuse education and prevention center. On Thursday, February 10, 1994, between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., Alternatives! sponsored numerous alcohol and other drug-free activities, such as sailing trips and mocktail bars. At the request of faculty and residence assistants, Alternatives! peer educators go into classrooms and residence halls to disseminate information about the effects of alcohol and various other drugs through brochures, board games, videos, and pamphlets.

"Our challenge is to stay creative and fresh in our way of preventing information. We have to find a way to get information to students in a way that they'll listen. We have to compete for their attention," said Diane Edwards, director of Alternatives!

"We have received great evaluations and interaction from students that have been in our audiences," added Amanda Leese, an Alternatives! peer educator.

Packages containing a request form, a description of resources, and programs were distributed to those who came to the open house.

"They [Alternatives!] promote healthy living. They let you know that it's okay not to drink. It's a good incentive to get people in here to see what they do," claimed Jennifer Brown, a junior at UNCW who participated in Alternatives! annual tie-dye extravaganza.

"We had a need to get people into our office to see the type of things we do, and the resources we have," said Edwards.

The Alternatives! open house program will soon become an annual event.

What's Up With The Bond Issue?

BY KRISTY BROWN
Seahawk Reporter

On November 2, 1993, the citizens of North Carolina voted on a $740 million bond issue to meet critical construction needs.

Of this $740 million, $310 million went to university improvements. UNCW received $19.5 million for a new science building and a new wing on Bear Hall.

The new science building will be built on the northwest corner of Reynolds Drive and Chancellor's Walk near Cameron Hall. It will be 100,000 square-feet and is expected to house classrooms, laboratories, faculty offices and an auditorium.

Funds totalling $600,000 were made available earlier to complete the initial planning. It will take about 36 months to complete planning and construction. The building is expected to be ready for occupancy in the 1996 academic year.

There will be a new wing built on the west side of Bear Hall. It will be 11,547 square feet and will include faculty offices, two smaller classrooms and an 80-student classroom. It will take approximately 24 months to design and construct. In addition, some renovations will be done on DeLoach Hall.

The anticipated ground-breaking date as of now is April. An exact date will be decided soon. Construction on both projects is to be completed by Fall 1996.

Voters had two main concerns: why were the bonds needed and would taxes go up?

North Carolina's economy is closely related to the quality of education that students receive in the state's colleges and universities. It is important that students receive the best education the state can afford.

Taxes will not increase because now that the bond issue has passed, the state will sell bonds to investors. Those investors will be repaid for their investment by the return of principal and interest.

"The campaign for the bond issue succeeded because it respected the voters' intelligence and good judgment, used its research to learn their concerns and questions, and employed its advertising dollars to give them the information they needed to make up their minds," Gary Pearce told the North Carolina Leadership Council recently.

Dying Is As Bad They Say

Yes, folks, I died on February 10, 1994. Though some may rejoice in my demise, I must inform you that the death I suffered was not a mortal one, just a stage one.

I emceed the comedy show last Wednesday brought to campus by the Association for Campus Entertainment. What had been planned and executed well went to hell about an hour before show time.

Vern Granger knew when he woke up Wednesday that everything associated with the show had moved too smoothly for an event that had too many intangibles.

Sure enough, the "Snow Storm of the Month" left air travelers from New York stranded and trying to get flights out of other NYC airports. One of these passengers was Dave Chappelle, the star of the show.

That left just A.J. Sanders, the star of Martin and A Different World, and myself (just to use a phrase Michael Jordan uses and to simply associate Michael Jordan with this column somehow) to entertain the hundred or so people that showed up for the show.

Mia Sanders did a wonderful job keeping the audience laughing and loose. Her normal routine is 20-30 minutes, but she was able to carry the show for an hour.

Then, in the distance I heard the toll and knew it was for me. I didn't need to ask.

Some said after my "routine" that I was brave to go up unprepared to do any stand-up and that at least I got a couple of laughs. Somehow, that didn't quite console me. It was nice to receive a handshake or pat on the back but it doesn't quite make up for the fact that I was on a stage trying to entertain people and not doing it.

If the lights in the audience had been on, I'm sure I would have seen people pointing and saying, "He sucks!" Well, that night I did. No questions asked.

As far as I'm concerned, I will get back up on a stage someday a bit more prepared and safe with the knowledge that I would never be as bad as I was that night.

Jim Clark's entertainment career 1965-1994. But like another J. C., I hope to be resurrected on a stage again. Jim Clark can be seen at Hooters on Market Street hosting Trivia Night every Tuesday night.

Forget the Traffice Survey,
What About Parking?

BY HARRY VAN ESSENDEL
Commentary

I needed a copy of a transcript recently, so I went to the registrar's office. After waiting the obligatory five minutes for the personal phone call to end, I was informed that I needed to prove my identity. No problem. I showed my student ID, paid my money, and prepared to leave. It was then I noticed a young lady dropping a class.

She didn't have to produce an ID, so it isn't clear that she was dropping a class of her own, or for someone else. There wasn't any cross-checking to verify whether the signatures were valid. She could have been dropping a class for someone she didn't like. A professor's signature could have been forged. As Rod Sterling said, "Consider the possibilities."

My daughter, also a UNCW student, went to the campus post office the other day to purchase a book of stamps. Being short on cash, she wrote a check. The clerk advised her that she couldn't accept her student ID as sufficient proof. It seems you need two proofs of identification. I'm not sure, but it could be there has been a rash of bad check incidents at the post office.

Do you suppose bus loads of people are coming onto campus with fake ID cards and absconding with $3.90 worth of stamps?

But that's not the only problems on campus. For those of you who pay $80 a year for the privilege of parking and are upset when you notice staff or faculty parking between the white lines, take heart. It's all for a good cause. Seems that staff won't be ticketed for taking your space, but you can if you park between the yellow lines. I had assumed it was arrogance on their part, but I was wrong, and I apologize. It seems that UNCW has made a point of hiring color-blind faculty and staff. Some sort of minority quota program to hire the visually impaired.

And so, when you have to park at Trask and hoof it over to Morton, you can be secure in the knowledge that you're part of the solution to a major problem. By the way, I tried this excuse at the parking office, but being color blind is no defense. At least not for some students.

UNCW BASKETBALL IN POST-SEASON?

BY CHRIS WRIGHT
Former Seahawk Sports Editor and Star News Writer

Until an untimely loss to lowly William & Mary, UNCW-Wilmington's men's basketball team appeared destined to play in the school's first non-conference-affiliated post season tournament - and had every reason to feel good about itself.

As Seahawk coach Kevin Eastman said following the 77-70 loss Saturday night, the sun did indeed rise Sunday morning and he added, there will be other games-like Saturday night's battle at Richmond - and other opportunities to prove themselves worthy of post season consideration.

The Seahawks entered Monday night still a game out of first place, the latest in the season any Seahawk team has stayed in title contention. They're now in third.

But the same haunting thought comes crashing back: NCAA and NIT teams don't lose at home, during homecoming, to last-place teams in the conference ranked 280th in the country.

The loss didn't hurt the Seahawk's chances of making the NCAA tournament. As most Colonial Athletic Association followers are aware, making the NCAA Tournament is a three-day ordeal, anyway. The team that wins the conference tournament goes. That's it. That's always been it.

But league history also shows UNCW had, and perhaps still has, a very good possibility of playing in the National Invitational Tournament.

Since 1985, there has only been one year - 1987-88 - when at least two league teams didn't play in the post season tournaments.

Assuming the Seahawks finish in second place - at this point well within reach - they stand a good chance of receiving an NIT bid, especially considering the league has sent two teams to that event the last two years.

However, as UNCW is well aware, finishing second is no guarantee to securing an NIT bid. The Seahawks finished second to Navy in 1986-87, lost to the Midshipmen by three in the tournament final, but were skipped over in favor of fourth-place finisher James Madison.

Here's the league's post season history:

In 1985-86, Navy won the regular season and tournament titles and received the automatic NCAA bid. Second-place Richmond earned the league's only at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament. And third-place George Mason (22-12) was asked to play in the NIT.

In 1986-87, Navy duplicated the feat. James Madison (22-10) finished in a third-place tie and was selected by the NIT.

In 1987-88, Richmond swept the regular season and tournament titles, knocked off Indiana and Georgia Tech in the NCAA Tournament before falling to Temple. George Mason finished second in the league and reached the tournament final, but stayed at home with a 20-10 record.

In 1988-89, George Mason won the tournament and went to the NCAA's. Richmond (21-10) won the regular season and played in the NIT.

In 1989-90, Richmond beat James Madison in the tournament final for the automatic bid. James Madison won 20 games and went to the NIT. American and George Mason also won 20 games. Both stayed home.

In 1990-91, Richmond finished second, but won the tournament and upset Syracuse in the opening round of the NCAA tournament. Regular season champion James Madison (19-10) lost in double overtime in the opening round of the NIT.

In 1991-92, Richmond and James Madison shared the regular season title, but fourth-place Old Dominion won the tournament. The Spiders (22-8) and Dukes (21-11) both lost in the first round of the NIT.

Last year, two teams again made the 32-team NIT field. James Madison and Old Dominion shared regular-season honors, but East Carolina beat both en route to the tournament title. The Dukes lost for the fourth straight time in the opening round of the NIT.

What does all this mean? First and foremost, it's not some fancy, half-cooked idea that UNCW has a chance to play in the NIT. History undoubtedly shows it does - assuming it stays in second place and wins 20 games.

That victory total seems to be the key that unlocks post season opportunities. No league team, other than regular season champ JMU, has gone to the NIT without winning 20 prior games.

It's come down to this: UNCW is 14-8 after Monday night's 98-81 loss against Old Dominion. A regular-season sweep against the pre-season favorite would have gone a long way toward regaining credibility no doubt lost in the loss to William & Mary, but it didn't happen.

Regardless, the Seahawks have four more chances - three at home - to reach 18 victories, which they must have entering the conference tournament before even considering making the NIT.

If they win two tournament games, that gives them a 20-win season and every right to believe they belong in the NIT.

If they win three tournament games, well, break out the black tie, because the Seahawks are going to the Big Dance.

It could happen.

Tales From The Dumpster

BY ERIK TOTTEN
Sports Editor

The Olympics - another chance for America to show the rest of the world it has the best athletes - whoops sorry, these are the Winter Games not the Summer Games. In the summer games our list of great athletes is unlimited, we've had boxing greats, track and field greats, swimming greats, of course, basketball greats, the list is endless.

So what gives? What happens in the summer that doesn't in the winter? Why is the USA so dominant in the Summer Games but has a hard time scrapping the ice off the windshield in the Winter Games? I know it's cold over there in Norway but we have cold places here too. Trust me, I'm from Nebraska. When it comes to the winter games we've had some good figures skaters (I say had because now ours like to beat up each other, not the other team.) We also have had some good finishers here and there, but for the most part, the winter games, for Americans, are filled with disappointment. Don't believe me - I guess you missed Duncan Kennedy's third luge run or how about Dan Jansen (who has almost dominated men's speed skating) slip on the ice during his race. Their costly mistakes cost them both a medal.

It's almost heartbreaking to see the dreams of the two crash just as fast as they did in their races... but it still doesn't erase the puzzle of our lack of success in the Winter Games. Maybe we just don't like to be cold. Either that or maybe we don't understand the competitiveness in sports like the luge or bobsledding or figure skating. It's there though, just ask Nancy Kerrigan. Anyway - just a thought.

Before I go I wanted to say something about my last editorial. It seems some people weren't all that happy about what I wrote. I still agree with what I said but a few people said something that made me realize one thing - at least "Beavis" and "Butthead" trying. Even though it's not the most effective cheering I've ever heard at least it is cheering. At least "Beavis" and "Butthead" are making some noise and trying to support our team. I thank them for that. You're doing what half the people on this campus don't do, going to the games.

At the Old Dominion game our attendance was 3772 or a little over half of what Trask can hold. Our team was tied for second in the CAA and playing the overwhelming pre-season pick for conference champions. The team also has a chance for its first ever post season berth. They deserve better than half attendance. Come out and support them - they deserve it, even if it is just yelling scrub and suck it's better than nothing.

MEN'S BASKETBALL FALLS TO ODU

BY ERIK TOTTEN
Sports Editor

UNCW dropped its second straight game in the CAA with a loss to Old Dominion, 98-81, Monday night. The Seahawks (14-8 overall and 7-4 in the CAA) fell to third in the CAA while Old Dominion (16-7 overall and 8-3 in the CAA) claimed sole possession of second place in the Conference, just behind first place James Madison.

Old Dominion came out firing in the first half, hitting 64% of shots from the field and 90% (9-10) of three-pointers. Forward Mike Jones buried the Seahawks early hitting 5-5 three-pointers. The Seahawks, who connected on only 36% of their shots from the field and 25% (1-4) of three-pointers in the first half, found themselves with a 23 point half time deficit.

Wilmington came out stronger the second half out scoring Old Dominion 50-44 but Old Dominion answered every rally the Seahawks attempted. Leading scorer for the Seahawks was Corey Stewart with 14 points and 8 rebounds, while Drew Phillips added 12 points. Ganoo Baker was the leading scorer off the bench going 4-5, including 2-2 three-pointers, with 10 points.

Old Dominion placed all 5 starters in double figures led by center Odell Hodge with 22, forwards Seasons and Jones added 19 each, while guards Swann and Larkin pitched in 12 a piece.

The Seahawks have four games remaining with three of those four at home. Their next game will be this Saturday as UNCW takes on their Conference foe, the Richmond Spiders. The next home game will be this Wednesday when UNCW takes on Conference leader James Madison.

Senior Athlete Profile

BY JOELLE KIBLER
Sports Writer

Lin Valera is a senior on this year's UNCW Women's Golf team. She is from Pikeville, Kentucky. Lin will graduate in December of 1994 with a degree in Biology and Medical Technology.

Lin started playing golf at the age of thirteen by her father's persistence to become involved in something over the summer break. Therefore her father got an attractive college player to give her lessons, and Lin became interested in golf and has been playing the game ever since. As time grew closer for Lin to decide about attending college, she got a book of universities with golf teams and filled out accompanying questionnaires for the colleges of her choice. Coach Dudley, UNCW's Women's head golf coach, contacted Lin after becoming aware of her golf ability and interest in UNCW, which resulted in Lin receiving a golf scholarship to UNCW. Lin commented, "I loved the campus and the city itself. I knew I wanted to go to college out of state."

Being a part of an athletic program, Lin has seen changes in its development during her four years at UNCW and has benefited from being a part of one. The golf team now files and competes in some very prestigious tournaments. "Playing in so many tournaments, I've had the opportunity to play with some very good players - many who would like to go pro. We fly now and that's a big advantage, because we missed much more school because of traveling time to different states," mentions Lin. Lin has also been able to manage her time more effectively as a result of being a part of an athletic team, and it is reflected in Lin's high G.P.A. Although she has missed many classes, especially Biology labs, professors at UNCW are very good about her make-up exams. Lin comments, "During our season, I just have to constantly remind myself that school comes first."

Lin feels that being a student athlete at UNCW is a rewarding experience, because, "you meet so many great people and it's a challenge." She has made some best friends by just being on the team. "I met Gwen Grahnir my freshman year, and we've been best friends since. I will really miss her when she graduates. Steph Poulin is also one of my best friends. She is a great teammate and makes practice fun with her great sense of humor," spoke Lin.

Lin's parental support is great. "I love them. I couldn't have done it without them. They have supported me so much," states Lin. Despite the distance between them, Lin feels that her parents will always be there for her, and she will always be there for them.

Lin's golf pro, Banks Guyton, at Echo Farms Country Club has also helped Lin in her development as a golf player.

After graduation, Lin intends to go on to Medical School and specialize in the area of radiology. She would like to continue playing golf recreationally, but Lin knows she will have to hold off playing golf for a while if she goes to Medical School.

Lin summarizes her UNCW experiences by saying: "It is really awesome. I met some really great people and I feel like I got a really good education; the Biology Department is strong. I've also become really independent by going to a school out of state."

Lin comments, "During our season, I just

WASHINGTON — A high-ranking CIA official, Aldrich Ames, and his wife were arrested Tuesday and charged with passing intelligence secrets to Russia and the Soviet Union. Ames had allegedly exchanged information involving intelligence personnel and operations for $1.5 million since 1985. Clinton said he has known about an ongoing investigation of Ames for the last 10 months but that it had not affected relations with Russian president Boris Yeltsin.

HOUSTON — Eight employees of NASA and three contractors have been charged with taking part in a kickback and bribery scheme at the Johnson Space Center. Undercover FBI agents posed as business executives operating a fictitious company named Southern Technology Diversified. The agents paid bribes to obtain a place aboard the space shuttle for a fake device to detect and crush kidney stones during missions, thought to be a risk on long flights.

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration is considering legalizing marijuana for medicinal purposes. The government may liberalize laws because pot eases symptoms of disease such as glaucoma and multiple sclerosis. The DEA has argued in a long-running court battle that marijuana's healing powers are imagined. Earlier this month a federal appeals court refused to allow doctors to prescribe marijuana.

NEW YORK — According to the International Labor Organization, the international unemployment rate is at depression-era levels. The ILO reported that Western Europe, the U.S., Canada, Australia and Japan have unemployment rates "at their highest levels since the Great Depression." ILO predicts that by the end of 1994, 35 million people will be unemployed in these countries, a rate of 8.6 percent. Russia and Eastern Europe, making the transition from communism to capitalism, are suffering huge job losses. ILO estimated unemployment in Russia at 10 percent.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — United Nations peacekeepers acted Monday to control the last remaining guns around Sarajevo. NATO and U.N. officials said airstrikes would not be necessary since Serbs had complied almost fully with the ultimatum to move all heavy artillery 12 miles outside Sarajevo.

Whitehead Resigns, Will Be Reelected In March

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

SGA Attorney General Tonya Whitehead resigned on Wednesday afternoon following Monday night's Senate meeting in which she passed out after drinking too much alcohol. Her term would have ended in March. Her name is on the ballot for the Spring elections to be held March 1 and 2. Since she is running unopposed, she will be elected Attorney General for the spring term.

"Monday night was inexcusable," Whitehead said. "I'm a grown woman and the poor judgment I used was mine and should not reflect on SGA in any sense." Whitehead said she is remaining in the Senate because, "I know who I represent and I'm going to give them 100 percent. I'm human."

According to Campus Police reports, Whitehead fainted during the Senate meeting. Officer David Donaldson, who responded to the call, said Whitehead had been drinking. Campus Police did not charge her, and she was taken home by friends.

Allegedly, two other members of the Senate were also intoxicated, although this has not been confirmed.

The incident has been reported to the Dean of Students, Patricia Leonard, but no official action has been taken yet.

Members of the Senate expressed concern about the effect of the incident on SGA. Student Body Vice President Jeff Gurkin said, "This is a case of a few bad apples spoiling the bunch. Unfortunately, students may get a negative image of SGA. SGA has the ability to grow and do a lot more for this campus." Gurkin called the incident poor judgment. "If you want to drink, that's your decision, but you shouldn't go to public meetings drunk." As Vice President, Gurkin presides over the Senate.

Student Body President, Ziggy Nix echoed his concerns. "For someone who's 21 - years - old, it's okay to drink, but not before going to a public meeting," Nix said. "It gives SGA a bad image. Only a few individuals were involved, not the whole organization. It's like condemning Germany because of Hitler."

Ironically, Whitehead says she rarely drinks. She said that on Monday afternoon she and friends went to PT's Grille, where they drank beer. From there, they went to someone's house and drank Rum. Whitehead says she remembers very little about the entire incident.

According to the SGA Senator's Handbook, the Attorney General defends SGA legislation. That person prosecutes all violations of SGA legislation. That person also provides opinions on questions of constitutionality. The Attorney General serves as prosecuting attorney at any impeachment trial. The AG also represents the SGA before the Senate Judiciary Committee in the event of a constitutional challenge. He or she clarifies the legality of any rules or policy for SGA. The Attorney General is responsible for notifying the senate of any officer of the SGA who commits an unconstitutional or illegal act. Failure to comply with any of these terms is an impeachable offense.

Whitehead is a junior English major from Tarboro, NC. In addition to being Attorney General, she is on the Senate Executive Board, the Student Organizations Committee, and the Orientation Committee of the Senate.

A First For UNCW Clinton Supports Race-Based Scholarships

N.Y. Times News Service

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

For the first time, a nursing student from UNCW has been chosen to receive the Helene Fuld Health Trust Fellowship. Selected from more than 300 nominations, Christy C. O'Herron, a junior nontraditional UNCW student, is the North Carolina recipient of the prestigious Fuld Fellowship.

The Helene Fuld Health Trust Fellowship was established with the purpose of funding 51 outstanding nursing students (one from each state and Washington D.C.) to the world's most prestigious health care institutions, to stimulate interest among students in a nursing specialty and to promote awareness of nursing as an international career field.

Born and raised in Hendersonville, N.C. and daughter of Frank and Lillian Coier, O'Herron chose to pursue a degree in nursing after having firsthand experience with a true miracle. "I always felt like I needed to be doing more, but in 1985 my son was diagnosed with an inoperable brain tumor and this experience changed my life forever," said O'Herron. "Being near children with cancer and seeing their unbelievable courage and dignity gave me the strength to pursue a career in nursing." In remission for more than five years, her son will graduate from Hoggarth High School this year.

Candidates for the fellowship are nominated by the deans of schools of nursing. "We are extraordinarily proud of Christy," said Dr. Marlene Rosenkoetter, dean, UNCW School of Nursing. "I know many people will profit from O'Herron's attendance at the conference."

With this Fuld Fellowship, O'Herron will travel, all expenses paid, to Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada for the Eighth International Conference on Cancer Nursing to be held Aug. 7-12, 1994.

WASHINGTON—Formally announcing what it had signaled for the past year, the Clinton administration said Thursday that college scholarships can be awarded on the basis of race to help "remedy past discriminations" and to promote diversity on campus.

The decision ends uncertainty that had arisen during the Bush administration, which tired three years ago to ban race-based scholarships, arguing that merit should be the determining factor. But it quickly softened its stance in the face of strong opposition by civil rights leaders and leading academics and put the whole matter under review. It was pending when President Clinton took office.

The guidelines announced Thursday allow the scholarships to be continued at colleges that receive federal funds, but with several general provisions that ensure compliance with anti-discrimination laws.

What is Business Week?

BY KRISTI BROWN
Seahawk Reporter

During the week of March 21-25, the Cameron School of Business will hold their 13th Annual Business Week. Business Week has three main purposes. "First, it gives our students the opportunity to learn about employment opportunities for careers after graduation," said Dr. William Hall in the Cameron School of Business.

"Second, it gives the faculty and staff opportunities to discuss mutual interests with individuals from the public and private sectors."

"Third, it gives the people from the public and private sectors opportunities to learn about the activities in the business school," Hall said.

On Mar. 21 and 22 there will be the Commerce Cup Challenge, which is similar to the College Bowl. Speakers will be in the classrooms on Mar. 23 and 24. On these two days, there will be no classes in the business school. Instead, the students are expected to attend these lectures.

On Wednesday afternoon, there will be a keynote address and the speaker will be the President of Wachovia Bank of North Carolina. On Mar. 25, there will be a mini-career day.

SGA Spring '94 Elections

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

Student Government is heating up politically. With the Spring elections coming up next week, the big race is for Student Body President. There are three candidates for the position. Ziggy Nix, the current Student Body President is one of the candidates. "I am running for Student Body President again because I worked from start to finish on the bond referendum last semester. I don't have enough time for other projects that I'm working on now. I want to see those projects finished. These include a free speech monument like The Fiat Chapel Hill, more courtesy phones, especially in Randall Library and Wagoner Hall, and a scrolling screen of events," Nix said.

One of his contenders is Roger Hyman. "Over my past three consecutive years as class president, I have grown in my senatorial skills. I feel I am the most competent candidate for SGA President because I have and will continue to serve as a strong voice for the student body. I am not afraid to go against administration's wrongs and to strive to meet the student's needs," Hyman said.

The third contender for the seat is John Farmer. "I have decided to run for SGA President for several reasons. Having been a representative in the Senate for two years, I realize the need for strong executive influence in issues brought to the floor, primarily influence on fiscal matters. In every meeting without fail the Senate passes Budget and Planning Committee motions without a debate. The denunciations we give range from $50 to $20,000 and are passed in a matter of seconds. The students I want to represent need a president with a more conservative agenda spending only in thrift, with much care and intent," Farmer said.

Student Government Spring '94 Elections will be held Tuesday, March 1 and Wednesday, March 2. Positions are open for Student Body President and Vice President, Student Services Coordinator, Attorney General, Sophomore, Junior, and Senior class officers, as well as eight spring Representatives at Large.

Polls will be open from 10a.m. to 2p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday in the University Center; 10a.m. to 4:30p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday in Randall Library; 11a.m. to 1:45p.m., and 4:30p.m. to 6:45p.m. on both days in Wagoner Hall.

Scanning for Secrets

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Seahawk Reporter

Spring has sprung and so have your secrets if you're relying them over a cordless or cellular car phone.

Confidential information about your life is available to anyone with a police or fire scanner. Strangers can find out your name, address, credit card numbers, whether or not you live alone, and even your vacation plans.

Police and fire scanners function like radios. They receive signals transmitted by a cordless or cellular telephone. These phones transmit in the 46- and 49-MHz frequency bands. The handset and base unit of cordless telephones act as a two-way radio. Because they are designed to pick up radio transmissions, scanners are able to access telephone voice transmissions.

Companies such as GE and AT&T advertise their cordless phones as capable of voice transmissions with a range of up to 1,000 feet. But scanners can pick up transmissions as far away as a few miles as advertised by Uniden, a company which manufactures one brand of scanners.

The federal Electronic Communications Privacy Act (ECPA) of 1986 outlaws the monitoring of cellular car phone conversations. In 1993, Congress banned the manufacture of radio scanners able to pick up cellular frequencies. But multi-line scanners are already in use, and new scanners can easily be modified to receive cellular phone transmissions.

The 1986 ECPA law does not apply to cordless telephones. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1990 that individuals transmitting over cordless telephones have no justifiable expectation of privacy. Anyone can legally listen in.

Calling it "for educational use only," DX Radio Supply offers a guide to telephone eavesdropping. The company, based in Pennsylvania, states, "Monitoring telephones requires no special equipment and no hard-to-learn techniques. All you need is a scanner and a copy of 'Time in on Telephone Calls.' We'll tell you where to tune and how it can be done."

To Laugh and Know Joy

How good it is to laugh and feel the release that laughter brings. It is all too easy to get caught up in taking ourselves and all the heavy issues that impinge on our life so seriously that we lose the capacity for humor.

Laughter springs from one of two wellsprings in our lives—pleasure and joy, wellsprings which are quite distinct. Pleasure comes from without; from all that we find in our world that appeals, that gives content to that illusive experience that we call "happiness." Think of all the places you'd like being, people you want to be with, activities that touch your senses of pleasure.

How do you play? When and where does the child in you get loose and "play ball" or "get hugged" or wander in the secret garden of your imaginations? We all like feeling good and spend a good deal of time figuring out with whom and at which point we can move into our environment in such a way that has the best chance of producing pleasure. We seek a career that seeks pleasure. We look for relationships that do the same. Some of us even determine that a certain lifestyle or position in life will bring pleasure and therefore we work to those ends.

There's another wellspring of laughter that holds more promise, I believe, it is joy. Joy comes from within, rather than without. Joy is the happiness of love, a deep inner feeling that can fill our being even in the midst of personal suffering; yep! even when we are in pain. Joy emerges as we live in congruence with our deepest internal values. For me that means living lovingly, or to put it on other terms, to live under the heart of God.

Joy, then, has little to do with our external world measured in terms of life-style or affluence or success. It has everything to do with discovering our deepest selves with all our yearnings and strivings, hopes and dreams, fears and frustrations and being true to that self. If we are true to our God-gifted self, we will know joy even if the outward course of events brings suffering, opposition, or injustice to our lives.

Even if the world seems to conspire to deny us pleasure, we still can live with much joy. I've known many who lack joy and seek frantically to fill that void with the pursuit of pleasure. Much of partying and much of sexual activity seems to have that kind of franticness that speaks clearly of a lack of joy. Those others that have discovered the kind of loving that balances the needs of self with the needs of others also discover that a wellspring of joy that, no matter what the external circumstances, allows smiles, a sense of delight, and a freedom to appreciate the smallest gifts and insights. We should all move beyond our search for pleasure into deeper, more sustaining experiences of joy.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor,

Admission standards? Who sets the Admission Policy and based on what? It has been my experience as a transfer student from UNC-Asheville that, if there is an admission policy here, it sure lacks credibility. I transferred in with 39 credit hours. Since then, persistence and the dedication to question Authority, I have received six more credit hours for ENG 101 and 102, which when I first enrolled were not acceptable because, even though the class I took was given WCU credit and accepted by UNCA, UNCW didn't accept college credit in a "high school setting." Next year while planning to enroll in ENG 101, I happened to call and question this policy once again, and much to my surprise, the policy had changed and I now had 6 hours of conditional credit for about 10 minutes of my time. How can that be? Why wasn't I notified when the policy changed? If there was an attempt to notify me, where was it? Enough said about English. I said to myself - Just a mistake, probably not common.

Earlier this semester, I landed a seat in a MGMT 305 class. Sitting through the first few weeks, I began to realize I have had this class before. Checking my UNCA transcript, I saw I was right, but that I was given "elective" credit for the class. WHAT? Admissions told me "their hands were tied." After two days of chasing answers, Nelins approved the class as credit for MGMT 305. Now I am left struggling to get an internship to qualify as a full-time student for a Pell Grant because I was able to drop my MGMT class. I understand that classes from different schools can be difficult to classify in terms of UNCW courses, but for the passive students who do not actively question the admissions policy for transfer students, are they repeating completed courses because of policies? I hope my journey through bureaucracy can help other students who find themselves repeating classes, to seek answers. I only ask for a response from an admissions official on how class credit is decided and possibly an easier avenue of clarification than I found myself pursuing. I wish to thank Linda Nelins and Dr. Latham for there persistent help in my adventure.

Dear Editor,

This is a general commentary on what I believe to be a fairly well-known problem. Practically no undergraduate I know likes to study in the library, why? Because the "sports teams" or the "fraternities and sororities" are there.

It is probably common knowledge that the members of varsity teams and those involved in the Greek system are required to spend significant amounts on time in the library, and I'm sure that some members of those organizations benefit greatly from that "forced" study time.

However, anyone who has been in the library on a weeknight, especially upstairs, quickly realizes that those who are forced to be there are often disturbing those who want to be there.

Naming and/or blaming no group in particular, it is time for the library staff and the students to make the entire library conducive to studying and for those in charge to enforce the quiet that libraries are meant to have.

Out of Sight, Out of Mind

WASHINGTON—Take one part unfairness, one part impossibility and one part frustration, blend them in an atmosphere of apathy, and you've got America's policy toward Haitian refugees.

Randal Robinson, executive director of TransAfrica, describes the unfairness: "If the U.S. Coast Guard comes upon a boat containing a Haitian and a Cuban, they'd take in the Cuban and send the Haitian back to Haiti."

The irresponsibility is in its official refusal to see that it is U.S. policy that, at least in part, is causing the flow of refugees that we keep plucking out of the sea and sending back to God knows what fate.

And the frustration is in the impossibility of reconciling our hopes for restoration of Haiti's short-lived democracy with our determination to avoid unnecessary foreign entanglements.

Even exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, who, as a guest of the United States, has been reluctant to challenge this country's treatment of Haitian refugees—and who has been urging his people to remain in Haiti to prepare for his return—has finally challenged our refugee policy.

Supporters of democracy are "murdered, tortured or forced to flee the repression that has gripped our nation," he said last week. And when they do flee,

"they are met by a floating Berlin Wall that forces their return to the very captors they have fled."

This is the policy that candidate Clinton denounced as inhumane but which President Clinton is carrying out with a vengeance. The key difference between Clinton and his predecessor is that President Bush locked up the refugees after they reached U.S. waters, creating a domestic political problem for himself. Clinton's "floating Berlin Wall" intercepts them in Haitian waters, thus keeping them out of television's sight and out of the public mind.

The central truth, of course, is that the refugee problem is merely a relatively minor manifestation of the fundamental problem: What to do about the armed thugs who have taken over Haiti and driven its popularly elected president into exile.

Clinton, no doubt reflecting the views of most Americans, has no interest in returning Aristide in a phoenix of U.S. tanks, if only because he doesn't want the responsibility of running the place for the foreseeable future. And since the international sanctions imposed on Haiti show no signs of bringing down the military regime, Clinton seems to have decided that nothing can be done. Just make pro-democracy noises while Aristide's presidential term expires.

Is it really as hopeless as all that? Randall Robinson doesn't think so.

"History teaches that sanctions work best when they are not ratcheted up gradually but applied full force without a great deal of notice and for a relatively short period," he says. If that had happened from the beginning, Aristide would be in Port-au-Prince today, he believes. Even now isn't too late, says Robinson.

"The island is being run by thugs and murderers who have turned it into a major transshipment point for drugs and getting rich doing so."

"What should we do? We should cut off everything except medical and humanitarian assistance and then put heavy pressure on the Dominican Republic (with which Haiti shares the island of Hispaniola) to stop being the open door for illicit trade. All private flights should be stopped, all private shipments—including illegal drug shipments—halted."

"It's simply not possible that a government like Haiti's could stand such full-scale non-lethal pressure for more than a week or two."

Does the United States have the wherewithal to impose such a complete embargo?

Says Robinson: "If we can find every rickety boat on which refugees are trying to escape, we can find the ship carrying oil and other embargoed goods."

Meanwhile, the refugee problem remains, and a serious part of it has to do with specific U.S. policy. The Cuban in Robinson's hypothetical boat would be welcome here because of a Cold War policy calculated to embarrass Fidel Castro. The Haitian in that boat would be sent back under the immoral (but unrepented) terms of a deal cut between the United States and the now-outcast dictator "Baby Doc" Duvalier.

That part of the problem can be addressed legislatively—and ought to be, as Rep. Carrie Meek (D-Fla.) noted in a dear-colleague letter the other day. She's sponsoring legislation to end the anti-Haitian bias of U.S. policy and to provide federal reimbursement for states that are heavily impacted by refugees.

Finally, though, the Clinton administration needs to face up to the fact that there are only two real solutions to the problem of Haitian refugees: Either help them find peace in their own country or help them find safe haven elsewhere.

Traditional Bypartisan Silliness Continues

WASHINGTON—The other day the Senate was doing the usual, issuing imperious commands to the future, when a senator did the unusual: He said the future will not be impressed.

The Senate was debating the "Goals 2000" education bill when Pat Moynihan rose to compare two of the goals—the only quantifiable ones—to grain production quotas in the Soviet Union. The two goals are that by the year 2000 the high school graduation rate will be "at least" 90 percent, and that American students "will be first in the world in mathematics and science achievements," said Moynihan. "That will not happen."

Other goals range from the difficult to define (all children will start school "ready to learn") to the difficult to imagine (every school "will be free of drug and violence"). Such silliness is a bipartisan tradition. In 1984 President Reagan decreed goals for 1990 not unlike the goals President Bush offered in 1990 for 2000, some of Bush's goals being identical to President Clinton's.

Such goal-setting is progress, of sorts: Policy-makers are speaking the language of cognitive outputs rather than monetary inputs. But it is not much progress because policy-makers are still preoccupied with inputs.

In 1966 sociologist James Coleman and his colleagues published data from a huge survey of public schools and students. Postwar education policy had been focused where the public education lobby wanted it, on financial inputs such as per pupil spending, teachers' salaries, pupil-teacher ratio. However, Coleman's report, which Moynihan says was so "seismic" that the government considered not releasing it, concluded: "Schools are remarkably similar in the effect they have on the achievement of their pupils when the socioeconomic background of the students is taken into account."

Or as a sociologist had said to Moynihan at an academic gathering when Moynihan was an academic and Coleman was still compiling the data, "Have you heard what Coleman is finding? It's all family." That is, the best predictor of a school's performance is the quality of the homes from which the students come to school.

In 1989 a researcher reported in confirmation of Coleman that "variations in school expenditures are not systematically related to variations in student performance." And later: "Researchers have tried to identify inputs that are reliably associated with student achievement and school performance. The bottom line is, they have not found any."

Paul Barton of the Education Testing Service estimated that about 90 percent of the differences among the states' schools in average proficiency can be explained by five factors: number of days absent from school, number of hours spent watching television, number of pages read for homework, quantity and quality of reading material in the home, the presence of two parents in the home. Now, unless the government has a plan for making those variables vary, positively and quickly, the goals about graduation rates and math and science achievements are airy puffs of legislative cotton candy.

Between 1910 and 1969 the graduation rate rose from 8.8 percent to 77.1 percent. By 1980 it had receded to 71.4. The government estimates that it was 73.8 last year. It will not be 90 in six years. In 1991 American 13-year-olds ranked 13th among 14 nations surveyed in math and 12th among 14 in science, rankings that are essentially unchanged in three decades and will not be substantially changed in six years.

Moynihan says the "official delusion" indicated by such goals is "evidence of a dysfunction in the political world far more portentous than that of our high schools." Actually, "Goals 2000" involves less delusion than calculation, and there are three reasons for it.

First, government cannot do much, and can do next to nothing quickly about the quality of families, other than stop making matters worse with today's welfare system, a system that would be expensive and politically risky to reform. Second, government may now use the vocabulary of outputs but it is still addicted to dispensing financial inputs and defining the dispensing as progress. Third, the Democratic Party is in alliance with, and most politicians are in fear of, the National Education Association, the public education lobby that has a huge stake in inputs like the $700 million in 1995 budget authority for "Goal 2000."

One of the legislation's goals is to "increase parental involvement." One way to do that would be to make parents active shoppers for education, using school choice programs. But confronted with an amendment that would have authorized a small ($30 million) demonstration project empowering poor children to choose among public and private schools—the NEA's nightmare—the Senate said no. Enacting the practical is politically impossible and promising the impossible is routine politics.

Fumes Coming From Body Closes Down Emergency Room

Welcome back to this rapidly proliferating NoBull Prize winning journalistic endeavor of mine. First off, some bad news coming from the North Carolina Cooperative Extension Service at NC State University. According to Jim Baker (former televangelist?), entomologist with the Extension Service, the recent cold snap around the state may result in an "explosion" in the caterpillar population. I don't know about you, but there is something about exploding caterpillars just scares the doodle out of me.

What's even worse is that other entomologists predict a similar explosion in the mosquito, flea, tick, mite, and chigger population. Now, you don't really have anything to worry about here unless you happen to be a warm-blooded mammal (that may or may not include some readers). Studies have shown that some people would rather remove their outer derma (that's skin for the anatomically impaired) than face the summer itchy pest population in Eastern North Carolina. Anyhow, I'd suggest that you go ahead and invest in a case of 20 OFF to make your summer a little more tolerable.

Next up is a story out of Riverside, California from a Morning Star article entitled "Fumes Coming From Body Closes Down Emergency Room." I am not kidding here, as I NEVER kid about toxic fumes coming from bodies. It seems that as a 31 year old cancer patient was being treated for cardiac arrest (that's when the heart has stopped, for the myocardially impaired) the doctor and nurse treating her noted "white crystals" in a blood sample and smelled something resembling ammonia. The next thing you know, the doctor and nurse were out cold, overcome by "fumes" which appeared to come from the body. The emergency room was evacuated and a Hazardous materials team was sent in to check for toxic gasses and seal up the body.

Now, you are probably asking yourself, "Had this lady just been to Taco Bell?" Sources say that it is unclear what caused the fumes, but they are still investigating. The doctor, as she woke back up from the incident was groggy and confused, but was quoted as saying, "doorknob!"

From the entertainment/dysfunctional family column, the Jackson family appeared together on stage for the first time since before the Carver administration. I did not personally get to see the hyped event, but I understand that it was quite a fiasco. Michael Jackson's part was described as "a self-imposed pity party." I missed the show because, as I must admit, I was at an Amway meeting. By the way, if any of you are interested in making a little spare money in your spare time, let's talk.

Also from the entertainment world, former co-star and Hee Haw banjo picker Roy Clark has written his autobiography entitled "Roy Clark: My Life In Spite Of Myself." In his book, Clark writes how he once became so peeved at co-star Buck Owens that he "thought for a moment about grabbing Buck by the throat and shaking his eyeballs together." And people say that Steven Segal movies are violent?

I don't know about you, but as a child I was forced to watch Hee Haw each and every Saturday night. My family thought it was a healthy and wholesome family hour. I doubt it would rate as such in our household after this latest revelation. (If only Roy would have had the insight of a Tonya Harding, then he could have solved his problem with Buck.)

In campus news I, along with other May graduates, recently received in my campus mailbox a pamphlet entitled "How To Have A Hassle Free Tassel Day." The pamphlet is further described as "UNCW's Worry Free Guide To May 1994 Commencement." The guide attempts to answer and explain such difficult questions as "When exactly is graduation?" and "What can I do about those parking tickets that have piled up since I was a freshman seven years ago?" The guide spells it all out for us, including a section on "student behavior." It states that while the university administration joins us in our celebration (I'll be looking for them at my graduation party), we must conduct ourselves with proper dignity and decorum (that's good taste, for the ceremonially impaired). It also says not to put any printed signs or messages on our caps and gowns. I guess I'll have to return the "Pseudojournalist For Hire" sign I had bought for my gown.

The HAT'S OFF Award this time goes to Campus Activities Director Frank Tascone. Frank, or as I like to call him "The Tascinator" will be stepping down this summer in order to pursue a graduate degree and/or take a position over at the WalMart. Frank is a pretty neat person and always wears a smile around campus. He will be greatly missed, unless you catch him in class or on aisle 37. Best of luck, and Hat's Off to Frank.

The SHOE'S OFF Award this week is issued to whoever makes the funding decisions about the UNCW Academic Computing Services. The ACS is obviously underfunded, and UNCW students are subsequently offered a substandard level of access (as compared to other state schools) to the VAX system and more importantly to interactive networks. If anyone agrees with me, then please join me in letting administrators know how you feel. This is something that could easily be turned into a HAT'S OFF Award sometime down the road. Address your concerns to the ACS and I would hope that they will forward them to the proper office.

Well, that about does things for this week's issue. Tune in next week (assuming I don't leave early for Spring Break) for more torture. A special "Happy Birthday" this week to my brother, Joe Smith, who lives back in my home town of Dadburn County. Congratulations this week are in order for Ms. Mary Anne Tyndall of Whiteville who recently won the 36th annual Pillsbury Bake Off with her fudgy bonbons. And on that note, I remind everyone that your comments, criticisms and, of course, fudgy bonbons can be addressed to me here at The Fishwrap.

Until next time... keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Phil Smith is a NoBull Prize winning columnist with The Seahawk and he thinks that fudgy bonbons would be an excellent birthday gift on the 28th.

UNCW Hosts New Hanover Schools Bond Issue Forum March 2

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will host a forum on the upcoming New Hanover County Schools Bond Issue at 7:30 p.m., Wednesday, March 2, in King Hall Auditorium. In addition to UNCW, co-sponsors of the event are WAAV radio and the School Bond Steering Committee. The public is cordially invited to attend this event to learn the needs of the New Hanover County Schools and have any questions answered.

Following an information session and slide show to begin at 7:30 p.m., the question and answer session will be held starting at 8 p.m. WAAV radio will broadcast this segment of the program live on 98.0 FM.

Featured panelists will be Dr. Heyward Bellamy, Gil Burnett, J. Corpening III, Estell Lee, and Alex Hall, all members of the New Hanover County School Bond Steering Committee. Representing the school system will be Marc Sosne, interim superintendent, and Dianne Avery, community relations director. Moderator for the evening will be Dr. Brad Walker, director of student services in the office of the dean of the UNCW School of Education.

Please come prepared to ask questions.

The homecoming blahs!

BY KRISTI BROWN
Seahawk Reporter

This year's homecoming activities were not as popular as ACE, a standing committee of SGA, anticipated.

There was an activity to take place every night of the week beginning on Wednesday. The activities included a comedy show, field day, basketball game, dance and a bonfire, which was rained out.

"This year's homecoming events were more publicized than the last couple of years. This year, there were also more events, like the comedians," says junior Traci Brooks of Climax, N.C. as she reflects on past UNCW homecomings.

Senior Tracy Lawson of Wilmington was one of the few students who attended the homecoming activities. She attended the step show and the basketball game, which she said was well-attended.

Miss Lawson also attended the homecoming events at WSSU. She said, "They had a pre-dance party and step show with Chubb Rock, a concert, football game, dance and parade."

"I would have attended more homecoming events had I known about them," said senior Tanesha Wright, a Communications and Spanish major. "I think the homecoming committee needs to hang flyers in the buildings where most of the students hang out so the schedule of events can be looked over."

Paule Marshall To Speak In Honor of Women's History Month

BY FIONA RICE
Public Relations Intern

Paule Marshall, award-winning author, will deliver the keynote address for Women's History Month at UNCW. The subject of her lecture is "Her True-True Name: The Search for the Womanist Self in My Fiction." Her program will begin at 8 p.m., Tuesday, March 1, at UNCW in Cameron Hall Auditorium. There will be a reception following her talk. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Marshall, a 1953 cum laude graduate of Brooklyn College, was a lecturer in creative writing at Yale University and a former writer for Our World magazine. She is currently a professor of English and creative writing at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond. Her most recent novel is titled Daughters.

The daughter of emigrants from Barbados, Marshall's fiction focused on the African people of the Caribbean. She placed an emphasis on black female characters that address current feminist issues from an Afrocentric view. The ultimate objective of her fiction is to dispel oppression and celebrate the human spirit.

UNCW THEATRE

University Theatre proudly presents The Verge by Susan Glaspell on Feb. 23 - 26 at 8 p.m. and on Feb. 27 at 3 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. UNCW students are admitted free with valid student I.D. For ticket information call 791-9695.

Does being on the verge represent being on the edge, brink or margin of becoming a personal and free individual? Or does it define the limiting enclosing line that may drive an individual seeking unique individual sovereignty into chaos?

The Verge is an extremely important play that led the way with Eugene O'Neill's work, into the Broadway investigation of new dramatic forms. It is a fascinating infusion of realism with expressionism. This style has been mostly attributed to O'Neill but The Verge does question O'Neill's solitary claim to the creative drive of the new stage craft which is highlighted in the 1920s.

The Verge has been called Glaspell's most controversial play as she experimented with symbolism and an expressionistic set that attempted to reveal the mind of a new woman who is driven to explore her own individualistic fulfillment and her search for abstract idealism.

The characters are vivid and interesting not only as symbols, but as human beings caught in a vortex of stress created by a culture that is on the verge of exploding against the immediate demands of set behavior. This play's cry for personal freedom in a sensitive world is as up-to-date as any current drive for acceptance and understanding of the uniqueness of any individual or group that seeks human respect!

The UNCW Department of Fine Arts is presenting a photography exhibit by photographer Philip H. Morgan, in the Kenan Hall Gallery. The exhibition runs through Feb. 28 and focuses on the human condition, a major photographic theme of Morgan's for over 35 years. The portfolio includes a photographic journal of Morgan's wife, Sandy, a UNCW student in 1980. The exhibition is open to the public from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

PIANIST TO PERFORM

The internationally acclaimed concert pianist Lance Wiseman will perform a recital of works by Schubert, Mozart and Chopin on Monday, Feb. 28, at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

Wiseman's concert performances have won high critical praise on several continents. On his recent tour of Europe and Japan, Der Tagesspiegel in Berlin was impressed by his "sensitive and cultured virtuosity." At his sold-out debut recital in Chicago, the classical music critic of that city's Radio WNIB said, "Lance Wiseman is a superb pianist." Wiseman has been a prizewinner in competitions in the U.S. and abroad, and was named by Musical America as the "Young Artist to Watch." This will be his Wilmington debut. The program will feature two Impromptus of Schubert and four works of Chopin including the "Revolutionary" Etude and the Polonaise in A-flat.

The concert is sponsored by UNCW's Department of Fine Arts. UNCW students are free with student I.D.

UNCW BIG BAND

UNCW's Big Band will be performing a concert in the Center Stage Cafe on Friday, Feb. 25 at 8 p.m. Admission is $3.

The UNCW Big Band, directed by Frank Bongiorno, kicks off its Spring semester with a varied program of compositions including an arrangement of Oliver Nelson's classic composition, Stolen Moments, a rendition of the Spanish influenced composition, Malagueña, as made popular by the Stan Kenton Orchestra in the 1950s; a tribute to saxophonist Paul Desmond with a composition by Phil Woods called Paul; the high energy sounds of the Buddy Rich band with the composition Best Coast; and arrangements of Chuck Mangione's Hill Where the Lord Hides as well as David Sanborn's Portocall. In addition, the 18 piece ensemble will feature several members in solo improvisations throughout the evening's performance.

VIENNA CHOIR BOYS COME TO WILMINGTON

The world-famous Vienna Choir Boys will appear in concert Thursday, March 3, at 8 p.m., on Thalian Hall's main stage. Their appearance is part of the Thalian Hall Concert Series. The Vienna Choir Boys, the most popular choir ever to tour America, have made thousands of appearances since they were founded by Imperial Decree in 1498. Their almost 500-year-old tradition of musical excellence has made them a top concert drawing card. Their Wilmington appearance will feature a program of sacred, classical, and folk songs as well as a one-act staged opera that will entertain the entire family.

The singers in the Vienna Choir Boys range in age from 8 to 14-years old. The tradition of vocal excellence, boasting the famous names of Schubert, Mozart, Haydn, and Bruckner associated with the choir school, continues today. The superb artistry of the choir combined with their freshness and youth draw sell-out audiences throughout the world.

For nearly five centuries, the Vienna Choir Boys have enchanted millions with their unique charm and exceptionally beautiful singing. From the time of their first visit to the U.S. in 1932, they have given thousands of concerts and become the most popular choice ever to tour North America. Each season a new choir of boys carries on the rich traditions of Vienna's musical life. Alongside their touring, they reach an even wider audience through films, recordings and television appearances. In concert, they present superbly entertaining programs that feature short operettas in costume, sacred works, and a broad range of secular and folk music.

CAST: Anna Chlumsky, Dan Aykroyd, Jamie Lee Curtis, Richard Masur, Austin O'Brien

GENRE: Drama (Columbia). Rated: PG. Running Time: 99 minutes

DIRECTOR: Howard Zieff (Private Benjamin)

REVIEWER'S PRECONCEPTION: I've had enough of the cutes.

Growing up was never as tedious or as languid as it appears to be in My Girl 2, a sequel to the hit film that earned some $120 million. The original was cute and sad and featured Macaulay Culkin as Thomas J. Vada Sultenfuss's best friend. Thomas died, and the sequel attempts to pick up almost precisely where the original left off. Vada (Anna Chlumsky) is now 13, and her nerdy but genuine-artistic dad Harry (Dan Aykroyd) is happily remarried to the vivacious ex-happy Shelly (Jamie Lee Curtis), who is very pregnant. They live in that excessively cheerful state known as Middle America and it's 1974.

In order to escape this mindless optimism for a week, the precocious Vada returns to Los Angeles in search of information about her mother, who died when she was born. The film is filled with that cliché about not being able to know where you're going until you know where you came from, but that's not the worst aspect of this film. The story of a 13-year-old in search of her roots could be moving and interesting—although I can't think of a way right now. My Girl 2 is so incredibly slow, stoney, and banal, you lose interest in what may or may not happen to Vada, who soon seems to be losing her cutes.

Even the actors seem tired. Jamie Lee Curtis and Dan Aykroyd can't wait to get off the set and, fortunately for them, they're out of it when Vada goes to LA and deals with another ensemble. Her uncle Phil (still Richard Masur) is now a car mechanic somewhere in West Hollywood. He is living out of wedlock with his boss, Rose (Christine Ebersole), and her adolescent blond son, Nick (Austin O'Brien), Vada's love interest. The subplot of Phil not being able to commit to Rose is tired but at least Masur and Ebersole show some vitality.

The young O'Brien seems bored with Vada's week-long school project to seek out her mother's long-lost friends, even though he feigns interest. Nick barely shows us that he's smitten with interest; it's up to the music and camera to cue us. Everything in My Girl 2 is an obvious cue and the actors appear to be reading cue cards as well. As usual, the adults mostly seem like fools, particularly the mom's acquaintances. Vada grows up a little as a result of learning that her young mom did not change the world. Her greatest achievement, Vada comes to realize, is Vada.

THE GETAWAY

CAST: Alec Baldwin, Kim Basinger, James Woods, Michael Madsen, Jennifer Tilly

GENRE: Action Thriller (Universal). Rated: R. Running Time: 115 minutes

DIRECTOR: Roger Donaldson

REVIEWER'S PRECONCEPTION: I liked the Peckinpah original.

I remember liking the 1972 original directed by Sam Peckinpah...but I was so much younger then, I'm older than that now. Constructed around a chase, everybody is after Steve McQueen and Ali McGraw. The Getaway was streamlined but entertaining. This remake, starring Kim Basinger and Alec Baldwin (partners off screen and on), is also a straightforward chase flick. It's still enjoyable, although it's lost a bit of its luster. In 1994, it's a different world and somehow the gratuitous violence seems more real than it did more than 20 years ago. And Baldwin doesn't have the persona McQueen did.

Doc McCoy (Baldwin) is a master thief. He and his gorgeous wife and partner in crime, Carol (Basinger), take pride in what they do. They're affable and glib, but very professional. In the opening sequence we view the shapely Carol slowly pulling the trigger of a sleek and shiny Luger during target practice in the desert and we get the sense of what this remake is all about. She fires "slowly and often." Like all refined, stylish, great-looking couples who rob banks, Doc and Carol have to pull one last heist before they can retire in a manner they obviously feel they deserve.

But, Doc gets double-crossed by the crass and crazy Rudy (Michael Madsen) and ends up in a Mexican prison, no place for a guy who looks like Baldwin. To get Doc released, Carol has to "make a deal" with the morally corrupt, big boss Jack Benyon (James Woods). And when you look like Basinger and you have to bargain with a sleaze like Benyon, there's only one deal that matters. Doc at first believes Benyon from him so he can make "one last heist." Later, Doc doesn't seem to mind that Carol shoots 16 men dead in the big chase, only that she sleep with Benyon.

But the hierarchy of moral judgments obviously doesn't apply in a cartoon remake like The Getaway. It's all effect and affect. The problem is, this new version tries to do everything, so nothing really comes off as genuine. The relationship of Doc and Carol sometimes seems a pretext for the main event: cars careening over mountains and slo-mos of Baldwin flying through the air with a high-tech pistol in each hand. Is this supposed to be the coronation of Baldwin as an action star like Schwarzenegger or Stallone? Or a stylized once-over?

Carol and Doc discover that the actual crime of stealing millions from a bank is the easiest part of the job. Fleeing from their partners and the police is the whole show. Seeing the well-pot together Basinger and Baldwin come barreling out of a trash compactor is sort of fun if you haven't seen it before. And Jennifer Tilly provides some eccentric relief as the slutty wife of a nerdy veterinarian whom the sadist Rudy comes across while carelessly pursuing Carol and Doc. Tilly and Woods are the only ones not content with merely serving the conventions of this sort of film.

Woods is terrific as Benyon, the sly sexual predator who not only wants to control Doc but humiliate him. Indeed, the film would be more interesting if Woods and Baldwin had simply exchanged roles. Benyon is a better part for the naturally smooth and insouciant Baldwin, who was great as the amoral salesman in Cleopatra Glen Rose. While Basinger is an improvement both in style and substance. The Getaway finally seems like a burlesque rather than a serious film. The result may be somewhat trivial, but as they say in the trade, it certainly has its moments.

CD's To Avoid!

Peter Frampton: Peter Frampton (Relativity)

One of rock's imponderables was the incredible popularity of this mediocre singer-guitarist's 1975 double-LP Frampton Comes Alive! It became the biggest-selling live album ever. That's why Frampton attempts a comeback every few years. This time, save for a few relatively sprightly exceptions like Day in the Sun, he's boring us with adult-contemporary fluff.

Some Old Bullshit: Beastie Boys (Royal/Capitol)

The Boys' first release as part of their own-label deal with Capitol isn't so grand. The CD simply slaps together 14 messy tracks from the New Yorker's early, pre-rap days, including both the censored and uncensored versions of their first taste of notoriety, Cookie Puss. The general effect of these punk frenzies and goof-offs is that of a group trying to find its style. Fortunately, it later did.

Face the Music: NKOTB (Columbia)

It's been 4 years since the New Kids on the Block's last CD, and the quintet wants to be seen in a new light. The name is now abbreviated, the language has gotten rougher, and they've dismissed Teddy Riley and Narada Michael Walden. The result? Pretty much the same old shock-pale approximations of R&B styles, from hackneyed hip-hop to wannabe Jodel.

Heartwork: Carcass (Columbia)

It isn't easy getting noticed in the world of speed-metal. Pity poor Carcass, 4 lads from Liverpool who have only that in common with the Beatles. They've tried to outgross, if not outclass, the competition with brutally graphic grinds whose lyrics sound as if they were lifted from a surgeon's textbook. What defeats them on this 4th album is meatless music that sounds like grade-D Slayer.

8 Seconds: Various artists (MCA)

Lets hope most country soundtracks are better than this 12-track CD, released in advance of the film. Everything here is predictable, from John Anderson's highway song, Burning 'Up the Road, to a spiritless cover (Vince Gill's take on the Everly Brothers' When Will I Be Loved) or several soppy ballads. Pam Tillis and Brooks & Dunn turn in lively tracks, but 8 Seconds is a dull ride.

Shock of the Hour: MC Ren (Ruthless)

Shock of the Hour is the rap schlock of the week, so limited in its verbal and musical punch, it makes Snoop Doggy Dogg seem like a genius by comparison. In his first full-length album, MC Ren (yet another former NWA member) shoots angry clichés at society in general but at women in particular, pushed along by a hip-hop production that merely imitates Dr Dre's. MC Shampy's more like it.

So Far So Good: Bryan Adams (A&M)

A&M reportedly is mulling a $40-million contract for the services of this highly successful singer (2 simultaneous singles in a recent top 10). If the label goes for the deal, it will surely be because his raspy-voiced style and epic, hook-filled lists—collected on this single-disc CD—take no risks, and are perfect for record buyers who like their music predictable and shallow.

Songs of Faith and Devotion: Live: Depeche Mode (Sire)

Until I heard this CD, I thought there was nothing more annoyingly redundant than remix albums. But Britain's braying Depeche Mode has come up with something that's an even greater waste of all but the most devoted fan's 15 bucks: an album that repeats the songs from the group's recent studio album—in the same order and with only a few fresh touches. Sure.

Modern Life Is Rubbish: Blur (SBK)

There are certain things to like about Blur. Especially Graham Coxon's impudent guitar and the way the band defined its sound more on the this 2nd album, distancing it from the "shoegazer" groups that the debut album, Leisure, had journalists lumping them with. But what spoils it for me is Damon Albarn's singing—an annoying adonoidal Cockney whine that's, to these ears, unbearable.

Doggystyle: Snoop Doggy Dogg (Death Row/Interscope)

That this pathetically mean-spirited rapper's debut album (after guesting on Dr Dre's The Chronic) was deemed the most eagerly anticipated CD of '93 reflects on mas tastes even worse than Rush Limbaugh and Howard Stern's position on the book charts. Hateful, unfunny and just plain dumb, Doggystyle's only assets are images and funk riffs borrowed from George Clinton.

Pale Sun, Crescent Moon: Cowboy Junkies

Ever since critics (including this one) fell all over the Junkies applauding this Canadian group's The Trinity Session, the Junkies have worn out their welcome—not by changing their sporadic, folk-rock approach, but by sticking to it. Pale Sun is more of same-bushed, slow, moody, and ultimately one big, moony drag. We who whooped their praises have only ourselves to blame.

Desire Walks On: Heart (Capitol)

Seattle is cool right now, but not every Seattle band is good. Despite an attempted link with the town's new blood (a song as the Lovemongers), no Singles soundtrack, the goosing of Alice in Chains' Layne Staley on 1 track here) Heart has churned out another album of hackneyed rock and hokey ballads, all with Ann Wilson's strident, mannered vocals.

Fishbone, NOFX at The Monk

Fishbone, NOFX, and Green Apple Quick Step performed for a sold-out crowd at the Mad Monk Saturday night. Doors opened at nine, with the show starting with GAQS at ten o'clock.

The crowd was a little hesitant for the Green Apple Quick Step set, which was understandable. The "Seattle" band started off pretty well, but about halfway through, the songs began to get a little slow, and a tad too soulful for my personal taste. However, the "Family Portrait" song featuring three members of the crowd was a novel idea. Their bassist did a great impression of Cousin It, too.

NOFX (hailing from Los Angeles) took the stage second, introducing themselves as the "punk rock band for the night". They started their set with "Stickin' in my Eye", off their latest album, "White Trash, Two Heebies, and a Bean". I was a little worried that the Monk was going to pull their power because they mentioned their earlier show at the infamous Jacob's Run. However, the Monk employees seemed to take it pretty well, and decided not to do a last-second boycott of the performance. The crowd finally got a little more energized (I'd like to offer my heartfelt thanks to the guy in combat boots who managed to kick me in the groin in an attempt to jump into the pit.)

The Fishbone set started off with Angelo giving a little explanation of their album title "Give a Monkey a Brain and He'll Think He's the Center of the Universe". Part way through the set, Angelo decided to put his thousand-foot microphone cord to good use by crawling up on top of the speakers, and then onto the railing of the balcony. (Keep in mind that he was singing the whole time.) After crawling about halfway down the balcony railing, he did an "Air Jordan" ten-foot drop into the pit. (I'm glad I was standing on the other side.) All I've got to say is, the man has more cojones than I do.

After the set, Angelo gave a rousing monologue about how it feels to be a "rock star", and how hard it is for a black band to make it in a profession dominated by whites. As the crowd chanted, he left the stage, opting not to come out for an encore. I must say, I was sort of glad, because while listening to the monologue, I noticed that Angelo's suspenders were a size or two bigger than necessary, and he didn't have any Underoos on. (My rural American upbringing didn't prepare me for public displays of pubic hair.)

Overall, the show was great (not quite as good as Bad Brains and Prong, however). The only real complaint that I had was that the bouncers weren't frisking at the door (come on, guys, you know I love that). The $14.00 admission price was a bit stiff, but it was worth it.

A College Degree Means Money

BY TREY CHEEK
Seahawk Reporter

The gap in earning between people with a college degree and those with a high school degree continues to increase.

The median salary for a college-educated man is $38,300, while it is $25,000 a year for a man with only a high school degree.

College-educated workers' earnings have increased two percent in the past 15 years. Earnings of high school graduates have decreased 30 percent and earnings of high school dropouts have dropped 38 percent during the past 15 years. These figures include adjustment for inflation.

The game is predicted to widen as factory jobs are replaced by machines. Factory jobs are among the highest-paying jobs non college-educated people can have.

Goods-producing jobs (jobs in factories, mines, or construction) account for 20 percent of the U.S. work force, while 20 years ago these jobs made up 33 percent. This is amplified because 75 percent of the nation's work force is made up of people who did not graduate from college.

The U.S. Labor Department estimates that 26 million jobs will be created in the next 13 years. Twenty-five million of these jobs will be in service industries.

Service jobs which required college training pay better salaries and offer more opportunities for advancement than the jobs with less training required. Jobs requiring fewer skills make up 70 percent of the 26 million to be created.

However, only two of the 10 fastest-expanding jobs in the next 20 years, registered nurses and systems analysts, will require a college degree.

University of Chicago economist, Kevin Murphy, says that from age 20 to age 60, a college-educated worker earns an average of about $2 million, while the worker with no college degree earns about $1 million.

However, the number of people who finish college appears to have stabilized. In 1977, 24 percent of people ages 25 to 29 had a four-year degree and in 1991, 23 percent of people in the same age group had a four-year degree.

Department of Commerce economist Robert Kominski said that rising cost of education could be on factor in decisions not to attend or finish college. According to the College Board in New York, tuition at a four-year public college has increased an average of 8 percent per year over the past seven years.

Some individuals surveyed said they attended college and did not learn anything and as a result, while others said they did not attend college because they did not feel they were ready.

Matt Robertson and Jonathan Revell, Scholarship Chair of Phi Eta Sigma, the Freshman Honor Society. Matt has the highest average in the freshman class. He was recognized for his academic excellence by being awarded a subscription to The Wall Street Journal. Both are members of Delta Tau Delta Fraternity.

British Scholar Speaks: Life Without Thatcher

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

Noted British scholar, Peter Stead will deliver a lecture at 7:30 p.m., Monday, Feb. 28, at King Hall Auditorium on the campus of UNCW. His presentation, "Living Without Thatcher: John Major's Britain," will encompass a wide range of subjects related to politics, culture, and the arts in contemporary Britain. Stead also will include a discussion of economic conditions in Britain and the impact of radio, television, and film on social attitudes.

A teacher of history at the University of Wales in Swansea, Stead recently worked as the on-screen host for a BBC-produced television documentary. Three years ago, he was a Fulbright Fellow at UNCW and a periodic commentator on WHQR radio. Stead is the author of many books about history and the arts. His most recent is a biography of the Welsh movie actor, Richard Burton. Sponsored by the UNCW History Department and Office of International Programs, this lecture is free and open to the public.

Dangling By a Thread

BY JAN KELLER
Contributing Writer

"The Verge" debuts this week. The play, presented by the UNCW Drama Department, was written by Susan Glaspell in 1921. "The Verge" is a mixture of realism and expressionism. The lead character, Claire, uses men in an attempt to break free from female normalcy. Tom, Dick and Harry can't fulfill her needs. "The Verge" is a controversial, dark comedy/modern tragedy.

As the play opens, Claire diverts heat from her house and its inhabitants (Tom, Dick and Harry) to a greenhouse protecting unusual plants during one of New England's snowmelt. Like the proverbial mad scientist, Claire reaches for "otherness" in her unnatural plants—the "otherness" she failed to create in her daughter, Elizabeth, a typical college student.

In Claire, we see the thought-speak of expressionism, a challenge for the actress. Throughout the play, Claire dangles by a thread of precarious sanity. She attacks Elizabeth. Tom, Dick and Harry make a desperate attempt to save Claire from herself. The tenuous thread of sanity is stretched to the limit. Will murder be the breaking point?

See "The Verge" at Kenan Auditorium on Wednesday, February 23, through Sunday, February 27 (8 p.m. on Wed. through Sat. and 3 p.m. on Sun.).

David Garrow To Speak at UNCW

BY FIONA RICE
Public Relations Intern

Dr. David Garrow will deliver the 1994 B. Frank Hall Lecture at 8 p.m., Friday, Feb. 25, at UNCW in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall. He will speak on the "The Religious Vision of Martin Luther King." The lecture is free and open to the public.

Garrow won the Pulitzer Prize for his biography of Dr. Martin Luther King, Bearing the Cross. He wrote The FBI and Martin Luther King, Jr., Protest at Selma and his latest book, Liberty and Sexuality: The Right to Privacy and the Making of Roe v. Wade, was published in January. Garrow holds both a master's degree and a doctorate from Duke University and has taught at Duke, UNC-Chapel Hill and the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton. Most recently, he was visiting distinguished professor of history at Cooper Union in New York City. He is currently touring the U.S. to promote his latest book.

Garrow's lecture marks the seventh annual B. Frank Hall Lecture. Dr. B. Frank Hall founded the Philosophy & Religion Department of Wilmington College (now UNCW) in 1963. He served as chair until 1975 when he stepped down to teach part-time until 1988. Hall was a minister at Pearsall Presbyterian Church for 28 years and a Sunday columnist for the Wilmington Star-News where he wrote over 1000 articles. A collection of his favorite Star-News articles was published in 1978. The B. Frank Hall Lecture Series was originated in 1988 by William Wagner, former chancellor of UNCW, in commemoration of Hall's 80th birthday. Hall died in 1991.

Job Preparation

BY JOEY NICHOLS
Staff Writer

Jobs everywhere? How can that be? In the nineties, when jobs seem to be coveted by all, there are jobs available for the taking. If you're prepared, that is.

To be prepared and get a job, all you need to do is get into college, get good grades and graduate, right? Wrong.

Somewhere along the way, someone threw a wrench in the machine. Everyday major corporations are finding they can only fill half of their openings because they cannot find qualified applicants. With 89,000 unemployed college graduates, this seems hard to believe. Susan Cox, director of career services at Wright State University, explains.

"In the 1950s and 1960s, just because you had a college degree and high grades you had the world," Cox said. "It's not that way anymore."

In today's job market, being well-prepared means knowing your basics. It means being able to write a coherent proposal, speak clearly, and present yourself well. It's knowing how to use a calculator to figure out a profit or loss. Computer literacy is a must, yet general knowledge about the world and society is essential as well. Moreover, it's putting it all together and selling your best product, YOU. With common sense, hard work and an aggressive, persistent pursuit, a job is within anyone's reach.

But how do you attain the characteristics that employers are looking for?

Gov. Jim Hunt and his 25-member commission, which is redesigning and toughening academic standards statewide, as well as top business leaders, gave input and advice.

First and most important, study. Do your homework and learn your basic skills because everything else you learn is built on what you already know. While great grades won't necessarily clinch a job in today's market, awful grades will certainly hinder your efforts.

Second, become computer literate if you are not already. If you are, improve your skills. Many colleges, including UNCW, offer free computer labs.

Third, explore a world other than school. Develop a hobby or take up an activity that interests you. Paint, sing or play the trombone. For the more adventurous, travel, rock climb, volunteer at a homeless shelter or take up parajumping. Each activity will cause you to learn to commit your time to something you enjoy, thus making you not only more dedicated, but more interesting as well.

Finally, learn to communicate. When leaders in business were questioned on what they looked for in an applicant, communication skills topped the list. The ability to carry on a logical conversation and present coherent information is important. It's amazing what that coupled with a firm and confident handshake can do for you.

"There is still a gap between what is coming out of our schools and what employers need," said Governor Hunt. "We are constantly in competition and the advantages go to the businesses that have the brightest, most innovative and most productive employees."

First International House Program

BY RENEE HILL
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Leutze, his wife, his son, and about 30 combined International and American students shared an informal dinner at his home last Tuesday, February 15, 1994 at 6:30 p.m. International and American Residents of Suite T collaborated to design their own menu, and volunteered to cook.

"Chancellor Leutze's family was very hospitable," said Amy Gant, an American resident of Suite T.

A Virgin Island rice dish, and Co-au-vin, a French chicken dish were among the many international dishes prepared by the students at the Chancellor's home.

"I think it went pretty well, I hope it continues. I think for Chancellor Leutze, the international students are an important group for him to target because they are not going to be here very long," said Gant.

Approximately 40 students, 20 international and 20 Americans, live in Suite T, with residence assistant Amy Butler. Some of the international students have traveled from as far as Italy, France, Germany, England, and Ecuador.

This is the first year for UNCW's international house program. "This will definitely become an annual program," said Bill McCartney, director of Housing and Residence Life.

1994 Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award

Nature and Purpose of the Award

The Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award is designed to exemplify this institution's commitment to teaching excellence. Recipients of the award shall manifest excellence as persons who have made and continued to make significant contributions to higher education through their dedication and service to students.

The $1,500 cash award carries with it both an honor and a responsibility. It will specify a member of the faculty as a person of excellence, and it will call upon him or her to share that excellence with colleagues and students.

Criteria for Consideration

A nominee for the Teaching Excellence Award must be current member of the UNCW faculty who has been teaching at least half time for five semesters or more. The nominee must have demonstrated a mastery of and enthusiasm for the subject taught, resoluteness in maintaining high academic standards, a genuine interest in each student's intellectual and creative development, and an ability to foster respect for diverse points of view and an openness to learning.

Procedure for Nominations

Nominations may be submitted by any member of the faculty, currently enrolled students, alumni or persons in the larger community served by the university.

All letters of nomination must be limited to one page and must be received no later than Wednesday, March 31, 1994, by the Chancellor's Nomination Committee, Alderman Hall, UNCW, Wilmington, North Carolina 28403-3297.

Selection Process

The chancellor, after consultation with the chair of the Faculty Senate, will designate members of the Chancellor's Nomination Committee. After reviewing the nominations, the committee will make its recommendation to the chancellor. He will present the recipient of the 1994 Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award to the Board of Trustees in Summer 1994.

PAC'N Helps

BY ERICA BRANDON
Seahawk Reporter

PAC'N is a program created to promote communication among the university community and the University Police.

In order to make the program a success, a PAC'N officer is assigned an area of the university and acts as an alliance between the designated area and the University Police. The interests of the university community, in turn, are addressed by the PAC'N officer. Then they create a plan to make sure everything goes as anticipated.

PAC'N, along with the Crime Prevention Office, will have programs that the university community is encouraged to attend. These programs include Interaction Through Recreation, Think Smart, Operation I.D., Drug Awareness, R.A.D. (Rape Aggression Defense) and Ride Along.

R.A.D. is "geared toward the average woman," said Detective Shawn Thomas from University Police. It is a physical defense course designed to make women more self-confident, assertive, and aware of their power. It is taught all over the country, including North Carolina State University, James Madison, and the University of Maryland at Baltimore.

Another PAC'N program is "Ride-Along with the University Police." Anyone interested in this program should go by the University Police department and fill out an application. The eligible applicant will not have any pending actions by the University Police.

For more information about PAC'N call 395-3184 for program scheduling.

SWIMMERS COMPETE IN CONFERENCE MEET

BY SHANNON MCBRIDE

Sports Writer

The Seahawk men's and women's swimming and diving teams took 3rd and 4th place, respectively, this past weekend at the CAA Conference Championships in Greenville.

The women were lead by Cameron King, Karla Zick, and Deb Kresho. King won the 1650 Freestyle (17:12.85), breaking both the school and conference records, while setting the school record in the 1000 Freestyle records. Senior Deb Kresho also broke Seahawk records in the 50 Free (24.56) and 100 Free (53.19).

Other records were broken by freshman Pamela Denson in the 200 Backstroke (2:11.02) and by the 200, 400 and 800 Free Relay teams.

The men were lead by Burak Erdem, Clifton Perkins, and Drew Whorley. Erdem won the 200 Backstroke (1:49.39), and placed second in the 100 Backstroke (50.79). Perkins took fourth in the 400 Individual Medley with a record breaking time of 4:04.40, and Whorley placed fourth in both the 100 Backstroke (51.93) and 100 Butterfly (50.48).

Other school records were set by junior Jamie Elk in the 100 Freestyle (46.51) and by the 200, 400 and 800 Freestyle relay teams.

The Seahawks will travel to their final meet in Cleveland, OH, next Wednesday. The three day Easterns meet will include such teams as Notre Dame, West Virginia and Southern Illinois.

BASEBALL TEAM GOES 2-3 IN FIRST WEEK

The Seahawk baseball team closes out its February schedule this week after going 2-3 in the first week of the season. UNCW has been involved in several close games early in '94, with four of the five contests being decided by three runs or less and three by just one run.

Catch Mark Scalf's young club is batting .242 through five games and the pitching staff has recorded a 3.63 earned run average. Shortstop Pat Smith and second baseman Marshall Cooper lead the regulars at the plate with 429 and .300 averages respectively.

The Seahawks, who have outscored opponents, 21-18, have shown some surprising pop early in the campaign, out-homering opponents by a 5-2 margin. Freshman outfielder Derek Williams has two homers and Jason Bourbeau, Chris McBride and Bryan Britt have knocked out one a piece.

This week's schedule had the Seahawks traveling to Coastal Carolina Tuesday (Feb. 22) and returning home for a three-game homestand. UNCW entertains Barton on Thursday (Feb. 24) and then hosts Virginia Tech this Saturday and Sunday (Feb. 26-27).

TRACK TEAMS COMPETE AT VIRGINIA TECH

The Seahawks made their sixth appearance of the indoor season in the Virginia Tech Quadrangular over the weekend and returned to the Port City with solid finishes.

UNCW's women, rallying behind four freshmen, turned in their strongest showing of the season with six first-place finishes. Newcomers Winifred Winston, Chi Wilkins, Sara White and Cynthia Peters all enjoyed outstanding performances in the meet with Virginia Tech, Virginia Commonwealth and Emory.

Winston smashed her old school record in the 800 Meters by clocking a 2:19.9. Wilkins won the 55 Meters (7.2) and took third in the shot put and fourth in the 200 Meters. White won the High Hurdles 98.4 and claimed third in the 400 Meters. Peters captured first in the 400 Meters (59.9) and was third in the 200 Meters (26.2).

Heather Fenton and Tricia Callison, meanwhile, also competed well. Fenton, who qualified for the East Coast Championships last week, won the mile in a school-record time of 5:06.4. Callison came in first in the 2,000 Meters (6:55.7).

Junior Steve Benfield paced the young men's team by setting a school record in the 55 Meters, posting a 6.5 time for second place.

In addition, freshman Michael McDuffie won the Triple Jump (47-11 1/2), sophomore Jeff Tiegs finished second in the mile with a personal best of 4:20.0, sophomore Shawn Thomas was second in the 200 Meters (23.4) and third in the 55 Meters (6.60) and first-year leapers Matt Moore and Robbie Moss came in second and fourth in the high jump.

GOLF TEAM MAKES SPRING DEBUT

Coach Lea Dudley's Lady Seahawks take a short break after making their spring debut in the Windthrop Golf Invitational last weekend at Rock Hill Country Club in Rock Hill, S.C.

The Lady Seahawks placed second out of eight teams in the Windthrop event with a two-day total of 343-339-682. Individually, Gwen Gravina tied for first place with a 79-79-158 total.

Windthrop Team Results: Lynn (329-240-669), UNC Wilmington (343-399-682), Windthrop (340-345-685), Mobile (366-366-732), Jacksonville (383-353-736), Mercer (401-396-797), East Tennessee State (435-417-852), Western Carolina (500-496-996).

UNCW Individual Results: Gwen Gravina 79-79-158(1st), Lin Valera (89-83-172)(10th), Stephanie Poulin (85-88-173)(11th), Danielle Roudeshush (82-91-173)(11th), Tina Lynch (92-89-181)(19th), Kelly Miller (90-94-184)(25th), Marcy Moore (88-96-184)(25th).

Women's Basketball Team Makes Debut On Tube

For the first time ever, a UNC Wilmington's women's basketball game will be televised live this weekend when the UNCW-Richmond contest is aired locally. The game, produced by independent Thompson Everett Sports and fed via satellite, will be shown on Vision Cable/Channel 11 at 2 p.m.

Sprecher Pupil Performs Well

Women's Basketball Gets National Spotlight

The UNC Wilmington women's basketball team recently appeared on ABC-TV's "America's Funniest People" program. The team, in Norfolk, Va., to play Old Dominion, was shown providing the words to Inner Circle's "Sweat" during a pre-recorded taping at Waterside Mall.

Lee Watson is a senior this year on the UNCW Men's Golf team. He is from Greenville, North Carolina and will graduate in May of 1995 with a degree in Business Management.

At the age of eight, Lee became interested in the game of golf by tagging along once or twice a week with his father to the golf course. Then a lot of his friends started playing together, and by ten years of age Lee was playing golf everyday. His continuous improvement in the game has kept Lee involved in golf and he has been playing ever since. When it came time to attend college, Lee had a choice between three universities - ECU, VSC, and UNCW. Basically Lee chose UNCW because he was offered the most money to play golf, and UNCW had "good facilities, the beach, and nice weather." Whereas also ECU was too close to home and USC was too far from home.

Lee believes the UNCW Men's golf program is improving every year. They are getting good players coming in at a steady pace, including a few state champions in hopes of building a strong program. Lee has had a good time begin part of this athletic program and states, "I've met a lot of people and been a lot of places." Going into his final season, Lee hopes that the team can finish among the top five in the conference tournaments.

Lee is very self-motivated when it comes to golf. He pushes himself and has learned to be patient with this individual-type sport. As a captain on the team, Lee demonstrates good work habits at practice. "In practice people tend to stray-off, but I try to keep focused and tell them to keep working hard at the game, because it takes practice-practice-practice," Lee states. Lee believes in order to be good and succeed at the game of golf it had "to come from within."

After graduation, Lee intends to start out as an assistant pro in the golf business and work his way up to becoming a head pro someday. He feels confident about accomplishing this, because he has been around golf his entire life and knows the ins and outs of the business. But Lee states if his career directions in the golf business don't work out, he would probably go into banking as a business manager. Lee would also like to play professional golf in some small tournaments for a year or so.

Lee has been influenced by his golf pros and his parents. Lee has taken lessons from golf pros, John Tallensal at Landfall and Bank Guyton at Echo Farms. "They have helped me to improve my swing and my game - inching it up to the next level," comments Lee. His parents are very supportive. "They are 100% behind me and didn't make me do anything I didn't want to do. They have done everything they could to help me in golf when I was young," Lee remarked highly of his parents.

Lee feels that UNCW "has been a very enjoyable experience."

HOMECOMING TOURNAMENT

BY VERN GRANGER

The Association for Campus Entertainment sponsored a basketball tournament as part of the Homecoming Week activities. Ten teams participated in the all day, single elimination event held at Hanover Gym on Friday.

The tournament's final four were Lambda Chi Alpha, Pi Kappa Phi, Kappa Alpha, and Phi Beta Lambda. In the one semifinal, Lambda Chi Alpha barely edged Phi Beta Lambda, and in the other semifinal, Pi Kappa Phi defeated Kappa Alpha. In the championship, Lambda Chi Alpha soundly beat Pi Kappa Phi 36-26.

The winning team received $50 and a championship plaque and the second place team received $25.

News Briefs

WASHINGTON — Webster Hubbell, associate attorney general, resigned suddenly Monday. Hubbell said he was resigning to avoid any further embarrassment for the Clinton administration. Hubbell has been charged with overbidding the Rose law firm, where he was employed with Hillary Clinton.

WASHINGTON — President Clinton has nominated Adm. Jeremy Michael Board, commander of the allied air armada in Bosnia, to replace Adm. Frank Kelso II as chief of U.S. naval operations. Adm. Kelso will step down April 30, two months early, in exchange for a statement from Defense Secretary William Perry that cleared him of involvement in the Tailhook scandal.

WASHINGTON — Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., ended a five-month long legal battle over his ethics endorsement by a Senate ethics committee. Sen. Packwood said he would not pursue his appeal of a lower court ruling that he must hand over tapes and transcripts of the diaries. Sen. Packwood has been accused of official and sexual misconduct.

ATLANTA — Ross Perot criticized President Clinton's health care plan Monday in a speech at the American College of Cardiology. He encouraged doctors to send him $1,000 each to help construct a better one. Perot said he would donate $1 million also and make health care his top priority. Perot has organized a campaign, Put Patients First, which calls on doctors to help shape a health care plan and sell it to the public.

RALEIGH — The state House and Senate approved a measure Monday night to raise the prison population cap. A deadline to raise the cap by Tuesday would have required the parole of about 3,000 inmates. The House voted 103-1 to raise the cap by 3,100. The Senate voted unanimously earlier in the day to grant the Parole Commission authority to increase the cap incrementally.

WILMINGTON — An administrative law judge has concluded that UNCW did not discriminate against Kathleen Dorey in not hiring her in 1992 as Chancellor James Leutze's administrative secretary. Dorey, an administrative secretary in the department of biological sciences, claims she is more qualified than Dr. Leutze's assistant, Lynn Goodspeed, who is white. A Superior Court judge asked the State Personnel Commission in November to reevaluate its original decision that Dorey had not been discriminated against.

Take Back The Night

One in three women can expect to be raped in their lifetime. It can happen to you. It can happen to your sister. It can happen to your mother. Ten times as many rapes are committed as are reported. Many women keep their silence because they are afraid of what society will say.

UNCW will break the silence at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, March 22, in front of Randall Library. That's where participants of UNCW's third Take Back the Night march and rally should meet.

Take Back the Night is a community-wide effort to raise public awareness about sexual violence, which ranges from verbal abuse to rape. This year's theme, "Break the Silence," will help educate, sensitize, and mobilize men and women to take action against senseless violence against women. It is an appeal to all members of the community to begin talking honestly about sexual violence and work together to end it.

Take Back the Night rallies and marches first began in England as a protest against the fear women felt at walking down the street at night. The first Take Back the Night in the United States was in San Francisco in 1978.

Although the rallies are organized in many different ways, Diane Edwards, Coordinator of REACH OUT!, says the UNCW march strives to include everyone. Most victims of sexual abuse are women, but men need to be aware and sensitive to the issue as well. Edwards says, "Men are an important part of the march. We hope to see lots of them there." This event is for all people, regardless of gender, sexual orientation, ethnic group, or race.

Some rallies are protests. Edwards be-

UNCW System To Lose $11.8 Million

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

An 11-year decline in the number of North Carolina high school graduates may leave the state university system with $11.8 million less in funding than projected.

Funding for the University of North Carolina system is tied to state high school enrollment. About 58,000 students are expected to graduate from N.C. high schools this year — 1,400 less than last year, and 10,000 less than 1983.

The numbers don't indicate that fewer students are graduating, but that there are fewer students. The number of graduates is expected to increase around 1995, and reach 65,000 by the end of the decade.

The UNC system has increased enrollment despite the drop in high school graduates. However, the system's enrollment growth slowed this year. UNC officials say growth has slowed because graduation rates and the economy are improving.

With more college students graduating on time, fewer are returning. Enrollment tends to rise during bad economic times as people seek more education to improve job opportunities.

The system, as a result, lowered the projected fall enrollment to 131,750. This figure is 2,065 less than the original estimate, but 3,000 more than enrollment for 1993-94, according to Roy Carroll, UNC system vice president for planning.

N.C. State, East Carolina, UNC-Charlotte, UNC-Greensboro and Western Carolina are expected to have the largest shortfalls in enrollment. Carroll said, "This obviously will translate in lower budget figures for institutions that had enrollment scaled back some."

The system wants the $11.8 million despite the drop in the number of high school graduates. "We have proposed we keep that money and spend it on other improvements," Hugh Buchanan, the system's associate vice president for finance, said. The UNC system submitted a proposal for Gov. Hunt to consider in his budget.

UNCW Will Be Home To Top Marine Research Center

BY JOEY NICHOLS
Staff Writer

UNCW will be the home to the leading marine science research center in North Carolina. After an administrative tug-of-war lasting several years with UNC-CH, UNCW has been named the recipient of the center.

The placement of the $16-20 million facility along Masonboro Sound was recommended by the UNC Board of Governors in an effort to improve the UNC marine science system.

"What I foresee is that we would become one of the top three of four marine science organizations in the country," said UNCW Provost Marvin Moss, a former deputy director of the prestigious Scripps Institution of Oceanography in La Jolla, California. "If we work cooperatively, we could be right up there with the giants in the field."

If the state provides funding, the UNC system will:

- Build the marine center, to be shared by UNC-Chapel Hill, ECU, Elizabeth City State and N.C. State, off of Masonboro Loop road.

- Renovate and expand the marine science center already in operation by UNC-CH at Morehead City.

- Work towards creating a joint marine doctoral program between UNC-CH and UNCW; UNC-CH may join the existing cooperative degree program between UNCW and N.C. State.

- Discourage other major expansion until the UNCW center is planned and funded as well as prohibit the creation of other marine science degree programs in the near future.

Although UNC-CH was reluctant to yield such responsibility to UNCW, which does not have the power to grant doctoral degrees, the deal was clinched last fall. The UNC system was given $400,000 to plan the center at UNCW. Sharpe Architecture of Wilmington will be visiting the leading marine facilities throughout the country to gain a broader perspective before drawing up their plans.

Now all the system needs is money from the state to finance the project. Though the legislature has made no promises to fund the center, there is hope that the planning money will be followed with the money needed to make the project work. Dr. Moss and others involved hope that the 100,000 to 120,000-square-foot center will be built within a few years.

The new degree and master's program are currently being planned and the cooperative program with UNC-CH may be available by the 1995-96 school year.

Job Search Made Easier

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

The Student Government Association is shopping this week for new computer equipment to upgrade job resources at the Career Planning and Placement Center (CPPC).

Lee Person, SGA special student senator and president pro tem of the senate, said the SGA will expend $23,693 to purchase equipment to implement a new on-line job information system for UNCW student job seekers.

Beginning Fall semester of 1994, students looking for temporary part-time jobs, cooperative internships, and work study positions will be able to drop by the CPPC to access job information on one of five terminals.

Computer terminals will replace the present system requiring student job seekers to shuffle through reams of paper and numerous notebooks of job listings. The computer job access program will be more current, easier to use, save time, and enable students to focus on career plans, according to Frances Carr, Office Manager of CPPC.

"It will help them get those tools to get them prepared for a career," Carr said. "I see down the road a lot that can be done for the students."

Students will also be able to complete personal data sheets on the computers, as well as enter their information into a resume format to be printed on a laser printer. There is also the possibility of future expansion to phone access from anywhere on the University or from home.

An on-line employment opportunities program will also be more efficient for the CPPC staff. Presently, Carr estimates her staff spends an average of five man hours each day manually posting temporary jobs. Additional time is spent in preparing the postings, updating job listings, and completing paperwork needed to meet contractual requirements of the Employment Security Com-

Carr believes upgrading CPPC resources will free up a tremendous amount of time to devote to finding full-time employment for UNCW graduates, while simultaneously meeting the employment needs of students working their way through college.

Person stated he and Jeff Gurkin, student body vice president, have been studying the job information problem since last year. Working in conjunction with the CPPC office, the proposed upgrade plan was presented to the SGA Budget and Planning Committee February 14, 1994. The proposal was approved by the committee on February 21.

Li-Shing Wang, Vice Chancellor for the Student Activities Office and director of Student Life Studies, is presently working to modify a computer program to make job information easy for student access.

What Can You Learn From A Shark?

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

Dr. Simona Bartl, visiting assistant professor of biological sciences at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, along with Dr. Irving L. Weissman, Stanford University, have found further evidence that sharks have an immune system similar to humans. Molecules were found in the sharks that are very similar to human molecules that must be carefully matched when searching a suitable organ donor.

"The human immune system is very complex and hopefully, by studying the simpler system of the shark, we can learn more about the human system and its evolution," said Dr. Bartl.

Their article, "Isolation and characterization of major histocompatibility complex class IIB genes from the nurse shark," has been published in the January 1994 Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. As one of the most prestigious scientific journals, scientists must be invited to submit their research by a member of the National Academy of Sciences.

Specializing in comparative immunology, Bartl is visiting UNCW from Hopkins Marine Station, Stanford University, California. Bartl received her degree from the University of California, San Diego.

Floyd Cochran to Lecture on The Aryan Nation at UNCW

BY FIONA RICE
Public Relations Intern

Floyd Cochran, former member of the Aryan Nation, will lecture on his experience with the group at 7 p.m., Monday, March 21, at UNCW in the University Center Ballroom. The event is free and open to the public.

Cochran was involved in white supremacist groups for over 25 years. He was the chief spokesman and executive propagandist in charge of youth recruiting when he left the Aryan Nation in 1992 after the group told him his son, who was born with a cleft palate, would have to be euthanized.

Cochran lived in the Aryan Nation compound in Idaho and traveled throughout the Northwest recruiting youth for the cause. He set up new Aryan Nation chapters in Tennessee and Ohio. Shortly before his defection, he organized and was a featured speaker at the Aryan Nation's "Youth Fest."

Since his departure, Cochran has traveled the United States lecturing about his changed life. He has testified before the Montana State Senate to support a malicious harassment bill that would make violent acts against homosexuals a criminal offense.

Working against the hate messages he used to believe, Cochran uses secret videotapes of the Nation's meetings and the secret to their recruiting process to educate the public.

For additional information, please contact the ACE office at 395-3842.

Floyd Cochran has been involved with white supremacist groups for the better of 25 years. Floyd left the Aryan Nations in Hayden Lake, Idaho in July of 1992 shortly after he was told that his son, born with a cleft palate, would have to be euthanized. At the time of his defection, Floyd was the chief spokesman and executive propagandist in charge of youth recruiting for the Aryan Nations.

Floyd spent his early life going in and out of foster homes. From 1976 to 1989, he spent most of his time in New York county jails. Floyd was arrested in 1985 for threatening to burn down a synagogue. "Because of my racist beliefs, which started at an early age (10 or 11), I felt I was being held back by forces that were holding me down...I felt the world was conspiring against me."

Soon after leaving prison, Floyd moved to the Aryan Nations compound in northern Idaho. He traveled the Northwest, recruiting the disenfranchised with message of hate. He was sent by the Aryan Nations to Tennessee and Ohio to set up new chapters. In the spring of 1992, Floyd organized and was the featured speakers at the Aryan Nations "Youth Fest."

After leaving the Aryan Nations, Floyd traveled the United States, talking about the turn-around he made in his life. He even testified before the Montana State Senate earlier this year, in support of a malicious harassment bill that would make violent acts against gays and lesbians a criminal offense. "Only recently in life have I understood that it was not the world or Jewish people of blacks or any one else that oppresses me. It was me."

Floyd Cochran is now working to counter the message of hate groups bring to our communities. He brings to his lecture secretly filmed videotapes of meetings, the secrets of the recruiting process—this is a unique opportunity to get a glimpse inside the Aryan Nation.

Register By Sealine

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

The days of standing in long lines for hours waiting to register for classes are coming to an end. In the near future, UNCW students will be able to register by phone on the SEALINE, UNCW's Interactive Voice Response Telephone System. The system will allow students to call directly into a mainframe computer using their student ID number, personal access code and registration number. The personal access code and registration number will be given to students when they meet with their advisor before registration.

The system is still being designed and tested. Initially, SEALINE will allow students to register and check their final grades. Eventually, students will be able to access Financial Aid information, including application deadlines and award dates. It will also be possible to pay fees, fines, and tuition by phone. Drop/add by SEALINE is also in the future.

Ron Whittaker, UNCW's Registrar, plans to run a controlled test of SEALINE in April. The testing will ensure the accuracy of the system.

Whittaker says the system is the most comprehensive in the state. Other schools in North Carolina have had phone registration for years. UNCW originally requested an interactive phone system in 1987. Last year funding was granted to purchase such a system. Whittaker says the SEALINE system is very open-ended. That means it can easily be expanded.

The name SEALINE was chosen in a drawing in which students entered possible name suggestions. Three freshman women entered the name SEALINE on one entry: Stephanie Weatherington, from New Bern, Karen Zaytoun, a psychology major, also from New Bern, and Amy Burgess of Spring Lake, N.C.

The prize awarded was a $50 gift certificate from the UNCW Bookstore. The three said they would probably buy a sweatshirt. They are all roommates in Belk Hall.

POET'S CORNER

a look at the arts

UNCW ART EXHIBIT

Memory and Vision

Spring Break will have passed by the time you read this, but I am writing this before Spring Break. My mind is already in the Bahamas which is where the 1994 Wellness Cruise will take me, but my body is still in Wilmington. I am cheating a little by writing my article as if I had already been on the cruise.

Well, I have been on the cruise. This is the twenty-fourth year that I have chartered a sailboat in Miami and taken students to the Bahamas during Spring Break on some kind of personal growth or wellness based sun and fun experience. While I know that the people will be different and our experiences might have some newness about them, still twenty-four years of memories give me permission to reflect on something that hasn't even happened!

Memories...how powerful they can be in our lives both for good or ill. Memories empower much of our past so that it impacts our present. If we are going to live well in the present moment, part of that freedom comes in dealing with past memories that have negative power from which we need to be freed. For an extreme example, early childhood physical abuse may not have left us with any physical damage, but we are nevertheless "scared" by the memory that we carry of that horror. It is important work to remember such trauma in our lives and become intentional about dealing with them in a way that diminishes the influence they have as we seek to live fully to our present lives.

Good memories, on the other hand, are wonderful fuel for the energy that we need to live today. Stop for a moment and remember special wonderful family moments, an important romance, moments of laughter with high school friends or exciting trips you have taken. If you choose to remember such things you will find yourself smiling and feeling warm and good and the energy that comes to you will make the living of this day better. Memories have power! I have a mental "Rolodex" of twenty-four years of sailing the crystal blue-green waters of the Bahamas and they truly enhance my life whether I am in the Bahamas or sitting in my home in front of a fire on the coldest day of winter. I love it!

Memories also impact our future.

It is my memories of past cruises that give me expectations of things I will experience on the trip that is yet to come. It causes me to want to do this trip over and over again as far as I can see into my future. Memories of good times with my wife and children leave me with a hunger to do more with them. Memories of students I have enjoyed knowing help me get excited about meeting new students. Memories create visions that pull us into our future. Bad memories cannot be a drag on our future but good memories empower our dreams about career and family and give us all kinds of possibilities which leave our future open and exciting.

Memories are the birthplace of visions and visions draw us on into the next stage of the journey towards the fullness of life. Claim your memories, savor them, enjoy them.

Hang 'Em High

Leave it to a legislator to come up with a loony idea like this one: it seems state Sen. Frank Ballance wants to bring back public executions. That's right, if the senator has his way, it could be coming to a town near you.

Sen. Ballance recently introduced a measure that would reinstitute public executions, making capital punishment a spectator sport. Sen. Ballance suggested holding executions in courthouse squares. A devout opponent of the death penalty, Sen. Ballance actually wanted to show the barbarity of executions. He hoped the citizenry would be so horrified that they would denounce capital punishment and the whole business would eventually be done away with after deliberation in the legislature. Apparently, the legislators liked the measure and even threw in a couple of refinements, such as holding all the executions in Historic Hillsborough, where one of the last public hangings was held some 60 years ago.

However, the warden of Central Prison suggested at a full-dress hearing that executions in courthouse squares might create a security problem, with townsfolk clamoring to get in on all the bloodletting.

The best refinement the legislators came up with was to broadcast the executions on television, making people far and wide, or at least throughout the state, privy to the killings. It'd be even better than watching Gerald getting whacked over the head with a chair.

Strange But True!

Another "strange but true": Jeffrey Dahmer's refrigerator back home in Milwaukee will be auctioned off to pay lawyer's fees. Wonder if it comes stocked?

Speaking of Eating...

Speaking of eating, those of you who dine regularly at our campus eating establishments might have noticed they're slightly less than four-star.

For instance, I frequent the Hawk's Nest, not for the ambience or the warm, friendly smiles, but for the proximity. It's close to my classes and it isn't quite so much like being caught in the middle of a herd of cattle, the way Cafe Wagon is.

I frequent the Hawk's Nest mainly because, let's face it, it's probably best of a bad lot, and because of the way the employees always clamor to wait on me. Recently, on one of these unseasonably warm afternoons, I ventured into the Nest, thirsty, licking my lips, and dying to down a warm Raspberry Snapple. I waited in line patiently for a while, for the cashier who never comes. I was all but done with the thing when she finally moyeyed over, all shifty-eyed and with nothing but a pulse. She mumbled something to herself about a card. Maybe I should've just taken the advice of the employee who summoned me over to where he was eating and said "Past, Past. I work undercover here -- you can take off with that if you want." I was a little reluctant to throw away my college education, such as it is, and get hauled off to jail over a Snapple. I mean, surely SOMEBODY would be bound to notice. Call me a glutton for punishment if you will, but I went back for dinner. This time I did manage to find someone to wait on me, but she promptly informed me: "You know, we ARE closing in 20 minutes." I started to leave and call out for pizza, but I knew THAT would be in vain. The poor folks over there at Izza pizza told me, last time I queried whether they took the phones off the hook just so they wouldn't have to make anything after 8 p.m., that the reason I can't get through for hours at a time is because they only have two phones and a new phone person and blah, blah, blah. And it takes two hours to get a Solo pizza because they only have one driver.

Spring HAS Sprung, Damn It!

It's Spring. My journalism teacher zapped me this week because I used "spring has sprung" as a lead in a news story I submitted for the last Seahawk issue. Citing technical inaccuracy, he said I can't say said Spring has indeed sprung. Spring Equinox or not, whatever the correct terminology, the University officially recognizes this exalted season of the year. After all, didn't we just return from Spring Break? As far as I'm concerned--it's Spring, and if I want it to have sprung, then it has.

I can tell Spring is here by the bluebird I saw and heard singing on a post next to the blue bird box near Randall Library (he or she doesn't take jurisdiction). I can also tell by the butterflies and nervous excitement churning and whirling in my stomach (no, it isn't the mid-term exam results).

Spring heralds my favorite time of year--Summer. My old gray cells start pinking up, and I actually break down and start having amazingly vivid Technicolor ideas about ROMANCE. Naturally, these dangerous forbidden thoughts get me into trouble. I emerge from my isolation and actually go out--as in go out to create merry mayhem amongst the male population of the world. I may be old, but I'm not dead--yet!

Now that I ponder the matter, I realize my marital adventure began on a steamy summer day. There must be something to this seasonal influence on emotions, because the venture into Mr. and Mrs. Happy Land ended on a cold snowy day in D.C. It was so bloody cold there, I didn't thaw out enough to even cry until Spring.

I figure it must somehow be partly my fault. You could say I'm not at my joyous best during Winter. I'm partial to wearing ugly warm flannel nightgowns and boring wool socks in bed to ease my frozen bones than some naughty negligible negligee.

I tend to hibernate during the cold months. And, if one hibernates, one is somewhat excluded from performing those ritualistic acrobatic gyrations best saved for sultry summer evenings. My best company during the frozen times is a pile of good books. After all, I can fold their corners and drop them over the side of the bed when they bore me. Can't exactly do that with a man.

In a list of ten reasons to stay single I read in some magazine recently was one saying you don't have to pretend to be cheerful at breakfast before you've had your coffee. Good damn thing as far as I'm concerned: A) I don't eat breakfast anyway, and B) I don't drink coffee. Needless to say, I'm not the most cheerful person on earth in the mornings. Call me before 9 a.m. and I'll prove it to you.

Another reason listed in the merits of singleness was that you always get to choose what TV programs to watch. Logic would also extend this bonus to not having to compete with the remote control device, which is, of course, an extension of...well, we all know what that blasted remote control device represents.

Here's my particular favorite reason. Although not a new concept, it was missed (inadvertently, I'm sure) in the magazine's top ten reasons. I can get up in the middle of the night, go to the bathroom in the dark, and not risk drowning in the frozen waters of a lidless toilet. Long live single-ness!

So, as Spring springs, sprang, sprung or whatever around me, I'll keep in mind the reasons to stay single, hence sane. But I don't promise not to enjoy myself and hope for the good things. That's what Spring is all about.

Phil Smith

Special HAT'S OFF award for UNCW Chancellor Jim Leutze

Welcome Back!! Now, aren't we all relaxed and refreshed after what must have been at least a twelve hour Spring Break? Yeah, right. Anyhow, I hope everyone had as good a Spring Break as I did. The doctor wasn't sure which strain of influenza I had, but it certainly was the highlight of my week off. Actually, that's not exactly true, because I did get to enjoy the first few days of the break. I, being the avid basketball fan that I am, decided to travel up to Richmond, Virginia and catch the CAA tournament. In case any of you had the chance to watch the Seahawks on HTS and you saw four crazy looking people wearing shorts and no shirts with the teal green letters "U.N.C.W." painted on their bare chests, then of course you immediately recognized that I was the "U". Even though we got beat in the semi-finals, I had a great time both at the coliseum and hanging out in Richmond. I think I counted some 32,000 Confederate war statues.

In campus news, I understand that there is some sort of ill devised, evil communist plot to move my May 14, 1994 graduation out of the comfortable climate of Trask Coliseum and into the hot, muggy, bug-infested outdoors. Even worse, is the nearly $10,000 price tag required to set up an outdoor location, in addition to setting up Trask as a rain location. While I do like to spend time outdoors at my leisure, I don't think my parents have spent the equivalent of a small Yacht for the past four years just to sit outside behind 5,000 or so people and attempt to see me graduate. I doubt anyone will enjoy swatting gnats for two hours while Senior Class President Ashley Wallace drones on in oration (of course some things won't be pleasant inside or outside). I just don't see the point in spending all of that money and energy for something which seems to be desired by only a few people. Show me a petition signed by a majority of the graduating seniors, and I'll shut up and invest in a can of OFF.

Out of Seattle, Washington this week, yet another story about the controversial northern spotted owl. While the report acknowledges that the owls have "been studied up the wazoo", that "wazoo" is exactly what they are again studying. Researchers from the Seattle Center for Wildlife Conservation plan to go into the Wenatchee National Forest in the next few weeks and camp out underneath the nests to catch the birds' droppings and analyze them.

Now, don't make me out to be against owls. In fact, I support them frequently by eating at Hooters. The problem is with what the researchers are studying. According to Dr. Sam Wasser, scientific director of the research consortium, they are hoping to learn whether hormone levels can be used to examine the effects of logging practices on the birds' stress levels. They are studying stress levels in birds. Need I say more?? The study will be conducted with a $107,000 grant from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Your tax money at work.

A literal plethora of HAT'S OFF awards are in order this week. First in line is the UNCW Men's Basketball team. While they will not yet be bringing home an NCAA crown, they did have a great year and finished with their best record since the Hornell Corporation came out with Span. On a similar note, I offer HAT'S OFF to Joe and Julie of the UNCW cheerleading squad for the great job they do and for their many attempts to throw me a Go Go ball and/or can lugger during the season. Despite the fact that I NEVER CAUGHT ONE IN FOUR YEARS, I appreciate the good job they and the rest of the squad have done. And finally, a special HAT'S OFF award for UNCW Chancellor Jim Leutze. Not only did he make the trip to Richmond to support the Seahawks in the tournament, but on the second night he, clad in an official Seahawk warm-up suit, actually came down and stood at court end to cheer with the students. That's what I call a cool Chancellor.

A Smelly SHOE'S OFF Award is issued this week to the local Transportation Advisory Committee and associated bureaucracies who recently proposed and approved of a sinister plan to extend Randall Parkway through the UNCW Campus. As if we don't have enough traffic problems of our own, these people want to make it worse. I guess next they will want to reroute Interstate 40 through here, too. Shoe's Off for a bad idea.

Well that about wraps things up for this issue. Before going I pause in memory of one of my favorite actors, the late John Candy, who recently passed away while filming a movie in Mexico. Congratulations are in order this week for Assistant Chief Dan Stahl of the Winter Park Fire Department on being named "Fireman of the Year" for New Hanover County. A special thanks goes out to all those who sent me birthday messages; especially DD, Meredith, April, Christie, and Angie. I did not, however, get any fuzzy bobbers. As always your comments, suggestions, and really anything of any value are certainly welcomed. Address them to me here at The Fishwrap.

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Phil Smith is a NoBall Prize winning columnist with The Seahawk and he will be on the lookout for Owl droppings.

Road Trip To Virginia

On Saturday, March 25, 1994, the public will have its first opportunity to experience Living With AIDS: A Photographic by Sal Lopes, one photographer's gripping, intuitive and sensitive look at the lives of individuals with AIDS. This exhibition is a visual account of the resiliency of people: those infected with AIDS and those close to them, struggling to continue full, vital lives despite the inevitability of the disease. Totally more than 120 black and white images, Lopes looks past essays each illustrates a different aspect of living with AIDS — the NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt, the AIDS Action Committee of Massachusetts' Buddy Program and the Boyce family, a Massachusetts couple who adopted children with HIV or AIDS.

The exhibit will be at The Chrysler Museum and is located at 245 West Olney Road, near downtown Norfolk. The Museum is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. and Sundays from 1:00 to 5:00 p.m. A $3.00 donation is suggested for admission to the Museum. New Orleans Revisited!

By Sam Cathell
Entertainment Writer

Ah, spring break - the party of parties, that ritualistic week of 24/7 partying before the second half of spring semester. This year, I had the good luck of being able to travel to New Orleans' French Quarter in my search for the endless keg of beer.

After driving straight through to New Orleans (about 16 hours), we decided to rest up for a night before hitting the town. NOT! Saturday night, we were drunk as skunks, walking from bar to bar on Bourbon Street. I was handing my ID to every bouncer I saw, just because it was actually legal for me to drink. I felt awfully good to be able to buy my own beer for once. I even bumped into one of my professors.

Everything seemed to be going fine, until all the beer that I had consumed started to travel its way to my bladder. Soon, I was searching for any bar without a cover charge, and planning a mad rush for the john as soon as I got in.

Suddenly, across the street, I saw bright lights and a big sign that said NO COVER CHARGE!! I all over it - dragging my friends over, handing my ID to the bouncer, only to hear Nancy screaming behind me. Alas! I had managed to drag her into a NUDE BAR, without even realizing it. One look into the club confirmed her point, as some blond women were dancing seductively on top of the bar. Oh, well, there went that shot at the bathroom.

Sunday proved to be even more eventful than Saturday, strangely enough. After apologizing profusely to Nancy for the nude bar episode, she became convinced that she, being a 90's type of woman, could handle it. So, with beer money in my pocket and a smirk on my face, we all went to a nude bar.

The first dancer was U-G-L-Y and I don't mean just a little ugly, I mean VERY ugly. She was about 40, and even had a beer belly. After being subjected to about 20 minutes of sheer torture as she flaunted her body around on stage, the next dancer came out. It was love at first sight, and everything was going extremely well, until Nancy's boyfriend Quent kissed the stripper. Oh, boy, do you want to hear about things getting ugly? That was ugly. They fought right in the street, and I saw Nancy get in a good right hook.

Monday was uneventful, as after last night's scene at the nude bar, we were all afraid of going straight back to the Quarter. Instead, we found the Crescent City Brewery, a jazz bar with the most incredible happy hour beer specials I have ever had the privilege to partake of. Imagine - two huge schooners of thick, dark beer for only $5.50! Of course, my inconsequential body weight made for an extremely drunk college student as we left the bar. We never recovered, and were in bed by midnight. Tuesday was exactly the same, except we bumped into a few more UNCW students, as we all got trashed at the Brewery again.

Wednesday night - time to party again! Lucky Pierre's had 32oz Long Island Iced Tea for a measly buck. Things got ugly real quick, as we all got inebriated to the point of silliness. I met some girl who decided it would be cool to chew on my neck. Thank goodness she had to leave before she managed to chew me to tatters. We got kicked out of the bar (kicked out of a bar in New Orleans???) because Alex* was rolling the floor with his dinner...

By the time Thursday night finally got here, we were all completely exhausted. Everyone concerned decided that it would be best if we all had just a couple of beers and then came back to the guest house. I even volunteered to take first shift driving back to Wilmington the next morning. I should have known it wouldn't work out.

Bourbon Street was packed, and I (shame on me) managed to drag Alex back the Lucky Pierre's. They were having some kind of contest - I heard the bouncer say something about giving the strings of plastic beads he had placed around my neck to the prettiest girl I saw in the club.

That sounded cool to me, it seemed innocent enough. Not so, however. I hadn't even gotten to the bar for a beer when this woman comes up says "Hey cutie, what have I got to do to get some of those beads?" Oh boy, I was thinking, what's the appropriate response to this situation? Not to worry, though, she handled the response - by offering to show me parts of her anatomy for my string of beads. Being the shy, corn-fed, Southern boy that I am, I managed only a jumbled "Uh, what?" "Huh?" as she proceeded to fulfill her end of the bargain.

Of course, I left immediately to go tell the rest of our group about this new and wonderful experience. Pretty soon, we were all there (except Quent and Nancy), distributing beads like crazy. Before the night was over, I had seen more skin than I thought humanly possible. I had sever pangs of guilt afterward, however - it was a pretty one-sided affair if you think about it. I wish that guys had been able to collect beads, because I was feeling liberal enough to show some skin, as well.

Finally, the week was over, and we were all exceedingly glad. New Orleans is fun, but there's nothing like falling asleep in your own bed after a week of extreme partying. So now that it's over, I'm stuck with a serious question...Where do we go next year???

*certain names have been changed to protect the exceedingly guilty

New CD Releases

New albums due March 22: Bonnie Raitt's Longing in Their Hearts; more Eno - the 3-CD Brins Eno I, an anthology of his instrumental music; The Best of Frankie Goes to Hollywood.

Also, an as-yet-unfilled album from Pink Floyd; the Farm's Hallelujah; Panacea's Far Beyond Driven; the Proclaimers' Hit the Highway; and yet more March music from Yes (Talk).

March 29: Hole's Live Through This featuring Courtney Love (Mtn. Kurt Cobain); The Church's Someday Anywhere; Dr. John's Television, Jr.; Walker & the All-Stars' 2-CD Nothing but Soul; The Singles 1962-1983.

Other CD news: George Martin is putting together a collection of Beatles rarities, live tracks, and previously unreleased material for a 4-to-6-CD anthology to be released (in conjunction with a TV documentary series on the band) late this year or sometime next year.

The surviving Beatles are recording some new material this month for use in the series and possible inclusion on the CD collection.

Finally, spring and summer should bring new albums by Boston, Anita Baker, Stoneface and the Bananess, Frank Black, Sonic Youth, Deee-Lite, David Byrne, the Stone Roses, Johnny Cash, Paul Weller and Violent Femmes, plus a Moody Blues box set.

Ziggy Nix is still on top in Student Government. The SGA Spring Elections were held just before spring break. Nix kept his seat as Student Body President for the third semester. Dan Sullivan was elected Student Body Vice President.

Only 925 students voted in the election. With a total student population of 7,690, only about 12 percent of the student body voted. Election Board Chair, Ruby Brown said there were two main factors that contributed to the low voter turn out. Many of the candidates ran unopposed. For instance, there were eight positions open for representatives-at-large. Only seven candidates ran. An eighth candidate was added as a write-in candidate.

Brown said weather was a problem on election day. Because of rain, many students that would normally have voted, probably didn't.

Nix, who is from Hendersonville, N.C., plans to continue working on a free speech monument like The Pit at UNC Chapel Hill. The monument will be dedicated to Alex Manley, who owned Wilmington's first African-American newspaper around the turn of the century. The paper was forced to shut down because many people disagreed with Manley's outspoken views. The monument will be located near Randall Library. Nix is also working on a memorial fountain as part of a senior class project.

Sullivan, who is from Goldsboro, N.C., plans to tackle student apathy. He wants to make it easier for students to receive services and participate in events. "Instead of asking students to come to us, I want to go to the students, to the dorms," Sullivan said. Sullivan also plans to work on upgrading the media on campus, especially WLOZ.

UNCW's Commitment to Business Education

Howard O. Robbess, Dean
Cameron School of Business Administration

The theme of Business Week '94 is "Preparing for Tomorrow Today," a time looking forward to the ever-changing opportunities in the world of business. This is particularly important in the competitive decade of the 1990's.

Business Week '94 is one of the most ambitious and exciting events sponsored by the Cameron School of Business Administration. In today's rapidly changing business environment, the interaction between students and business, governmental and industrial leaders is more crucial than ever in providing students with "real world learning" to supplement classroom instruction. Opportunities for competition in a changing world economy, new technologies, as well as increasing social and environmental responsibilities are but a few of the many concerns to be shared by this meeting of students and faculty with business and governmental leaders. Our objective is to broaden the minds of our students through classroom and practical application in order to prepare them for productive participation in the business world of this challenging decade and the 21st century.

The Cameron School of Business Administration offers baccalaureate degree programs in accountancy, business management, business systems, economics, finance, and marketing. The Master of Business Administration degree is offered to those interested in graduate study. Currently there are approximately 1,050 students either enrolled or planning to enroll in undergraduate studies and 103 graduate students. The school has approximately 70 faculty and staff members.

Business Week '94 would not be possible without support from the business community, students, faculty and staff. I join the Business Week '94 Committee in expressing appreciation to all who participated in this worthwhile event.

The Cameron School of Business Administration will host Business Week '94 Monday, March 21, through Friday, March 25 on the campus of UNCW. The theme for the week will be "Preparing for Tomorrow Today," and the events are designed to introduce students to the operations of the private and public business sectors. The week will provide students a chance to interact with area business, government and industry leaders.

Admission to all events is free, and unless otherwise noted, events are open to the public, space permitting.

COMMERCE CUP CHALLENGE—Monday, March 21 and Tuesday, March 22

The Commerce Cup challenge kicks off Business Week '94 with students demonstrating what they have learned in the classroom. Based on the College Bowl format, the Commerce Cup Challenge gives UNCW students a chance to compete in an enjoyable and competitive atmosphere. Quarterfinals will take place from 5-7 p.m. on Monday, March 21 and finals will take place from 4-6 p.m. on Tuesday, March 22. Both events will take place in Cameron Hall Auditorium, room 105.

BUSINESS WEEK '94 OPEN HOUSE—Tuesday, March 22

Undeclared majors at UNCW will receive invitations to attend the open house to learn about the Cameron School of Business Administration. Any student may attend the open house at 3:15 p.m. to 4:15 p.m. on Tuesday, March 22, in Cameron Hall, room 212. Faculty and students will be on hand to answer questions about the business school and its various majors.

BUSINESS LEADERS SPEAK—Wednesday, March 23 and Thursday, March 24

Approximately 57 sessions are scheduled for business leaders to discuss issues pertaining to their businesses from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Wednesday, March 23 and from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Thursday, March 24. Both private and public sectors will be represented including manufacturing, sales, financial services, health care, marketing, and local government administration. Topics range from "Direct Marketing in Catalog Sales" presented by Sheldon Cohen of Bedford Fair Industries to "General Motors and Chevrolet: A Renewed Relationship," presented by Craig Tallberg, owner of Tallberg Chevrolet and Geo. Classes will be canceled in the Cameron School of Business Administration on March 23 and 24 so students and faculty can take full advantage of presentations in the areas of accounting, economics, finance, management, marketing, and production concerns. All UNCW students are encouraged to participate as are members of the public on a space available basis.

KEYNOTE ADDRESS—Wednesday, March 23

J. Walter McDowell, president, chief executive officer, and a director of Wachovia Bank, is the keynote speaker for Business Week. McDowell will speak at 4 p.m. on Wednesday, March 23 at UNCW in Cameron Auditorium. The topic of his speech is "The Business Environment And Your Future."

A graduate of UNC Chapel Hill with a bachelor's degree in economics, McDowell began his career at Wachovia in 1973. He has held his current position since May of 1993.

MBA EXECUTIVE DISCUSSION—Thursday, March 24

Mrs. Ingeborg Hegenbart, consultant and head of business development for the international department of Southern National Bank, will lead the MBA Executive Discussion on Thursday, March 24 from 5:30 to 7 p.m. in Cameron Auditorium. The title of her presentation is "International Banking: The Conduit to International Business Success." Mrs. Hegenbart received her MBA from the University of Economics in the Netherlands. She also had degrees in French, German, Dutch, and English. She has taught classes in international business at Sacred Heart College, Belmont Abbey College, and Central Piedmont Community College.

CAREER DAY—Friday, March 25

Representative from 15-20 area businesses will be on hand from 9 a.m. to 12 noon, on Friday, March 25 in Cameron Hall to answer questions about their businesses and career opportunities.

STUDENT/FACULTY SOFTBALL GAME—Friday, March 25

The traditional student/faculty softball game that marks the conclusion of Business Week will be held at 3 p.m., Friday, March 25 on the UNCW Athletic Field.

CAMERON SCHOOL OF BUSINESS FACTS

The Cameron School of Business offers baccalaureate degree programs in accountancy, business management, economics, finance, marketing, and business systems. The Master of Business Administration is offered to those interested in graduate study.

lieves protesting excludes people and tears them apart. "Our goal is to include everyone," she said.

The march will begin at Randall Library and travel down the double sidewalk toward Wagoner. It will cut across the bridge at the residence life tennis courts and march through the apartments. It will end at the gazebo, where the rally will take place.

The rally will be very emotional. Poems about sexual abuse have been given to Reach Out! These poems will be read at the rally. In some cases the actual author may also be the reader. Performer Tracy Drach will sing at the rally. There will also be a candle lighting ceremony. The purpose is to make people realize how painful sexual abuse is. Edwards says, "It's difficult to relate to victims if you haven't experienced it yourself."

Approximately 350 to 400 people attended the march last year. People carried signs saying, "Speaking Out to End Sexual Violence," and "Sexist, Racist, Anti-Gay, You Can't Take Our Night Away."

UNCW's Panhellenic Council asks everyone who comes to the event to bring a donation for the Rape Crisis Center and the Domestic Violence Shelter. They are asking for personal items that rape victims can use such as perfume, undergarments, inspirational books, and anything else to make women comfortable.

Take Back the Night is sponsored by Pepsi, Vic's Popcorn, Rape Crisis Center, Domestic Violence Shelter and Services, UNCW Gay and Lesbian Association, UNCW's REACH OUT! Volunteers, UNCW Office of the Dean of Students, UNCW University Police, UNCW's Panhellenic Council, UNCW Campus Activities, UNCW Social Work Students, UNCW's ALTERNATIVES!, and the Southwest.

Involved Students Making a Difference

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

Rose Monroe is one UNCW student who knows the value of getting involved in campus life. She will tell you there is more to life than going to class.

In her "spare" time, Rose is the chairperson of the Student Media Board and a member of the Media Board Evaluation Committee. She is often seen strolling through the University Union with walkie talkie in hand. That's because she is a Building Manager. She is also the Head of Training for the Student Employee Committee. She is the chairperson of the Association for Campus Entertainment, a standing committee of Student Government. She is the person responsible for bringing all those free films to campus.

Rose Monroe

As a senior, Rose has advice for underclassmen. "I tell them to get involved. You meet more people and you learn more. My involvement will benefit me

Starving Artists, a student-run theatre group at UNCW. She has done costume work for the Thalian Association and run the set rigging system for the Opera House theatre company. She has done technical work for the Scenic Association and she works in the UNCW costume shop and set construction department. Kia has been the head of publicity for the UNCW theatre department for the past two years.

Kia says theatre is what makes her happiest. She encourages everyone to get involved. "Even if you're not a theatre major, get involved," she says. "It's really hands-on. Every night, it's different. It's live so there's always the chance that something could go wrong. It makes you feel alive!"

Kia believes that her work in the theatre will last a lifetime. "Theatre is really competitive. You've always got to do your best if you want to make it." She says she wants to do this for the rest of her life. "The theatre feels like home. I'm 26 years old. It's been a long road. The more experience I can get under my belt, the more bricks I've ule, Rose says it's all worth it. In high school she was shy. Her only involvement in school activities was clarinet playing.

involved in the first place? "I didn't want to sit back and watch. I didn't want to be a suitcase student. I wanted to enjoy my four years of college," Sullivan says.

He also went through the Emerge Leadership program. The program is for freshmen and is sponsored by the Leadership Center.

"Getting involved makes it a lot easier to leave home and come to a four-year college. It's not the everyday going to class. It's the extra things you look forward to. It motivates you," Sullivan says.

Sullivan is also an Eagle Scout, the highest level of scouting. He says he's always been in Scouts. It's something fun and a good way to meet people and get inference on campus. Student Government just had its Spring elections and the student body reelected Ziggy Nix as its Student Body President for the third semester. Nix has been active in SGA since he arrived at UNCW. He was a Representative-at-Large his freshman year. He has also been Student Body Vice President. Right now Nix is on a "plethora" of committees. He says his whole reason for getting involved in SGA is to help people.

In addition to his work in student government, Nix has played Ultimate Frisbee, gone through the Emerge Leadership program, and is a founding father of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity. This is his fourth year as an orientation leader.

Nix says he is one of those people that has to be doing something all the time. "I would go nuts if I didn't have something to do," he said. "I'd probably get arrested. The busier I am, the better I feel."

Nix encourages others to get involved on campus, but adds a word of caution: "It's good to get involved, but school work has to come first."

Sullivan thinks everyone should get involved. "Get into something so you have something to look forward to," he says. "That's how you make connections by meeting people. It also takes stress away from academics."

Sullivan is a Residence Asstant in Belk Hall. He plans to stay on next year. Why did he get involved. This series of articles is sponsored by the University Union department in cooperation with the Seahawk, to say thank you to those students who invest their extra time in making a difference in campus life at UNCW. We recognize and appreciate the value of their contributions! Students interested in getting involved with campus life can contact the students profiled, or stop by the Campus Activities Office, Union 202, for more information. The Seahawk could not

The Anatomy of the Citibank Classic card: a body of services and peace of mind for students, now with No Annual Fee.

For years, scientists could only theorize about the Citibank Classic Visa® card, unable to actually observe anything below its epidermal surface (i.e. the plastic). Surely the highly intelligent services were evidence of an advanced brain. But with the latest advances in x-ray technology, and when the light could catch the various parts just so, it was confirmed: the Citibank Classic Visa card is head to toe more evolved than ever imagined. ¶ At its backbone are 3 services to cover the purchases you make on the card. Starting at the Lower Costal Spine, we see Citibank Price Protection can assure you of the best price. All you have to do is discover the same Scientists theorize that the mind of the Citibank Classic Visa cardmember (Fig. A) is secure because it receives superior service; the mind of the non-Citibank Classic Visa cardmember (Fig. B) is not secure because—could it be?—it has a screw loose?

Citibank can bend and be flexible while still lending support. ¶ The backbone is then connected to the cranium or headbone. Look at the bottom of the page. The Citibank Photocard has the head of the cardholder, as well as his or her own signature, right on the front. That way, it will help prevent fraud. It will also make a good form of ID, since you get to choose your own photo. ¶ But what about the Nervous System? The fact is, it doesn't have one, not in the spinal cord nor in the brain. What it has is the Very Calm System. Because even if your credit card gets stolen, or gets lost, an involuntary muscle called the Extendus Anewcardeus activates the Lost Wallet™ Service which can replace your card usually within 24 hours. ¶ As suspected, there's another involuntary muscle: the heart—a beating and caring heart, big enough to give students special discounts and savings. You'll receive a $20 Airfare Discount on domestic flights³; savings on mail order purchases, sports equipment, magazines and music; a low variable interest rate of 15.4%⁴; and, No Annual Fee. (In other words, the card itself doesn't cost a forelimb and a hindlimb.) ¶ Naturally the heart of the Citibank Visa card pumps life and personalized customer service into all its parts, 24 hours a day. So no matter what the question you might have concerning your card, you need only call the 800 number. You'll find Citibank has a neck they are eager to stick out for you. They will always lend an ear. Or a hand. They will keep an eye out for you. They will put their best foot forward. Etc. ¶ So call to apply. You don't need a job or a cosigner. And call if you'd like your photo added to your regular Citibank Classic Visa card. The number is 1-800-CITIBANK (1-800-248-4226), extension 19. ¶ If we take an overview of the whole body of services that make up the Citibank Classic Visa card, and consider that it will facilitate building a credit history, then you must shake a leg, flex your index finger and call today.

Gender Equality In School

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

Congress began moving last week to pass a bill on gender equality in schools.

The Gender Equity in Education Act was approved by a House subcommittee last week. The bill calls for an end to sexual harassment and bias at all levels of education. It also urges the elimination of sexist stereotypes from textbooks and requests that schools inform parents and teachers of the impact of assumptions about gender differences in ability. For example, many textbooks traditionally portray men as doctors and women as nurses.

Supporters say the legislation is needed because buried assumptions about abilities lead to girls' lower scores on national achievement tests and fewer merit scholarships for women than men. They cite studies showing that teachers direct women toward fields such as literature, rather than science and math, which would give them more opportunities in the job market.

Studies also show that teachers call on and encourage boys more than girls. As a result, girls leave school without the self-confidence needed to compete in the work force. Supporters say that women with college degrees have the same earnings as men with high school diplomas.

Patricia Campbell, director of a research company evaluating math and science education, notes that women have made gains, but the field is still not level. She said, "In 1990, boys were still six times more apt than girls to want to go into engineering."

The measure signals a vote for women's rights with no big price tag, Rep. Susan Molinari, R-N.Y., one of the bill's sponsors, said. She said the goal is to prevent subtle forms of discrimination in publicly financed schools.

Critics contend the issue was settled in 1972, when Congress outlawed all forms of sexual discrimination in public schools.

Diane Ravitch, assistant secretary of education in the Bush administration, said the bill proves that Washington exists in a bubble of unreality. Ravitch says U.S. schools are actually among the most gender-balanced institutions in the country.

The winners of this month's Big Turn Off are Hewlett and DeLoach Halls. DeLoach reduced its energy consumption by 37 percent! Great job! All of the residence halls actually increased their energy consumption! Hewlett's increase was the smallest, so they are deemed the winner among residence halls. Congratulations! Keep conserving!

Bolen Writes Book on Mississippi Kite

BY FIONA RICE
Public Relations Intern

Dr. Eric Bolen, dean of the UNCW graduate school and professor of biology, has co-written The Mississippi Kite with Dan Flores, professor of western history at the University of Montana. Jack Dermid, former UNCW biology professor, contributed some of the book's photographs.

The book, released in December 1993, details the graceful southern hawk, nicknamed the Mississippi Kite, that can be seen from the Carolina coast to the southwestern plains. The Mississippi Kite is also known as the Blue Darter, the grasshopper hawk and the Mosquito Hawk. The book describes the Kite's life cycle, some of its history, and how humans have affected it.

The Mississippi Kite is part of the Corrie Herring Hooks Series of bird books published by The University of Texas Press. Other titles in the series include The Cardinal and The Mockingbird.

Bolen, a noted conservation biologist, received his master's and doctoral degrees from Utah State University. Appointed the first dean of the UNCW graduate school in 1988 he plans to step down this summer to return to full-time teaching in the biology department. His specialty is wildlife ecology with an emphasis on natural resource conservation and management. Bolen has also co-written Wildlife Ecology and Management and Wildlife and Habitats in Managed Landscapes.

The book can be ordered through local bookstores for $17.95.

The Golden Year for the UNCF

BY KRISTY BROWN
Staff Writer

For 50 years, the United Negro College Fund has aided in the growth of young minds.

In 1944, a group of black college presidents created UNCF. They decided to join forces to raise money and share the proceeds so their small private schools wouldn't have to struggle to stay open.

In that first year, they raised $765,000. Today, the organization brings in about $60 million annually. Fourteen years ago, the first "Lou Rawls Parade of Stars" television aired. Since then, the UNCF has raised $109 million through pledges.

Since 1944, the UNCF has raised $800 million and expects to pass the $1 billion mark in 1994.

UNCF schools are predominantly found in the southeast. They opened after the Civil War to educate former slaves. UNCF schools include Livingstone College, Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte, and Barber-Scott College in Concord.

Graduates of UNCF schools include Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. (Morehouse College), Spike Lee (Morehouse College), Jocelyn Elders (U.S. Surgeon General, Philander Smith College) and Eva Clayton (Member of U.S. House of Representatives, Johnson C. Smith University). "Young minorities can attend UNCF schools, and they don't have to prove themselves every day that they are superhuman beings," says Prezell Robinson, president of St. Augustine's College in Raleigh.

Facts about UNCF schools:

- * Since 1986, enrollment at UNCF colleges have increased nearly 28 percent, to all-time highs.
- * Women comprise 59 percent of the total enrollment at UNCF schools.

- * UNCF schools graduate more than 25 percent of all black students with bachelor's degrees in physics and chemistry. They also graduate 43 percent of all black Ph.D.'s in this country.

University Thought to Reject Road Project

BY ERICA BRANDON
Staff Writer

A proposal to extend Randall Parkway and cut down on the massive traffic problem on College Road is currently being rejected by UNCW officials.

The Transportation Advisory Committee, made up of representatives of New Hanover and Brunswick counties, has already approved an area transportation plan that includes the Randall Parkway extension.

However, three of the local governments that would feel the effects of the parkway have not agreed on the issue. The city of Wilmington opposes the extension and Wrightsville Beach supports it. The county commissioners have not yet come to a decision.

If local governments were to come to a decision about the extension, the State Transportation Board would probably reject it if UNCW trustees continue to oppose it.

The proposed extension would skirt the northern side of campus and end at Hooker Road. UNCW trustees feel that their rejection is justified because it would make parking lots smaller and destroy the northern side of the campus. They also think the road would be too close to classrooms.

Unless the road is built or another alternative is designed the traffic problem on College Road is likely to worsen. About 37,000 cars travel daily on College Road in the area of Randall Parkway. The state has estimated that the number of cars traveling daily there could jump to 70,000 by 2010.

YWCA of Wilmington

On Thursday, March 24, 1994 at 7:30 p.m., the YWCA will present "Teaching Religion in the Public School Curriculum." Dr. James Megivern, professor of philosophy and religion at UNCW, will share information about new guidelines developed and supported by a diverse group of religious and educational organizations.

School policy makers, educators, leaders and parents are invited to come learn about ways religion can be taught which are "educationally permissible, educationally sound and sensitive to the beliefs of students and parents." Handouts including specific recommendations will be shared and discussion time will be available.

There is no cost. For more information or to reserve space, call the YWCA at 799-6820 or come by the office at 2815 South College Road.

Graduation To Be Held Outside?

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

With only 30 days of class left, an outdoor spring graduation ceremony is one step closer to being a reality. UNCW's Student Senate approved a resolution to hold spring commencement outside.

Paul Chamberlin, a senior biology major, initiated the idea of holding the ceremony in Brooks Field or on the lawn between James, Alderman, and Hoggard Halls. Years ago, the ceremony was held on the lawn. It has since moved into Trask Coliseum.

The proposal must still be approved by the Graduation Advisory Committee, which is made up of fifteen staff members.

One of the selling points of the proposal is the fact that UNCW has a beautiful campus. A graduation ceremony in that setting would be something to remember. An outdoor ceremony could be inviting to potential students in the audience. In contrast, even with nice decorations, Trask is still an enclosed building, a gym.

Weather is obviously a factor. Other schools in the UNC system hold their graduations outside successfully. The average temperature during N.C. State's graduation over the past ten years is 76.8 degrees. The average at UNC Chapel Hill is 81.5. UNC Wilmington's average temperature is 79.8 degrees. In the event of rain, the ceremony would be moved into Trask, which will already be set up in case that happens.

An outdoor ceremony would also be more accessible to more people. Students would still only receive five tickets each, but there would be standing room for additional guests.

Wheelchair access is not a problem because folding chairs are easily removed. Although the ground should be firm enough to support wheelchairs, there are sections of sidewalk that can be accessed. The section for the hearing impaired can remain the same as it is in Trask.

The cost of the ceremony would be approximately $9,000. Chairs, blankets, stage, and sound system would have to be rented. The grounds crew would have to do more than twice as much work to set up both outside and in Trask. The cost for the grounds crew alone is approximately $450.

Student Body President Ziggy Nix said the money for the ceremony would come from an SGA capital improvements fund. If the outdoor ceremony for this spring is approved by the Graduation committee, Nix said students might have the option of a referendum on the issue in the future. "During fall elections, seniors graduating in May could vote on where they want the ceremony held. If enough people voted to hold it outside, each student would pay $10 to handle the costs of the ceremony," Nix said.

UNCW Seeks Nominations for Teaching Excellence Award

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

Nominations for the Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award are being accepted until March 31. Nominations may be submitted by any member of the faculty, currently enrolled students or alumni. Persons in the community served by UNCW are also invited to recommend nominations. University Thought to Reject Road Project

A nominee must be a current member of the UNCW faculty who has been teaching at least half-time for five semesters. The nominee must have demonstrated a mastery of and enthusiasm for the subject taught, diligently maintained high academic standards, a genuine interest in students, and an ability to respect diverse points of view and an openness to learning.

The nominations will be reviewed by the chancellor and members of the chancellor's Nomination Committee. The committee will make its recommendation to the chancellor. He will present the recipient of the 1994 Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award to the Board of Trustees in Summer 1994.

The winner receives a $1,500 cash award. This carries with it both an honor and a responsibility of manifesting excellence and continuing significant contributions to higher education.

All letters of nomination must be limited to one page and received no later than Wednesday, March 31, 1994, by the Chancellor's Nomination Committee, Alderman Hall, UNCW, Wilmington, NC 28403-3297.

U-Bolt Locks Help Prevent Bike Thefts

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

Seventy-four bikes have been stolen from campus since August of 1993. Part of the reason may be because so many students improperly use U-Bolt locks on their bikes. The bike racks on campus are not easily accessible to the U-Bolt. For this reason, many students simply stick the U-Bolt through their bike wheel and leave the bike standing alone. Although it is not possible for the wheel to turn with the lock in place, it is possible to pick the bike up and carry it away.

In an effort to get more students to lock their bikes to bike racks, Campus Police has placed a prototype "U-Bolt friendly" bike rack in front of the University Center. The rack is a single horizontal bar instead of many vertical bars like other bike racks on campus.

To use the new rack, simply lift the front bike tire over the bar. Then put the U-Bolt through the front tire and the frame of the bike.

The police will be placing fliers on bikes in that area to see what kind of response students have to the new rack. If the response is positive, more racks will probably be purchased. After filling out the flier, drop it in the University mail box in the post office.

We Got Spirit

UNCW's student ambassadors were recognized with an honorable mention for "Most School Spirit" at the Student Alumni Association Students/Foundation District III Convention at the University of Tennessee. The conference is designed to help students to improve their own organizations to better serve their schools. The primary objective of UNCW's ambassadors is giving campus tours. They also help with special functions like graduation, homecoming, Family Weekend, athletic events, and receptions.

Ambassadors who attended the conference included: Erika Adams, Jeff Berry, Cynthia Coulter, Usha Dewashail, Kelly Frederick, Mary Galog, Beth Jacobs, Terry Jones, Nicole Kolter, Jamie Legg, Laila McCabbin, Melissa Miller, Renee Pagotto, Kande Shipp, Wendy Speight, Cindy VanRiper, Jolie Wren, and Vickie Yearby.

The ambassadors will have a free car wash at the NationsBank across the street from UNCW on Saturday, March 19 from 10 a.m. till 4 p.m.

Times to be announced

Seahawk Athlete of the Week

Jenny Kraemer (Women's Tennis) 5-0, 30, Soph., Mequon, Wis. Kraemer went 6-0 in singles and 4-2 in doubles during the tennis team's spring trip to the Charleston-Hilton Head, S.C. area, earning her Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week honors.

Kraemer pushed her individual singles record to 7-1 on the season with the clean sweep on the southern tour. She is 0-1 at the No. 4 position, 6-0 at No. 5, and 1-0 at No. 6.

SEAHAWK INVITATIONAL IS HELD

The Seahawks set 11 school records in opening the outdoor season last weekend with the UNCW Seahawk Invitational at the Harold Greene Track and Field Complex.

Coach Jim Sprecher's young team, which competes in the Wake Forest Relays this week, had several outstanding individual performances in the 20-team event.

Junior Heather Fenton, fresh off last week's appearance in the East Coast championships, established a new school mark in the 1,500 Meters (4:40.8).

Freshman Michael McDuffie, who finished ninth in the triple jump at the East Coast meet, captured first place Saturday with a leap of 47-11. He also took second in the long jump by going 21-9/12.

Freshman Dan Keltner tossed the discus a school record 144-5 for second place and ended up third in the hammer with a throw of 109-3.

In the pole vault, freshman Mark Graham and Cameron McIver shared a new school mark as both cleared the bar at 13-0.

On the women's side, freshman Sara White claimed first in the 400 Hurdles with a school-record time of 65.24. She also came in second in the 100 Hurdles with a record time of 15.35.

First-year performer Cynthia Peters enjoyed good performances in the 200 and 400 Meters. She was fourth in the 200 with a time of 26.11 and second in the 400 at 58.8.

SOFTBALL TEAM AT HOME

The Seahawks return home this Thursday to meet Long Island before hosting the Seahawk Invitational this weekend with games on campus and at High McRae Softball Complex.

UNCW, which makes only its second home appearance of the season on Thursday, went 4-6 last week at the Rebel Games in Orlando, Fla.

The Seahawks posed wins against St. Louis (6-3, 7-0), Valparaiso (9-7) and Radford (10-2), while losing to Loyola (4-3), Indiana State (9-0), Detroit Mercy (5-1), Illinois-Chicago (8-2), Southeast Missouri (11-0) and Maine (7-5).

Round robin play for the Seahawk Invitational gets under way Friday at 9 a.m. at two sites - UNCW's softball field and the High McRae complex located behind Hogard High School. Elimination play begins Saturday morning.

Schools slated to compete in the Seahawk Invitational include Campbell, Coler, Queens, Shippensburg, Longwood, Mansfield, St. Andrews, Wingate, Ferrum, Francis Marion, Pembroke State and UNCW.

Senior Athlete Profile

BY JOELLE KIBLER
Sports Writer

Krista Engels is a senior pitcher on this year's UNCW Women's Softball team. She is from Upper Saddle River, New Jersey and will graduate in May of 1994. Krista is a Criminal Justice major with a minor in Sociology.

By the will of her parents, Krista started playing tee-ball at the age of six, and worked her way up to pitching fast-pitch softball windmill-style by the age of nine in the town leagues. Krista was the only pitcher at that level with this type of capability in the area, so she was very successful and excelled in softball at an early age. Krista continued to play softball throughout Junior High and High School, receiving All-County and All-State honors. As college drew closer, Krista took a tour of the South Eastern Coast to look at universities. She liked what she saw at UNCW, especially when she discovered UNCW had a fast-pitch softball program. Krista contacted Coach Maggie St. Ledger and came to UNCW for an official visit. "I met some of the players on the team and got along great with them. I felt that I can come in and have a spot to play," Krista states. Krista was the first fast-pitch pitcher to be recruited by UNCW. She also received a scholarship.

Krista has seen some development over her four years here in the UNCW Women's Softball program. There was an addition of a pitching coach, Mr. Henry Engels - her father, last season which helped a lot by just having more than one coach around. "The schedule has become more competitive, and the program has become more organized," comments Krista on the program's development. She has also seen increased interest in the program and more spectators at the games over the years.

Krista has definitely benefited from being part of an athletic program. She has learned to budget her time more effectively between academics and softball. "I've also become more responsible especially after my rough freshman year when I failed out of school," remarks Krista. Krista was unable to return to UNCW after her freshman year because of an inadequate G.P.A., therefore also losing her scholarship. She went to Cape Fear Community College for a semester and got a 3.5 G.P.A., making it able for her to return back to UNCW. Krista was ineligible for a year to play softball again, so in her junior year she "walked-on" the team as a pitcher. "From this unfortunate experience, I've learned to take my studies more serious—my classes come first," comments Krista. Krista worked hard both on and off the softball field to find herself on the Dean's List the last two semesters and being re-awarded a softball scholarship. Also Krista has benefited from being part of an athletic program by making great strides in becoming more physically fit, especially in endurance conditioning.

Going into her final season, Krista has obtainable goals and expectations for the team and herself. She would like the team to focus on competitiveness and to adapting a winning spirit. Krista's personal goal is to be a part of giving UNCW a name. "Krista also comments, 'I want to make sure that I remain competitive in each game and remain mentally and physically strong throughout each inning.'"

Krista is also a captain for the UNCW Women's Softball team. She communicates with her teammates and feels she has some valuable knowledge she can relay to them from her past troubles with academics. Krista states, "I know first hand about the importance of academics to become a complete student athlete." Krista's competitiveness and not very high-strung quality has also led her to become a good team leader.

In the future, Krista would like to continue playing fast-pitch on summer leagues. She would also like to get her own fast-pitch softball team started in North Carolina for younger girls to get interested in, therefore hoping to coach this sport one day.

After graduation Krista would like to do some traveling over the summer and go back-up North to see about some career options. Krista hopes to go into paralegal work, concentrating on being a juvenile rights advocate.

Krista has received support from her family and friends throughout her college career. "My father has been supportive since I first started playing by giving me the opportunity to excel through the use of pitching coaches. The rest of my family is also supportive—willing to travel and economically support me," remarks Krista. A previous roommate and teammate, Sue Honeycutt, has also helped Krista realize that a person can be a student and athlete at the same time. In addition Krista comments, "A good friend of mine, Janice Bass, who is not involved in sports, is very supportive. She takes the time out to come watch me play, cheering on not only myself but other teammates as well."

Krista states that her entire UNCW experience "has been filled with great friends and experiences that will be with her forever."

HALE ADMITS CONSPIRACY

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Former Judge David Hale, who alleged that Bill Clinton pressured him to grant an improper loan while he was governor, pled guilty Tuesday to conspiring to defraud the Small Business Administration and falsifying information on an application for federal funds. The plea was part of an arrangement with special prosecutor Robert Fiske. Hale will now testify before a grand jury investigating the failure of an Arkansas savings and loan and the Clintons' Whitewater investment deal.

TROOPS AND MISILES HEADED TO KOREA

WASHINGTON — About 850 U.S. Army soldiers and 200 Patriot missiles are headed to South Korea as part of the Clinton administration's "petent diplomacy" toward North Korea. Chinese Premier Li Peng said China would not support economic sanctions against North Korea over suspicion it is compiling a nuclear weapons arsenal.

AID GOES TO YUGOSLAVIA

First Union Foundation Donates $100,000 to Cameron School of Business

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

First Union Foundation presented UNCW with a gift of $100,000 Friday afternoon to establish the First Union Cameron School Endowment.

Malcolm E. "Mac" Everett III, president of First Union National Bank of North Carolina, presented the check to Chancellor James Leutze. Everett said, "Cameron Business School is poised for a new era. We look forward to being your partner."

This fund will provide an endowment to support the First Union National Bank Faculty Fellowship for Excellence in the Cameron School of Business Administration.

In accepting the $100,000 gift, Leutze said it was a "signal day in the life of the Capital Campaign."

The First Union contribution is important, Leutze said, because "We do not build a great business school without a great faculty. Now we can do some things to recognize our professoriate."

To date, $13 million has been received towards the five-year goal of $15 million for the Capital Campaign. Leutze said First Union's contribution has placed the campaign ahead of schedule.

"Support by North Carolina's banking community has been critical to the early success of our capital campaign," Leutze said. "The University of North Carolina at Wilmington is extremely pleased to announce this major gift from the First Union Foundation, the first major contribution to this university from First Union.

Commemorating the establishment of the endowment, Leutze presented First Union representatives with a plaque featuring a medallion and the community." Everett said.

UNCW seal designated the First Union National Bank Teaching Excellence in commitment to excellence in education. A replica of the plaque will hang in the lobby of the Cameron School. "Our company has a long-standing commitment to excellence in education, and we're proud to be a partner in the continuing success of the Cameron School of Business."

Breakfast Outside, but March Inside

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

The final word on an outdoor graduation ceremony in May is a resounding no. Dolores Harvey of the Commencement Advisory Committee said there were just too many problems with the idea. "The thing that was never taken into consideration is the comfort of the guest," Harvey said. "At UNC and State, they have stadiums. All of these people will be sitting on a flat area, and they won't be able to see. As a parent, I can tell you that graduation is as important to the parent as to the student. If I hadn't been able to see at my kid's graduation, I would have been inconsolable."

Although the actual graduation ceremony will not be an outside event, there will be an outside graduation breakfast on the quad between Hoggard, Alderman, and James Halls. The continental style breakfast is from 8-9 a.m. on May 14. Graduating seniors, their families and guests, and faculty are all invited. Harvey hopes that the outdoor breakfast will satisfy the needs of those who wanted the graduation ceremony held outside.

In the past, graduation breakfasts have been held in the Hawk's Nest and were poorly attended. Harvey expects a good turn-out this year. Students will receive fliers about the breakfast when they pick up their cap and gown.

The Student Government Association had approved giving up to $10,000 to cover additional costs incurred by an outdoor graduation ceremony. Harvey is skeptical about the actual cost of setting up for an outdoor ceremony. "Paul's figures and mine were actually very close," Harvey said.

"The thing that scares me though, is whatever we forgot to figure in, and there's always something," Paul Chamberlain is a senior biology major who proposed and worked to persuade the Commencement Advisory Committee to hold the Spring ceremony outside.

The Toughest Job You'll Ever Love At UNCG

UNC Greensboro is giving students credit towards a master's degree for doing the toughest job they'll ever love. Under the Master's International Program, students can earn a master's in food and nutrition after taking one year of on-campus study and two years abroad as a Peace Corps volunteer.

UNCG is one of only 19 universities in the country offering the Master's International Program. It is the only university in North Carolina to offer it, although UNC Chapel Hill will soon offer the program as well.

The reason for offering the program is to get people with scarce skills into the Peace Corps. Gene Finn, a university programs specialist with the Peace Corps, says the agency sometimes has trouble filling jobs in health and nutrition, home economics, forestry and education.

The Peace Corps has 6,500 volunteers in 90 countries.

Shots Fired Following Dispute During Basketball Game On The Residence Life Courts

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

Shots were fired on the Residence Life basketball courts following a dispute over a game at 6:38 p.m., Feb. 20.

Five people were involved. None were students. Police arrested two people for communicating threats and assault, but could not legally pursue charges because no gun or shell casings were recovered.

Mjr. Bob Riley said that while this was an isolated incident, incidents involving guns and other weapons on campus occur fairly regularly. Riley said campus police have found guns during vehicle and traffic stops. Campus police have also received calls from students in dorms who are concerned that other students might have guns.

Riley said Tuesday that students usually are unaware when they first come to campus that weapons aren't allowed. "We're not immune to any problems the city may have, but we don't see this as being an epidemic," he said. "We're just following suit to the rest of society."

According to Det. Shawn Thomas, there have been nine incidents involving weapons during the 1993-

94 school year. Six of these incidents involved guns, and a student was the offender in three. Other incidents involve swords, and knives. The weapons were used in an assaultive manner in only one case.

Of these nine incidents, police arrested four persons and trespassed them from the university for one year. None of the persons arrested were students. Students are usually referred through the campus judicial system.

Under state law, no weapons are allowed on campus. Possession is a Class I felony. According to Statute 14-269.2, which took effect in December 1993, any person who possesses a gun, rifle, pistol or other firearm, dynamite cartridge, bomb, grenade, mine or powerful explosives is subject to imprisonment up to five years and/or a fine.

Any possession is classified as a misdemeanor under the following conditions:

The person is not a student

The weapon is not concealed or loaded

The weapon is in a locked container, vehicle or firearm rack on a motor vehicle

New Internship Program Focusing on Issues Related to Minorities

BY PAMELA WARD
Contributing Writer

UNCW has developed a new course, Business Law 491, designed to fulfill the University's commitment to include all segments of the community in its agenda. The program, Minority Participation in Business and Government, places qualified interns in business and governmental agencies, with an emphasis on issues important to minorities and women. The program was designed by students through the Cameron School of Business under Dean Rockness and is supervised by Business Law lecturer Bob Cutting.

The program is open to all majors and offers placements in all aspects of the private sector, law, government and the media. Thirteen students participated in the program's first semester (Spring 1994) and was very successful. Three students who plan to attend law school were placed at New Hanover County District courthouse. As one of the interns, I learned a lot more about the real-world functions of the court system by observing and working in it than I did reading about it in a book. I met and worked with a lot of key people like district attorneys, magistrates, judges, and even some district court judges. I encourage each and every minority student to get involved and see what the program has to offer them. The program is growing rapidly and there is a demand by placements from energetic, enthusiastic participants.

The number of placements is steadily increasing. Private sector placements include: New Hanover Regional Medical Center, Jordan Plaster Home, Community Economic Development Corporation, Green Flowers Realty, Bedford Fair. The government/legislative sector has Representative Thomas Wright, Rep. Karen Gonsky, and Senator Luther Jordan.

The Challenger newspaper is the most popular from the media sector, and talk show host Howard Jennings is seeking a research assistant. Presently, intern Jenene Watson, is doing a fantastic job helping the newspaper out with its data processing program. Lisa Beckwith attributes her acceptance to pharmacy school in part to experience gained in her internship at New Hanover Community Health Clinic.

The legal sector has been the most popular with business, English, and criminal justice majors. The program works with the New Hanover County District Court and Legal Services of the Lower Cape Fear. Openings with private attorneys, a travel service, accountants and even dentistry are available. Also, the program will attempt to place you where you request even if the organization has not signed up for the program yet. There is a list of all the current placements in the Department of Accountancy and Business Law.

In order to enroll in the internship program, you cannot pre-apply, but all you have to do is:

1. Pick up an application from the Accountancy & Business Law Department in the Cameron School of Business.

2. Turn the application in to the Secretary in the Accountancy and Business Law Department by the application deadline, March 31, 1994.

Applications will be reviewed by Bob Cutting and the students who developed the program. You will then be contacted by either Cutting or one of the students to let you know about acceptance. You can not register for the class during registration. All accepted applications will be sent to the registrar's office through the School of Business. If you have any questions, contact either Bob Cutting at 395-3140, or Teresa Williams at 371-0437.

Students will receive 3 credits for the program and possible stipends for the 150 hours required each semester (9 to 12 hours per week). The program has applied for several grants from the federal government and private businesses. If any of the proposals are approved, students may qualify for pay for their hours of work.

At A Glance

Students with Outstanding balances will not be allowed to pre-register for Summer I, Summer II, and Fall 1994. Outstanding balances must be paid at the cashier's office in James Hall in order to pre-register. All students will receive this notice in their student mail box. IT IS JUST A REMINDER!

PRE-REGISTRATION. The initial date for pre-registration is indicated on your Permit to Register. This date is determined by the number of semester hours earned. Those students having the highest number of earned hours are given the earlier date for pre-registering. Students cannot pre-register before the initial date on their Permit. Attempted pre-registration before the scheduled date will be cancelled. Tuition and fees bills will be mailed to the student's permanent address. If payment is not made, the pre-registration is cancelled.

The Chancellor's Student Hours are Thursday, April 14, 3:30 - 4:30 p.m., and Thursday, April 28.

Randall Library Easter Vacation Schedule:
Thursday, March 31 - 7:30 a.m. to 11 p.m.; Friday, April 1 - 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Saturday, April 2 - 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sunday, April 3 - 3 p.m. to midnight.

1993 State and Federal Income Tax forms are available in the Postal Services lobby in the University Center.

A saxophone recital by music students Jonathan Diggs and Raylene Stevens will be held on Thursday, April 7 at 8 p.m. in Kennan Auditorium. This hour long concert will feature Classical, Romantic and Contemporary works. This concert will feature baritone, tenor, and alto saxophone pieces with piano by Mary Nelson Smith. Free with student I.D. Come enjoy the music.

This semester's activities include trash pick-up, a new recycling program, The Big Turn Off event in all dorms and buildings, and the 2nd Annual Earthday Seaside Revival on April 17. Plus much more! For more information, call 313-0588 or 392-8653.

Christian Students be on the lookout for a new Christian Newsletter for UNCW students in March. The OASIS will feature information about Christian Fellowships on campus, college ministries, area churches, sports, Christian music information, advertisements from Christian businesses and many Christian events.

Interested in knowing the reality of who God is and who you are in God? Visit Overcomers Campus Ministry Bible Study/Fellowship night on Tuesday at 7 p.m. in UU 103.

Society of Operations and Information Management meets the first Wednesday of every month at 6 p.m.

Call Sandra Pollock at 350-4605 for information.

This year Global Volunteers will be traveling to Jamaica on May 9-16. We will be painting 15 rooms for the YMCA and sleeping on cots in their facility. During the weeks of March 21 - 25 and 28 - 31 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the University Union, our group will be asking for donations of $15 to go towards paint and supplies for the trip. I am appealing to you and your organization for support of the project which will benefit the underserved children in Jamaica. Your sponsorship or donations are greatly appreciated. Please contact me at the campus activities office at 395-3827 or at the Volunteers office at 395-3904 if you have any questions or comments.

The ECO Club meets every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the University Union study room.

Campus Activities

Arts in Action, a program of the Campus Activities Office, offers performances in the Hawk's Nest every Thursday from 12-1 p.m. This event, called "That's Entertainment," will feature faculty, student and community artists. Hammer Dulcimer demonstration by Gordon Keifer will take place Thursday, 24. Next week, Alice Neilson, jazz pianist will be featured. Call Sandy Errante at 3797 for more information.

Have you written any music lately? Arts in Action invites you to share your compositions with UNCW on a Composer's Concert slated for Monday, April 25 in the Hawk's Nest. Lunch will be provided for all performers and composers. Call 3797 to get your registration form.

England's Charterhouse School will be performing a free Choral Concert in Kennan Auditorium on Wednesday, March 30 at noon. This is one of England's most famous schools and their music program is one of its finest aspects. The choir has toured, recorded, and performed in America as well as Europe. Arts in Action is sponsoring this event and will provide attendance vouchers, if requested.

The UNCW Volunteers Program is recruiting volunteers for six community agencies: Brigade Boys Club, Winter Park Elementary, William Middle School, Tileston Health Clinic, Family Services Afterschool Enrichment, College Park Elementary, Good Shepherd House and Cape Fear Literacy Council. If you are interested in assisting someone in need, please call the Campus Activities office at 395-3827 for more information.

The Association for Campus Entertainment concert committee meets every Wednesday night at 7 p.m. in UU 203. Come out and you may get the opportunity to rub elbows with the rich and famous.

REACH OUT!

STUDENT ORGANIZATIONS:

Student Organization Award Nominations are due by March 25th in the Campus Activities Office. You can nominate an organization for: Outstanding Educational Program, Outstanding Multicultural Program, Outstanding Social Program, and/or Outstanding Publicity Campaign.

LEADERSHIP CENTER

The Leadership Center has many resources available to the campus including books, files on leadership education topics, and multi-cultural games. The newest edition, the Harvard Classic Leadership Cases, offers a unique way to incorporate classic literature into discussions of leadership issues. There are several dozen titles, including Ghandi, Malcolm X, Plato, Moby Dick, The Mayor of Casterbridge, and several works of Shakespeare. Teacher notes are available. Donated extra copies of books or handouts on topics related to leadership education are always appreciated.

The Leadership Center in conjunction with the Alumni Association is sponsoring the Senior Leadership Award for the fifth consecutive year. The award is given to a senior graduating between May and December 1994 with a cumulative GPA of 3.0 who has demonstrated outstanding leadership on campus and/or in the community. Candidates can either be self-nominated or nominated by a member of the UNCW community. For more information, nominations, or applications, please contact The Leadership Center, University Union 212, 395-3877. Applications and Two letters of recommendation will be due on March 25, 1994.

F.M.O. Winners of Commerce Cup

BY JOEY NICHOLS
Staff Writer

Do you remember watching that old College quiz bowl show on television? Or was it the newer version with Pat Sajak that you liked? Either way, if you liked these shows where students vied for the prize using every bit of their intelligence and imagination, then the Commerce Cup Challenge will spark your interest too.

The Commerce Cup Challenge is an integral part of the annual Business Week held by the Cameron School of Business. Teams of students represent the different undergraduate business organizations such as the American Marketing Association, the Economics Club, the MBA Association and others, and pits them against each other in academic competition. Following with the ideals of Business Week, the Commerce Cup Challenge, which has occurred for about ten years, helps broaden the minds of students.

Held on March 21 and 22 in Cameron Hall, the Commerce Cup Challenge took students from the School of Business and pitted them against each other in a battle of wits. With the tough competition of the quarter finals on Monday and then the semi-finals and finals on Tuesday, one team finally shone through.

Representing the Financial Management Organization, the team of Murat Erdem, Andrew Cokas, and David Herlin took the blue ribbon. The winners of first place receive a plaque that will hang in the Cameron School of Business.

Dr. William Hall, chairman of the Business Week committee, is glad that the program is finally getting some recognition. Under his direction the program is growing not only in number but in recognition. It is providing an intriguing resource with which students can prepare for the challenging 21st century.

Information Highway Could Bring Jobs

BY KRISTI BROWN
Staff Writer

According to a study released by Gov. Jim Hunt, North Carolina's economy will gain an additional $2.7 billion and 44,000 jobs over the next decade if the state information highway goes on-line.

Economic forecasters at the WEFA Group, a Pennsylvania consulting firm which prepared the study, said the expected prosperity comes with a price. Almost $100 million will be paid by the General Assembly over the next five years. Jane Patterson, director of the governor's information highway project, said the state's gains will more than offset the cost.

Legislators question spending $97.4 million by 1999 to link hospitals, courts, universities, community colleges and others by computer lines. Patterson said the state would lose money if it fails to hook up the 100 sites by the end of this year and 700 more by 1999.

"In the past, we talked about the information highway being great for (long) distance education and equity in schools," Patterson said. "It's also important for health delivery and criminal justice." She said the project would also help the state attract new businesses.

About 70 percent of the $331 million spent by the end of the century on start-up costs will be paid by the state's major telephone companies, including Southern Bell.

The cost to consumers will be regulated by the N.C. Utilities Commission.

Blumenthal Poets: Another Take On Creation, Love

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Imagine you're in Paris, the City for Lovers. A handsome man approaches you with an enticing romantic proposition. The smattering of French you know exists only in the present tense. How do you respond?

Poet Lucinda Grey has the answer—just smile and say, "later." Thus began her introduction to a series of poems about France she read to students and faculty Tuesday night in King Hall.

Also reading from a selection of her poems was Robin Greene.

The two poets were sponsored by the UNCW Department of English and Blumenthal Writers and Readers Series.

In her poem "Another Take on Creation," Greene explores language as "a riverbed of music."

Citing men as having "invented metrics after language was born," Greene says it is a "woman who taught composition to the unlettered heavens" and calls this her feminist poem.

Grey teaches writing at UNC Charlotte where she is co-editor of Southern Poetry Review. Her new book, Ribbon Around A Bomb, is slated to appear this summer. Chosen by the North Carolina Arts Council in 1992, Grey was a writing resident in France.

Greene teaches writing and composition part-time at Meredith College. Her chapbook Memories of Light won first place in the 1991 Harperprints Chapbook Award. In 1992, Greene was awarded a writing fellowship in poetry by the North Carolina Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Greene's new project is a book about women's birthing stories, Giving Birth: A Collection of Women's Voices. Greene calls the work a "collage of women's voices in incredible articulate monosyllables." The birthing stories are important, Greene says, because "while men are at best advocates, they really have nothing to do with it."

The 1994 Blumenthal Writers and Readers Series is sponsored by The Blumenthal Foundation, The North Carolina Arts Council, and The National Endowment for the Arts.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor,

Neural Nausea & Moral Malaise

I don't have a problem with Jesus. He might not express the same feelings for me, but everyone has a right to an opinion. Rights are important. Speech, religion; these are valid human rights. But where do we draw the line between freedom of expression and moral-minority bashing? Here is the point. Last week, on a sunny spring afternoon, I was studying outdoors on campus. There were people on stage in front of the University Center singing religious songs. No problem. Not exactly my musical style, but the performers seemed sincere. After a brief silence, a man took the stage and began to speak. I listened for a few minutes and then decided to have a look at the voice's face. I was a bit concerned that Senator Strom Thurman had wandered onto our lovely UNCW campus and I was, always the good citizen, anxious to escort him back into rush-hour traffic.

The speaker was not our illustrious no-sodomy-here-Senator. For one thing, Thurman could never muster enough energy to speak in the evangelical-auctioneer style I was hearing. Different men - same deplorable message. Now, as a "fornicator," I cannot honestly say I felt degraded by this speaker. I was a bit amused when he claimed fornicators, like me, use our bodies in ways God never intended. Strange. God made 'em. What exactly did He intend? I think I am following proper moral procedures. I mean, anyone who has ever plugged an electrical cord into a wall receptacle understands the anatomical basis of sex. Let's leave biology for a moment. We fornicators, the statistical immoral majority, are not the only "less than human" rollicking rogues around. Our loud friend, undoubtedly a graduate of Evelyn Wood's School of Speed Speaking, ten added "homosexuals" onto his list of the disciples of the depraved damned. Kind of a "catch-22," since homosexuals are forbidden to marry, they must also be fornicators.

I am relatively certain I am not homosexual, but who can ever really be sure? Quite honestly, I do not much care to have my sexuality labeled (fornicators are often also liberals; double-damned-whammy). I was, however, humiliated in a humanistic sense by this man's words. Did he "cross the line"? Is the use of inflammatory and bigoted speech acceptable on a campus of higher learning? (or is it now "higher spurning"?). Why is it okay to publicly degrade sexual lifestyles when a racial bigot would not have been invited to speak on campus? As I pondered over these questions, I printed (fornicators are notoriously fast) away from this salvation salesman and moral marksman. When I reached Morton Hall and found I could not escape his voice, I realized my moral dilemma. Do I hide in man-made Morton or do I enjoy God's small beauty? Silently, I retreated indoors. Funny, I always thought "what nature intended" was that people behave naturally. Maybe all that fornicating has rotted my brain as well as my soul.

By S. Mass

Dear Editor,

It is our expressed opinion that Tonya Whitehead should not be permitted to hold an office in the Student Government Association of UNCW. Not only has Ms. Whitehead broken the law by being drunk in public, but also was violating codes set out in the UNCW Student Handbook. We realize that everyone makes mistakes, but considering the other punishments she could have possibly received for her behavior (arrest, written up, etc.) we think this would be a mild penalty. The question here is one of credibility and mature judgement. Ms. Whitehead has failed us in both.

Tonya Whitehead's name should not be associated with the organization that delegates our student activity fees, especially with the office of Attorney General, a position which makes vital decisions within SGA, including disciplinary decisions. If she cannot use discretion in her own actions, she should not be permitted to make decisions on the actions of others. It is our request that she be removed from this office and another - more responsible - person be assigned this duty.

Sincerely,

Sandra A. Cohn

Darkness Before Dawn

A friend of mine is dying after a ten year struggle with cancer. He and his family fought the cancer well and directly every step of the way and dealt with the facts and feelings with as much intentionality as you could expect from anyone. In the closing days of his life, I was speaking with him about plans for a memorial service. She said she wanted the memorial service to take place, not on Easter, but on a Sunday prior to Easter, one of the "Dark Sundays."

The Sundays prior to Easter and Easter itself are a package. Those who come to the Easter Dawn and experience the wonderful joy of Jesus' victory over death and all the promise that that event holds, come into that dawn out of darkness. The Marys came out of despair, a sense of loss and much uncertainty. My friend comes to the conclusion of his life and the promise that lies beyond his death out of a long journey of pain and struggle and hardship.

There is a certain real integrity and honesty in yoking together the struggle of life with the victory of life. In my religious tradition, we frequently use the phrase "The crucifixion-resurrection" experience to talk about the whole of this season.

Too many people seem simply to want to be happy and avoid anything unpleasant. I do not think that is possible. It is much more appropriate to realize that every victory that we experience in our lives is grounded in hard work, struggle, and often times, suffering. The difficulties of our lives are sometimes things we bring upon ourselves and often times they are not. Darkness is simply a part of the package and happens to us all. But it is the stuff that helps us to discover strength, endurance, compassion and ultimately, faith. When we are driven beyond our capacities to endure by some life struggle, we often discover that beyond self-sufficiency destroyed there is strength and endurance that is not our own but carries us on into a profound experience of hope. Crucifixion precedes resurrection; the dark Sundays proceed Easter. Our struggles can not, should not be avoided. They provide the toughness and the resiliency and the ability to surrender to life that allows us to discover, first, hope and eventually, joy that can be claimed in the face of everything that life sends our way.

Feeling My Way Around

Sometimes I wonder if the inventors in the world ever really thing through their efforts to create something unique and purportedly useful to us. Some things make sense—like glue sticks and fresh peanuts in a can. Yet others cause me to shake my head in perplexity at the seemingly illogical "inventions" with which we are presented.

Consider, for example, the idea of braille on drive-up teller machines. Who was the wise guy who invented this? Rise away, I wonder just who's doing the driving? The blind person? If so, I'm a tad bit worried here.

Trying to be fair, I spent some time examining a braille drive-up teller machine at a bank on Market Street the other day. Much to the consternation of my fellow passengers and ignoring disgusted honks from cars in line behind me, I attempted to use the machine with my eyes closed. Thinking I'd found the card insertion slot, my plastic bank card broke in half when I tried to shove it into a gap between the machine itself and the brick under-structure.

I admit the experiment was flawed because I did not know braille; further, I cheated when I drove up to the machine with my eyes open so I could see the directional arrows carefully painted in white on the pavement. (I think the bank forgot about using those little bumpy road buttons so visually-impaired drivers know which direction the arrows are going.)

My aborted experiment raised a couple of questions. What if you press the wrong number for your secret password? Or ask for the wrong amount of money? What if you run into the teller machine with your car because you can't see where it is? My biggest what-if—what if some big bad guy stands next to the machine waiting for you to withdraw your money, and he robs you?

I've now become more aware of the availability or non-availability of handicapped facilities. In between classes the other day, I spent some time in the bathroom at the University Union. I availed myself of the stall for the handicapped. After making myself comfortable, swinging my legs because the toilet seats are so much taller than regular ones, I started thinking about condoms.

Condoms came to mind because I'd just passed an "accessories" vending machine on the bathroom wall on my way to the stalls (I assume men have the same purchase opportunities since this particular item is designed for the male physique). Since I was sitting there with time on my hands, I started thinking about the braille thing again. I pondered the notion that the ribbed condoms were designed for the visually impaired. I decided the ribs were meant to be a tactile clue. So, okay, although you can't see it, you know you've got a condom in your hand. But what if it has a tear in it? Wouldn't those ribs make it a bit awkward to check for product, uh, safety?

While pondering the profound importance of condom integrity, I started thinking maybe I ought not to be in the handicapped parking spaces because I know I'll get ticketed by the police. But can I get a ticket for using a handicapped stall in the bathroom? Maybe the campus has some roving Pottery Police looking for toilet offenders such as myself.

Furthermore, what if I fell while trying to climb down from these impossibly high toilet seats and broke my leg? There I'd be, trapped in the handicapped stall, waiting for the Pottery Patrol and providing my own incriminating evidence of illegal use.

By now I'm nervous, and I want a cigarette. That leads me to think about efforts to outlaw nicotine. Somebody out there actually believes it's worse for me to drive while smoking a cigarette than drinking a can of beer. It may be illegal to drive while drinking, but I don't see any political agenda on outlawing alcohol as a drug. That reminds me, at Paddy's Hollow on St. Pat's Night, no green beer was in sight. Why? Because North Carolina, the great Tobacco State, has outlawed green food coloring in beer. Go Figure!

So anyway, while I'm craving this cigarette, my heavy brain starts working on the idea of what will happen if cigarettes are outlawed. Is the government prepared to deal with a zillion billion people simultaneously experiencing nicotine withdrawal? Talk about your major TWS (Tobacco Withdrawal Syndrome)! TWS would make a bad case of PMS look no worse than an afternoon in a candy shop that's run out of homemade fudge.

I don't know how I, as a mere mortal, can possibly compete with the likes of drive-up braille banking, toilets too high for munchkins, ribbed condoms, and TWS. I suppose I could resort to designing some kinky gadget made out of my glue stick and fresh peanuts. But when it comes time for me to write the instructions manual, should I use Egyptian hieroglyphics, braille, ancient runes, ribbed lines, or should I just give up cigarettes and make you figure it out on your own.

Phil Smith

UNCW Pollen's like Chapel Hill's Jesse Helms

If I may quote a fellow columnist, let me say that Spring has now officially sprung. I don't mean this just because last week officially began the riotous season we refer to as Spring. I am referring, of course, to none other than the SID UNC accumulation of pollen that has built up on the hood of my car for the past few days. I don't think that the fallout from a complete meltdown at the Brunswick nuclear plant would leave this much crud on my car (and inside my car, and inside my apartment, and). The worst place for all of this yellow crud (which, being a biology major, I understand to be male reproductive units emanating from various local flora) is when it ends up in my respiratory tract. My nose has about the same affinity for pollen as Chapel Hill does for Jesse Helms.

The reason I bring this up (despite the slow news week) is of course to preview that quinquennial of all regional celebrations known commonly as The 1994 Wilmington Pollen Festival. Did I say pollen? I meant to say Azalea, but appear to be hung up on this pollen thing. Anyhow, it's only a couple of weeks until the Azalea Festival and it's my duty to help get everyone prepared for this gala event and give a few ideas on how to survive the weekend. Tip number one, in a series of tips that I will give as the weekend approaches, is LEAVE TOWN IF YOU CAN! Tip number two, on what to do if you absolutely cannot leave town on the weekend of April 14-17, will likely be issued next week.

Moving now to state news, it seems that our senators and representatives have spent yet another week in Raleigh hammering out legislation to help curb crime in North Carolina. Rumor has it that they have indeed spent the past four weeks trying to decide whether they will order out from Hardee's or

My nose has about the same affinity for pollen as Chapel Hill does for Jesse Helms.

McDonald's. The real crime is that they are up there spending a lot of money and not trying very hard to get along with each other and get some bills passed which could benefit the state. I do understand however, that the next major topic of discussion and likely heated debate will be the proposal to raise salaries of Campus Police officers. The debate stems from what legislators say will become a futile cycle: If the pay raise is passed, More money equals more demand purchasing power which, in turn, leads to lost productivity and ultimately to pay cuts. You get the picture.

Two items of national importance need noting this week. H. Ross Perot, who reportedly made his $4.5 billion as an Amway distributor, has publicly stated that if all of the doctors in the nation will send him $1,000.00 then he will "fix" the health care system. Folks, if all of the physicians in the country SENT ME $1,000.00 then you wouldn't see me for a long while. Heck, if all of the doctors in Wilmington alone sent me $1,000.00 then I could retire and get into politics in my free time and really fix the health care system.

In an unrelated story, Joey Buttafuoco was scheduled for release from prison this week. I really could care less about Joey Buttafuoco, as could most of you. The only reason I mention this is on behalf of my female readership, who need to be warned of recently released, womanizing, slovenly New Yorkers who may be on the prowl.

The HAT'S OFF award this week is given to NC Representative Karen Gottov, of New Hanover County. Despite my crack on the amount of time it's taking the Senate and House to get the crime session completed I do realize that some of the legislators, like Mrs. Gottov, are committed to getting the job done right and in a timely manner. I have met her and her husband and know that they both work tirelessly for the community. Hat's Off for a job well done.

This week's Smelly SHOE's Off award is split this time. The left shoe goes out to Danya Abrams of the Boston College Eagles. This mongrel has not learned the rules by which the civilized world plays basketball and had to resort to a nasty flagrant foul which prematurely ended UNC senior Derrick Phelps' college basketball career. The 'Heels may have lost on their own accord, but I say Shoe's Off to Abrams for dirty play. The other half of this week's Smelly SHOE's Off award is issued to the New Hanover County Board of Commissioners (except for Matt Matthews who is in support of UNCW and common sense) for approving the proposed extension of Randall Parkway through the side of campus and within feet of academic buildings. They should have followed the lead of the Wilmington City Council and disapproved of the disruptive and dangerous idea. Perhaps they could focus a little attention on revamping the nineteenth century stop light system instead of laying more pavement across the campus.

Well friends, that about wraps things up for this exciting edition. As is customary, your comments, suggestions, and any Chocolate Easter Bunnies you have laying around can be addressed to me here at The Fishwrap. An apology goes out this week to faithful semi-occasional reader Carey, who I inadvertently left off the list of people I was thanking last week for their Happy Birthday wishes. Congratulations go out this week to Eddie Suggs and the Greek Week committee for the great job they did last week. Before closing, we should all pause a moment to remember the humorous syndicated Atlanta Journal columnist Lewis Gritzen who passed away earlier this week. He will be missed by a lot of readers, including myself.

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Phil Smith is a No Bull Prize winning columnist with The Seahawk and he reminds you that this column was written under the influence of antihistamines.

I'm Sorry, Lewis, I Forgot

Like most people who make the commute to Charlotte down 74, I am glad when I get to that bastion of civilization known as the Hamlets/Rockingham metropolis. The stretch of road between Wilmington and H/R, also known as Helms country, offers little to relieve the eyes of monotony other than the occasional roadkill, not to mention the bladder.

This part of the state is a lot like the area of Georgia Lewis Grizzard grew up in, I'm sure. The towns where no one locks their doors at night, where people wave as you drive down the street because they know you, and, as every Northerner strives to find a bar to call home, everyone knows your name.

Lewis Grizzard passed away Sunday, after suffering massive brain damage as a result of surgery he had on his heart. He will be remembered by most as a caring man who wrote what he honestly felt. Though that didn't endear him to many PC groups, he had a following of readers who enjoyed his wit, words, and experiences.

Grizzard wrote about the South, mostly about Georgia, and its unique charm. He was a man who cared and displayed it in his writings. He taught many people that despite our differences in color, heritage, beliefs, and views, we are all on this planet together so it doesn't make a hell of a lot of sense to think you are superior to someone for those reasons. They can offer the world something worthwhile that you cannot. I learned that firsthand on Friday.

day. My Escort, the car, blew two spark plugs as I drove through Hamlet. The engine sounded like a Volkswagen Bug's, but was still drivable. I got the car up to a Western Auto where there was a mechanic on duty and asked for help.

Not knowing a PC valve from a lugnut, I assumed that as a "sophisticated" college student, these guys would look at me as their next Ned Beatty and fix me up real good.

The first mechanic came over and saw that part of the problem was that one of the spark plugs had come out of its socket. He tried to fix it, but the grooves that held the plug in case had been stripped when the plug blew out. "What you got here," he drawled, "is sumthin I can't fix."

My heart dropped. Not only was I 100 miles from either home, I was stuck in Gooberville with little money and a broken car.

The mechanic who looked at the car went over to a phone and made a call as I pondered my options. Do I try to dump the car on some lot and take what money I get and ride the bus home? Do I hitchhike to Charlotte or Wilmington? Or do I ask if they need someone to clean the oil up in the garage?

I was seriously wondering what life in Hamlet would be like when the mechanic returned saying a friend of his down the street would fix the car for $50, but I had to get it to him and may have to wait a couple of hours to get back on the road.

I thanked him and asked how much I owed him for looking at the car and the phone call.

"Nuthin," he said wiping his hands off. "I got a couple of younguns in college so I know you ain't got much money."

I thanked him again and, after getting directions, drove to the mechanic he called. There the mechanic fixed the car in forty minutes, explained he would have fixed the car for thirty dollars, but had to charge more because he was working on something else that was on deadline.

I was humbled. I was nobody to these people. They could have legally charged me a lot to tell me what was wrong with the car and make me wait until they could fix the car at their own pace. I could have been Beatified just in labor costs.

They didn't. They saw me as someone who needed their help and, in fine Southern tradition, treated me hospitably. Not everybody is out for number one. Some folks naturally treat others with respect and care because they are people too. I had forgotten.

As I read about Lewis Grizzard on Monday, I couldn't help but think about my weekend and what Mr. Grizzard spent a good portion of his life telling us. We all depend on others to make it through life and if we treat each other with respect, life is a lot easier. Oh, there will be potholes and heartbreaks to deal with, but we can get through this together.

I hope Lewis Grizzard reads this somehow and realizes he left a mark on at least one reader and then scratches Catfish between the ears.

Hey! Oscar Time!!!!!!!!!!

By D. Neel Leeper
Entertainment Editor

Thank God the Academy Awards are over.

You would think that someone like myself, the Entertainment Editor of The Seahawk, an avid movie-goer, a music loving guy, and an all around entertaining individual, would be all excited about such a wonderful event.

On the contrary, I dislike it strongly.

Not only does it interrupt my favorite TV shows during prime time, but it also screwed up my Oprah viewing. For those of you that really don't know me, I really enjoy watching Oprah. But, when the Oprah show consists of "normal" American individuals rating the movies on their own, its time to draw the line. To make matters worse, one of the guests on Oprah (March 21, 1994) took the Academy Awards too seriously. It seems that every year before the awards, she goes out to purchase an expensive dress, eats a fancy dinner, and sits down to watch the big gala event on her home Trinitron (that's a television made by Sony folks). With someone like that in the world, I don't feel so bad anymore about watching the CBS Evening News with Dan Rather in the nude (That's a joke).

Well, here's a recap of the highlights of the festivities:

Anna Paquin, the 11-year-old actress in The Piano, won the Oscar for Best Supporting Actress. The Supporting Actor favorite was Tommy Lee Jones in The Fugitive. Please note, Jones had to shave his head because of a film currently in production. Mrs. Doubtfire won for makeup, Jurassic Park won for sound, and The Age of Innocence won for costumes. Schindler's List won art direction, original score, and cinematography. Jurassic Park won for winning sound, sound-effects editing, and visual effects. Six-time nominee Deborah Kerr was given an honorary award.

CD's To Consider:

Here it is. Freddie Jackson (RCA): The Greatest Hits of Freddie Jackson (Capitol).

In the '80s it seemed this slick but soulful R&B singer might equal or surpass the likes of Luther Vandross, but mild hits like You Are My Lady and Rock Me Tonight never quite made Top 10. His new CD continues the same pleasant but predictable path, as with the first single, Make Love Easy. The Capitol CD nicely collects the oldies.

I Know Who Holds Tomorrow: Allison Krauss and the Cox Family (Rounder)

This collaboration of the bluegrass singer-fiddler and the Louisiana gospel group doesn't have the big names of those superstar collaborations starring Pärtel, Harris and the like, but it has the same magical blend of country-female voices. Note how much Krauss and Suzanne Cox's sweet, evocative styles sound alike! Paul Simon's Loves Me Like a Rock is included.

NAKED GUN 3.1/3: THE FINAL INSULT

CAST: Leslie Nielsen, Priscilla Presley, George Kennedy, OJ Simpson, Fred Ward, Anna N. Smith
DIRECTOR: Peter Segal
GENRE: Comedy (Paramount) (PG-13)
REVIEWER'S ATTITUDE PROBLEM GOING IN: Hoping for a strong third round from this crew.

Lesser film critics will call this movie a fair-to-good comedy, but truly knowledgeable film pros will see Naked Gun 3.1/3 for what really is: a documentary! Of course, it's not truthful, objective reporting like we get on TV. In fact, its portrayal of police as demented buffoons, women as tart dodos and cars as mere vehicles may offend some viewers. But hey, that's all part of good comedy, and although there isn't so very much of that here, this third entry in the Naked Gun series has some laughs for almost every single American living today. The rest can watch the 6 O'Clock news. The transsexual gags are odd though. Hmm.

In the well established tradition of the Naked Gun flicks, police Lt. Frank Drebin (Leslie Nielsen) is best by challenges he doesn't even notice, much less understand, much less rise to, much less triumph over. The newspaper ad for this film shows him shooting himself in the foot, but this may be too kind. Drebin, like most of his police buddies, is also the sort of guy who wouldn't think twice about crawling down the barrel of a loaded howitzer to retrieve a cold match. At his retirement party, Drebin confesses that what he'll miss most about his job is the daily opportunities to shoot people. Call Turning Point!

In retirement, Frank follows his bliss deep into housework, taking more than in his ironing and cookies than he ever did in police work. Alas, a terrorist named Rocco (Fred Ward) is masterminding a bombing plot from prison. Who better to go there undercover and foil the plot? Who better to wind up helping Rocco to escape, and plant a box office bomb that Hollywood will never forget? With the help of his young wife (Priscilla Presley), and his cop buddies (George Kennedy and OJ Simpson), Frank must save the Oscars. His plan: impersonate Phil Donahue, tackle Raquel Welch and smoke up an airplane john. Hello. Hard Copy?

Truth to tell, this nearly-a-cult movie has at least one joke—puns to potities—for everyone, and the catchall cast does a completely adequate job holding up a long chain of well-tested gags and stunts. Oddly, like Ace Ventura, it has a big transsexual gag that falls flat, which is another reason why I'm pretty sure that Naked Gun 3.1/3 is actually an expose in the finest TV tradition.

CAST: Duane Martin, Leon, Tupac Shakur, Marion Wayans, Tonya Pinkins, David Bailey
DIRECTOR: Jeff Pollack
GENRE: Urban Rap Drama (New Line, Rated R, Running time 96 minutes)
REVIEWER'S PRECONCEPTION: Hoping for a b-ball film, not a message movie.

Twenty years from now, Above the Rim—along with many of its cousins in the urban/rap genre—will be viewed as exploitative racist trips. Today, unfortunately, this still passes for acceptable market-targeted entertainment, if not actual film making. If the NAACP objected to the negative stereotyping of African-Americans in TV's old Amos and Andy, I wonder why we won't hear a single word vilifying Above the Rim, which is negative racial stereotyping if I've ever seen it. Enough sociology; no matter how you take it, Above the Rim is as cony, simplistic and intimidating as the lyrics of a rap song.

From the title, the film promises to be a dramatic portrayal of the real world of urban street basketball. But the basketball scenes turn out to be almost as phony as the rest of the story. In the opening sequence, Kyle (Duane Martin), a dazzling high school basketball star, bounces a high pass to himself off the dribble for a dunk in a game. It's an illegal move, but Above the Rim is never too careful with the truth. Jeff Pollack, co-created and produced TV's Fresh Prince of Bel Air, makes his film making debut as director, co-screenwriter and producer on Above the Rim, and it's not an auspicious beginning.

The thrust of the plot focuses on how two different men and the mean streets of Harlem influence the life and future career of Kyle. Birdie (Tupac Shakur) is a dangerous drug dealer who is busy assembling a team to compete in the neighborhood shoot out (the real Harlem playground tournament). Shep (Leon) is a brooding former high school basketball star who is still living down a street past tragedy. Kyle also is guided by his willful and protective single mom Maureen (Tonya Pinkins), who wants her son to go to college regardless of how he gets there. He also has a white coach, who looks like he never aged before.

Marion Wayans provides needed comic relief as Bugaloe, Kyle's best friend, who repeatedly and unsuccessfully tries to gain favor with Birdie. Since intimidation is the pervasive mode of behavior, there is endless scenes of trash talking, of "talking smack" (the latest hip moniker) on the basketball court and in the streets. No matter how hard Above the Rim tries to be authentic, it's just slightly off all the time. Nothing rings quite true or real. This film is all attitude. Even the final moment of truth, the shoot out, is phony and thus lacks dramatic tension.

THE PAPER

CAST: Michael Keaton, Glenn Close, Robert Duval, Marisa Tomei, Randy Quaid
DIRECTOR: Ron Howard (Paramount, Backdraft)
GENRE: Drama (Universal, Rated R, Running Time 112 minutes)
REVIEWER'S PRECONCEPTION: Who can resist a film about tabloid journalism?

Who can resist a movie about the real world of tabloid journalism? You tell like you're actually learning something while being entertained in the process. An quasi-docs on a big-town daily newspaper like The New York Post is the perfect stuff of conventional popular entertainment. Director Ron Howard knows it, and the result is all you can expect and a little bit more. The Paper is good clean fun. Co-written by Stephen Koopp, a senior editor at The Paper, combines the edge of reality and the glitz of a movie.

Michael Keaton stars as Henry Hackett, a metropolitan editor whose life is overwhelming. To say that this guy's day is busy is a gross understatement. As the film opens, he is waking up in his clothes next to his very pregnant wife who reminds him that this may be the most pivotal day in their entire lives. He's on multiple deadlines: His wife is about to give birth; the rival and respectable "paps" paper The Sentinel is trying to lure him away from the down-and-dirty Sun; his managing editor, Alicia (Glenn Close), is on his case; and he absolutely has to get tomorrow morning's paper out.

The rub that Henry doesn't have a front page story that he can believe in. The New York Sun was beaten to the punch on reporting the murder of 2 white men in their car in Harlem and is about to go with "what they got"—a flimsy story about the arrest of 2 black kids, who Henry doesn't think did it. How does he know? He's a real newspaperman and he feels like it in his gut. Neither Alicia, who is busy trying to live like the people her paper writes about, nor the editor-in-chief Berke (Robert Duval), who was this morning diagnosed with prostate cancer, wants to risk further investigation.

But Henry can't leave it alone. His primary columnist McDougal (Randy Quaid), whom he finds hung over on his office couch, has heard some rumblings from the police, and his wife Murry (Marisa Tomei), a former reporter on maternity leave, has a friend at the justice department, should Henry let these kids get convicted on the front page—and go on with his cluttered life—or should he crusade for the truth? Along the way, we encounter a variety of enticing cameos: Jason Alexander, as a repentant corrupt parking commissioner; Spalding Gray as a smug status-conscious editor at The Sentinel; and Jason Roberts as the publisher.

A host of walk-ons (Pete Hamill, Bob Costas, William Kunstler, John Miller, Richard Price, Jane Hanson etc.) playing themselves adds to the panache. The Sentinel is a thinly-veiled, loosely constructed antisepic version of The New York Times, and the actual life of the city is painted in various other fashions. The Paper has plenty of atmosphere, engaging characters, a quick-pace, some snappy in-the-bit dialogue and nifty performances. So what if these aren't exactly (not even remotely) the white knights of journalism? It's a movie, and life has to be good.

Alternative NRG: Various Artists (Hollywood)

There's nothing unexpected about any of these 16 live performances recorded at various locales—except maybe that solar-powered equipment was used on all but one. However, the Greenpeace-benefit CD does feature strong concert performances by some big names, including U2, REM, PM Dawn, Sonic Youth, Annie Lennox, Jesus and Mary Chain, Soundgarden and Midnight Oil.

Jar of Flies: Alice in Chains (Columbia)

Seattle bands are tired of the "grunge" label, and Alice in Chains may be the most tired of all, since on this 7-song EP the popular band mostly shows off what else it can do. Among the notable departures in style: the folksy Don't Follow and the jazzy Swing on This. Let's hope this doesn't mean the guys have abandoned the gritty rock of Dirt—just taken an interesting detour.

Twenty-One Good Reasons: The Paul Carrack Collection (Chrysalis)

You may not know his name and you probably wouldn't recognize his face, but you have heard his lightweight but reasonably soulful tenor on Ace's How Long and Squeeze's Tempted. Those are 2 reasons to get this 1-disc anthology, but most of the others are pleasant-at-best selections from Carrack's 30-some solo albums.

Blue Velvet: The Ultimate Collection. The Moonglows (MCA/Ches)

Even though they never had the commercial success they deserved (their biggest hit, Sincerely, peaked at #20 in 1955) the Moonglows were among the most adept and influential doo-wop groups of the '50s. This 2-CD, 44-track collection does a nice job of collecting the Louisville ensemble's best, including a stunning version of the title song.

Diary of a Mad Band: Jodeci (Uptown/MCA)

How to explain the title on this follow-up to the harmonic quartet's double-platinum debut album Forever My Lady? The guys, led by singer-writer DeVante Swing, don't sound mad on brilliantly arranged love songs like My Heart Belongs to U and What About Us, but they do sound great. Amid the recent flood of similar, releases from Shai, Color Me Badd and the like, this is the best.

Broken Toy Shop: E (Polydor/PLG)

Fans who miss the style of Todd Rundgren's early albums might want to give E (Just E) a try. He writes and plays most of the instruments on tunes ranging from orchestral epics to power pop. Splendid production and clever, autobiographical lyrics, many dealing with bouncing back from life's disappointments, make for a well-crafted follow-up to the '92 debut album A Man Called E.

Midnight Mover: The Bobby Womack Collection (EMI)

Fans of this veteran R&B singer who've searched in vain for this long-out-of-print recordings can rejoice. This 2-CD collection offers no fewer than 44 tracks from 1967-1975 and leaves out his inferior late-'70s material. True, there are none of the fine '80s Womack & Womack songs, but otherwise the CD—which comes with an appreciation by Robert Palmer—is a treat.

Right Back at Cha: Shai (Gasoline Alley)

Among all of the black male harmony groups around now, Shai is one of the classiest, and the 4 smoothies prove it with this 10-song CD of new tracks, remixes and live performances. The guys don't have much to say—just various ways to tell the lady to, as one title puts it, Come Home to My Love, but they say it so elegantly, especially on the exquisite cappella Yours.

Hand on the Torch: Us3 (Blue Note)

The marriage of rap and jazz moves past the honeymoon stage with this sure-footed, strongly developed debut by the London-based trio Us3. The group has been allowed to dip deep into the Blue Note catalog for samples, and they've picked some groovy ones. The montage of sounds is delightful (a tribute to jazz talents whose riffs show us here) even if the raps are sometimes clichéd.

More Songs from Sleepless Nights: Various Artists (Epic Soundtrax)

The Sleepless in Seattle soundtrack was a surprise #1, so why not release a sequel? More Songs consists as Nora Ephron explains in her back-of-cover rationalization, of songs that the film's creators considered using but couldn't, plus "other songs that would somehow fit." Fortunately, as on the soundtrack, the gold (by Nat Cole, Tony Bennett, et al) outweighs the chintz (Vic Damone).

First Step, Long Player: A Nod Is As Good As A Wink...to a Blind Horse. Ooh La La: The Faces (Warner Archives)

Evolving from the Small Faces, this outstanding English rock band dropped the "Small" when it added singer Rod Stewart for 1970's First Step. All 4 albums, finally on CD, represent some of the most exciting music of the early '70s (including the 1972 hit Stay with Me), featuring Ronnie Lane on bass and future Rolling Stone Ron Wood on guitar.

Up 'til Now: Art Garfunkel (Columbia)

Amid all the holiday best-of collections, this one almost slipped by quietly—which may be appropriate considering the quiet-voiced sometime-partner of Paul Simon. Though 2 tracks (The Breakup and the acoustic version of The Sound of Silence) overlap Simon's recent box, this mix of solo oldies and a few of new songs (Crying in the Rain, with James Taylor) is a treat for fans.

Paul Is Live: Paul McCartney (Capitol)

Another concert album for McCartney? It might seem overkill to everyone else, but devoted fans will welcome this 24-song CD for various reasons. Those who prefer Paul revisiting his Beatles material will enjoy that emphasis here. Those like me who think he's at his most fervent on post-Beatles songs get superb versions of several, such as a passionate take on Looking for Changes.

POET'S CORNER

a look at the arts

AUTHOR READING

Phillip Gerard will read from his new novel, Cape Fear Rising, on Thursday, March 24 at 7:30 p.m. at the New Hanover County Public Library. The program is free and the public is invited.

Cape Fear Rising is a controversial historical novel based on events that took place in Wilmington in 1898. A small group of influential white citizens, feeling threatened by the growing power of the middle-class black population, incited bands of armed men to attack. Many were killed and thousands fled the city, never to return.

Gerard directs the Professional and Creative Writing Program at UNCW. He holds an M.F.A. from the University of Arizona. He has worked as a newspaperman and freelance journalist, and published two previous books and numerous magazine articles. Copies of Cape Fear Rising will be available for sale at the program, courtesy of Bristol Books. Gerard will autograph copies following the reading.

UNCW DIVISION OF MUSIC

Dr. Barry David Salwen will give a piano recital on Tuesday, March 29, at 8 p.m., in Kenan Auditorium. The program will include music by Schubert, Debussy, Ethel Haime, and Roger Nichols.

Dr. Salwen has given recitals and master classes in the U.S., Central America, Europe and Asia. Most recently he was in Shanghai, China, where he gave master classes at the Shanghai Conservatory of music and performed Brahms' Piano Concerto #2 with the Shanghai Opera Symphony Orchestra. This past November he performed the same work with the Wilmington Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Salwen is an assistant professor of music at UNCW. The recital is sponsored by UNCW Division of music. Admission is free.

UNCW ART EXHIBITS

Artist Elizabeth S. Harris will have her work on display at the UNCW University Union from March 1 through April 9, 1994. The exhibit is titled, "Colorful Scenic Scenes," and includes a combination of mixed media pieces, watercolors, and pastels. A "Meet the Artist" reception will be held on Sunday, March 20 in the UU Living Room from 4 p.m. to 5:30 p.m.. The public is invited to attend.

WILMINGTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

"A Little Night Music—An Evening of Pops, Food, and Fun" will be presented Saturday, March 26 at 7:45 p.m. in Wagoner Hall. The event will offer a wide variety of music including Broadway show tunes, jazz, American folk music, and opera favorites. Guest artists are Michael Rallis, tenor, the Frank Bongiorno Quartet, and the Wilmington Boys Choir. Master of Ceremonies will be Dr. James Leutze. A commemorative painting and fine art posters of the painting will be for sale during the evening. The artist, Betty Brown, will be present for signing posters. Tickets are $45 per person, available in advance only. Ticket price includes food, beer, and wine. For tickets and group reservations, call Kenan Auditorium Box Office at 791-9695 or the WSO office at 791-9262.

NORTH CAROLINA MUSIC SHOWCASE

The North Carolina Music Showcase will be held June 2-4 at the Mad Monk. Applicants must submit a cassette with 3 original songs, brief biography and pertinent press (if any), black and white or color photograph, itinerary of upcoming shows, complete address and phone number of contact. Include a money order for $10 payable to "NCMS" for handling. Deadline for submission is March 31, 1994. Artists selected will be notified by May 2, 1994. For more information, call 919-406-9585.

POETRY CONTEST

The National Library of Poetry has announced that $12,000 in prizes will be awarded this year to over 250 poets in the North American Open Poetry Contest. The contest is open to everyone and entry is FREE. Any poet, whether previously published or not, can be a winner. Every poem entered also has a chance to be published in an anthology. To enter, send ONE original poem, any subject and any style, to the National Library of Poetry, 11419 Crombridge Dr., P.O. Box 704-YF, Owings Mills, MD 21117. The poem should be no more than 20 lines, and the poet's name and address should appear on the top of the page. Entries must be postmarked by March 31, 1994. A new contest opens April 1, 1994.

ARTS IN ACTION

The Charterhouse School of England Special Choir will be visiting Wilmington. This 25-member choir features boys and girls ranging in age from 16 to 18 years, who perform a variety of sacred and secular music. Selections of music include pieces by Purcell, Palestrina, Vaughan Williams, Percy Grainger, and John Rutter. Concerts will be held at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, March 29 at the First Presbyterian Church and at 12 noon on Wednesday, March 30 at UNCW's Kenan Auditorium. Both concerts are free and open to the public. For more information, contact Sandy Errante at 395-3797 or Charles Woodward at 762-6688.

CAPE FEAR CHORDSMEN

The Cape Fear Chordsmen, Wilmington's men's chorus dedicated to four-part, unaccompanied barbershop harmony, will present "Phantom of the Barbershop" at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium on Saturday, April 23. Featured guest stars will include the Harmony Belles, a Wilmington women's barbershop chorus and Talk of the South, a quartet based in Atlanta. Advance tickets are $9 (adults) or $8 (seniors or students) for general admission. Reserved seating can be arranged at $12.50 through the Kenan box office (791-9695). For advance tickets, call Paul Parker at 395-6911.

INVITATION TO ARTISTS

St. John's Museum of Art extends an open invitation to artists to participate in the upcoming exhibition Art for the Birds. There is no entry fee and is open to visual artists, architects, performing artists, and creative people to create functional objects such as bird feeders, baths, houses and/or more interpretive art for birds to enjoy. The dates of the exhibition are April 10-June 26 at Sculpture Garden, St. John's Museum of Art, 114 Orange St., Wilmington. For information about entering the exhibition, call Anne Brennan at 763-0281.

exhibit or display the firearm in a careless, angry or threatening manner.

If the person is a student, possession is a felony. A person who is not a student can be convicted of a misdemeanor, punishable by a maximum of two years imprisonment and/or a fine.

It is a misdemeanor to possess a BB gun, air rifle, air pistol, bowie knife, dirk, dagger, slingshot, lead cane, switchblade knife, blackjack, metallic knuckles, razor and razor blades (except solely for shaving) or any sharp-pointed or -edged instrument, except supplies and tools used solely for preparing food, instruction and maintenance. These statutes apply only to possession on school grounds.

"The important thing for the university community to understand is that while we do everything we can to make sure the campus is secure, it's important to be aware of one's surroundings," Thomas said. "It's not as if we have a brick wall around the campus saying no bad guys allowed. We're no different from the city. We have the same problems as everyone else, though not as frequently."

"Gender and Power on Campus"

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

"Gender and Power on Campus" will be the topic for a panel discussion at 8 p.m., Tuesday, March 29, in Cameron Hall Auditorium.

Sponsored by the Human Relations Committee in recognition of Women's History Month, the panelists will discuss sexual harassment, the chilly climate on university campuses, the "glass ceiling," and language and gender in higher education.

The panelists include: Dr. D'Ann Campbell, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Austin Peay State University; Dr. Mary K. Deshaizer, associate professor of women's studies and English, Wake Forest University; and Dr. Eleanor McKenna, assistant professor of English and director of composition, UNCW. Dr. Jo Ann Seiple, UNCW assistant vice chancellor for academic affairs will be the moderator for the evening.

A reception will immediately follow the panel discussion and the public is invited to attend.

Sports

Thanks to Athletic Trainers

BY JOELLE KIBLER
Sports Writer

Who is there to listen to your complaints about aches and pains? Who assists in receiving a bag of ice or a heating pad? Who stretches your tight muscles or electrically stimulates them to relieve the pain and relax them? Who is there to tape your ankle, provide you with ibuprofen, or to give you a band-aid? Of course, the answer to all of these questions and more are the UNCW ATHLETIC TRAINERS.

Most of the time the athletic trainers are overlooked and pushed into the background, but the point is that the athletic trainers are really an important part of all athletic programs. Without their help and assistance, the athletes wouldn't physically be able to perform to their potential despite their injuries.

On behalf of all the athletes, I would like to take the time to thank all the student trainers for their aide and support in the training room.

3rd year student trainers: Tammy Barber, Ginger Garner, and Debbie Coles
2nd year student trainers: Chip Betzner, Kerry Richardson, P.J. Johnson, and Greg La Mendola

1st year student trainers: Craig Ellbacher, Jennifer Secrist, Debrah Goff, Vickie Colvin, Larna Hughes, Julie Capell, Alianna McAnally, Terry Kramer, and Valerie Rice

Special recognition and appreciation goes out to Tammy Barber, Chip Betzner, Kerry Richardson, and Craig Ellbacher, who are hard-working, dedicated student trainers that put a lot of their extra time into the UNCW student trainer's program.

Also thanks goes out to UNCW's head trainers, Terry Middlesworth, A.T.C. and Scott Hill, A.T.C. in training the students and utilizing their knowledge and expertise to make our UNCW Sports Medicine program what it is today. In addition, appreciation is also given to the university's doctors, Dr. William Sutton and Dr. James Hundley.

The UNCW men's lacrosse team has posted a 2-0-0 record to start their 1994 season. The Seahawk X-men defeated Appalachian state 12-1 at home the Saturday before spring break. Attackmen Eric "Schmoe" Brown, Eric Whitstone, and Mike Santacrose combined for 8 goals and 6 assists in the season opener. Strong support from the midis at both ends of the field and a near perfect performance by the defense, highlighted by solid play from Dave Adam and Jeff White, culminated in the lacrosse team's most decisive victory to date. Last Sunday, the team traveled to Greenville to play the rival ECU Pirates. The Seahawks held the lead for the entire game but never by more than 3 points in their 16-13 win. Junior midfielder Brian Hawk led team with 4 goals and 1 assist, with team president Trevor Hughes adding 3 goals and 2 assists to the win. Eric Whitstone also contributed his second hat-trick of the season. The defense rallied around Brian Steiner's strong goal-keeping to hold off the Pirate's fourth quarter run for the lead. This weekend, the Seahawk X-men will try to add two more wins to their record, playing powerhouse Duke on Saturday and NC State in Sunday. Both games are on the Seahawk's home field, near the Gazebo on the UNCW campus at 2:00 p.m. Come on out and see what UNCW Lacrosse is all about.

Senior Athlete Profile

BY JOELLE KIBLER
Sports Writer

Doug Liming is a senior on this year's UNCW Men's Track team, participating in the 800m and 1500m events. He is from Hillsboro, Ohio and will graduate in December of 1994 with a degree in Computer Science.

Douglas started competing in track in the sixth grade and continued throughout high school. As Douglas began to look for out of state universities to attend for college particularly Chapel Hill, he discovered the UNCW system. Douglas decided on UNCW, because he "liked it the best and could be more competitive here running." Douglas was a walk-on his first year on the UNCW Track team and then later was offered a scholarship upon entering his sophomore year.

There has been quite a few changes in the track program over Douglas' four years at UNCW, especially in the coaches. Douglas views this as a negative aspect, since he had to adjust to a new coach and their teaching style every year. But currently under the coaching of Jim Sprecher, Douglas believes the attitude of the team is more positive and well-rounded as a whole. The UNCW Track team has also grown tremendously over the past four years, now carrying between fifty and sixty athletes. Therefore given the number of track athletes, Douglas would like to see more NCAA scholarships. Douglas hopes the team will continue to build and develop a stronger base for future teams to come.

Douglas believes he has personally benefited from being a part of UNCW athletic program and from running itself. He enjoys the extra attention an athlete gets, especially in the area of academics and scheduling. "I like the discipline involved and dedication which projects itself in all other aspects of life," comments Douglas. Douglas enjoys the competitive nature of running and the idea of challenging oneself. He states, "It is not a glamorous sport, but I got a lot out of it because of the individual accomplishment and challenging yourself." Douglas also is in much better physical condition as a result of being a UNCW athlete. He hopes to finish his last year strong and make it his best season yet.

Douglas has received a numerous amount of support from teammates and friends during his college career. John Collins, a former UNCW track athlete, gave Douglas a different perspective on the sport. Douglas states, "John showed and told me what can be accomplished running and what you can generate yourself to achieve." Teammates Mike Rhodes and Tricia Callison have also given Douglas support, motivation, and drive in competing. Kevin McCarthy has been very influential and a consistent figure to Douglas over his four years in Wilmington. "We run together all summer and helps coach me in the summer time; he has always given me good advice," comments Douglas.

Douglas is a very devoted, dedicated, and disciplined athlete. Douglas believes since running is a lifestyle, it affects everything he does in life (diet, exercise, sleep, etc.). He states, "Running is something you don't just step away from when you step off the field."

In the future, Douglas would like to attend graduate school to get his Ph.D. in Computer Science, specializing in Artificial Intelligence. Someday he hopes to become a professor. Douglas will continue to run competing in triathlons and to continue coaching with Kevin McCarthy in the summer the Cape Fear Flyers track club.

Douglas also works during the school year at Corning as a computer programmer twenty-five to thirty hours a week.

Douglas sums up his UNCW experience by saying: "It was positive, fun, unforgettable, and something to look back on and draw from experiences. My experiences said a lot about the nature of people—how they really are regardless of how they represent themselves."

Is Your Hobby Becoming A Habit?

Circle the appropriate number to indicate how well each of the statements describe your feelings most of the time.

1. When I miss an exercise session, I feel my body is getting out of shape.
2. I will still exercise even if I feel sick or am injured.
3. I do not feel it is important to take time off from exercise.
4. When I miss an exercise session, I feel tense, irritable or depressed.
5. I often have daydreams about exercise.
6. Exercise is my main topic of conversation.
7. I almost always experience a feeling of euphoria or "high" during or after exercise.
8. Exercise is my main form of leisure.
9. If I have over-eaten, I will make up for it by exercising more.
10. Sometimes I feel the need to exercise twice a day.
11. I always push myself to exercise even if I am tired or don't feel like it.
12. My interest in work and other areas of life has diminished since I have been exercising.

Now add up your score and check with the categories:

12-36: Your approach to exercise is positive. You enjoy regular exercise regimens, but you are listening to your body when it needs time off.
37-48: While you are reaping the health benefits of exercise, but your enthusiasm may have reached the stage of obsession where other commitments in life are less important. You are not taking any time off, and you will eventually suffer physical injury as well as mental stress. You need to reassess your priorities and listen to your body.

News Briefs

U.S.-Korea

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Warren Christopher is making plans with South Korea's foreign minister to attempt to inspect North Korean nuclear sites. Christopher met Wednesday with Foreign Minister Han Seung-joo to plan joint military exercises in South Korea. Christopher is expected to receive a report on talks between South Korea and China on the nuclear inspections.

South Korea-China

SEOUL, South Korea — President Kim Young-sam said in Beijing that he was convinced that war can be avoided following talks with Chinese leaders. Reports indicate Kim Young-Sam may have gotten assurances that the Korean nuclear dispute may be resolved through talks. Reports from Beijing said Kim Young-Sam failed to gain assurances that China would intervene with North Korea over the nuclear dispute.

Mexican presidential race

MEXICO CITY — Ernesto Zedillo, who managed Luis Donaldo Colosio's campaign until Colosio was assassinated, has replaced him and is favored to lead in the presidential race. The ruling Mexican party said Zedillo is its "pre-candidate." Zedillo must be approved by a party congress before the decision is final, but approval is almost certain. The congress will meet in early April.

Church-state

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court is considering where to draw the line between church and state in a case which deals a public school district created specifically for the disabled children of a Hasidic Jewish community in New York. State courts ruled that the district violated the Constitutional ban on government establishment of religion. Lawyers for the state and school contend it is a legitimate way to serve the needs of devoutly religious children who were teased at other schools.

Carjacking video

LOS ANGELES — The carjacking in which two students from Japan were mortally wounded Friday was videotaped by a security camera on an automatic teller machine. Police haven't said how many assailants were involved in the incident. The bank manager said the videotape is "quite sharp" when it is blown up and enhanced. The students were attending Marymount College, where a memorial service was held Tuesday.

Proposal Would Bring Parkway Through UNCW

BY PHIL SMITH
Staff Writer

On Wednesday, March 23, 1994, the University held a press conference to discuss the impact of the proposed extension of Randall Parkway through the campus of UNCW. The North Carolina Department of Transportation has proposed extending the present three lane thoroughfare, which currently ends at the University entrance on South College Road, by expanding and widening Randall Drive and developing it eastward through to Hooker Road.

The New Hanover County Commissioners recently voted 4-1 to approve the extension, while the Wilmington City Council did not approve the measure. The Wrightsville Beach Board of Aldermen also approved of the plan.

According to a fact sheet presented at the press conference, the effects of the parkway extension would affect the campus in several ways. The most expensive of the casualties would be the replacement of the more than 400 parking spaces that would be lost. Another, and perhaps more important loss would be that of UNCW property.

"My greatest concern is for the safety of the students on foot and bicycle," said UNCW Director of Public Relations Mimi Cunningham. Aside from safety, the proposal will also "change the character of the campus... and will impact the conservation areas," she added. The road and right-of-way will consume nearly 17 acres, but because the road will separate part of the campus, another 53 acres will be rendered unusable.

College Road traffic, estimated at 43,000 cars per day, is the concern of the Department of Transportation officials. The proposed plan would alleviate some of that traffic volume by diverting it, and thus adding another east-west route between Wilmington and Wrightsville Beach.

While the University is not in favor of the proposal as it stands, administration officials have stated they were willing to offer alternative solutions to the traffic problems. Included among these are: increased use of public transportation, more effective bus service, and a plan to feed College Road traffic onto Racine Drive and northward to Eastwood Road.

"Why not be creative and visionary about our approach," said Cunningham, who added that bikeways and greenways going east-west could help with the problem.

The Proposed Extension of Randall Parkway Would Enter Campus At This Intersection. The Brick Gate Ways and Landscaping Would Be Removed.

Raced Based Scholarships

BY KRISTI BROWN
Staff Writer

Are you eligible for a scholarship at UNCW because you are African-American, North Carolina Indian, or an International Student? Yes, you are.

Each year, UNCW grants $100,000 to minority students. Forty-four thousand dollars comes from the state, and UNCW pulls together the difference, $55,500.

The main scholarship is the Minority Achievement Award. Recipients of the awards are chosen by the Admissions Office based on academic progress.

Another award is the Minority Presence Award. Recipients are chosen based on need by the Financial Aid Office.

"UNCW has pretty much always had minority scholarships," says Joe Capell, director of financial aid. "They came as a result of the Consent Decree, which dates back 15 years. It has been a successful program and worth the dollars of the state."

A separate application does not need to be filled out to be considered for these scholarships. The computer in Financial Aid ranks students according to financial need.

The final policy guide issued by the department said race-based scholarships would be permissible under the following conditions:

- * Aid is awarded to disadvantaged students, without regard to race or national origin, even if the awards go disproportionately to minority students.

- * Aid is awarded on the basis of race or national origin when authorized by a particular federal statute, such as the Patricia Roberts Harris Fellowship Program.

- * Aid is awarded on the basis of race or national origin to remedy past discrimination.

- * Aid is awarded on the basis of race or national origin if it is narrowly tailored to achieve a diverse student body.

- * Aid is accepted by a school from private contributors and restricted by race or national origin on a manner consistent with principles in the guidelines.

The guidelines replace the old policy by noting that post-secondary institutions do not need a formal finding before taking steps to remedy past discrimination.

Some people feel as if race-based scholarships are discriminatory. However, race-based scholarships are for African-American students as a predominantly white school or Caucasian students at a predominantly black school. If a white student attended NC A&T, he or she would be eligible for this scholarship.

New SGA Members Sworn In At Inauguration

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

The Student Government Association held its Inauguration and Awards Banquet on Monday night.

Three awards were given to senators. Ashley Wallace received the Speaker of the Year Award. Andy Farmer is Senator of the Year. Jonathan Rowell received the award for Horse's Rear End, which is actually a respectable award, despite what it sounds like. Horse's Rear End goes to the person who raises the most questions. Whether the reason is because Rowell is opposed to the issue being raised, or because he likes to play Devil's Advocate, asking questions provokes discussion and causes others to think about the issue before making a hasty decision.

In addition to the three senatorial awards, Lee Person got the President's Award of Excellence, which carries a $500 scholarship. Person also received the Office Assistant's Senatorial Award of Appreciation. Everyone else in SGA received certificates of recognition for their work in Student Government.

Substance Abuse on Rise at UNCW

BY ERICA BRANDON
Staff Writer

Compared to national statistics, drug and alcohol use at UNCW is way out of proportion. In October 1992, students were surveyed about their use.

When UNCW students were asked how often they used alcohol within the last year, 87 percent reported they had, compared to 89 percent nationally.

When asked the same questions about marijuana, 39 percent of UNCW students reported they had, compared to 27 percent nationally. Fifteen percent said they had used hallucinogens compared to 5 percent nationally.

Over one percent of UNCW students said they had used alcohol on a daily basis, compared to 9 percent nationally. Marijuana use on a daily basis for UNCW students was 2.2 percent compared to 0 percent nationally.

Students who abuse alcohol and other drugs said they had many problems. Consequently they perform poorly on tests, get in trouble with the police, have arguments and fights and make poor sexual choices.

Diane Edwards, coordinator of Alternatives!, stresses that Alternatives! is not suggesting stopping alcohol use altogether; they just question when, where and why alcohol is used. "Make sure it enhances life and doesn't take away from it," she said.

Any student who has problems with alcohol or substance abuse can talk to counselors at the Student Development Center. For information about alcohol and its effects, Alternatives offers programs and literature.

UNCW Offers Summer Study Abroad Programs

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

The Office of International Programs at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington will offer eight different study abroad programs this summer. They are: Costa Rica; Sweden; Moscow; England, Scotland, Wales; London; Ecuador; Brazil; Barbados.

The public is invited to join any of the excursions, and can take the courses on an auditing basis. Trip expenses for people who have lived in North Carolina for more than a year will be the same as for university students living in North Carolina. People living in the state less than a year will be charged out-of-state fees.

Each program combines hands-on learning, sightseeing, and university credit courses. The application deadline for each trip is April 15, 1994. For more information contact the UNCW Office of International Programs at 910-395-3525.

Costa Rica — May 9 - June 13, 1994. Students will study anthropology, geology and Spanish while living in the small towns around Heredia, Costa Rica, where the university is located. Several of their trips will include visiting the active volcano Irazu and Guacimo, a banana plantation. $2,200 in-state, $3,730 out-of-state.

Sweden — May 20 - June 21, 1994. This marine biology field-course in the Arctic will be held at the Kristineberg Marine Biological Station of the University of Gothenburg in Sweden. The laboratory is located on the scenic shores of the Gullmar Fjord and is jointly operated by the Swedish Royal Academy. $2,500 in-state, $3,950 out-of-state.

Moscow — May - June 17, 1994. This trip is mostly academic on the studies of Russian history and language. Students will be staying at the Academy of National Economy. Field trips will be taken to places like the monastery at Valerik. $2,300 in-state, $3,830 out-of-state.

England, Scotland, Wales — June 27 - July 15, 1994. Students will be visiting four different schools: Swansea University, Wales; University of Edinburgh, Scotland; University of Westminster and De Montfort College, England. Room and board will be provided by the housing residents of each institution. This is an academic program studying comparative educational systems with field trips to Stonehenge and various castles. $2,950 in-state, $4,480 out-of-state.

London — June 28 - July 28, 1994. While staying at Regent College, students will study the British criminal justice system. Visits are scheduled to Scotland Yard, Westminster Abbey, and Old Daily (a criminal court). $2,750 in-state, $4,280 out-of-state.

Ecuador — July 2 - August 6, 1994. Students will live in Quito with host families. Anthropology, business, Spanish and art courses will be taken at the local university. Students will also have the opportunity to live in the rain forest and study ecology for three weeks. $2,000 one price.

Brazil — July 5 - July 26, 1994. Students will be staying in hostels when they travel to Manaus, Rio de Janeiro, Salvador, and Sao Paulo. On these excursions they will learn the history and culture of the country. $2,300 in-state, $3,830 out-of-state.

Barbados — July 11 - August 8, 1994. Students will be staying and studying at Codrington College. They will study archeology and Caribbean literature. Several trips will be taken to the library at the University of the West Indies and to Crop Over, a festival. $2,300 in-state, $3,830 out-of-state.

At A Glance

Students with Outstanding balances will not be allowed to pre-register for Summer I, Summer II, and Fall 1994. Outstanding balances must be paid at the cashier's office in James Hall in order to pre-register. All students will receive this notice in their student mail box. IT IS JUST A REMINDER!

PRE-REGISTRATION. The initial date for preregistration is indicated on your Permit to Register. This date is determined by the number of semester hours earned. Those students having the highest number of earned hours are given the earlier date for preregistering. Students cannot preregister before the initial date on their Permit. Attempted preregistration before the scheduled date will be cancelled. Tuition and fees bills will be mailed to the student's permanent address. If payment is not made, the preregistration is cancelled.

The Chancellor's Student Hours are Thursday, April 14, 3:30-4:30 p.m., and Thursday, April 28.

Randall Library Easter Vacation Schedules: Thursday, March 31 - 7:30a.m. to 11p.m.; Friday, April 1 - 8a.m. to 5p.m.; Saturday, April 2 - 10a.m. to 5p.m.; Sunday, April 3 - 3p.m. to midnight.

The Chancellor's Student Health and Wellness Center Advisory Committee wishes to invite students representing the diversity of our campus population to apply for membership of this committee for the 1994-95 academic year.

The general purpose of the committee is to act in an advisory capacity regarding policy and administrative matters except those matters involving medical procedures. Members are appointed by the Chancellor. It will promote an understanding of the role and function of the Student Health and Wellness Center in the university community. The committee will hear complaints about alleged inequities in student health services and make appropriate recommendations to the vice chancellor for student affairs.

The Chancellor's AIDS Advisory Committee wishes to invite students representing the diversity of our campus population to apply for membership of this committee for the 1994-95 academic year.

ship of this committee for the 1994-95 academic year. The purpose of the Chancellor's AIDS Advisory Committee is for the faculty, students, and staff to advise the Chancellor on policies, procedures, and educational efforts needed to deal with AIDS/HIV infection issues on campus. The committee is responsible for keeping up-to-date information surrounding the medical, legal, community, and ethical issues associated with the disease. The committee will be accepting applications through Wednesday, April 13.

1993 State and Federal Income Tax forms are available in the Postal Services lobby in the University Center.

A saxophone recital by music students Jonathan Diggs and Raylene Stevens will be held on Thursday, April 7 at 8 p.m. in Kennan Auditorium. This hour long concert will feature Classical, Romantic and Contemporary works. This concert will feature baritone, tenor, and also saxophone pieces with piano by Mary Nelson Smith. Free with student I.D. Come enjoy the music.

The Castle Street Association will have a clean-up morning on Saturday, April 9. The group and interested volunteers will meet at 9a.m. at Hall's Drug Store at the corner of Fifth and Castle Streets. Bring gloves, rakes, brooms, clippers, etc. We invite everyone to join us in this effort to beautify and revitalize Castle Street.

CAMPUS GROUPS

An organizational meeting for Sigma Tau Delta International English Honor Society charter members is scheduled for Tuesday, April 5 in the University Center Ballroom 3 from 3:30-4:30p.m. Please come to the organizational meeting. We'll elect officers, fill out some paperwork, plan upcoming events, and discuss scholarship opportunities. The $20 initiation fee will also be collected. If you can't attend the meeting, please stop by Dr. Keith Newlin's office, Morton Hall 123, so he can get you officially enrolled. For more information, please call Dr. Newlin at 395-

The Feminist Colloquium will meet for a brown bag lunch at 12:15 on Tuesday, April 12, in the Faculty Commons of Morton Hall. We will view and discuss portions of Dreamworlds. This provocative video explores the representation of women on MTV. This will be our last meeting for this academic year. Anyone, regardless of gender, interested in issues of identity is welcome at the colloquium.

You're invited to participate in the American Indian Celebration sponsored by the UNCW School of Nursing, Coastal AHEC and the NC Commission on Indian Affairs Friday, April 8. Learn about American Indians through a variety of free special sessions including live performances of Indian music and dance. Also enjoy a $2 authentic American Indian Food Sampler from noon to 2p.m. Concurrent repeated sessions begin at 1p.m. in the University Center. Music begins at 2p.m. on the UNCW Quadrangle. For more information, call 395-3784.

UNCW Gay and Lesbian Association meets weekly. Gays, Lesbians, Bisexuals, and friends are welcome. Your privacy is respected. For more information, please call 395-3374

The Biology Club meets every Tuesday at 5 p.m. in Friday Hall, room 151. All majors welcome. Activities this semester will include trash pick-up through the Adopt-A-Highway program, an Earth Day fund-raising event for charity, wildlife painting on campus to boost awareness, speakers on various aspects of wildlife and getting into graduate school, plus much more. For more information, contact Heather Woodson at 395-3487.

The College Bowl Club meets every Friday in UU room 207 at 2p.m. Anyone interested in participating in academic competition at the intracampus and intercollegiate levels is invited to join. For more information, call Jonathan Rowell at 452-3340.

ECO CLUB. The Environmental Concerns Organization meets every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the University Union study lounge beside the information desk. This semester's activities include trash pick-up, a new recycling program, The Big Turn Off event in all dorms and buildings, and the 2nd Annual Earthday Seaside Revival on April 17. Plus much more! For more information, call 313-0588 or 392-8653.

Society of Operations and Information Management meets the first Wednesday of every month at 6 p.m. Call Sandra Pollock at 350-4605 for information.

This year Global Volunteers will be traveling to Jamaica on May 9-16. We will be painting 15 rooms for the YMCA and sleeping on cots in their facility. March 31 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the University Union, our group will be asking for donations of $15 to go towards paint and supplies for the trip. I am appealing to you and your organization for support of the project which will benefit the underserved children in Jamaica. Your sponsorship or donations are greatly appreciated. Please contact me at the campus activities office at 395-3827 or at the Volunteers office at 395-3904 if you have any questions or comments.

Campus Activities

Arts in Action, a program of the Campus Activities Office, offers performances in the Hawk's Nest every Thursday from 12-1 p.m. This event, called "That's Entertainment," will feature faculty, student and community artists. This week, Alice Neilson, jazz pianist will be featured. Arts in Action will be sponsoring a lunchtime bluegrass jam by Kevin Van Gorder in the Hawk's Nest Courtyard on Thursday, April 7 at noon. Bring your lunch. Free. Tapestry Theater will be performing "A Perfect Match" in Center Stage on Wednesday, April 20 at noon. This play is a 45-minute comedy about a computer date mix-up. Bring your lunch and come see a show. Desert will be on the house. You need to reserve your seat by calling 395-3797 or be dropping by the Leadership Center. Free and sponsored by Arts in Action. Call Sandy Errante at 3797 for more information.

directed to the Campus Activities office by calling 395-3827.

The Association for Campus Entertainment concert committee meets every Wednesday night at 7 p.m. in UU 203. Come out and you may get the opportunity to rub elbows with the rich and famous.

REACH OUT

Peer Educators. Students interested in working as Peer Educators with the ALTERNATIVES office may pick up an application in Room 104 of the University Union. For more information, call Diane Edwards at ext. 3577.

LEADERSHIP CENTER

The Leadership Center has many resources available to the campus including books, files on leadership education topics, and multi-cultural games. The newest edition, the Harwick Classic Leadership Cases, offers a unique way to incorporate classic literature into discussions of leadership issues. There are several dozen titles, including Ghandi, Malcolm X, Plato, Moby Dick, The Mayor of Casterbridge, and several works of Shakespeare. Teacher notes are available. Donated extra copies of books or handouts on topics related to leadership education are always appreciated.

Wanted: Star Throwers

We live in a world of constant contradictions. One day we read stories of incredible hopelessness and despair and then run across other stories that help us maintain our lively sense of hope. The forces of light and the forces of darkness seem to be in constant interplay.

Lauren Eiseley tells a story which helps me feel the power of recognizing life's contradictions. That great naturalist once spent time in a seaside town called Costabel, and, plagued by his life-long insomnia, spent the early morning hours walking on the beach. Each day at sunrise, he found townspeople combing the sand for starfish which had washed ashore during the night to kill them for commercial purposes. It was for Eiseley, a sign, however small, that the world was not to life.

but one morning, Eiseley got up unusually early and discovered a solitary figure on the beach. This man, too, was gathering starfish but each time he found one alive, he would pick it up and throw it as far as he could beyond the breaking surf, back into the nurturing ocean from which it came. As days went by Eiseley found this man embark on his mission of mercy each morning, seven days a week, no matter what the weather.

Eiseley named this man "the star thrower," and in a moment of meditation he writes of how this man in his pre-dawn work contradicted everything Eiseley had been taught about evolution and survival of the fittest. Here in the beach of Costabel, the strong reaches out to save, not crush the weak. And Eiseley wondered: Is there a Star Thrower at work in the universe. God contradicts death. God whose nature is "mercy within mercy within mercy?"

Of course, I believe that there is such a "Star Thrower" at work in our universe. But more, the story moves us beyond our constant questioning about reality's goodness or evil and points us toward a position in which we accept, at one level, the contradictions life keeps demonstrating to us and finding a way to end the seeming contradictions of vocation as star throwers.

At one level, we can recognize, identify, and lift up those moments, those acts and those people, those stories which contradict those ways in which the world says no to life. At a deeper level, we can choose to find whatever "beach" life sets us a part of and choose to be star throwers in that place. Your "beach" may be your office or your classroom or your home. There are contradictions in all of those places and a need for someone who will resolutely nourish all that says "YES" to life.

The acts of the star thrower were very small and puny but they had a profound effect upon Lauren Eiseley. No act of compassion, no act of mercy or caring or listening or lovingly confronting or sharing is too small. Likewise, there is hardly any place, if any "beach" where there are not forces at work tearing things apart in the name of personal gain or power or progress.

Where is your beach? What place in your life needs some small acts of mercy and love? Our world needs star throwers and you need to be a star thrower if you have any hope of nourishing the part of you that wants to say "YES" to the promise inherent in a life in which you have been gifted.

A Band By Any Other Name Is Just A Band

Have you noticed that band names are, well, odd? This is really not news to anyone with even a modicum of intelligence, but I just hadn't given it much thought until the other night.

I'd ordered the student pizza special from Domino's. Along with the pizza and two coles came a really handy-dandy schedule of upcoming bands at The Mad Monk. Out came the old social calendar to see what's what.

But as I perused the list of bands, I began to squirm. I had some trouble working up any enthusiasm for anything or anyone named Chemikal.

This, uh... group was slated on the same night as Betrayer and Faith Collapsing. Gee, what a depressing Friday night: you're betrayed, your faith collapsed, and you're killed by chemicals all in the same evening. I'm not quite sure about this, seems a bit like participating in a form of S&M. But wait, I see the date of the event was March 11. Oh dear, and to think I missed it!

Not to worry, there's more excitement on the musical horizon. Looking back at the list, I found I can create Widespread Panic, partake of Sweet Foe in the Wretched Sun, Shake with Neptune Bloom, Capsize 7 on a Tuesday night and discover Other People on a Wednesday. The challenges just never end.

But alas! Again, I discovered I've missed all these wonderful happenings, the old Mad Monk's list is somewhat out of date. But, whoa, get on the phone! At the bottom of the entertainment schedule is a band info number I can call.

April's line-up looks enticing, folks. We can check out Small Ball Paul (what does this mean—is he bragging or complaining?) and experience Fluid Grind (sounds kinky, but interesting at least).

Gosh, so much to do in April and so little time. But that's okay, I can sort it out with Dead Reasoning while I'm Cravin' Melon. Wait a minute here, I'm beginning to wonder if this is some kind of April Fool's joke, I just noticed I can have Prong with Possum Dixon. Ugh!

I guess I'll have to order a pizza from Itza Pizza this week and see what delights they have to offer in the name of entertainment. My engagement calendar isn't completely full yet.

Let's see, this weekend I'm going to cruise on down to the beach and hear Radio Flyer's tribute to Janis Joplin. I've actually managed to convince a bunch of people to accompany me on this venture (their fault for trusting my entertainment ideas). At least we'll know the words to all the songs. We could have a Mitch Miller kind of sing-a-long.

The excitement just never ends.

The New Six Inch Layer of Pollen

First off this week is a follow up to the story last week about the sudden pollen explosion here in the Lower Cape Fear Area. Well, things haven't changed very much since then, except there is a NEW SIX-INCH LAYER OF POLLEN ON MY CAR this week. You cannot even read the "I hate Pollen" message which I wrote on the back window last week.

While I'm on the subject, I might as well go ahead and finish out my list of ways to survive the 1994 North Carolina Spring Pollen Festival. You will recall (if indeed you are a faithful, semi-coherent reader) that the #1 way to live through the weekend was to get out of town. For those who are so unfortunate that they or something prevents this, then my second tip is DO NOT ATTEMPT TO DRIVE ANYWHERE. If you are one of those people who cannot go three days without visiting Wal-Mart, and therefore feel that you must drive in Wilmington sometime during the festival weekend, then my third tip to you is STAY OFF OF COLLEGE ROAD. This is especially true if you intend to get to wherever you are going prior to the next appearance of the Haley's comet.

For those of you who have never had the distinct pleasure of spending Azalea Festival weekend here in town, let me warn you. If you hear what sounds like fifty or so police cars, fire trucks, and ambulances coming down College Road one afternoon, do not fear. The school is not burning down, and there is no meltdown at the Brunswick Nuclear plant. It only means the Azalea Queen has arrived and is being "escorted" to her room at the Blockade Runner.

Moving on to the "let's get our spelling right" category, a story comes out of Chapel Hill this week. I was on the VAX the other night using the Teletext service (it was late in the evening, since this school insists on using AFTER 5:00 p.m.!!) when someone at UNC mailed me and asked if I was the same Phil she knew from Wilmington. I told her yes, and we chatted for a while and caught each other up on what's been going on. Then she informed me that the "UNCW Chancellor gave a good lecture here the other day...that Luitsey fellow is real good." Hey, it's the thought that counts!!

Special thanks this week go to faithful semi-coherent readers Beth Roberts and Barbara McCormick, who sent me a real nice letter and included the photo of me and the fellow at the CAA Tournament (last week's issue). Thanks also are in order for the UNCW Student Government Association for inviting me to their inauguration and awards banquet.

Congratulations go to Andy Farmer on winning Senator of the Year and Ashley T. Wallace for Speaker of the Year (or was that Hornes Rear End of The Year??). Other award winners included faithful semi-coherent readers Robyn Mims (also thanks to Sam Cuthrell for helping me spell "Robyn Mims" correctly), Shannon Davis, Lee Person, Frank Tascone, and Susie Goodrum. The quote for the night award I must give to two of the speakers. Firstly to graduating senator Eve Williams who said, "although I'm leaving UNCW, UNCW will never leave my mind." I hope that is true for all of us. On a lighter note, graduating (indoor) senior Ashley Wallace noted that he (along with the rest of us) had at often times "questioned his sanity."

The HAT'S OFF award this week goes out to District Court Judge Rebecca Blackmore. Now, I'm sure you are saying to yourself, "this must be part of some plea-bargain," but it's really not that at all. Justice Blackmore was at the SGA Inauguration to swear in Ziggy Nix to the UNCW Board of Trustees. In her remarks, she mentioned that she was a 1975 UNCW graduate and enjoyed giving back a part of what the University had given her. Hat's Off to the judge for a job well done.

This week's SHOE'S OFF award is issued to the Volkswagen motor company. For those of you who are Volkswagen fans, you may have been pleased to hear that the company plans to reintroduce the Volkswagen Beetle. The prototype however, resembles a Volkswagen Bug about as much as it resembles Rush Limbaugh (the bug is much smaller than Rush). I say they should crank out the same old reliable, noisy, rear engine bugs that were so economical and popular. Shoe's Off the German car makers.

That about wraps this issue up for the week. Special NoBall congratulations go out this week to none other than my mom, who retired this week from a nearly forty-year career in nursing. Now she will have more time to read these columns and/or bake mass quantities of Ho-Cake. Enjoy it Mom!! Phil Smith is a NoBall Prize winning columnist with The Seahawk and he wishes everyone a safe and happy Easter.

It's Just Too Late in the Semester to Waste Time on Nonsense!

The end of the semester is approaching fast. In case you haven't started counting down like I have, there are only 19 days of class left! It's a hectic time of year with final papers, exams, and for many of us, graduation. The last thing you should have to spend a lot of time worrying about is living arrangements.

When the Spring semester ends, a lot of students leave for the summer. Some have signed leases that end in May. Others sublet their apartments or houses for the Summer, and then return to them in the Fall. It sounds simple enough, and it should be. Unfortunately, it isn't always.

In the last several weeks, I've heard a lot of people talking about problems with landlords. A lot of these problems seem to stem from verbal agreements between the landlord and the tenant. By law, leases can be written, oral, or a combination of both. However, if you and the landlord agree to change some part of the lease, insist that the change be put into writing and signed. Having dealt with my own landlords over the past few years, my advice is to put EVERYTHING in writing! Even if it seems like a casual, insignificant detail, get it in writing and both of you sign it! If there is a disagreement later, and you end up in court, the judge will generally enforce the written version.

Last week, two women came into my office and told me about a problem with their apartment management. They are both graduating in May. They have been living in an apartment complex very close to campus for almost two years. When they first moved in, they signed a nine-month lease. When that lease was up, they decided to stay and signed a one-year lease. That lease was to have ended April 30. Since graduation isn't until May 14, they asked if it would be possible to prorate and stay a few extra weeks even though the lease was up. They were told there would not be any problem with that arrangement.

Now that the time is drawing near, the management is saying it's impossible for them to stay because new tenants are moving into that apartment on May 6. The women who are living there now have nowhere to go. They say the management is only interested in making money, not in the happiness and well-being of their tenants. I am inclined to think this may be true. I have heard another story recently about the same apartment complex. A student who lives there is trying to break his lease because he recently got married and he and his wife need a bigger apartment. The management is refusing to let him out of his lease. Under the conditions of the lease, that is legal. But if you look at these two instances, you might see a contradiction on the part of the management. They won't let renters out of one apartment, and they won't let renters stay in another apartment.

If you need help dealing with your landlord, there are a few sources available to you. The Dean of Students is the primary resource for Commuter Students. If they can't help you specifically, they can probably put you in touch with someone who can. The number is 395-3119. Student Legal Services may also be able to help. That number is 395-3553.

S.O.S.!!! Save Our School From Randall Parkway!!!

A final note before I go...Who in their right mind would want to extend Randall Parkway through campus? If you think there are problems now, just imagine a three-lane thoroughfare cutting through UNCW. Don't even consider the finished project yet. Think about the amount of chaos and confusion that would be created from rerouting and blocking off the area for construction. This is one of those things everyone has an opinion about. I suggest that everyone do what some students have already begun. Write letters to the editor—to the Seahawk and the Star News. Write to the County Commissioners. They support bringing Randall through campus. Write to the City Council. They oppose the extension. Write to the Wrightsville Beach Board of Aldermen. Write to the Department of Transportation. You can also write to your State Representatives, Karen Gottoivi and Thomas Wright. My point is, don't just sit around and say, "It would suck if Randall Parkway ran through campus." Do something about it!!!

LACK OF FOCUS

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to an editorial in your March 24th edition, written by Alternatives, concerning Tonya Whitehead.

There were two aspects of that editorial which angered me. The first had to do with how they described Ms. Whitehead. From my understanding, Alternatives is supposed to be an organization that educates, gives positive feedback when such incidents occur. In quoting the March 24th editorial, statements such as "...she be removed from office, and another more responsible person...", and "The question here is credibility and mature judgement. Ms. Whitehead has failed us in both" indicate to me that Alternatives is not fulfilling one of their responsibilities.

The other aspect of the editorial that I was upset about was that there was no mention of the Senators who drank with Ms. Whitehead that night, and also used bad judgement when they also showed up at the meeting while they were intoxicated. If Alternatives wants to start criticizing people, then they must be fair, and criticize all parties involved.

In my writing this editorial, I am in no way condoning what Ms. Whitehead did. I do believe that we are all human, and we all make bad judgements at certain times. For some group to ask for the removal of someone, simply because they think that person is "not responsible", and "not credible" for using bad judgement is inexcusable. I feel Alternatives really should look at themselves, and ask themselves if they wrote a fair editorial, because I feel they did not.

Thank You,
Vern Granger, Special Events Chair,
Association For Campus Entertainment

Editor's Note: The letter Mr. Granger is referring to was written by some members of the Alternatives staff. They were not representing Alternatives!

Letter to the Editor,

On March 31, nominations for the Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award will come to a close. In an effort to recognize, highlight, encourage and promote excellence in teaching throughout UNCW, I wish to pay tribute to one professor who I believe exemplifies this award. In the letter below, I offer my appreciation.

"That's an excellent question" declared Dr. Davis, in his usually enthusiastic manner. "I'm so glad you asked that," as he proceeds to respond to a student's question about the solar system during a lecture last week.

Dr. Brian P. Davis, professor of physics, is one professor who has his students continuously looking up, (and that's not just because he teaches astronomy). Dr. Davis is an excellent teacher, and in my opinion, is among the very best at UNCW. He is enthusiastic, inspiring and obviously loves what he does. He makes each and every class interesting, and his commitment continues outside class, when he frequently supervises viewings of the night sky. As a result, studying astronomy is challenging and fun.

Dr. Davis employs a unique "give and take" manner, bringing the "far out" subjects of astronomy "down to earth". He tries to make every student feel important and works hard to ensure that all students understand the subject matter. In fact, his lectures often take the form of a dialogue, where students can freely add thoughts and questions to the discussion. His openness to questions, and genuine desires to facilitate students learning is an invaluable attribute, and one which I believe more professors should emulate. Dr. Davis realizes that as long as students are engaged and asking questions, they're thinking about the subject of astronomy - and that's why he's here.

His commitment to students' learning is exhibited during each lecture. It's not unusual to see him contort, spin, or gyrate his own body in a weird fashion, attempting to simulate various celestial bodies in motion. Although these humorous displays are sometimes greeted with laughter, he obviously realizes that his animations are effective, and help increase understanding. For that, it's worth getting laughed at a bit!

Basically, if you want to learn, he is more than happy to help you. He makes himself readily available after each class, and usually will not let you leave until all your questions have been answered satisfactorily. He also conducts review sessions before exams for all students who care to attend.

Some informed observers contend that effective teaching is the hardest job of all, and as a result requires enormous dedication and hard work. The great teachers give more than ideas - ideals, more than facts - inspiration, more than cold answers - warm provocations to think, and more than a knowledge of the past - a challenge for the future.

Considering this description, Dr. Davis is a great teacher. He continuously strives to make meaningful connections with his students, and therefore deserves our utmost respect and admiration. He is truly "a teacher of excellence."

Respectfully submitted,

John Coffey

Dear friends at UNCW,

Greetings from Jerusalem! I hope that y'all are having a great year. When I arrived in Israel in late September, I was anxious to write a letter to the Seahawk to tell about my travels in Turkey and Jordan. Unfortunately, it took a few months before I gained access to a computer that I could use. Macintosh computers are hard to find here, and everything seems to take a great deal of time and effort to accomplish. As all those who have taken a course with me will attest, I am a big advocate of international travel, and I strongly encourage my students to enhance their education by seeing the world. Not only does this deepen one's understanding of other cultures and peoples, it also leads to an appreciation of the bountiful blessings of living in the United States. The past six months have been filled with great experiences, many of which I could not begin to articulate, especially in a short letter.

I enjoyed two splendid days in London (it's a pleasure to visit a foreign city where there is no language barrier) before flying on to Istanbul. As an undergraduate, I had some great courses on the history of the Ottoman Empire and modern Turkey, and this helped me to appreciate much of what I saw. Istanbul, the only city in the world that lies on two continents, is an amazing blend of civilizations and cultures. It is filled with beautiful Mosques, Palaces, Fortresses, Museums, and all kinds of interesting people. Things became much more fascinating and difficult when I ventured into the interior of the country. The highlight was a region called Cappadocia, which is filled with volcanic stone structures that ancient peoples carved into their homes - highly unusual mix of nature and humanity. From there I traveled further east, and eventually north to the Black Sea coast. For several days I did not see another tourist. The places that have no tourists also have no amenities, and it was difficult to get accurate information to coordinate my travel plans. Occasionally, I was helped by someone who spoke German (I only spoke English twice in 5 days!). The hardest part was suffering from massive cigarette smoke on buses. It seemed that virtually all Turkish men chain smoke pungent, smelly cigarettes. The windows don't open, and so I had to endure an endless barrage of thick smoke over many long bus rides. (Next time I think I'll rent a car.) I had hoped to reach the Eastern border and enter into Georgia and Armenia, but when I found out that there were no viable connections from Trabzon to Kars or Van (besides the torture-chamber buses), I decided to turn around. A kindly truck driver (who spoke no English) drove me from Sinop to Istanbul, as he raced to get Black Sea fish to market. The wild, rocky trip took 12 hours, and although he went through three packs of cigarettes, I could at least roll down my window.

After a frustrating, time-consuming run around, the Syrians would not give me a tourist visa, so I flew to Jordan. I found Jordan very interesting, but it lacked the dramatic attractions that were all over Turkey. The ancient ruins in Jerash and Petra were the highlights. I spent a day at the University of Jordan, talking with professors and students. I had hoped to meet a philosopher that I had corresponded with a few years ago, but I found out that he is teaching in New York. The students treated me as if I were royalty or a famous celebrity. Despite my polite efforts to break free, I had an entourage of young men follow me the whole day. They were interested in practicing their English, moving to the US, and getting my opinion on all manner of topics. When I went to meet with the chairman of the philosophy dept., some of them waited outside for nearly two hours! The people of Jordan were very friendly. They seemed to think that I am a Moslem, and I made no effort to change their assessment. I talked politics with many people. The Israeli/PLO agreement had just taken place, and it was on everyone's mind. I got quite a range of perspectives. Some were encouraging, although most were discouraging.

From Amman, I took a bus to the King Hussein/Allenby bridge, and entered into Israel, or what may soon become Palestine. My first stop was Jericho, which is, along with the Gaza strip, scheduled to be turned over to the PLO. Things were quite different from my previous visit 5 years ago. There were Palestinian flags everywhere and the general mood was optimistic. Six months later, the mood on both sides is far less optimistic.

My next stop was Jerusalem, which is where I have set up my 'home base.' I consider it to be the most fascinating city in the world, for it is here there many vastly different worlds converge. It is at the 'eye of the storm' of the Arab/Israeli conflict. It is the capital if Israel (not only politically, but it is also the spiritual, cultural, and intellectual center of the Jewish people); however, Palestinians also claim it to be their capital. From the religious standpoint, it is central-even 'holy' to Jews, Christians, and Moslems. It is the home of many very important religious leaders and the stronghold of many fascinating religious sects. But it is also a city where the secular world confronts the religious world, and where irresistible modernity confronts history and deeply held traditions. Western liberal, democratic values clash with socialist principles and Islamic and Jewish religious teachings. Many people here are driven by ideologies, and hold very passionate opinions. All of these worlds intermingle in a tense atmosphere. But the sublime specialness and beauty of city somehow transcends the tensions and differences.

I am finding it all very stimulating and thought-provoking. I have been exploring the many facets of this exciting region from the standpoint of a social/political philosopher. In addition to reading a lot and talking with people, I have enjoyed great access to all sorts of VIPs. I have been meeting with academics, politicians, activists, journalists, religious leaders, diplomats, army generals, intelligence officers and retired spies. It is simply amazing how many different, contradictory points of view are out there! I will try to elaborate at some future point.

Until then, I wish y'all the best. I miss UNCW and the good people there. I hope that y'all are enjoying the beautiful, peaceful town of Wilmington, and appreciating how efficient and easy it is to get things done.

Dear Editor,

Is it Bigotry to preach "The Bible" "The Word of God"?

According to S. Mate in Neural Nausea and Moral Malaise the answer is yes! The Seahawk p. 4 3/24/94

Webster's Dict. Bigot - one obstinately or intolerantly devoted to his own church, party, belief or opinion.

Since the answer is yes, then God is a bigot!

Yet (John 3:16) says "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believes in him shall not perish but have eternal life."

Is fornication, homosexuality and adultery sin? The Bible The Word of God says yes! (I Corinthians 6:9,10)

Must we push go to intolerance on obstinance? If yes. Why? We have free will and it doesn't have to be that way. We can choose the grace, love and mercy of God. Must we have our own way even to the point of self destruction?

(John 3:17) Says God did not send his Son into the world to condemn the world, but to save the world through him!

*II Timothy 3:16,17

In reference to the Bible the NKJV and NIV were used.

Dear Concerned Students,

Many students are concerned about the incident involving Tonya Whitehead. This letter is not written in defense of or against Tonya Whitehead. It is just to explain the response of the Student Government Association to the events at the February 21 Senate meeting. Ms. Whitehead was removed from a SGA delegation going to the Conference of Student Government Association (COSGA) in San Antonio, Texas, on the 23rd of February. Also on this date Ms. Whitehead resigned on her own without any pressure from myself or other SGA representatives. The University Police referred Ms. Whitehead to the Dean of Students Office for consultation. I have no knowledge of her consultation since that is confidential.

If it is felt that the actions of Student Government were not enough, I will refer you to article VII and VIII of the Student Government Association Constitution. These articles are concerned with impeachment and recall elections. They can be found on pages 60 and 61. If there are any questions, please do not hesitate to get in touch with me at the Student Government Association Office located in University Union, Room 200, or at 395-3553.

Yours Truly,
Duane "Ziggy" Nix

Dear Editor,

As a freshman here at UNCW, I am currently living in Schwartz Hall dormitory. Since the first week of school I have been disgusted with the school security system. Its not lack of security throughout the university, its the overabundance of it. I know it sounds ironic, but it's the honest truth. One of the main flaws includes the visitation hours. I'm sick and tired of having to go all the way downstairs, that's three floors for me, every time a guest wants to pay a visit. Its not like they're some convicted criminal, they're common students who attend UNCW! They even have their university identification to prove so. Besides visitation, I would like to mention the lack of students right to privacy. I don't know about you, but I don't appreciate police officers just randomly strolling throughout the dormitory with no prior notice. Housing and Residence Life claims these actions are for security purposes. Let me ask you a question Housing and Residence Life, would you like police officers casually roaming through your own personal household whenever they feel it? I didn't think so. We are all legal adults, as you so often encourage us to be, why don't you treat us like them?

Joseph F. Venafró

Chad Wrenn - The heavy traffic on College Road will eventually have to be dealt with. Because of the amount of traffic generated by the University, it should help deal with the problem. The Transportation Advisory Committee along with UNCW can surely compromise and come up with an alternative route.

Comedian Ken Evans will be performing at the Center Stage Cafe on Monday, April 4, 1994 at 8:00pm. Admission is free to all UNCW students. Come out and support the Association for On Campus Entertainment!

I've always had an aversion to so-called "hippie" music. I never listened to folk, (including Dylan), and even by-passed the perennial favorites, The Grateful Dead. However, one thing led to another, and last Thursday, I found myself at the Monk to see The Other People.

The first thing that caught my attention was the musical style of the band...it was not what I had expected. Instead of the "peace-love-etc..." scene, it was more guitar-oriented (no distortion, of course). Also, there was an actual PIANO on stage— that was a first— at least as far as shows that I have attended.

The crowd was extremely energetic. I think it was the first time that I've ever been to a show at the Monk where there was actual dancing, instead of the familiar pit. Ken, my companion-in-inebriation for the evening, went so far as to coin the term "love-pit" to describe the mass of madly dancing music lovers attending the performance. In all truthfulness, I would have to agree, because Thursday night was the first time that I have seen so many people doing what can only be described as the "boogie" with quite that level of enthusiasm.

The four-dollar admission price was pretty cool (I could have sworn that the Monk's answering-machine schedule said it was only three bucks after 10:30). If you're into that swinging groove-music, you should definitely check The Other People out the next time they're in town.

Jazz Piano by Alice Neilson will take place in the Hawk's Nest at noon today, March 31st. This event is free and sponsored by Arts in Action.

Southern Drawl Bluegrass is coming! Arts in Action will be sponsoring a lunch time bluegrass jam in the Hawk's Nest Courtyard on Thursday, April 7th at noon. Grab a lunch and join us! The concert is free.

Theater, anyone? Tapestry Theater will be performing "A Perfect Match" in Center Stage on Wednesday, April 20th at noon. This play is a 45-minute comedy about a computer date mix-up. Bring your lunch and come see a show! Dessert will be provided! You need to reserve your seat by calling 395-3797 or by dropping by the Leadership Center. This event is also free and sponsored by Arts in Action.

Box Office Reviews

Hudsucker Proxy

Cast: Jennifer Jason Leigh, Tim Robbins, Paul Newman, Charles Durning, John Mahoney Genre: Screwball comedy (Warner Bros. Rated PG, Running time: 120 minutes)
Director: Joel Coen
Reviewer's Preconception: Although I'm reluctant to admit it: I'm a fan of the Coens.

The Coen brothers, with a little help from their friends (producer Joel Silver and co-writer Sam Raimi), go to the multiplex with Hudsucker Proxy. The result is an absolutely gorgeous film, every scene is a production; every shot is brilliant; every frame is a resume. It's a film maker's dream, but will it delight audiences as much as it obviously does its creators? For one thing, we finally have a Coen Brothers movie you can take the whole family to. screwball comedy is not my favorite genre, but Hudsucker is friendly, witty and cute.

Some might say Hudsucker Proxy is the product of an unholy alliance of commerce (producer Joel Silver) and art (a couple of offbeat independent film maker's). It's also somewhat traditional love story with fairy tale elements. It's the most mainstream movie the creators of Blood Simple, Barton Fink, Raising Arizona and Miller's Crossing have ever done. Jennifer Jason Leigh, as the fast-talking cynical investigative reporter Amy Archer, gives the comic performance of her career. Robbins plays the geeky protagonist who climbs a particularly treacherous corporate ladder a Hudsucker Industries.

Leigh and Robbins seem to enjoy their wacky moments together, and we do too. Barnes is an excessively proud 1958 graduate of the Muncie (Indiana) College of Business Administration when he arrives in New York to seek his fortune. Barnes is too modest to care about fame. As with many comedies of this genre, circumstances converge and the plot results. In this case, Waring Hudsucker (Charles Durning in a cameo), leaps from the 44th floor boardroom and throw the company in to the nefarious hands of Sidney J. Mussberger (Paul Newman).

Sidney knows that in order to assure control for himself, he must find a genuine imbecile to install as the president of the company. That imbecile happens to be the incredibly good-natured Norville, who proves to be as lovable as he is naive. While Archer goes undercover to expose Barnes as a moron, she falls in love with him. Norville's invention of the hugely profitable Hula Hoop only compounds his corporate misadventures. Will success spoil Norville Barnes? And why do we find him standing on the ledge of the infamous 44th floor as the film opens?

Well, that's the point to Hudsucker Proxy. It's a bit of a single-joke film, but at least the joke is good and it's surrounded by astounding peripherals, plus some infectious performances. The Coens sure know how to make a visually seductive and clever film. They never allow us to forget it. This cinematic self-consciousness works well for this genre, but the doubt remains. Are the Coens interested in entertaining the audience, of themselves? Judging from Hudsucker Proxy, the answer seems to be both—in equal parts.

The Mighty Ducks II

Cast: Emilio Estevez, Kathryn Erbe, Michael Tucker, Carsten Norgaard, Vincent LaRusso
Director: Sam Weisman
Genre: Kiddie Jingoism (Disney)
Violence Rating: V5 (see below) (V1-V5) (PG)
Reviewer's Attitude going in: Positive. I liked the first Mighty Ducks.

At first glance, D2: The Mighty Ducks seems innocent enough. It's Disney; it's "patriotic," and the kids win! If that's all you want to know, let's just pretend that D2 is an average silly kids' film. Otherwise, bear with me a little here because I think there's more between the lines—and it's way too strong for kids. Hence my sky-high violence rating even though little physical violence is shown. Instead, this movie actively assaults youngster's hearts and minds, provoking strong, entirely inappropriate emotions. In Brave New World, Huxley called jingoistic movies like this, "feelies". For the '90s, I like "dopies".

Looking only at the surface stuff, D2 opens with Mighty Ducks coach Gordon Bombay (Emilio Estevez) playing pro hockey in the minors. he's this close to moving up to the NHL, when a player whacks his knee with a hockey stick. (Do not, under any circumstances, think of D2's newest spokes-hostess Nancy Kerrigan when this happens.) Seemingly out of action for good, a dejected Bombay returns to Minnesota where a sporting goods exec named Tibbles (Michael Tucker) offers him a pile of money to coach the USA's junior hockey team in a kind of mini Olympics. Tibbles' firm will pay for everything, of course.

In no time, Bombay assembles some former Ducks, and adds them to a lineup of teen all-stars. By astonishing coincidence, the all-stars happen to represent virtually all the big media-recognized ethnic groups—plus 2 girls. Mostly small fry, they look more like the cast of Barney than a teen hockey squad. Despite their differences, can they pull together to win the Junior Olympics? Want to bet right now? Also, will Gordon sell out, betraying his love of the game and his kids? Finally, we wonder how these sweet kids can beat the brutal, black-shirted team from America's ancient and implacable foe—Iceland!

At this towering summit of tension, let us leave the plot and consider the acting. It's fine. Everything else is fine too, which is to say, good enough so you and I won't notice anything amiss. Let the film students do the technical analysis. so what's so bad about a movie with nice Americans winning a mini Olympics? This: In the audience, for 90 minutes, kids practicing accepting preposterous ideas, force-fed by patriotic imagery and dramatic music. OK, maybe this does sound like every war movie ever made. But we're not yet at war with Iceland, and D2's primary target audience is grammar schoolers.

Beyond chauvinism, this movie teaches kids to affirm in their hearts what they are not seeing with their own eyes. examples: emotionally, D2 gives the distinct impression that Icelanders commit all the unfair fouls, that the girls are considered the boys' equals on the ice, and that Bombay is out of hockey forever,

See Mighty Ducks II on Page 7.

Stay Away from These!

Strawberries Oceans Ships Forest: The Fireman (Capitol)

Paul McCartney once cited Stockhausen as an influence on the Beatles' experimental recording... The avant-garde composer makes his mark upon this no-secret "anonymous" McCartney project, a 77-minute techno-dance CD. I never liked Stockhausen, and I don't like this arid waste of one of rock's giants. At least Mac is recording some new music with his old mates now.

Moonlight Becomes You: Willie Nelson (Justice)

Following the triumph of Across the Borderline—perhaps the best country album of 1993—I guess old Willie can be forgiven yet another pop-standards recording. He could, that is, if it were as good as the previous ones. But the song choices here (The Heart of a Clown) aren't exciting and the arrangements are dull. Best is one of the two Nelson originals, In God's Eyes.

Soul Train Hall of Fame 20th Anniversary: Various artists (Rhino)/This 3-CD set is loaded with R&B music—much of it great—from the last 2 decades. And since the 59 tracks are laid out in roughly chronological order, this could have been a reasonably decent history of the genre over that period. But $47.98 (retail) is a lot to pay for a set whose booklet's text consists only of a rambling interview with Soul Train host Don Cornelius.

A Rock 'n' Roll Collection: John Winter (Columbia/Legacy)

This Texas singer-guitarist, biggest in the early '70s, still has a lot of fans who would place him among white-blues greats like Eric Clapton, and this 2-CD anthology shows that Winter could certainly burn up this strings on occasion. But his playing doesn't have much variety or depth and his growling singing is—to these non-appreciative ears, anyway—never had much appeal.

One Life to Live: The Best of Love: Various artists (SBK)

A new reason not to like soap operas: This 10-track, 38-minute CD made up of "original songs from the daytime drama." I don't know what they mean by "original songs," since there are oldies here like Soul and Inspiration and For Your Precious Love, but I do know the producers must love synthesizer-heavy schmaltz. Some of it's not bad; most is.

Hips and Shakers: Kristin Hersh (Sire/Reprise)

Boston-based Throwing Muses seldom lived up to expectations after being ballyhooed as the first US band on the British label 4AD a decade ago. One reason: Tanya Donnelly had to play 2d fiddle to singer Hersh until stepping forth with her own band, Belly. But Hersh goes belly-up with this solo effort of meandering arty songs and little-girl-lo vocalists.

The Other 2 & You: The Other 2 (Quest/Reprise)

It would be hard to come up with a band name more modest than the one chosen by keyboardist (and here for the first time, singer) Gillian Gilbert and percussionist-keyboardist Stephen Morris (Gilbert's longtime boyfriend) for their own New Order offshoot. Unfortunately, the music's just as modest, sounding pretty much like their "other" band's most rapid synth-pop, minus its best elements.

Collections Due in April

April will bring showers of good CD news for fans of the Rolling Stones and Jimi Hendrix. Details follow, along with information on other oldies collections and reissue discs scheduled for that month.

Let's start with the Stones. Virgin plans to reissue all of the albums the group made from 1971's Sticky Fingers—first as collectors' editions possibly as early as April, and later (probably in the summer) as "regular" CDs.

Both the special editions and the regular CDs will feature sound that Virgin claims will be upgraded from the previous Sony versions. The initial collectors' editions will be different in terms of packaging only. They'll come in miniature LPs that contain the CD in an inner sleeve. The subsequent CDs will come in conventional jewel boxes.

Virgin also plans a new Rolling Stones album, produced by Don Was, for release this summer.

Meanwhile, MCA has set April 5 as the release date for a Jimi Hendrix CD titled Blues. Its 11 tracks will focus on that aspect of the late singer-guitarist's music, mixing familiar recordings, such as Hear My Train A-Comin' (from the out-of-print Rainbow Bridge album) with previously unreleased live and studio material.

The Blues album will come with a 28-page booklet containing previously unpublished photos of the artist. Besides the Stones and Hendrix CDs, the following reissues are also scheduled for release in April.

April 12: The first 4 albums by the pop-punk group that's been called "the best band ever to come from Northern Ireland," the Undertones—1979's The Undertones, 1980's Hypnotised, 1981's Positive Touch, and 1983's The Sin of Pride (all on the Rykodisc label).

Other reissue CDs due April 12: the first 3 albums by British psychedelic-folk group the Incredible String Band—1966's The Incredible String Band, 1967's 5000 Spirits, or Layers of the Onion and 1968's The Hangman's Beautiful Daughter (Hammill).

April 19: Yes guitarist Steve Howe's 1980 solo work The Steve Howe Album.

Reissues scheduled for April 28: 3 albums by Devo—Total Devo, Now It Can Be Told and Smooth Noodle Maps. Elvis Costello's Get Happy and Trust. And the long-delayed early Fleetwood Mac double-CD of In Chicago.

Finally, April's CD box sets and other collections.

April 5: Syd Barrett's Crazy Diamond (3 discs). Runaway Boys: The Best of the Stray Cats and Brian Setzer (1 disc).

On April 12: Ain't Got No Home: The Best of Clarence "Frogman" Henry (1 disc).

April 19: Uncanned: The Best of Canned Heat (2 discs). The Message from the Beat: The Best of Grandmaster Flash, Melle Mel & the Furious Five (1 disc). Mott the Hoople's Backaliding Fearlessly: The Early Years.

Mighty Ducks II

yet turns down the big bucks for the good of the game. In our hearts, we rage at the neo-fascist Icelanders, and exult in the apparent triumph of the girls and Coach Bombay. Except...it ain't so. What the music and camera shots compel us to perceive emotionally is precisely the opposite of what we actually do on the screen.

So what do we see? That U.S. players do not play fair either, even against weaker teams, that the girls do not play more than a few seconds, and that Bombay is not permanently injured even by a second Kerrigan-like whack on the knee. Neither does he turn down the big corporate bucks of deft Tibbles. Yet as the film ends, the audience cheers because they feel that innocence, good sportsmanship and equality have been preserved. OK, sure, all movies jerk our emotions around, but they don't often ask us to deny what we actually see and hear. Intentional or not, this relentless exercise in gross denial just can't be good for kids.

Way off the deep end, eh? Well, why not? Disney is famous for intentionally scorching kids' feelings. But usually the internal logic of the story supports the dubious ploy. This time, they go way too far, maybe because otherwise we'd all recognize that this movie is 100% predictable, unimaginative and pretty darned dull. I certainly wouldn't want my own 6-year-old to see D2. Of course, she will. Why? Because her girlfriend plays hockey, and my wife will tell me to go soak my head. But I'll at least try to talk, well, at her about all this stuff. After my hair dies.

Edward Stephenson, Classical Guitarist, will perform at UNCW's Kenan Auditorium April 5th. Students are free with valid I.D.

a look at the arts

CLASSICAL GUITARIST

Edward Stephenson, classical guitarist, will present a recital at 8 p.m., Tuesday, April 5 in Kenan Auditorium. Admission is $2. Students with valid UNCW ID, free.

Stephenson is co-founder of the Triangle Guitar society and member of the music faculty at UNCW and Meredith College in Raleigh.

Selections for the April 5 concert include compositions by Paganini, Barrios, Villa-Lobos and Brouwer. UNCW music faculty member Dr. Barry Salwen will join Stephenson on piano performing the Concierto de Aranjuez by Joaquín Rodrigo.

UNCW ART EXHIBITS

Artist Elizabeth S. Harris will have her work on display at the UNCW University Union from March 1 through April 9, 1994. The exhibit is titled, "Colorful Scenic Scenes," and includes a combination of mixed media pieces, watercolors, and pastels. A "Meet the Artist" reception will be held on Sunday, March 20 in the UU Living Room from 4 p.m. to 5:30 p.m.. The public is invited to attend.

The Randall Library at UNCW will present the works of eight distinctive Southeast Carolina artists to be exhibited from April 8 through June 2.

The exhibition will include sculpture, photography, ceramics, and painting.

A reception of the artists will be held at Randall Library from 3-5 p.m., Sunday, April 10. The public is invited to attend.

ANTHROPOLOGY LECTURE

On Friday, April 8, at 11 a.m., the Cape Fear Museum lecture series, "A Bit of History," continues with Dr. Tom Loftfield's "The Barbados Connection." Loftfield, a professor of anthropology at UNCW, will discuss his archaeological findings at Charles Town on the Cape Fear River and on the Caribbean Island of Barbados. The program is free and open to the public.

Charles Town, NC, was situated on the west bank of the Cape Fear River three hundred and thirty years ago in the Town Creek area of Brunswick County. One account placed the population at eight hundred colonists with individual farms scattered sixty miles up and down the river. The settlement, consisting mostly of Englishmen from the Caribbean island of Barbados, endured for three years. Some of the settlers later helped found Charleston, SC in 1670. Loftfield has worked on the Charles Town project since 1987.

THALIANS HOLD AUDITIONS

The Thalian Association community theatre will hold auditions for the musical Jesus Christ Superstar Monday and Tuesday, April 4 and 5, at 7 p.m. at the Community Arts Center at Second and Orange Streets.

A large cast of adult performers is needed for this Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice musical which will be performed May 19 - 22 main stage at Thalian Hall.

Jesus Christ Superstar tells of the last week in Christ's life, culminating in His crucifixion and His follower's searching cries for meaning in His death.

NORTH CAROLINA MUSIC SHOWCASE

The North Carolina Music Showcase will be held June 2-4 at the Mad Monk. Applicants must submit a cassette with three original songs, brief biography, pertinent press, black and white or color photograph, itinerary of upcoming shows, complete address and phone number of contact. Include a money order for $10 payable to "NCMS" for handling. Deadline for submission is March 31, 1994. Artists selected will be notified by May 2, 1994. For more information, call 919-406-9585.

POETRY CONTEST

The National Library of Poetry has announced that $12,000 in prizes will be awarded this year to over 250 poets in the North American Open Poetry Contest. The contest is open to everyone and entry is FREE. Any poet, whether previously published or not, can be a winner. Every poem entered also has a chance to be published in an anthology. To enter, send ONE original poem, any subject and any style, to the National Library of Poetry, 11419 Cronridge Dr., P.O. Box 704-YF, Owings Mills, MD 21117. The poem should be no more than 20 lines, and the poet's name and address should appear on the top of the page. Entries must be postmarked by March 31, 1994. A new contest opens April 1, 1994.

INVITATION TO ARTISTS

St. John's Museum of Art extends an open invitation to artists to participate in the upcoming exhibition Art for the Birds. There is no entry fee and is open to visual artists, architects, performing artists, and creative people to create functional objects such as bird feeders, baths, houses and/or more interpretive art for birds to enjoy. The dates of the exhibition are April 10-June 26 at Sculpture Garden, St. John's Museum of Art, 114 Orange St., Wilmington. For information about entering the exhibition, call Anne Brennan at 763-0281.

AREA ARTISTS INVITED TO SHOW WORKS

The Wilmington Art Association invites artists to participate in their 12th Annual Juried Spring Art Show, April 14 - 17. This is an official event of the North Carolina Azalea Festival. The show is open to the public and all works are for sale.

For an entry fee of $20 for members and $25 for non-members, artists can submit three works which will be juried and judged by Al Stine, an accomplished watercolorist, teacher and author. There will be several merchandise awards. Cash prizes will be given for major winners. The Art Association has distributed entry forms which can be picked up at area galleries and frame shops. The Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear, the Community Arts Center, and the Azalea Festival Office at Independence Mall. Registration for the show is April 11, 1-5 p.m. and April 12, 10 a.m.-5 p.m., at St. Thomas Preservation Hall.

Panhellenic Conference Held In Atlanta

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

UNCW hosted the 39th annual Panhellenic Conference March 24-25 in Atlanta.

Twenty-six members council members from UNCW attended. The Panhellenic Council is the governing body for sororities. Eleven hundred women from approximately 100 schools throughout the southeast attended the Conference.

The Southeastern Panhellenic Conference is a regional organization comprised of Panhellenic Councils. Each spring the Council holds a leadership conference. UNCW's Panhellenic Council served as the coordinating school. We had primary responsibility for organization and administration of the conference.

Kristen Lenz of Chi Omega was the Conference chairperson and Amy Culp of Phi Mu was the assistant chairperson. Cara Chikanowky of Chi Omega was the program chair. Eleven UNCW women served on the organizing committee.

Bob Smith, UNCW assistant to the dean of students and advisor for the Panhellenic Conference, said feedback has been outstanding. "I am extraordinarily pleased and proud of our Conference committee," he said. "They had worked since June and put together what I think was a truly outstanding Conference."

Dr. Betsy Barefoot said, "I departed with renewed respect for the important contribution of Greek life for the quality of the undergraduate experience for many young women." Barefoot is co-director for research and publication for the Freshman Year Experience at the University of South Carolina.

R. Britkatz said, "It appears that the conference was well-organized, replete with exceptional educational events." Britkatz is assistant to the vice president and dean for campus life at Emory University.

The purpose of the Conference is to bring women together throughout the Southeast to discuss issues of mutual concern, share ideas and successes and be challenged to address future issues. Students from N.C. State, UNC-Chapel Hill, UNC-Charlotte, UNC-Greensboro, Western Carolina University, East Carolina University and others attended.

Activities included an awards program for recognition of excellence in leadership, scholarship, Rush, community service and new member education.

Other activities included workshops for Panhellenic presidents and Rush directors, leadership development and women's health issues. Approximately 80 sessions were held, with 80 guest speakers appearing. Motivational speaker Dr. Russell McCloud addressed issues such as motivation and the changing roles of women in society. Speakers also addressed topics such as friendship in the age of AIDS.

Each sorority has two delegates to the Panhellenic Council. All UNCW Panhellenic women are members of the association. It offers numerous leadership opportunities and enhances communication between sororities and administration. The Council is involved in community service projects such as Adopt-A-Highway, making financial contributions to community agencies and providing workers at charities and functions.

Smith said the UNCW Panhellenic Council was probably the smallest to have hosted the Conference in recent years. Next year's coordinating school is the University of Florida. This was also the first year the Conference was held at an off-campus location. The Conference was held at the Atlanta Sheraton Colony Square Hotel.

Dr. Carl Lundeen, associate professor of biology, and Dr. Charles Ward, director of the Science and Math Education Center, have received funding from North Carolina Biotechnology Center and UNCW for $13,081 for their project "Working with Bacteriophage: A Five-Day Advanced Biotechnology Workshop for North Carolina Science Teachers".

The workshop will be held July 25-29, in Friday Hall on the UNCW campus. The workshop will accept 24 teachers who have completed BIOTECH 1. The focus will be microbiology, specifically the study of bacteria and their viruses (bacteriophage).

The main goal of the project is to integrate aspects of modern biotechnology into middle or high school curricula. Dr. Lundeen and his staff will conduct detailed lectures and basic laboratory practices and experiments with basic methodologies of bacteriophage. He will also develop classroom lesson plans which will incorporate these concepts for the science teachers.

Dr. Lundeen said the session should, "empower the teachers to bring this methodology back to the classroom."

For the past five summers, the Science and Mathematics Education center at UNCW in partnership with the NC Biotechnology Center has sponsored teacher workshops which have allowed middle and high school science teachers to gain hands-on experience in the basic skills of recombinant DNA technology (BIOTECH-1).

UNCW Marine Biology Student Perfect Score on GRE

BY FIONA RICE
Public Relations Intern

Timothy Proseus, a senior UNCW marine biology student, scored a perfect 99 percent on the biology Graduate Record Exam (GRE). The GRE is one of the requirements for admission into graduate school and is offered in many different concentrations of study. The 99 percent means Proseus achieved a higher score than 99 percent of the people who took the exam.

Dr. Dan Piyler, UNCW professor of biology, says "We are extremely proud of Timothy. To rank 99 percent on any nationwide exam is quite an accomplishment. It is not only impressive in what it says about Timothy, but also in terms of what it says about the university."

Although Proseus is very pleased with his high score, he says he would like to keep it in perspective. He says not everyone looks at standardized test questions the same way and although it does help in respect to graduate school, he does not feel it is necessarily a predictor of future potential.

Proseus is an honors student with a grad point average of 3.89. He has been inducted into two national honor societies, Phi Eta Sigma and Phi Kappa Phi.

At the end of his freshman year at UNCW, Proseus was awarded the Herbert and Shirley Mintzes Memorial Scholarship as the most promising freshman in biology. The award gives $100 to the freshman with the highest grade point average in introductory biology courses.

This year, Proseus entered the UNCW Undergraduate Research Fellowship competition, open to all rising junior and senior undergraduate students. Students competing for a $1,000 tuition waiver go before the Faculty Senate Research Committee to present their research topics. Proseus' topic was the germination of seeds of two species of marsh grass. As a result of his research, Proseus was voted to have the best proposal out of the 19 fellowship winners and was invited to solely represent UNCW at the National Undergraduate Research Conference in Kalamazoo, Mich., April 13-16.

Proseus finds his work at UNCW's Center for Marine Science Research a big part of an overall rewarding experience at UNCW. He says UNCW still has focus and, since it is a small school, it encourages individual attention. "You are not restricted in the classroom," Proseus says, "and the small size of the classes allows a one-on-one environment." He also likes the many options in the marine science department since there are so many different branches.

After his graduation in May, Proseus plans to attend UNCW with non-degree graduate status. He will work 3/4 time at the Center for Marine Science Research and attend UNCW graduate classes in marine biology. As for his future plans, Proseus may look into a doctoral program and perhaps work with an estuary in North Carolina.

UNCW Biology Professors Awarded $79,608 To Study Blue Crab

BY CHRISTY PREVATT
Public Relations Intern

Three UNCW professors have received a two-year grant for $79,608 from the UNC Sea Grant Program for their proposal "The Role of Glycoproteins in Control of Tanning and Mineralization in the Blue Crab, Callinectes sapidus." Dr. Richard Dittman, professor of biology, and Dr. Thomas Shafer, associate professor of biology.

Blue crabs and other crustaceans must molt in order to grow. This study addresses how crabs control when they shed their exoskeleton after they molt. Experiments conducted by investigators at UNCW's Center for Marine Science Research indicate that hardening may result from changes in the proteins and glycoproteins (sugar containing proteins) in the exoskeleton which occur in the first two hours after the crab molts.

To do their research the professors obtain crabs from a local crabber and allow them to molt in the lab. A video camera tapes the molting and mineralization process to get exact times. Eventually tissue is taken and examined biochemically or under a microscope.

The study is significant because blue crabs are a major commercial fishery in North Carolina. A particularly lucrative portion of this fishery is the production and sale of soft-shell crabs. Soft-shell crabs are those that have just undergone the molt, but have not yet begun to harden their exoskeleton. The UNCW research may lead to a better understanding of the molting process which may result in the ability to prevent hardening in newly molted animals, prolonging this commercially valuable stage. In addition, a knowledge of the chemical structure may be important in preventing bacterial contamination and mortality, since bacteria attach themselves to the sugars of glycoproteins.

Have you ever found someone so irresistible you just couldn't contain yourself? Have you ever wanted to have sex so bad you couldn't wait until you got home? Would you consider having sex on a daybed in a department store?

Well, yesterday, a teenage couple was forced for doing just that. They were walking through the bedding section in a department store in Louisiana when they just felt so aroused they couldn't wait. The couple was charged with obscenity and indecent exposure.

Violence and Black Youngsters

BY KRISTI BROWN
Staff Writer

"Blacks in our country are more likely to be unemployed, live in poor neighborhoods and be exposed to gun violence and danger," President Clinton said in the March 26 issue of TV Guide.

"They are particularly vulnerable to the cumulative impact of TV violence because of the other problems they face in their lives," he said.

Clinton recently taped a series of public service announcements encouraging people to work together against television violence. He supports two anti-TV violence bills pending in Congress.

The bills are proposed to ensure that younger viewers will not see violent TV shows. The first bill requires that manufacturers make TVs with a computer chip that will allow specific shows to be blocked out. The second bill would limit TV violence to hours when fewer children are watching.

Clinton says he would rather the issue of television violence be addressed by the nation and the entertainment industry instead of passing legislation restricting it.

"We might be able to draft a bill that would be constitutional," Clinton said, but added, "I have seen some evidence that entertainment people are taking their responsibility quite seriously. I would prefer that we do it voluntarily."

Being Gay at UNCW

BY THOMAS CHILDS, JR.
Contributing Writer

One issue that some students don't think about (and would rather think about) is that of being gay. There are those who feel that gays are something to fear, mistrust and are sinners damned to hell.

To a gay student, realizing their sexuality can be, to some, an agonizing experience. Coming out and proclaiming their preference can be even more agonizing.

There is an organization here on campus, the UNCW Gay and Lesbian Association (GLA), whose main function is to provide a safe outlet for gay and lesbian students to meet and voice their opinions concerning school functions.

According to the GLA's advisor, Dr. Kate Bruce, the organization has not only provided a voice for gay and lesbian students, but they've also "been involved in helping to support different campus programs," such as the recent Take Back the Night March at UNCW, and has helped sponsor LivWell programs emphasizing safe sexual behavior and communication among partners, as well as the NAMES project quilt that was on campus last

Another function is to talk to classes about being gay, lesbian or bisexual. Some students are open to talking about this, Dr. Bruce said, "to try to increase awareness - not acceptance - just to show the diversity of people on campus."

The president of GLA, Vickie, who is majoring in social work, is one of those students who has talked to classes about coming out as a lesbian. The reaction she has received from students has been generally positive. She states that when she first started speaking out about her orientation, she "thought that people were going to be negative. They're just concerned a lot about the sex issue." She feels that the love one has for someone, regardless of race and/or gender, is all that matters.

Vickie has dealt with people with religious beliefs who disagreed with why a person is gay during her lectures. She says that some later came up to her after hearing her views and understood her position.

Interestingly enough, she describes herself as a Christian, but there are those who would feel that her religious beliefs and her sexual orientation are at odds with each other. Vickie feels that Christianity "is something that shouldn't be judged. The Bible was written by man to suit man's needs and some of it could have been misinterpreted. It is in my opinion, a guide for people to live by. People can vary from the Bible; although there are those who feel they can't. I can. It's supposed to be used as a guide, not as a weapon that people are using it for today," she said.

Unfortunately, there are those who resort to using stronger weapons, such as violence, to voice their disagreements against homosexuality. That is an issue that those in the gay community, in general, view as a concern, as witnessed by incident at Mickey Ratz last year.

"There were a lot of people frightened by the incident and I think they still are," Vickie stated. "I personally feel safe about it. My neighbors, family and my lover support me, and that's all I really need."

Support is something all of us need but when one is "coming out" to their parents, support is something that may or may not be given. One woman in the club who "came out" to her parents had them threaten to not pay her tuition if she didn't change her lifestyle. Another member who has to deal with his parents virtually disowning him, refusing to have anything to do with him.

But that, Vickie feels, is always a risk. "When you go on one day and tell your parents that you're gay or lesbian, you can't expect them to throw their arms around you and say, 'I'm so happy,' because for the most part that's not the way they were raised.

They're going to have to get used to the idea of their son/daughter being gay and realize that it's not a disease it's who you are," she said.

One important issue to Vickie is that people accept her as a human being, not for a lesbian. "I'm the same person I was when I was growing up and my sexual orientation has nothing to do with that." To her, acceptance as a person is important.

There are straight members in the GLA who are very supportive of their gay friends and it is open to all students regardless of whether they're gay or straight. Vickie just has one hope to pass on to them: that visitors come to the meetings to be supportive-not to "bash" their sexual preference.

Take A Ride On The Information Highway

BY RENEE HILL
Staff Writer

On March 21, 1994, from noon to 2:00 p.m., the first Annual Innovation Awards were given to persons who have made major contributions to the success of the Vision Carolina Distance Learning Trial, a potential two year trial exploration of teleconferencing and education delivery through fiber optic network. This summer, the project will officially end and migrate to the North Carolina Information Highway (NCH), an initiative of telecommunications technology to provide educational, medical, economic development and public safety benefits to all parts of the state.

"We felt the need to review the accomplishments of the Vision Carolina Distance Learning Trial, discuss our migration into the Information Highway, and present an overview to the joint board of Trustees of UNC-Wilmington and Cape Fear Community College and the boards of education of New Hanover and Pender counties", said Hunter Thompson, program coordinator and special assistant to the vice chancellor for Public Service and Extended Education at UNC-Wilmington.

The schedule featured "From Vision to Reality", from 12:30-1:30 p.m. "From Vision to Reality" featured presentations by the region's leaders in distance learning technology, followed by awards. Moderated by Chancellor James R. Leutze, the program used interactive technology with a quad-split format at four sites: Cape Fear Community College, New Hanover Regional Medical School, John T. Hoggard High School, and New Hanovor Regional Medical Center to honor key contributors.

Nominees were solicited in each of the five categories of interactive course design and implementation, innovation in seminar series design and delivery, innovation in curriculum development, innovation in operational support and innovation in cross-institutional programming. "From Vision to Reality" highlighted the history of the target trial project in New Hanover County and the Plans for the future.

"There were twelve instructors and business people present to discuss the potential of Information Highway and give an overview to the joint board", said Thompson.

The NCH appears to be very beneficial for UNCW students. Nursing students can observe an operation at New Hanover Regional Medical Center, without leaving campus. Next fall, NCH will staff its labs on campus with students, which means more on campus job opportunities. Teachers will have more resources to better educate the students, which in turn will make graduates greatly valued in the work force.

In January, Gov. Hunt named 106 NCH sites, from the coast to the mountains which will be in operation by August 1994. More than 80 sites will be added to the NCH by January 1995.

"By the year 2000 there will be 3,500 sites, and those sites will need personnel, which will open more jobs for North Carolinians and UNCW graduates. No one anticipated it would grow this fast. Three years ago in was just an idea, and now Vice President Gore is discussing a national information highway. I think that is phenomenal speed", exclaimed Thompson.

Senior Athlete Profile

BY JOELLE KIBLER
Sports Writer

John McGuire is a senior on this year's UNCW Men's tennis team. He is from Fayetteville, North Carolina, and will graduate in December of 1994 with a degree in Economics.

John actually got started playing tennis by accident. When he was young, John used to go out to the golf and tennis club with his father. After a while, John began to get tired of watching golf all the time, so he started to hit some tennis balls on one of the walls outside. John's interest in tennis stemmed from this, and since he was good, he decided to stay with it. By the ninth grade, John started to play tennis competitively. "I like tennis because there is constant involvement, I'm always in every point unlike other sports. It is also fun," comments John. As John reached the decision to attend college, he initially decided on Old Dominion. But late in July, UNCW's coach, Larry Honeycutt, heard about John from area high school coaches who saw him at the Regionals and offered him a scholarship to play tennis at UNCW. John accepted his offer and responded about his decision by saying, "I like the town and the beach. UNCW also had a better campus than ODU, and it was closer to home."

John believes the UNCW Men's tennis program has developed over his four years here. "There has been a drastic improvement. The coaches and players now take it more seriously. It is more intense with structured practices," states John. The tennis team had the addition of an assistant coach for the past two years, which has also helped with the program's improvement, along with better recruiting from junior colleges. John would like to see recruits start coming to UNCW as freshmen, so they can work and develop in the same program over four years. "I think this effects the continuity of the team because the players keep changing, so it is hard to form a tight group," comments John.

John has personally benefited from being a part of an UNCW athlete program. It has helped him to budget his time more effectively and gave him the experience of traveling to compete with other schools. "I've also met a lot of people through the athletic program and the athletes," states John.

Going into his final season, John hopes the UNCW Men's tennis team will finish about five hundred and in the top half of their conference. He also would like to see everyone stay competitive throughout the season and not quit when they are behind in their match. Personally, John hopes to finish his UNCW tennis career with a winning record.

John's dad has always been supportive of him. "He is always there when I call and is never worried about how well I did in tennis, which keeps the pressure off and is easier," John comments about his father. Dr. Wadman in the Economics department has also been very supportive of John. "He has always gone out of his way to help me, and I feel I can go to him with anything beside school," remarks John highly of one of his professors.

In the future John would like to teach tennis at a health club or tennis academy and maybe coach at the collegiate level someday. He will continue to play tennis competitively but just for enjoyment and maybe participate in a few tournaments now and then. John is a member of the UNCW's Economic Club and has participated in the UNCW Intramural program for the past four years.

John sums up his UNCW experience by saying: "I'm glad that I chose this school and the people I have met have really made me develop as a person, because if it wasn't for tennis I wouldn't be in college—it has been GREAT!"

This Week In Sports

A trio of strong pitching performances has propelled the Seahawks to a 17-13 overall record and 5-4 conference mark following five wins in six outings last week.

Coach Mark Sealf's club wraps up a 14-game homestand Tuesday and Wednesday following a sweep of CAA rival James Madison over the weekend. Right-handers Brian Smith, John Babson and Chris McBride allowed just one run in 25 innings in frustrating the Dukes, 3-0, 2-1 and 4-0.

McBride completed the sweep with a two-hit, 12-strikeout gem on Sunday. The junior, playing with a broken bone in his left wrist, limited JMU to a single in the second inning and a double in the eighth frame.

UNCW's pitching staff has now recorded seven complete games lowering its earned run average to 3.37 this spring. Seahawk throwers have also collected 37 more strikeouts than opposing pitchers.

Senior third baseman Battle Holley continues to lead the team offensively. The Tabor City, N.C., product, the only player to start all 30 contests, leads the team in nine offensive categories, including batting average (.400), at-bats (115), runs (25), hits (46), RBI's (19), doubles (9) and homers (5).

Freshman reserve catcher Tate Joyner (Jordan HS/Durham, N.C.) also came alive last week, pushing his average to .450 in 20 at-bats. Joyner hit the game-winning homer in the bottom of the 10th inning vs. U.C.-Aiken last Wednesday, also keyed a winning rally with a double vs. JMU in Saturday's second game.

The Seahawks step out of the league for the next six games, facing non-conference foes Kent State, Wake Forest, Charleston Southern and The Citadel before traveling to George Mason on April 9-10 for a three-game.

Track & Field

The Seahawks, making their third appearance of the outdoor season, enjoyed another outstanding performance in the 60-team Raleigh Relays at N.C. State University.

10,000 Meters with a time of 31:01.2, qualifying him for the east Coast Championships on May 21.

Michael McDuffie also qualified for the east Coast meet in the triple jump, placing fourth with a leap of 48-8 3/4. He finished behind the defending NCAA Division I and Division II champions in the event.

Steve Benfield established new school records in the 200 (22.34) and 400 (49.12) Meters, and the 4X800 Relay team of Frank Ingrassia, Thomas Coughlin, Vince Hovis and Doug Liming posted another school record with a time of 7:51.05.

In women's action, Heather Fenton ran her second 3,000 Meters in a week's time and took fifth in 10:09.54, and freshman Kim Wolfer set a record in the discus with a throw of 111-4 1/2.

Tennis

The men's team split a pair of conference matches over the weekend, upsetting previously unbeaten American, 4-3, and losing to James Madison, 7-0. Both contests were staged in the Richmond Va., area.

Overall, Coach Larry Honeycutt's team stands 30-58 (.340) in singles matches and 17-25 (.405) in doubles play this spring.

UNCW Individual Singles Records: David Acevedo (4-10), Gareth Montague-Smith (3-11), Mike Rayos (3-11), Chad Oxendine (5-8), David Eller (7-6), Claudio Silberberg (6-7), John McGuire (1-2), Brian Jackson (1-3).

UNCW Doubles Records: Montague-Smith-Rayos (1-2), Acevedo-Silberberg (1-2), Oxendine-Eller (1-0).

Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week

Chris McBride
6-5, 200, Jr.
Leland, NC

A junior right-hander, McBride completed UNCW's three-game sweep over James Madison with a two-hit shutout of the Dukes Sunday at Brooks Field.

McBride struck out 12 batters and scattered two hits in posting his first victory of the season against four losses. He performed the feat by playing with a broken bone in his wrist, suffering the injury in last week's series with Richmond.

By taking the series, the Seahawks moved into a tie for third in the Colonial Athletic Association with a 5-4 record.

Sports Club Corner

Results from the weekend:

Women's Soccer defeated the Chapel Hill Pioneers 2-1 and qualified for The Umbro Cup in Atlanta June 4-5. Goals were scored by Celeste Gibbens and Meredith Lindsay.

Men's Lacrosse beat Duke 15-8 on Saturday and lost to NC State 9-8 on Sunday.

Women's Lacrosse lost to NC State 12-5.

Rugby lost to UNCC 15-14 on Saturday.

Women's Ultimate made it to the finals in the 5th Annual Collegiate Easterns hosted by UNCW. Although they made a major comeback, they were defeated by Cornell 17-13 in the finals.

Men's Ultimate advanced to the finals in the 5th Annual Collegiate Easterns, also. They were defeated by ECU 10-6.

Supreme Court Justice Harry Blackmun Retires

WASHINGTON — Justice Harry Blackmun announced his retirement Wednesday. Blackmun, 85, ruled in the landmark Roe v. Wade case that legalized abortion in 1973. He has served on the Supreme Court for 24 years. Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell have been mentioned as possible successors.

Teamsters Strike

Truckers, dock workers and mechanics threw up picket lines Wednesday in a nationwide strike against 22 trucking companies. Up to 75,000 union members began the strike around midnight against a plan to give more work to part-time drivers. The strike should not have an immediate effect on consumers because many of the companies transport raw materials and equipment parts rather than final products. Food deliveries should be unaffected by the strike.

Drug Testing Up

NEW YORK — The number of U.S. companies testing employees and job applicants for drug use is at a record high, according to a survey by American Management Association. The AMA said 87 percent of leading corporations test employees and job applicants for drug use. The number of corporations testing is up from 84 percent in 1992 and 22 percent in 1987.

North Korean Nuclear Dispute

Seoul, South Korea — South Korea rejected a North Korean proposal that would eliminate Seoul from negotiations over the nuclear dispute. North Korea offered in late March to allow inspections of its nuclear sites if Washington drops its demands for an exchange of envoys between North and South Korea, according to South Korea's Yonhap news agency.

UNCW's Unsung Heroes

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

As you drive onto the campus at UNCW, you're greeted by carefully manicured expanses of green lawns, flowering azaleas, and beds of blue and yellow pansies.

Most of us take all this for granted, but who are the unsung heroes responsible for this beauty?

Robert A. Warren, Physical Plant grounds supervisor, said Monday that his department employs 16 full-time workers and one half-time employee to maintain campus property.

"We hire up to five more people in summer just for mowing," Warren said. "We mow more than 350 acres a week during the summer."

Following May's commencement ceremonies, grounds workers will plant 5,000 to 6,000 new summer annuals over a two-week period. "We move annuals two times a year," Warren stated.

Factors such as color, style, and growth patterns are taken into consideration in designing the grounds of UNCW. Warren explained, "In the preliminary planning, we try to determine if in five years from now, a plant will grow so much it prevents sun getting to other plants."

Greg Corbett, grounds worker, said he is pleased students appreciate the efforts he and his fellow workers perform. When asked about the many hours spent picking up pine cones dropping from the pine trees all over campus, Corbett shakes his head, "I think many of them (pine trees) have a bad day."

Warren said the pine cones are ground up and used as compost for mulch. He added that the long-leaf pine was recently adopted as the university tree by UNCW Chancellor James R. Leutze and the Arboretum Committee Task Force.

Landscaping projects slated for the campus grounds crew include the Alumni Wise House, the new bio-lab behind Friday Hall, and the White House behind Hogard Hall.

The proposed extension of Randall Parkway through the UNCW campus has caused a number of students to protest how it may affect the university's appearance.

"One reason I chose this school was because of the beautiful campus," Michelle Kenaler wrote in a recent letter to the editor of The Seahawk.

Freshman Stuart Kasin agrees with Kenaler. "UNCW has the best-looking campus in the state.

Clinton Encourages Lifelong Learning For Students

BY ERICA BRANDON
Staff Writer

In February, President Clinton promoted his administration's newly devised seven-point program before the American Council on Education's annual meeting in Washington.

The program's objective is to encourage life-long learning in education, job training, and human services. It will include funding for partnerships among high schools, colleges, and the private sector, plus initiatives to change the country's unemployment system.

During Clinton's address to the Council, the president also talked about other educational issues, including his proposed fiscal 1995 budget for financial aid to students.

Clinton praised the government's experiment with direct loans. Under this program, money goes to students without requiring paperwork or input from banks. Students can repay loans based on post-college incomes, permitting them to work at lower-paying service jobs without fear of default.

The president also praised his administration's effort to promote access of minorities to higher education, citing an announcement from his Education Department that approved race-based scholarships for needy minority students.

Rest And Relaxation Now Or A Job After College?

BY JOEY NICHOLS
Staff Writer

Summer, with its lure of lazy days on the beach and long, fun nights out on the town, is closer every day. But, while all of this rest and relaxation may seem close to utopia, it won't be very helpful after these years of college are over with. It is better to take the time now to exert some effort and unleash some energy during your summer break to secure yourself a position later, according to Amy Schmidt, a career planner in Decatur, Georgia.

The option suggested by Schmidt, is that of an internship.

"It's an invaluable experience in a number of respects," said Schmidt. In the best-case scenario, interning can lead to a full-time job after graduation and at the least, an intern can decide in the short period of three or four months if the field he is interning in truly interests him.

Students interested in summer work can browse through a database of hundreds of internships in the Career Planning and Placement Office. In addition to this service, students with access to Internet are able to scan the computer screen for listings of employment opportunities and internships, both paid and unpaid.

Contrary to popular belief, companies need interns as badly as interns need experience. Internships allow for companies to evaluate students and their talents on a noncommittal basis. They allow students to gain the confidence and experience necessary to survive in the world of business as well as providing companies with inexpensive labor.

Internships vary in terms of rewards, a volunteer internship may not give a student monetary return, but will often enable him/her to network and communicate with people, which often leads to greater opportunity in the long run. Other internships provide money for room and board, while others provide college credit.

Internships, such as those highly sought after on Capitol Hill, are extremely competitive. According to Anne Breinig, a staff assistant for U.S. Sen. Jim Sasser, D-Tenn., "We receive many more applications than we have room for interns." Coors Brewing Company, rated in the top 100 of internships in the U.S. by the Princeton Review, receives more than 1,000 resumes a year seeking intern positions.

"There is no substitute for experience," says Susan Bullard, internship coordinator for U.S. Rep. Frank Wolf, R-Va., "We want interns to eventually become part of the staff." Currently, five staff members are previous interns.

There are wonderful resources out there. Be thinking about it in your first or second year in the competitive and fast-paced job market of today.

Floating Hospital Docks At Riverfront

Governor Declares "Mercy Ship Weeks" for Visit of Floating Hospital

THE WORLD'S LARGEST non-governmental hospital ship, the Anastasis, will receive an official welcome when she arrives in North Carolina on a goodwill visit this month.

For State Governor James Hunt has declared the period of her stay to be "Mercy Ship Anastasis Weeks," in recognition of her humanitarian service among the world's poor and needy.

The 11,695-ton former cruise liner—now equipped with operating rooms and a ward, arrives in Wilmington April 6 on the second leg of a five-port East Coast tour.

The flagship of the Lindale, Texas-based Mercy Ships organization, she returns to the States for the first time in four years to report on her recent caring work in Europe and Africa.

During over a decade at sea the nine-story ship, equipped entirely through donations and manned completely by unsalaried volunteers, has sailed to many crisis spots to give free, desperately-needed medical and health care.

Governor Hunt's proclamation notes that the Anastasis "helps victims of war, natural disaster, famine and poverty," and has "seen duty in dozens of Third World and underdeveloped countries."

Crew member Bernie Kay, part of the four-man Advance team which arrived in Wilmington a month ago to prepare for the visit, said there already seems to be a great deal of interest in her returning."

Last month in Wilmington in 1990, the Anastasis will stay until April 25, during which time she will open her decks to visitors—including school, church, medical, business and community groups wanting to learn more about her work.

Preparing for the ship's visit is a "special privilege" for Advance Team and crew member Wade Cox, who is helping bring the 522-foot vessel to his home area.

Raised in Kinston and Burgaw, where his family still live, Cox has served with Mercy Ships for the past five years, helping run special training schools on the Anastasis which train Christian volunteers for service overseas.

A graduate of East Carolina University and former assistant manager at now-defunct WBZZ radio station in Greenville, during his time with Mercy Ships Cox has traveled to over 30 different countries.

"It's a great privilege to be part of organizing the ship's coming to Wilmington, and I am really looking forward to being able to show family and friends more of the work up close," said the 33-year-old.

Among those on board looking forward to the Wilmington call with special interest is Lawrence Jones, a former radio colleague of Cox's.

Also a graduate of ECU, Jones, whose family live in Grifton, has been with the Anastasis for the past six years. As well as helping run some of the training schools, he directs the tours department which guides visitors round the ship.

Another crew member with a local connection is Consuelo York, a former hospital secretary from Moorehead City, who runs the ship's post office.

Together with two smaller, sister ships, the Anastasis saw the Mercy Ships fleet give away over $3.5 million worth of free care during 1993.

That included treating 13,000 medical and dental patients, eye and facial surgeries, relief and development projects, and transporting 450 tons of donated supplies—everything from wheelchairs to building materials.

Mercy Ships was founded in 1978 with the purchase of the former cruise liner Victoria, for $1 million. Following a major conversion the ship, renamed the Anastasis (Greek for "resurrection"), has a current replacement value of around $75 million.

The 350-strong crew, from 30 different countries, including seamen and technical staff, doctors, dentists, nurses, health workers, agriculturalists and Bible teachers.

Mercy Ships is a part of Youth With A Mission, an international and interdenominational Christian organization with 7,400 staff in over 110 countries.

The Anastasis, the world's largest non-governmental hospital ship docked at the state port on Wednesday.

Students with Outstanding balances will not be allowed to pre-register for Summer I, Summer II, and Fall 1994. Outstanding balances must be paid at the cashier's office in James Hall in order to pre-register. All students will receive this notice in their student mail box. IT IS JUST A REMINDER!

PRE-REGISTRATION. The initial date for preregistration is indicated on your Permit to Register. This date is determined by the number of semester hours earned. Those students having the highest number of earned hours are given the earlier date for preregistering. Students cannot preregister before the initial date on their Permit. Attempted preregistration before the scheduled date will be cancelled. Tuition and fees bills will be mailed to the student's permanent address. If payment is not made, the preregistration is cancelled.

The Chancellor's Student Hours are Thursday, April 14, 3:30 - 4:30 p.m., and Thursday, April 28.

The Chancellor's Student Health and Wellness Center Advisory Committee wishes to invite students representing the diversity of our campus population to apply for membership in this committee for the 1994-95 academic year.

The general purpose of the committee is to act in an advisory capacity regarding policy and administrative matters except those matters involving medical procedures. Members are appointed by the Chancellor. It will promote an understanding of the role and function of the Student Health and Wellness Center in the university community. The committee will hear complaints about alleged inequities in student health services and make appropriate recommendations to the vice chancellor for student affairs.

The Chancellor's AIDS Advisory Committee wishes to invite students representing the diversity of our campus population to apply for membership of this committee for the 1994-95 academic year.

The purpose of the Chancellor's AIDS Advisory Committee is for the faculty, students, and staff to advise the Chancellor on policies, procedures, and educational efforts needed to deal with AIDS/HIV infection issues on campus.

The committee is responsible for keeping up-to-date information surrounding the medical, legal, community, and ethical issues associated with the disease.

The committee will be accepting applications through Wednesday, April 13.

1993 State and Federal Income Tax forms are available in the Postal Services lobby in the University Center.

A saxophone recital by music students Jonathan Diggs and Raylee Stevens will be held on Thursday, April 7 at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. This hour long concert will feature Classical, Romantic and Contemporary works. This concert will feature baritone, tenor, and alto saxophone pieces with piano by Mary Nelson Smith. Free with student I.D. Come enjoy the music.

The Castle Street Association will have a clean-up morning on Saturday, April 9. The group and interested volunteers will meet at 9 a.m. at Hall's Drug Store at the corner of Fifth and Castle Streets. Bring gloves, rakes, brooms, clippers, etc. We invite everyone to join in this effort to beautify and revitalize Castle Street.

Senioritis Hits UNCW Students Hard!

Or,
Show Your Support and Spirit

Only 17 days of school left! If you can't tell by now, I've got the "Senior I Can't Wait Till Graduation" fever. I know there are plenty of others out there with the same illness. All I want to do is nothing. The fact that the weather has been so great and I haven't had time to enjoy it makes things worse.

There are a lot of big events besides graduation coming up. On Sunday, April 17, ACE is having their Second Annual Seaside Revival. The concert will have four bands with some "really diverse" music. The gates open at 10:30 a.m. at Brooks Field. There will be a spoken word stage and booths from environmental organizations like Greenpeace and the Sierra Club, and other groups like Habitat for Humanity and ECO. ACE told me the Revival will be the same type of thing that Lollapalooza tries to do. Anyone who's ever been to Lollapalooza knows what a blast it is. Everyone should go to the Seaside Revival. The bands are good and you might learn something.

April 15 - 17 is Azalea Festival. If you've never been to an Azalea Festival, it's a really big deal in these parts. It's also a lot of fun. The street fair is my favorite part. I'm not so much interested in the displays, although there's a lot of cool stuff to buy. I like to watch people. You get all kinds. It's not always pretty, but it's guaranteed to be interesting. Check it out!

The UNCW Cheerleading squad is going to the National Cheerleading Competition in San Diego on April 7. They placed second in the Division I last year. This year, Domino's Pizza is sponsoring the cheerleaders with every coupon used by a UNCW student. So give them your financial support as well as your emotional support. We've got a great squad!

The Special Olympics will be held at UNCW on April 13 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The Student Activities Office needs volunteers to help with the event. It's really a worthwhile cause and it makes you feel good to be there and help those kids. You have until April 11 to sign up, so do it!

Finally, here's this week's plug for not supporting the Randall Parkway extension proposal. Just say NO! If letter writing is not your thing, maybe you can just bring yourself to sign your name to a petition. The Biology Club has a table set up in the main corridor of Friday Hall every day at lunch. You can sign the petition which is in the form of a letter addressed to Chancellor Leutze. The table will be there through the end of preregistration. Sign the letter and let people know how you feel about destroying part of our beautiful campus.

Bob Haywood/Still Point

Some lessons in life are difficult to learn. There is one that I find very important but have to keep learning over and over again. It has to do with expectations.

There seems to be almost no endeavor we undertake that we don't begin by first creating a whole set of expectations that we hope or desire will be accomplished. If I'm doing nothing more than going sailing on a Friday afternoon, I find in myself thoughts about how the afternoon should go so that it will feel worthwhile. If any of us had the responsibility of setting up a meeting, the same dynamic operates in terms of what it would take for the meeting to be successful. The most significant area in which I see expectations operate has to do with relationships between people. When two people meet each other and have a positive response to one another, it seems almost inevitable that each will develop some kinds of hopes or expectations about the nature of that relationship. We invest the other person with all kinds of feelings which causes us to expect certain kinds of behaviors of a certain level of interest between us.

The problem is that so many times our expectations are not met. Things turn out to be quite different than what we expected. Other people do not live out their relationship with us as we hoped. We get let down. It turns out that the meeting in which we are invested is not as important to others who don't come. Then we wind up getting frustrated and even angry because our expectations are not fulfilled.

The reason that this is worth reflecting on, I think, is that we are, in fact, in charge of our expectations. We have the ability within us to approach any new situation in which we choose to get involved and exercise some control over our expectations. It is not easy, but I am convinced it is worth the effort to discover the good things that can happen when we allow events to evolve on their own without the overlay of our plans. In my office I have a card on my desk that reads "Evolving beyond expectations one learns to find joy in what is bestowed..."

To lay aside expectations is to attempt to give up control on various elements of our life. If we are willing to work at going with the flow of a new relationship or a new task, I believe we will be saved a good amount of frustration and surprise by a good deal of joy. I do not believe we can avoid having thoughts about what we would like in any given situation, but we can consciously recognize them as our expectations, our desire to control a situation to get what we want and choose to recognize them as inappropriate. In this way we can work at going into any new situation openly and, seeing what happens, respond to that concrete event rather than to what is missing.

If you pay attention to yourself in the next few days, I think you will be surprised to discover how much you invest in the kind of interior planning that I am calling expectations. To consciously try and give up mental control of people and situations is opening yourself to unlooked possibilities emerging out of any given moment, any given experience, any given relationship. The pleasure of such unlooked for joy is worth the effort to give up our expectations.

Excuse Me If I Burp When You Whisper Sweet Nothings In My Ear

"I'm going to put something on you Ajax won't take off."

These words were spoken by a man who called to ask if I'd go out with him. Just what is this Ajax thing he's talking about? Is this a promise or a threat? Am I supposed to be panting with anticipation?

I'm afraid I was less than encouraging in my response.

"Well, darlin', I'll just have to rub you down with Preparation H until you disappear with a little poof—except, of course, for your piggy little nose."

Now, all of us have heard the weird and wacky in the category of come-on lines now and again. But, points go to the person with the most imagination. So far, my Ajax guy gets minus 5. If that's the best he can do, androgyny is looking awfully good here.

Then, there's the guy who showed up 45 minutes late for a date with me, then had the nerve to just walk in house uninvited.

"Is something wrong with my doorbell, or do your knuckles hurt from dragging them on the ground?"

Does he even get it? I think not, because he just shrugs one shoulder and says, "You wouldn't believe what I had to go through to get here. I had to throw my shaving kit out the bathroom window and climb out after it just to get out of the house."

Oh Lord, what is this supposed to mean? Is he like on restriction or something? Aren't we a little old for this? Since I haven't a clue as to what he's talking about, I play stupid and ask him.

"Well, so my wife wouldn't know, of course!" He looks at me as though I'm not real bright.

"Your wife? What'd you mean, your wife?" Never mind, I don't want to know—go away!

So, okay, this guy scores a minus 25 on the sensitivity scale. I'm really bagging winners here, aren't I?

Next is Bachelor number 3, a guy determined to declare his right to arrange my life. Having begged me for weeks about this amazing Mr. Heart Throb she knew, my boss convinced me I'd be missing out on a good thing if I didn't go out with this guy.

He shows up at my office door for lunch ("I'm playing it safe now, no one's going to walk in my house uninvited again"). He turns out to be about 95 years old (at least he appeared to be). His opening line is, "I've signed you up for Fred Astaire dance lessons." What? How long does he think these lessons will take? He'd probably keel over dead before I'd agree to doing something like that.

Can you really see me hot-footing it across the dance floor in a fuchsia chiffon frock? Come on now, get real. I politely declined and mentioned a frontal lobotomy appointment I'd completely overlooked.

Of course, we have the good old reliable standard mating-call approaches. Such as, "Where have you been all my life?" Well, hiding near the rock you evolved from, of course.

How about, "I'd like to be the sweater you're wearing." What part, the lint I flick away?

Recently, I had a chance to try a line of my own. I saw this guy standing by himself, looking good like guys can do sometimes. My friends and I had just had a lengthy bitching session about this anal-retentive insistence on stupid come-on lines. We'd concluded that both men and women are equally unimaginative. So, spying this guy, I urged me to ask him to dance—or something.

"Go on, do it," they urged. "Don't be scared."

Scared? What do they mean, scared? Well, that did it. No one accuses me, June, of being scared and lives to see it's true. The problem was that I couldn't think of anything imaginative to say once I was standing in front of the guy.

Since standing in a guy's face with your mouth open makes you look somewhat like a gasping guppy, I said the first clever thing that popped in my head.

"Are you a drug dealer?" I pointed to the beeper he's wearing on his belt. Talk about a stupid question, I mean, what's he supposed to say—yes?

His response to my insane opening gambit knocks me for a loop. It was uttered in a piteously sad voice I had to strain to hear. "My wife died of cancer." Then he grabbed my hand and stared deeply into his shocked green eyes with his sincere, moist brown puppy dog eyes.

I lost it, I was hooked. Maybe Ajax doesn't do the trick, but a good sob story gets me every time. Who cares what his beeper was for, he's the King of Come-on Lines, scoring a perfect 10.

And me? I'm the court jester.

WARNING: Crayons And M & M's May Be Hazardous To Your Health

My sister called me early the other morning to inform me that she had just awakened (awoke, awoke, woke up, whatever) from a dream about me and medical school and acceptance letters in the mailbox and such. The phone call was suddenly terminated when she informed me that my niece had a diaper for me to smell over the phone. "It's one of those you don't even have to check with your finger," she told me. "I can always tell dooty time when she stands up and grunts." I knew then that this may be my lucky day.

Anyhow, I was excited the entire day and I could not wait for the mail to come so I could rip open that manila envelope from UNC or ECU (who is picky?) to find that I had indeed been invited to spend the next four years with them. But, much to my chagrin, there was only my copy of Newsweek and a "Mr. P. Smith May Have Won Ten Million DOLLARS" thingie from Ed McMahon. But hey, they say that no news is good news, so I'm not complaining.

Now on to something you care about. How about those Razorbaks! I don't think I could have endured a solid year of the Dook fans ranting about yet another National Championship. And we all know that I DO NOT CARE FOR DOOK! In fact the only thing I like less than Dook would of course be Dick Vitale. A Hat's Off Award would be quickly lent to anyone who would please smack him for me on national television. And of course we should not leave out our good friend Billy Packer, who does a better job advertising for Mr. Cash than he will ever do in basketball commentary. And for any of you who watched the game on ESPN, didn't that spinning basketball thing just make you sick?? I had to switch over to WJOKE (channel 26) after about 45 seconds.

Of course the best thing about the game was not the actual game but the other things that went along with it like silly TV commercials and half-time Presidential interviews. I don't know how many of you saw this, but when they interviewed President Clinton at halftime, he made quite a funny. Pat Summerville or somebody asked if the fact that Arkansas had beaten six teams in five states would give him problems in the 1996 presidential election. Clinton's reply was simply, "Well Pat, I think I've probably already ruled '96 for myself, if you know what I mean."

Another highlight of the evening was the new commercial with former Michigan player Chris Webber. He only says three words and then begins to walk off. Then the commercial director steps in and says, "But Chris, you're still got twenty seconds!"

"Nope, I'm not gonna fall for that one again!" he says as he keeps on walking off stage.

Did anyone else catch the TNT Easter Movie Marathon?? I watched a few of these movies, which tell the Easter story, and I kept coming up with the same question. Why are all of these people white?? They are supposed to be in the middle of the middle East but they are all very white, and many have superb British accents. And of course those know-it-alls that they all speak old English back then. And then there's that "Honey Baked Ham" commercial that comes on halfway through the movie and proclaims that "Easter just wouldn't be the same without a Honey-Baked Ham." While I am on the subject though, let me congratulate the Music and Drama Department at the College Acres Baptist Church for the truly spectacular musical they presented in Kenan Auditorium last weekend.

Well, folks, my wall calendar tells me there are only three more weeks of classes left in this semester and in my undergraduates career. It is indeed time for me to start winding down. While beginning to think about my "winding down" issue, I was reminiscing the other day about some of the things I've seen change over the past four years. I remember how during my freshman year they were just thinking about synchronizing the town's stoplights. Now, four years later, they ARE ACTUALLY TALKING ABOUT IT!!!! (more of this to come later)

From the "truth in labeling" division this week is a tidbit from the M&M's Company. I have always been a fan of plain chocolate M&M's and I was startled at what I saw on the label of a recently purchased pack. It was a 2-inch by 5-inch "nutritional facts" section. It is candy, people; it's not supposed to be nutritious! And if that wasn't enough, there was a bold-faced warning label at the bottom of the package announcing, "M&M'S MAY CONTAIN PEANUTS."

There is no HAT'S OFF or SHOE'S OFF award this week so that I could use the space to bring you a special warning from the United States Consumer Products Commission. It appears that some crayons made in China over the past few years have been found to contain trace amounts of lead and, if eaten, may cause some lead poisoning. While government officials are recalling and banning the crayons due to one isolated incident of possible lead poisoning, I am merely telling you DO NOT EAT CRAYONS! Just as M&M's may contain peanuts (which are normally harmless), crayons may contain lead and therefore should not be eaten. Now, that was simple enough.

Well, that about wraps things up for this after-Easter edition. Look for my "winding down" editions in the following weeks, including the Phil's All Time Review, and the What I've Learned at UNCW editions. Special thanks go to this week to faithful semi-coherent reader Leigh Lunny for sending me a chocolate Easter Bunny. It was not a fudgy bomb, but was deserving of thanks.

Congratulations are in order for my good friends Mr. and Mrs. Scott Williams, who were married this past Saturday. Best of luck to Scott and Patti!! As always, your comments, suggestions, and leftover Honey-Baked Hams are certainly welcome and can be addressed to me here at The Fishwrap.

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Celebrate American Indian Style

BY ROLANDA BURNEY
Public Relations Intern

The UNCW School of Nursing, in cooperation with the N.C. Commission of Indian Affairs and the Coastal Area Health Education Center is sponsoring "An American Indian Celebration" at UNCW April 8. The program will feature American Indian music, medicine, folklore, current issues, dance and food.

Although the original purpose was to inform health care providers about the American Indian culture, the festival has become a celebration of the 84,000 American Indians who currently live in North Carolina. Organizers hope to provide the public with more in-depth information on a culturally diverse population which has lived in North Carolina for thousands of years.

Enjoy an American Indian food sampler, provided for a small charge, from noon to 2 p.m. Concurrent sessions will be repeated on campus between 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. that day. The topics include: "Medicine and Healing," "Current Issues," and "Contact Period History." In addition, Ray Little Turtle and the Lumbee Cheraw Dancers of Jacksonville will be featured in a music and dance session.

The keynote speaker for the festival is Judith Black Feather, RN, BSN, who will speak on, "The American Indian: A New Tomorrow." Black Feather, chief of the Indian Health Service Area

Nursing Branch, is deputy director of its office of health programs in Phoenix, Arizona. A nationally known authority on Indian affairs and health care, Black Feather serves as an ex-officio facilitator for the National Alaska Native American Indian Nurses Association. She is a noted speaker and presenter, most recently serving as the keynote speaker of the pre-convention seminar for the National League for Nurses. Among her numerous awards, Black Feather was recognized in Phoenix for her outstanding contributions to the Indian community in 1992.

All sessions are free of charge and open to the public. For more information, contact the School of Nursing at 395-3784.

UNCW ART EXHIBITS

Hampstead artist, Jan Lewis will have a collection of her works on exhibit in the University Center Lobby from April 5 through May 19. An opening reception will be held on April 10 from 3 p.m.-4:30 p.m. in the University Center.

Lewis has an Associate Art degree from Stratford College, a Bachelor of Arts degree from UNCW, and has attended the Pan American School of Art. She participates regularly in juried art shows in the area and has won several awards at South Eastern Community College. She is also a member of the Hampstead Art League. Her work is currently showing at Cape Fear Coffee and Tea Company on Front Street in Wilmington. Lewis uses acrylics and pastels in her abstract, landscape, and still life work. She experiments with texture, using layered paint and various materials with staining variation.

Artist Elizabeth S. Harris will have her work on display at the UNCW University Union from March 1 through April 9, 1994. The exhibit is titled, "Colorful Scenic Scenes," and includes a combination of mixed media pieces, watercolors, and pastels. A "Meet the Artist" reception will be held on Sunday, March 20 in the UU Living Room from 4 p.m. to 5:30 p.m.. The public is invited to attend.

The Randall Library at UNCW will present the works of eight distinctive Southeast Carolina artists to be exhibited from April 8 through June 2.

The exhibition will include sculpture, photography, ceramics, and painting. A reception of the artists will be held at Randall Library from 3-5 p.m., Sunday, April 10. The public is invited to attend.

ANTHROPOLOGY LECTURE

On Friday, April 8, at 11 a.m., the Cape Fear Museum lecture series, "A Bit of History," continues with Dr. Tom Loftfield's "The Barbados Connection." Loftfield, a professor of anthropology at UNCW, will discuss his archaeological findings at Charles Town on the Cape Fear River and on the Caribbean Island of Barbados. The program is free and open to the public.

Charles Town, NC, was situated on the west bank of the Cape Fear River three hundred and thirty years ago in the Town Creek area of Brunswick County. One account placed the population at eight hundred colonists with individual farms scattered sixty miles up and down the river. The settlement, consisting mostly of Englishmen from the Caribbean Island of Barbados, endured for three years. Some of the settlers later helped found Charleston, SC in 1670. Loftfield has worked on the Charles Town project since 1987.

INVITATION TO ARTISTS

St. John's Museum of Art extends an open invitation to artists to participate in the upcoming exhibition Art for the Birds. There is no entry fee and is open to visual artists, architects, performing artists, and creative people to create functional objects such as bird feeders, baths, houses and/or more interpretive art for birds to enjoy. The dates of the exhibition are April 10-June 26 at Sculpture Garden, St. John's Museum of Art, 114 Orange St., Wilmington. For information about entering the exhibition, call Anne Brennan at 763-0281.

AREA ARTISTS INVITED TO SHOW WORKS

The Wilmington Art Association invites artists to participate in their 12th Annual Juried Spring Art Show, April 14 - 17. This is an official event of the North Carolina Azalea Festival. The show is open to the public and all works are for sale.

For an entry fee of $20 for members and $25 for non-members, artists can submit three works which will be juried and judged by Al Stine, an accomplished watercolorist, teacher and author. There will be several merchandise awards. Cash prizes will be given for major winners. The Art Association has distributed entry forms which can be picked up at area galleries and frame shops. The Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear, the Community Arts Center, and the Azalea Festival Office at Independence Mall. Registration for the show is April 11, 1-5 p.m. and April 12, 10 a.m.-5 p.m., at St. Thomas Preservation Hall.

AUTHOR READING

Damon Galeassi will read from his first novel, Spiderwort, at the New Hanover County Public Library on Thursday, April 7, at 7:30 p.m. The public is invited free to this program. Copies of the novel will be available for sale and autographing by the author at the program.

Galeassi graduated from Penn State University with a degree in engineering in 1970, and was working in the Quality Control Department at Three Mile Island nuclear plant when Hurricane Agnes devastated central Pennsylvania. The potential for catastrophe from the combination of natural disaster, human error, and nuclear power inspired him to write his novel. Spiderwort is named for a wild flower that is known as "the people's radiation monitor" because it changes color quickly when exposed to radiation. For more information, call Dorothy Hodder at 341-4389.

Edgar Allan Poe To Haunt UNCW

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff writer

Students at UNCW will be able to witness Edgar Allan Poe coming to life on Wednesday, April 13, in the person of Conrad Pomerleau, a man bearing a remarkable physical similarity to Poe.

Pomerleau has adapted a theatrical script from Poe's essays, journals, criticisms, letters, and poetry. Between poems, the 39-year old "Poe" discusses life, beauty, society, and his search for truth.

Pomerleau's one-man show depicts Poe's complexities, fears and insecurities, bouts with depression, and his ambitious aspirations for greatness in a country that didn't fully appreciate him.

Edgar Allan Poe is renowned for providing America with its first science fiction and its first literary genius. But, Poe is probably one of the least understood and most maligned of American writers, the full body of his work includes not only the macabre tales and poems, but also astute literary criticisms, essays, and political commentaries.

Pomerleau has carefully researched Poe's life and works. This has enabled the actor to give an honest portrayal of one of the greatest writers and poets of America. We get unexpected glimpses of Poe's unfamiliar side—his delicious sense of humor and his joy for living despite many tragedies.

In his personification of Poe, Pomerleau gives a brilliant performance using Poe's gestures—from scornful sneers to a forehead drenched in sweaty concentration. It's Poe who peers at us from behind Pomerleau's hypnotic eyes and entralls us with the story of the poet's rise from the depths of despair to heights of satisfying success, then back again to tragedy.

The play, "Poe in Person," will be held at 8:30 p.m., Wednesday, April 13, in Kenan Auditorium. It is sponsored by ACE Coffeehouse committee, Arts in Action, and the Campus Activities Office. Tickets are free to students and faculty with a valid UNCW ID, $5 for non-students. Tickets are sold at the door only.

Three Bands for Three Bucks

By Sam Cuthrell
Entertainment Writer

Last Tuesday night's performance by MU-330, Small Ball Paul, and Picasso Trigger at the Mad Monk was one of the most entertaining, as well as diverse "3 Bands for 3 Bucks" shows that I have seen this semester.

MU-330, from St. Louis, Missouri, played an extremely athletic show...these guys could film their own "Jane Fonda Workout Video" with some of the moves they were doing onstage. The singer was running either in place, or around stage for nearly the entire show, and the bassist somehow managed to do the "funky chicken" without dropping a note.

As I was watching MU-330's set, I kept glancing over my shoulder afraid that the fashion police were going to storm the club at any moment—I haven't seen outfits that badly matched since the '70's. (Not that I am "Mr. Q" myself, but the lead singer had on a bright blue TrueValue polo shirt, a pair of hunter orange shorts, and a straw fedora-style hat. He looked like a weird variation of a Jimmy Buffet clone.)

Aside from their onstage antics and weird dress, their music was very very energetic. Their horn player couldn't decide whether to scream or play and ended up doing a little of both, and the drummer was incredible.

Small Ball Paul took the spotlight next, and although I did like the music better, their stage presence had none of the magnitude of the previous band. Small Ball Paul are also from St. Louis, and are presently touring with MU-330 in support of SBP's latest album, "You On Fire".

Last, but nowhere near least, Picasso Trigger took the stage. Immediately, I had flashbacks to seventh grade, as the lead singer touted the virtues of one of the biggest clothing fads of the '80's: parachute pants. (I vaguely remember my junior-high years, when I was in love with Sherry Clark, in only 10th-grader in school who had a different color of parachute pants for every day of the week. Boy was she ever COOL!)

Picasso Trigger's loud bass, fast-as-hell drums, and most importantly female vocalist were right down my alley.

They also had an delightfully polite stage presence, in which the singer simply bared her ass at the crowd. The amiable feeling continued until after the show, when several audience members were taunted until they couldn't take it anymore, and were forced to give the "finger" to the members of the band.

It was at this point that things got interesting, and the band began to dare the finger-flying fans to come up on stage for some "tag-team-wrestling". One of the guys finally gathered enough courage to take on the much smaller singer, and was promptly double-teamed by Picasso Trigger's bassist. The two women made the drunk folk look utterly pathetic, as they held him down and tried to take his shorts off. Growing tired of "tugging for the tighty-whities" they doused him with beer, and left the stage.

After the wrestling match, I figured decided that it was time to leave before anything else happened—if there were more antics, then I missed them. The show as a whole was a definite hit. I would probably have paid the three bucks just to see the two women make a complete and total fool of the poor guy with the Fruit-of-the-Looms on.

Costello Is Back!

Prodigy Information Services

Costello Looks Back, Presides Ahead Elvis Costello's new album Brutal Youth is among other things, his reaction to a brutal truth: "When an artist strays from his established style, his fans do not always follow."

This 15-song CD is the brilliant pop craftsman's "get back" album—back to the sort of music he wrote in the late 1970s and early 1980s, and back to the almost primitively basic sound of his old band, the Attractions.

That's all fine and good, even though I liked Costello's move into more luxurious musical forms on Spillages (1989) and Mighty Like a Rose (1991) and especially the truly divergent collaboration with the Brodsky Quartet on the Juliet Letters (1993). But if Costello had also tried to recapture the quixotic flavor of the lyrics on his early albums, Brutal Youth might have been a brutal booby.

Fortunately, while retrenching in terms of the music, Costello has continued to explore and mature in the words he writes. This is particularly true of the fresh sense of acceptance found in one of the album's most marvelous songs, London's Brilliant Parade.

So Brutal Youth is an enormously pleasing, if not perfect, amalgam of musical return and psychological progress. The prodigal son has come home, but brought his own fatted calf.

The stripped-down sound of Brutal Youth is not only the result of his latest reunion with Costello's original band, but also due to the fact that he returned to the London 8-track studio, Pathway, where he recorded his debut album My Aim Is True.

However, the singer has also wisely kept the services of Mighty Like a Rose producer Mitchell from and engineer Tchad Blake. The result is a sound that's spare without being bare.

The album kicks off with 3 energetic, intriguing numbers (Pony St., Kinder Murder and 13 Steps Lead Down) which have all the qualities that should bring back the old fans in droves—energetic pace, tricky musical turns, intriguing lyrics, and the Attractions' delightfully old-fashioned/new-wave instrumentation, complete with slightly booby organ. These are followed by the mock-pretty sarcasm of This Is Hell, all about the discomfort of too much comfort.

Some of the album's other most outstanding numbers find Costello remembering with various other degrees of fondness, humor and candor the old friends and lovers he describes sharply in You Tripped at Every Step, Sully, Girl, and Rocking Horse Road.

One of my favorite parts of the CD comes toward the end, where All the Love follows immediately after Just About Glad.

It's a fascinating juxtaposition because the 2 songs address the same situation, being disappointed by a lover, in such different ways. In glad he's sarcastic—"the greatest lover that you never had" who's "just about glad we never had that fling." In Rage, his true emotions come spilling out.

With a few exceptions—songs that don't quite take shape, like Clowns Strike and My Science Fiction Twin—Brutal Youth is an immensely satisfying work, one that shows you can go home again in pop music without making a fool of yourself.

Clifford

CAST: Martin Short, Charles Grodin, Mary Steenburgen, Dabney Coleman DIRECTOR: Paul Flaherty
GENRE: Comedy (Orion)
VIOLENCE RATING: V2 (V1-V5) (PG)
REVIEWER'S ATTITUDE PROBLEM GOING IN: The big red dog?

A reasonably harmless movie that should appeal to young teens, Clifford has nothing whatever to do with the big dog with the same name who stars in a popular series of children's books. Instead, it's about comedian Martin Short playing a mischievous - perhaps wholly evil 10-year-old who nearly ruins his uncle's life. Not especially funny or clever, this film is nevertheless passable for a Friday night because it has a certain energy and is fairly inoffensive. But does anyone else find it odd that the pivotal gag of the entire film is the precociousness of a child who's obviously a grown man?

Starting way out in left field, the movie opens about 50 years in the future with an elderly Clifford (Martin Short) working as a priest in a Catholic school for wayward boys. When he intercepts a lad trying to escape, he sits the boy down and relates the story of his own boyhood troubles by way of a lesson. His tales opens on a jetliner en route to Hawaii where Clifford's dad has a speaking engagement. Moving quickly from peaky to pathological, Clifford forces the jet to land in L.A. so he can visit a theme park there called Dinosaurland. Dad's enraged and then inspired: Park the kid with his Uncle Martin!

Believing that being chummy with a child like Clifford will convince Sarah (Mary Steenburgen) to marry him, Martin instantly promises to take his nephew to Dinosaurland. But then, the boss (Dabney Coleman) at his architectural firm orders up some extra work, forcing Martin to break his promise. So Clifford plots terrible relentless revenge. Feigning childlike innocence, Clifford insults his uncle in front of his prospective in-laws, and engineers his arrest as a terrorist. That done, he tries to destroy Martin's house as well as his career as an architect.

Grodin does a pretty fair job sustaining a joke that wears thin early and often. Steenburgen, however, brings almost nothing special to her role as a girlfriend. Martin Short can be very funny, but here his antics are severely limited by the kiddie schtick. Similarly, Dabney Coleman is a masterful comic who's kept on such a tight leash that he just struggles in mediocrity. The only real surprises are the special effects used to simulate a scary ride in Dinosaurland. The chomping Tyrannosaurus is way out of proportion to the rest of the film, but it's still impressive, and maybe a little scary.

Once young Clifford has learned the lesson Father Clifford is preaching to his charge 50 years hence, we return to the future and bid farewell to our saintly narrator without ever learning how the little hellion wound up a priest. Oh well, maybe we'll unravel that mystery in Clifford II. For now, the real mystery of this movie is how the film moguls managed once more to combine so much talent, effort and money and still wind up with mush.

Major League II

CAST: Charlie Sheen, Tom Berenger, Corbin Bernsen, Omar Epps, Dennis Haysbert GENRE: Comedy (Warner Bros. Rated PG, Running Time: 105 minutes)
DIRECTOR: David S. Ward
REVIEWER'S PRECONCEPTION: Harmless, formula entertainment

Nobody expects much from a sequel. Unfortunately, that includes the film makers. Major League II assembles the same team, on screen and off, as the 1989 original, and they try desperately to duplicate its wacky irreverence and silly sight gags. If you liked the first and have a rather bad memory, you'll probably consider this sequel as just another day at the ballpark. Charlie Sheen is back as the protagonist Rick "Wild Thing" Vaughn. But his fastball has slowed, he's cleaned up his act, and he's gotten a traditional haircut. He arrives at spring training in a Rolls-Royce rather than his Harley motorcycle.

His teammates on the Cleveland Indians have undergone a similar metamorphosis, but as the ply-by-play man Harry Doyle (Bob Uecker) tells us, this wretched crew has little or no chance of duplicating that championship season (supposedly of last year). Joining Rick are Dennis Haysbert as Pedro Cerrano, the huge slugger who went from voodoo to Buddhism; Omar Epps as Willie Mays Hays, who did an action flick in Hollywood during the off season; Tom Berenger as Jake Taylor, who went from catcher to coach; and Corbin Bernsen as Roger Dorn, once the 3rd baseman and now the owner.

Throw in Rachel Phelps (Margaret Whitton) as the seductive, conniving owner-behind-the-owner, plus director David Ward, and you have another clichéd comedy about "the little train that could." Only in this case, the little train is a group of talented eccentrics (the dirty dozen) who discover the true meaning of Christmas (who they really are) just in time to win the pennant. There, I gave it away. Major League II is an entertainment product with as many phony moments as funny moments.

Los Lobos is Back and Strong!!!!

When members of important bands turn to side projects, the results seldom match the quality of the original. The Latin Playboys, the first album by the Los Lobos offshoot of the same name, is a marvelous exception.

After making his regular band's most experimental album, Kiko (1992), singer-guitarist David Hidalgo's mind was still racing on home demo tapes. After a while, he passed a few tapes to drummer Louie Perez. Perez added lyrics and more music, and then—instead of turning to their Los Lobos mates—the 7 brought in Kiko producer Mitchell from and that album's engineer, Thad Blake, who also plays bass.

In transferring to a recording studio, the 4 realized as much of the primitive feel of Hidalgo's original home tapes as possible, and the outcome is The Latin Playboys, a 14-track album that, in a much more loosely structured way, is almost as fascinating as Kiko.

The Latin Playboys weaves various "found" sounds—party noise, a woman's laughter, village music—into and in between Latin-rock-blues-jazz songs that are bristling with tension, hauntingly beautiful and, quite often, more than a little spooky.

Two of the spookiest, Ten Believers and If, feature poetically impressionistic lyrics by Perez and wonderfully evocative, Eric Clapton-like vocals from Hidalgo.

When Perez sings, things get ever weirder, because he sums his voice through what sounds like a broken amp to get a ghost-in-the-machine effect on Crayon Sun and Chinese Surprise.

The former, with its looping guitar figure and sound effects, becomes annoyingly repetitive, despite the strong singing, but Chinese Surprise is terrifically terrifying graveyard blues, following a dark dreamy path "where the wild wishes go".

Despite all the strangeness, the Latin Playboys still has the relaxed warmth and heart of Los Lobos' records. The weirdness gives way to striking beauty in several tracks.

The instrumental Rudy's Party mixes Colic and American Indian styles. Lagoon drifts on lazy, sweet-sounding guitars, over which Perez reads an abstract poem. Pink Steps is an atmospheric blend of exotic sounds and murmuring voices.

The Playboys also play around adeptly with a little basic rock on New Zando and a funky groove in the quietly entrancing closer Forever Night Shade Mary. This isn't just an album of interest to Los Lobos fans—it's a must-buy for them.

THE SHAM-STOPPER...

Jimmy Hollywood

CAST: Joe Pesci, Christian Slater, Victoria Abril, Jason Beghe, John Cuthman Jr.
GENRE: Comedy/Drama (Paramount, rated R, Running Time 110 min.)
DIRECTOR/WRITER: Barry Levinson
REVIEWER'S PRECONCEPTION: Joe Pesci is being over-marketed.

Jimmy Hollywood is an interesting but totally unrealized film. Directed and written by Barry Tin Men Levinson, this comedy/drama tries to explore the death of Hollywood both as a symbol and an actual place—a particularly run-down and sleazy neighborhood of Los Angeles. Levinson's theme is better than his premise, a marginal, out-of-work, wanna-be actor Jimmy Alto (Joe Pesci) assumes the role of a vigilante when a prank begins to yield him more notoriety than his acting ever did. Pesci is very talented character actor, and that's apparent in Jimmy Hollywood, but the movie suffers when he's the main event.

Like hordes of aspiring actors, writers, directors, agents and producers, Jimmy Alto came to Hollywood because it seemed to embody fame and fortune. But after a while living with his Latina hairdresser girlfriend Lorraine (Victoria Abril) and hanging out by the pool with his dull friend William (Christian Slater), Jimmy finds his dream is beginning to rust. The once-pleasant neighborhood becomes a metaphor for his career. Jimmy buys some billboard space at a bus stop on Sunset Boulevard, hoping to get discovered. Only Jimmy's immense ego keeps a sliver of his dream alive.

When they're not catching rays by the small pool of his run-down apartment complex, Jimmy and William watch the sign and wait for any reaction from the passing cars on the affluent roadway. Success to Lorraine and Jimmy no longer means stardom; it means moving to the west side of L.A. "No wonder I can't make it," Jimmy muses out loud. "It's over." He means, of course, the idea and the reality of HOLLYWOOD. After his car gets vandalized one too many times, Jimmy and William take matters into their own hands. What begins as spur of the moment retribution becomes huge publicity stunt.

The film's nostalgia for Hollywood works better than any prescription it offers for curing social ills. Jimmy's a benevolent vigilante who gets more attention from the police than do most criminals who rule the streets. The film suggests that what's happening in this affluent neighborhood of L.A. is happening all across America. The middle of the movie sags as the script runs out of gags. Slater and Victoria Abril basically have non-roles. That leaves Pesci, sporting a long blond wig, to carry the film. (This guy's real hair hasn't seen the light of day in years.)

There's a film somewhere inside Jimmy Hollywood. Everyone who goes to Hollywood to make it soon gets the sinking feeling that it's too late. Pesci has some funny and poignant moments as the man who comes to embody everything Levinson wants to say about the place and a symbol of Hollywood. But by making William mostly mute, the movie turns into a series of long, often repetitive, monologues for Pesci—and that's too much to expect from any actor.

The House of the Spirits

CAST: Jeremy Irons, Meryl Streep, Winona Ryder, Glenn Close, Antonio Banderas, Vanessa Redgrave
GENRE: Epic romance (Miramax, Rated R, Running Time 132 min.)
DIRECTOR/SCREENWRITER: Bill August
REVIEWER'S PRECONCEPTION: Hope the film is one tenth as good as the cast.

If The House of the Spirits, based on the novel by Isabel Allende, had been one tenth as good as its cast, it would have been a fine movie. Directed and written for the screen by Danish-born Bill August, this epic romance tries to do everything a motion picture can do—but ends up doing nothing well. Even the renown of the cast works against the film's intent. As we watch the 50-year history of a powerful south American family, we can't believe for a moment that we're watching anything but movie stars portraying Latin Americans. At its worst, The House of the Spirits can only be described as profoundly dumb.

The story follows the changing fortunes of the powerful Trueba family from the relatively tranquil days of the 1920s to the politically volatile 1970s. The patriarch of the family is Esteban (Jeremy Irons), a man who is as passionate as he is focused. When the tale opens, he is determined to strike it rich working the mines, and thus marry the love of his life, Rosa. Esteban's dreams turn to tragedy when Rosa dies suddenly—her death foretold by her supernatural younger sister Clara, who vows never to speak again. When she finally does, it is 20 years later and it is to the now-wealthy Esteban.

The mature Clara, who serves as the spiritual center of the story, is played by Meryl Streep. Clara and Esteban meet in passion, although he is conservative and she is a liberal mystic. They live on a gorgeous estate called Tres Marias and conceive a child, Blanca (Winona Ryder), in lust and love. Blanca turns out to be rebellious and falls in love with the peasant son of her father's foreman. The dashing Pedro (Antonio Banderas) becomes a revolutionary and the symbol of forbidden love. As Esteban gains power in the nation's right-wing government, he is losing it at home.

Esteban vows to kill Pedro if he dares see Blanca again. All the women of the family, including Esteban's spinster sister Ferula (Glenn Close), hold the autocratic and self-conscious Esteban in contempt. Esteban so infuriates the politically correct Clara that she again vows never to speak to Esteban. The haughty and mystical Clara evidently thinks so much of her conversation that withholding it is unbearable. According to Bill August's script, however, Clara utters such cant nobody would want to talk to her.

Fickle to the end, Clara breaks her promise when Esteban (in old age) rescinds his vow to kill Pedro. He sees the error of his fascist ways. Indeed, Esteban proves to be not such a bad guy after all. A right-wing military coup convinces old Esteban that he should have been a liberal democrat from he get-go. He learns that family and love are ultimately more important than politics and power. If this tale of epic love among the political ruins of Latin America sounds a bit silly, well, that's because it is.

Author Isabel Allende is depicted Chilean leader Salvador Allende's real-life niece. Her novel, on which the movie is based, is largely autobiographical. The House of the Spirits tries to capture the mood of the novel by superimposing a narrative by Clara/Streep on the events. But the movie ultimately tries to say too much to mean much of anything. Winona Ryder as Blanca might just as well be a yuppie from Long Island, as the daughter of a deposed dictator. With Streep, Irons, and Close, I often felt like I was watching an English drawing room drama.

The supporting cast of Vanessa Redgrave, Armin Mueller-Stahl, Maria Conchita Alonso and Sarita Choudhury is almost as impressive as the principal players. The scenes of South America are often luscious and all the actor's are pleasing to watch. Yet, The House of the Spirits looks a lot better on paper than it ultimately turns out. Perhaps its disappointment is made more dramatic by the scope of its ambitions and the tone of its pretensions.

Chancellor's Forum Examines Collapse of Communism

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will host a "Chancellor's Forum" panel discussion with nationally known experts in Soviet, European and international politics titled "Why Did Communism Collapse in 1989?" The forum takes place at 7:30 p.m., Thursday April 7, in Cameron Auditorium. The three speakers will be Gennadi Gerasimov, Charles Maier, and Warner Schilling, with Dr. James Leutze serving as moderator.

Ambassador Gennadi Gerasimov, from Russia, is a visiting professor in communications and political science at UNCW. He was spokesman for the ministry of Foreign Affairs under Mikhail Gorbachev and ambassador to Portugal under Boris Yeltsin. He will be talking on "Generational change and the collapse of Communism in the Soviet Union."

Dr. Charles Maier is Krupp Professor of European history and acting chairman of the Center for European Studies at Harvard University. He has done extensive writing on the interrelation of economics and politics in Europe. He is currently completing a book that investigates the collapse of the communist system in East Germany. Since December 1993, he has served as occasional consultant to the White House on matters of NATO policy. Maier will speak on "Economic Contradictions of socialism."

Dr. Warner Schilling is James T. Shotwell professor of international relations and former associate director of the Institute for War and Peace Studies at Columbia University. He has written several books and articles on U.S. nuclear strategy, security and arms control in Europe. He has served as occasional consultant to the Department of State and the Department of Defense. He will talk on "Strains of Strategic Rivalry: Did United States Win the Cold War?"

Panel members will offer short presentations on the social, economic, and strategic problems faced by the Soviet regime followed by discussion and questions from the audience.

The event is being sponsored by the departments of history, political science, philosophy, and religion, The College of Arts and Sciences, and The Cameron School of Business. The program is free and open to the public.

Lecture On NAFTA To Be Held At UNCW

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

Antonio Lujan, MSW, will present "NAFTA: Its Effect on US/Mexico Border Relations" at 3:30 p.m., Thursday, April 7, in Cameron Hall, Room 132, on the campus of UNCW.

Lujan is currently the director of Catholic Social Ministries in Las Cruces, New Mexico, and special consultant to the Bishop in New Mexico. Past professor of social work at New Mexico State University and Pan American University, Lujan has taken a special interest in the current political turmoil in Mexico including the Indian uprising at Chiapas, Mexico, and the recent assassination of presidential candidate Coloso.

Sponsored by the Department of Sociology and Anthropology and the College of Arts and Sciences, this lecture is free and open to the public.

Riadi To Speak On Mideastern Conflict

BY CHRISTY PREVATT, PR INTERN

Mariam Riadi, director for the American Friends Service Committee/Middle East Education Program, will give a presentation titled "Israeli-Palestinian Conflict: Prospects for Peace" at 7:30 p.m., Friday, April 8, in Morton Hall Bryan Auditorium. This lecture is sponsored by the philosophy and religion department and Members of the Religious Society of Friends (formal name of the Quakers).

The American Friends Service Committee is an organization within the Quakers. They have a longstanding tradition of peacemaking and are concerned with overseas activities. Riadi's role in the organization is to act as spokeswoman and coordinator for peace-seeking groups all over the Southeast. She works out of Atlanta, GA. Her tasks include convening peace workshops and discussion groups.

Riadi is a Christian Palestinian born in Bethlehem, now part of the West Bank. While growing up, her life became accustomed to curfews, food shortages and fear because of the fighting between the Jordanian and Israeli armies.

She studied at Sorbonne University in Paris, the University of London, and the University of Vermont. She found that many of her fellow students assumed the sympathized with terrorist actions, which was far from the truth.

She wanted her life to reflect total commitment to peace. She became a member of the Carmelite Order (a worldwide Roman Catholic community of monks, nuns and laypeople dedicated to prayer). She is also a member of the Quakers. While finding her work very rewarding, she wants to eventually return to the convent.

Honors Society Inducts School of Nursing

The UNCW Nursing Honor Society will be inducted as a chapter of Sigma Theta Tau, the International Honor Society of Nursing, on Saturday.

Dr. Astrid H. Wilson, a member of the international society's board from George State School of Nursing, will conduct the ceremony at 1 p.m. in the University Center Ballroom. Afterward there will be a reception for inductees, their families and guests in Ballroom C.

Some 124 nursing students, alumni and staff members will be inducted as members in the UNCW chapter, which will be called Nu Omega, Chapter 334. Officers will be Adrienne Jackson, president; Sherry Hendrickson, secretary; Linda Chambers, vice president; and Debbie Broome, treasurer.

Sigma Theta Tau granted the chapter's approval at its biennial convention in December in Indianapolis. Membership is by invitation to undergraduate and graduate students, faculty, and professional nurses.

The international society has more than 190,000 members in 321 chapters in colleges and universities in the United States, Canada, Korea and Taiwan. The society encourages and sponsors research, promotes development of nursing leadership and scholars.

Studies include seamanship, close-order drill, naval history and first aid.

Although the Navy is getting smaller, the state-of-the-art ships, aircraft and high tech systems in today's fleet require bright, talented young men and women to operate them. The Navy has over 56,000 job openings this year, most of which include guaranteed training.

Mercer is a 1987 graduate of Southview Senior High School in Hope Mills, N.C.

Four UNCW Students Win Science Honors

Four UNCW students won honors at the annual North Carolina Academy of Sciences meeting on Friday, March 25. Davidson College was the host for this year's meeting and undergraduate research competition. Undergraduate students compete for the John Bowley Derieux Research Award at this event each year.

Students from 20 universities presented their research in hopes of winning. Our students made an excellent showing, with UNCW students receiving four of 18 awards. Heather M. Woodson won first place in biological sciences I for *Diet Analysis of the Juvenile Gag Grouper, *Mycteroperca microlepis, research completed under the supervision of Dr. Lleana Clavijo. David B. Wagoner won first place in biological sciences V for A Trophic State Evaluation of Trask's Pond and Bluetennial Wildflower Preserve Pond, research completed under the supervision of Dr. Larry Caboon and Dr. Joan Willey.

Greg Parkhurst won second place in Biological Sciences V for Niche Partitioning in the Small Mammal Fauna of Southeastern N.C., research completed under the supervision of Dr. W. David Webster. Clair D. Weber won third place in Physical Sciences I for The Skin Diver Illusion: The Perception of Size and Distance Through a Planar Refracting Interface, research completed under the supervision of Dr. Timothy

UNCW Senior Gets Siam Award

Jonathan Tyrone Rowell, a senior mathematics major at UNCW, was right up there with the big boys during a regional student paper competition held March 25-26 at Wake Forest University. It was sponsored by the Society of Industrial and Applied Mathematics, the largest professional organization for applied mathematicians.

Rowell was the only undergraduate among 18 competitors from Clemson, Florida State, Georgia Tech, Emory, North Carolina State, Duke, Tennessee Technological, and Howard universities.

The paper he submitted, "Co-existence and Permanence in a Four-Species Food-Chain Model," received the Special Award.

"It is pretty unusual" for an undergraduate student to do so well in a competition at which all other participants are presenting their doctoral theses, said Rowell's advisor

Dr. Wic Feng, assistant professor of mathematics at UNCW. She said this is the first time a UNCW student has won a Siam competition award.

"His work is quite equivalent to master's work. That's why the judges were so impressed," Feng said. "He's just a very talented student, plus he's very hard working."

Rowell's paper presents a mathematical model that explains the long-term survival of four species in an ecological system. The work is based on a biological model developed by Dr. Martin Poesy, assistant professor of biological sciences at UNCW. Feng explained. Rowell's independent research was done as part of his honor's project and he will present an oral defense of his work next semester.

Feng said Rowell is now preparing his paper for publication in Canadian Applied Mathematics Quarterly. He is the son of M. Tyrone and Pearl Rowell of Wilmington.

Provost Is Named To Chair Program On The Environment

University of North Carolina at Wilmington Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Dr. Marvin Moss has been elected chairman of the Scientific Advisory Board of the Strategic Environmental Research and Development Program (SERDP). He was elected to his current position at the board's meeting on Feb. 23, 1994.

The SERDP program was initiated by Congress to help the U.S. departments of defense and energy deal with estimated multibillion dollar environmental problems at federal government laboratories and defense installations caused by damage over the past 50 years. Funds from the SERDP program include research, development and system engineering directed toward the development of technologies for cleanup and mitigation of nuclear sites, atmosphere pollution, surface and ground water toxicity and other areas such as photovoltaics for clean energy source.

The program focuses on high technologies, such as bioremediation, and in environmental technology transfer between state and federal governments, universities, the military and the private sector. It has now been expanded to include scientific access to some military technology and assets originally built to fight the cold war.

Proposals have been approved that allow the use of prior sensitive Navy undersea listening devices to track the migration of whales and to help identify ship polluting the ocean, of to detect violations of international fishing treaties. Geologists are also using the microphones to identify undersea volcanic eruptions and the motion of continental plates important to earthquake prediction. Other approved programs allow Air Force radar built to detect Soviet bombers to be used to monitor the oceans and upper atmosphere for weather tracking purposes.

Moss now chairs a scientific board presently composed of nine members that are approved by the secretary of defense and the secretary for energy after consultation with the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. The appointments must also be approved by Congress. Members are appointed from personnel eminent in the fields of basic science, social science, energy, ocean and environment sciences, education and national security. At least one member of the board represents public interest groups, one member represents the interest of state governments, and one member represents the president's science advisor. The scientific advisory board awards approximately $200 million annually to promote environmental cleanup, compliance, conservation, pollution prevention, and energy conservation/renewal. Each proposal that is equal to or exceeds $1 million is required to be reviewed and approved by the Science Advisory Board. Since its establishment in 1990, the SAB has made over $500 million in grants.

"Through a combination of unusual government and professional activities, Dr. Moss is superbly qualified to lead this science advisory board. We are all confident that he will do an excellent job," said UNCW Chancellor James R. Leutze.

Moss is a North Carolina native and was formerly associate vice chancellor for marine sciences at the University of California, San Diego, and deputy director of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography. He previously served as director of the entire U.S. Navy's basic research programs, and as a professor of physics at North Carolina State University. He has been awarded the U.S. Navy Distinguished Civilian Service Award, which is the highest award the Navy bestows on a civilian, and the President Rank Meritorious Governmental Executive Award from President Reagan.

Volunteers!

Global Volunteers Head For Jamaica

BY ROLANDA BURNLEY, PR INTERN

UNCW's Global Volunteers will be traveling to Montego Bay, Jamaica May 9-16, to paint the local YMCA. Global Volunteers is a service organization co-sponsored by the UNCW Leadership Center and United Christian Campus Ministries. It is composed of 20 students and 2 UNCW staff members.

Global Volunteers combines cultural education and community need. Each year, as a service project, the group travels to a foreign community and helps in revitalization projects. In previous years, Global Volunteers has traveled to Pueblo, Mexico, Jonesville, Virginia, and Barbados. Their service projects include repairing roofs, installing outhouses, and cleaning up schools.

Each student raises his own money for the trip, but this year the Volunteers are asking for assistance in paying for their supplies. Donations or funds for paint and supplies would be appreciated. For more information please contact Cathy Birmingham at 395-3827.

An article in the March 24th issue of the Seahawk listed the winners of the Business Week Commerce Cup as the Financial Management Organization. The winners were actually the Financial Management Association.

The Commerce Cup is a very prestigious award that Business students compete for every year during Business Week. The Commerce Cup Challenge pits teams of undergraate business organizations against each other in academic competition.

Members of the winning Financial Management Association team are Muzart Erdem, Andrew Cokas, and David Hertin. They received a plaque that will hang in the Cameron School of Business.

The Seahawk apologizes for printing the name of the winning team incorrectly.

This Week In Sports

Coach Lea Dudley's Lady Seahawks complete the 1993-94 schedule with the Azalea-Seahawk Invitational this weekend at Topsail Greens Country Club in Hampstead, N.C.

The Lady Seahawks are coming off a 16th place finish out of 18 teams in the LSU-Fairwood Invitational two weeks ago in Baton Rouge, La. Gwen Gravina was the top individual finisher for UNCW, tying for 46th place with a three-day total of 78-82-83=243.

Individual Results at LSU-Fairwood: Gwen Gravina (78-82-83=243/46th), Lin Valera (81-82-83=246/54th), Stephanie Poulin (87-88-84=259/75th), Kelly Miller (92-87-84=263/78th), Danielle Rousebush (87-89-87=263/78th).

The men's golf team seeks its first CAA golf championship this weekend when the conference tournament gets under way at Wilson country club in Wilson, N.C.

Coach Calvin Lane's Seahawks finished second last season after leading after the first two rounds and figures to be one of the major contenders this weekend.

In play last week, the team sizzled on the links, finishing third at the 13-team Lennie D. Small Memorial Intercollegiate Golf Tournament in Buies Creek, N.C. UNCW, led by Gregg Cuthill, fashioned a 1-2-2 on the final day to move past Virginia Commonwealth into third place behind UNC Chapel Hill (884) and Campbell (888).

Cuthill finished second individually behind Charleston Southern's Jason Caron, shooting a 214 to Caron's 212. 11th Annual Lennie D. Small Intercollegiate Team Standings: UNC Chapel Hill (295-293-295=884), Campbell (303-295-290=888), UNC Wilmington (307-292-292=891), Virginia Commonwealth (305-293-301=915), Methodist (305-296-303=904), Charleston Southern (306-305-301=912), UNC Greensboro (301-311-303=915), Ohio (312-299-305=916), Radford (308-314-312=934), Akron (313-311-314=938), Mercer (310-316-317=943), Guilford (315-316-326=957), Maryland-Baltimore County (336-324-328=988).

UNCW Individual Standings: Gregg Cuthill (74-69-71=214/2nd), Brian Spencer (76-74-71=221/7th), Lee Watson (78-73-77=228/24th), Steve Doucet (79-76-81=236/41st), Brooks Honeycutt (83-80-73=236/41st).

Seven collegiate teams converge on Topsail Greens Country Club in Hampstead, N.C., this weekend for the 13th Annual Azalea-Seahawk Invitational Women's Golf tournament. Most UNC Wilmington will be joined by Alabama-Birmingham, Charleston, Concord, Dartmouth, Longwood and Methodist in the three-day, 54-hole event. The tournament, which began in 1992, gets under way Friday at 11 a.m. The Lady Seahawks finished fourth out of 10 teams in the 1993 affair. Central Florida captured last year's tournament with a three-day total of 313-324-314=951. UNCW's Beth Demme claimed medalist honors with a 80-75-75=230.

Senior Athlete Profile

BY JOELLE KESLER
Sports Writer

Laciya Fiver is a senior on this year's UNCW Women's softball team. She is from Hampstead, North Carolina and will graduate in May of 1994 with a degree in Physical Education.

Laciya started playing slow-pitch softball in the fourth grade. A teacher that is a good friend of her mother asked on Laciya wanted to try-out for the town team she was helping coach. Laciya made the team and played until she was twelve. Then she continued to play on a thirteen to eighteen year old age group team. In high school Laciya played softball at Topsail Junior/Senior High her freshman through senior year. Also during those four years, Laciya played on a summer traveling slow-pitch team. When it came time for Laciya to attend college, UNCW seemed like the most appropriate choice. Laciya comments, "I didn't want to go far away from home, and it has always been my dream to get a scholarship to help pay for college. So when I found out I was getting a scholarship to play softball at UNCW, I didn't apply anywhere else." UNCW coach Maggie St. Ledger saw Laciya play in some local tournaments and wanted her to play fast-pitch softball for her.

Laciya personally benefited from being part of the UNCW Women's Softball team. "First of all, this is the only experience I had with fast-pitch softball. I've gained a lot of knowledge of the game of fast-pitch, which is a totally different game than slow-pitch. It's also given me the experience I will carry for the rest of my life, because after I graduate I will probably never play fast-pitch again since it is not popular in this area," Laciya states. Laciya also had the opportunity of traveling to many different areas and playing against some well-known, ranked teams with quality play-out. "I've benefited playing some of the top teams by knowing that I can compete with some of the best," comments Laciya. Laciya's motivation comes from within, and she has the "determination to be the best that you can be."

Laciya feels the UNCW Women's Softball program has been improving over her four years here. She states, "It is going to take some time because these haven't been much focus on it, which showed this year when they tried to cut our program. It will take a lot of work from us to get recognized."

Laciya has very realistic expectations about her final season as a Lady Seahawk. She hopes to have a career year and break some school records. "I hope to have my best years possible because as a senior you always want to go out on top. I also hope to finish out with a lot of good memories of my teammates to help me remember my four years of fast-pitch," replies Laciya. She expects the team to finish with a record of five hundred or better, which would be the first time in her four years here.

After graduation Laciya will continue to "play slow-pitch until she can't play it anymore!" She would also like to coach one day. In addition, Laciya intends to go to Respiratory Therapy School in Moorhead City in the fall for two years and eventually work in a nearby hospital. She might go back to college later to get her teacher's certification in physical education.

In the summer Laciya works as a veterinary assistant at Scots Hill Animal Hospital. She also plays slow-pitch softball on a women's travel recreational team.

Laciya's entire family has always supported her in anything she does. They wanted her to be the best she could both academically and athletically. When Laciya came to college, it was hard for her to adjust to the fact that her family (father, mother, sister, and grandmother "mummy") weren't going to always be there to watch every one of her games. "Before when I played, I played more for their pleasure than mine. I liked to see their pleasure in watching me play. I had to adjust to looking up in the stands with my fan club diminished but close to my heart," replies Laciya. This fact hit Laciya hard during her sophomore year at UNCW the year - when her mummy died - her biggest fan. As a result, Laciya now takes playing softball more seriously.

Laciya states, "Things you take for granted might not be here tomorrow or the next day, so you never know when it will be your last at but. I take it more serious because I don't know how much longer I got, so when I go out to play I give it my best effort."

Laciya sums up her entire UNCW career by saying: "It's been a good experience filled with memories I will cherish always."

News Briefs

Mitchell declines offer of court seat

WASHINGTON — Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said he turned down a chance to join the Supreme Court because confirmation hearings could slow down his efforts to get health care and other initiatives through Congress. President Clinton made it clear he wanted to nominate Sen. Mitchell (D-Maine) to replace Justice Harry Blackmun, who announced his retirement last week. Other considerations include Federal Judge Jose Cabranes of Connecticut, federal appeals court judge Amylita Kessel of New York, federal appeals court judge and longtime Clinton friend Richard Arnold of Arkansas, and Solicitor General Drew Days. Cabranes would be the first Hispanic and Kessel would be the first black woman on the Supreme Court. Sen. Mitchell's withdrawal makes it likely Clinton will look for a minority candidate, according to White House officials.

Bentsen defends tax hikes

WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen defended President Clinton's economic policies Tuesday. Clinton abandoned his 1992 campaign promise for a middle-income tax cut. Bentsen said only 1.2 percent of taxpayers will pay higher rates as a result of the president's tax and deficit-reduction measure. "I think what middle income appreciates most of all (is) having a job," Bentsen said. "This is better than a tax cut. You've got a job." He said, "I think we've done a poor job of getting the message out there." Bentsen cited survey showing that 40 percent of Americans think their income taxes have increased in the last year. "For most Americans, if they're paying higher taxes this year, it's because they're well off."

Serb guns quiet

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian Serb gunmen held off on attacks on Gorazde Tuesday but fought with government troops in the hills outside Sarajevo. Serbs criticized NATO for launching airstrikes Sunday and Monday on Serb troops surrounding the eastern enclave. The Serbs' military commander ordered troops to shoot down any NATO planes. "Let him try," said Michael McCurry, a U.S. State Department spokesman said. "They shoot back." Air raids stepped up Western involvement in the war which has been going on for the last two years over Bosnia's secession from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia. President Clinton said he would not rule out more air strikes on Serb troops to protect Gorazde and other areas controlled by the Muslim-dominated government.

Zhirinovsky told to behave

STRASBOURG, France — French officials told Russian ultranationalist Vladimir Zhirinovsky not to repeat outbursts such as throwing plants and spitting at Russian protesters outside the Russian consulate. Zhirinovsky is in France to attend the Council of Europe's Parliamentary Assembly meeting. He engaged in a shouting match Monday with approximately 100 demonstrators outside the consulate. The demonstrators were protesting Zhirinovsky's presence.

Airline warning

WASHINGTON — The International Airline Pilots' Association is warning people not to fly to or over the former Soviet Union. The Association cited problems such as overloaded planes, lack of cockpit discipline, aging aircraft and missiles fired at civilian aircraft in areas of political unrest.

Gantt Speaks To Outstanding UNCW Student Leaders Honored At Banquet

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

UNCW student leaders were honored at a Student Leadership Awards banquet April 9th in the University Center Ballroom. Twenty-six awards were presented to outstanding student organizations and leaders.

Keynote speaker Harvey Gantt, former mayor of Charlotte and former U.S. Senate candidate, charged student leaders to "make the promise of America real."

"You are the people who will one day influence two or more people who will follow you," Gantt said. "We need you, I would hope you'd go into the community."

Tonya Washington, program coordinator for student organization, presented an award to each of the following: Environmental Concerns Organization, Global Volunteers for Outstanding Multicultural Program, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity for Outstanding Educational Programs, Dr. John Yeoman of the Financial Management Association for Outstanding Advisor of the Year, Phi Mu Sorority for Outstanding Community Service, and Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity for Outstanding Social Program.

Tonya Guich was presented the campus recreation award by Christie Harrison, Outdoor Programs coordinator.

Frank Tascone, program coordinator for Campus Activities, presented awards to Matt Smith and Vern Granger. Certificates of achievement were awarded to Susan Talley, Elaine Duck, Susan Szew, Nicole Dickens, Damian Tucker, and Rose Monroe.

Norman Melton, Alumni Association, announced the four finalists for the Senior Leadership Award: Jeffrey Randall Good, Lisa Michelle McIntosh, Heather J. Petroff, and George G. Richardson, Jr. The name of the 1994 Senior Leadership Award recipient will be announced during commencement exercises on May 14.

Deborah Haywood, assistant director for Health Promotions, honored seven LivWELL Peer Educators: Debbie Coles, Missy Budzinski, Ann Marie Darazdi, Karen Christian, Stephanie Wilker, Kayla Garland, and

"I appreciate the involvement of the students, you make the campus live," UNCW Chancellor James R. Leutze said in closing the awards ceremony. "We need people to lead on the student level. I want you to let me know how we can make (UNCW) a better learning environment. I want to encourage you to be involved, to complain, and to criticize. You've got to have a vision of what you want this institution to be."

The Student Leadership Awards banquet was sponsored by the Leadership Center and Campus Activities Office, University Union Department, the Division of Student Affairs, and was funded by Lowe's.

American Indian Festival

BY THOMAS CHILDS, JR.
Staff Writer

This past Friday, approximately 600 people attended the Indian Festival held at the University Center. The festival was sponsored by the School of Nursing, the N.C. Commission of Indian Affairs, and the Coastal Area Health Education Center. The program featured Native American music, dances, and seminars dealing with Native American issues.

Its main focus was to raise awareness about Native Americans. According to John Zimmerman, a sophomore of Cherokee descent, not enough people are interested in Native American cultures.

"The majority of the campus is white, with Native Americans numbering around 30," says Zimmerman. Nonetheless, he feels it's great there is a growing interest in Native American cultures.

That interest extends to the classroom, as well. Though it has yet to be approved, a minor in Native American studies is scheduled for Spring 1995, said Dr. Patricia Lerch of the Sociology and Anthropology Departments. Lerch also teaches ANT 305 (Native North Americans: Contemporary Issues), one of two courses taught at UNCW dealing with Native American cultures. She sees an interest in students wanting to learn about Native Americans, noting that her courses have always been full. Another course taught at UNCW is HIS 249 (American Indian History), which is the only course taught currently in the History Department dealing exclusively with Native American History. Dr. Bruce Kinzer of the History Department, along with Dr. Lerch, sees a growing student interest in native American History and a growing need for people to learn about them, as well.

There are courses planned that deal with Native American cultures in such areas as religion, literature, anthropology, archaeology, history, and art.

Azalea Festival Showcases South's Heritage, Lifestyle

BY KRISTI BROWN
Staff Writer

The North Carolina Azalea Festival, a celebration promoting the Cape Fear region, will be held beginning Tuesday, April 12 through Sunday, April 17. It is organized as a community-wide effort by several hundred dedicated volunteers to showcase Southern heritage, hospitality, and quality of life.

During the days, a number of events will take place.

A complete schedule of events can be obtained by calling (910) 763-0905.

This year's Azalea Queen is Laura Sisk, better known as Allison Rescott on ABC's Loving. She can be seen on Friday at the N.C. Department of Aging on S. College Rd. at 10:00 a.m., during the Ribbon Cutting at 721 Forest Hills Dr. at 11:00 a.m., and at the Elks Lodge on Oleander Dr. at noon. She will appear at Brodgen Hall, the horse show at Hugh McRae Park, and at the coronation pageant.

The Azalea Festival will feature many performers such as country singer Ronnie McDowell, noted magician Lorenzo "Renzie" Norris and Neal Sadaka.

Country singer Ronnie McDowell will highlight an explosive roster of music, magic and fireworks at the Renzie Norris will entertain, ending his program with a breathtaking disappearing act. This is his first appearance at the Azalea Festival. However, residents in New Hanover, Onslow, and Columbus Counties have enjoyed his performances for the past six years. Neal Sadaka takes the stage on Saturday, April 16 as part of the Queen's Coronation Pageant and Gala Show. Tickets are $25.

The major sponsors for this year's Azalea Festival are: Boddie Neill Enterprises, Coming Inc., Everhart Nissan, General Electric, Jackson Beverage/Budweiser, Pepsi Cola Bottling Co., Sprint Cellular, and U.S. Air.

Seeing The World Through Others' Eyes

BY JOEY NICHOLS
Staff Writer

College is a place all about new and different viewpoints. It's about intellectuals hungry for information, insight, and ideas. It's about open-mindedness and understanding and respect for those things that are different.

However, this is not always true. We do not live in a fairy tale. For this reason, the Human Relations Committee has sponsored "a Gay and Lesbian Focus, Seeing the World Through Others' Eyes". Through the presentation of movies, speakers and information, the Human Relations Committee and the Gay and Lesbian Association hope to elevate the awareness and understanding level of differences within the campus community.

In order to do this, the G.L.A. has recommended films and speakers to be presented during the program. Movies including Torch Song Trilogy, Pink Triangles, Greetings From Out Here, and Entre Nous are on the agenda. The keynote speaker will be Maura Cullen. She will deal with all aspects of diversity as the covers topics including "Being an Advocate for Students in the Coming Out Process," "Toto, We're Not in Kansas Anymore: Making the Difference Count," and "Strategies for Promoting a Non-Discriminatory community."

Attendance was limited to G.L.A. members initially, but as the program has gained recognition more people have attended.

The program is bolstered by weekly meetings held by the G.L.A. Here, students and faculty are able to make friends and discuss concerns in an open and understanding setting. Members are mainly gay and lesbians, but some of the strongest supporters of the groups are heterosexuals.

Vice president of the group and student, Allen, said "The group allows you to be yourself with people who have similar beliefs to yours. Plus, the meetings are a lot of fun."

Through these educational programs, films, discussions, and with the help of staff development and promotional materials, the Division of Student Affairs hopes to provide the campus with information and a chance to look at things from a different perspective.

For more information on events or G.L.A., call 395-3374. Your privacy is respected.

Students with Outstanding balances will not be allowed to pre-register for Summer I, Summer II, and Fall 1994. Outstanding balances must be paid at the cashier's office in James Hall in order to pre-register. All students will receive this notice in their student mail box. IT IS JUST A REMINDER!

PRE-REGISTRATION. The initial date for pre-registration is indicated on your Permit to Register. This date is determined by the number of semester hours earned. Those students having the highest number of earned hours are given the earlier date for pre-registering. Students cannot pre-register before the initial date on their Permit. Attempted pre-registration before the scheduled date will be cancelled. Tuition and fees bills will be mailed to the student's permanent address. If payment is not made, the pre-registration is cancelled.

The Chancellor's Student Hours are Thursday, April 14, 3:30-4:30 p.m., and Thursday, April 28.

The Chancellor's Student Health and Wellness Center Advisory Committee wishes to invite students representing the diversity of our campus population to apply for membership of this committee for the 1994-95 academic year.

The general purpose of the committee is to act in an advisory capacity regarding policy and administrative matters except those matters involving medical procedures. Members are appointed by the Chancellor. It will promote an understanding of the role and function of the Student Health and Wellness Center in the university community. The committee will hear complaints about alleged inequities in student health services and make appropriate recommendations to the vice chancellor for student affairs.

1993 State and Federal Income Tax forms are available in the Postal Service lobby in the University Center.

The Division of Student Affairs is sponsoring a series of programs on Seeing the World Through Other's Eyes. The series is designed to increase our awareness and understanding of differences within our campus community, focusing on issues of sexual orientation. Through educational programs, staff development, films, discussions, and promotional materials the Division of Student Affairs hopes to provide the campus with information and a chance to look at things from a different perspective.

On Tuesday, April 19 there will be a film entitled Entre Nous which will be shown in Center Stage at 7:30 p.m. This is an excellent film concerning the mother of the filmmaker, Diane Kurys. In the 1950s in Lyons, France, Lena (Isabel Hubbert) and Madeleine (Mou-Mou) two married mothers, meet, develop a friendship, and eventually leave their husbands for one another.

On Wednesday, April 20, the film Choosing Children will be shown in Center Stage at 6 p.m. Directed by Debra Chasnoff and Kim Klausner and narrated by attorney Donna Hitchens of the San Francisco-based Lesbian Rights Project, this film provides an intimate look at the issues backed by women who become parents after coming out as lesbians. Six families share experiences with donor insemination, non-biological motherhood, adoption and other issues. Includes music by Holly Near. An emotionally powerful film that challenges society's ideas about the concept of family.

The UNCW Volunteers Program is recruiting volunteers for six community agencies: Brigade Boys Club, Winter Park Elementary, Williston Middle School, Tlesion Health Clinic, Family Services Afterschool Enrichment, College Park Elementary, Good Shepherd House. Questions can be directed to the Campus Activities office by calling 395-3827.

College Democrats Making a Come-back on Campus

BY JOEY NICHOLS
Staff Writer

The College Democrats of UNCW have had a shaky record. With several attempts to found a solid group falling short, it would seem as if the group had no future. However, new and strong leadership has made the difference in the once wavering organization.

Matt Lauer, UNCW

sophomore and two-year president of the organization, started up the group once again in 1992, with the help of another student, Wayne Hamlin. The group began to hold regular meetings under advisor Dr. Bill McCarthy in the University Union, but attendance was only marginal. Despite the small interest, the group continued, slowly gaining members.

As the 1993-94 school year moved on, the College Democrats remained in the shadows of larger better known organizations. But as the Spring semester became reality, so did the Democrats.

Regular attendance of meetings has grown over 200 percent and participation in group events on campus and statewide is incredible. The College Democrats participated in the "Take Back the Night" rally as well as the North Carolina Federation of College Democrats annual convention. College Democrats are also active in supporting their local party members and have many upcoming events planned before the end of the year.

In addition to the participation of the UNCW College Democrats in the N.C.F.C.D., Lauer was just elected president of the statewide organization. After a tough race against Lainey Edmisten, niece of Secretary of State Rufus Edmisten, Lauer triumphed to win the presidency and take hold of an organization full of tremendous potential.

According to Lauer, "College Democrats is a solid organization with great possibilities. With the help of our advisor, Dr. McCarthy and each and every one of our members, we can become an important voice heard throughout the campus and the state."

Friends of mine are being accused of the despicable of wearing a "gay" t-shirt! I just can't believe it! On other hand, I guess I do believe it since it happened. It is one more piece of evidence about how deep-seated our homophobia is.

This past week has seen a week long program carried out through the Chancellor's Human Relations Committee and the Student Affairs Program Group with the title, "Seeing the World through Others' Eyes—A Gay and Lesbian Focus." A series of guest speakers and films were brought to UNCW not just for gay and lesbian students, but to enable all of us to try and increase our understanding about how the gay and lesbian community sees the world. We were asking these resources to help us understand something of the life of homosexual persons. An agenda inherent in the program was to educate members of the UNCW community in hopes that we might reduce homophobic reactions to gay and lesbian human beings. I understand that there is disagreement about the issue of homosexuality, but I find the prejudice and hatred demonstrated by heterosexuals who dare to consider themselves good persons abhorrent. A current bumper sticker reads, "Hatred is Not a Family Value." How true!

The t-shirt in question reads "Seeing the World Through Others' Eyes." Under those words are a series of human-like figures in various colors. It is a really nice looking t-shirt and I certainly enjoy wearing mine. To call that t-shirt a gay t-shirt because of homosexual speakers and films associated with the program is absurd but, unfortunately, not surprising. In the matter of race, there has been some limited progress among the white community in giving up our bigotry and sense of superiority. "Nigger" is no longer a socially accepted term. The signs are that we have hardly begun to give up the sick, judgmental, bigoted attitudes that we were trained to have by a bigoted society in reference to human beings with every different sexual orientation to ours.

Do I sound angry? You bet I'm angry. I have this weird idea that I got from a spiritual mentor of mine named Jesus, that we are supposed to love our fellow human beings and live with some concern for the welfare, not only for our friends and those who are like us, but for people who are radically different than we are. He managed to respond with real love to Samaritans, lepers, harlots and the like—the outcast of his day. When we are, the heterosexuals of American society, ever going to face our prejudice and realize what a significant problem homophobia is for us and how it inhibits our growth as loving human beings.

Even if people are not clear about their attitude, beliefs, or feelings about gay and lesbian issues, it is time, for the simple sake of love and justice, to speak out against the prejudice of homophobia wherever it rears its ugly head. It seems that the simple act of wearing a t-shirt can be a positive statement in the face of people who are determined to perpetuate such dehumanizing attitudes against others.

I guess I'm demonstrating my own prejudice against people who are openly homophobic. In most cases, I try to deal with human beings gently who are struggling to overcome negative attitudes. But right now I'm just mad. I get tired of positive change taking such a long time. We all get upset at the clan warfare that is so destructive in Bosnia and Africa. We need to understand that the violence inherent in our homophobia is just as destructive to loving, caring human beings.

Wake up, students. Your hostile and prejudice attitudes toward gay and lesbian students is wrong. You are harming them and yourselves. You are here to learn, to think, and to reflect. Do it around this issue. It does make a difference.

Live and Let Live

I'm really disgusted with some of the things I've been hearing lately. Campus Activities has been sponsoring a program called "Seeing the World Through Others' Eyes—A Gay and Lesbian Focus."

The whole purpose of the program is to help people understand homosexuality. Unfortunately, I've heard a lot of snide comments about the whole thing. One "Truly Concerned" person wrote a letter to the editor that I decided not to print because it was so self-righteous. Here's an excerpt: "I firmly believe that homosexuality is wrong! I don't only justify my opinion with the Bible, but also with Mother Nature and God. I believe God made Adam and Eve, and not Adam and Steve. It is obvious that man was made for woman. Everything fits just right. Mother Nature made it so that females cannot reproduce without males. I believe that these programs that are promoting these homosexual behaviors are disgraceful and should not be allowed by administration. God did not intend for the acceptance of this sin. I don't mean to judge people, but their ways are wrong."

If you don't mean to judge people, then DON'T! It sounds like you're scared of people who have different beliefs and feelings than you do. I'm not a religious person, but I thought the Bible told us to love our fellow man. What you're preaching is hatred. Not for any good reason, but because you think everyone should believe and act the same as you. Anyone who doesn't is wrong. That makes me think of some past history...The Salem Witch Trials, Hitler's Nazi Germany and the struggle of blacks in this country come to mind. These are prime examples of people who were afraid of others who were different from themselves. In each case, people died at the hands of others who thought they were right. My question to you is, how do you come to the conclusion that you're right?

There has been a lot of back and forth recently about homosexuality and religion. I've received several letters about the preachers that have been on campus the past several weeks. I'm sure you've seen them over in the vicinity of the bookstore. You're one of the lucky few if they didn't say something distasteful about the way you were dressed or the way you wear your make-up, etc. I don't think the Seahawk is the proper forum for religious discussion so this is the last week you'll see letters to the editor about the issue. I'm printing one final reply this week because I think it proves a good point. You can read almost any meaning you want into almost everything.

To me, religion is a personal thing. I think it's poor taste that these "servants of God" chose to insult and degrade students because of the way they look. My God is a kind and gentle God who accepts us as the people we are. He is not the hell-fire and brimstone God that some would have us believe in. If you see me somewhere, don't bother to preach to me and tell me I'm wrong. I believe I'm right just as strongly as you believe you're right. That makes us different. It doesn't mean we have to hate each other.

June Rapp Oravits

Stressed To The Max!

It's countdown time—10 week days (weekends don't count) until the last day of scheduled classes, 12 days until the first scheduled exams, and exactly one month until I, June Rapp Oravits, girl reporter, graduate!

May 14th can't roll around soon enough. Incipient baldness looms in my future unless I quit pulling out the hair on my head. Tugging on my hair helps me release tension, but perhaps I should redirect the attention to my armpits. Between exams, final papers, jobs, and other life demands, I'm worried I won't have time to deal with personal hygiene.

Hey, how about the problem of hairy legs? Who has time for these things? Maybe I could get early dispensation from attending final exams to hop over to the Bahamas and get my hairy legs braided with those cute little beads—in the official school colors if it makes everyone feel better.

I wonder if I can use the S. Bartlett theory on feminine hygiene as an excuse to disappear for at least the next seven days so I won't contaminate anyone on campus (see today's letter to the editor).

In the meantime, I'm operating under extreme sleep deprivation—much like most other people on this campus. It's rather sad, I could pack all my clothes in the bags under my eyes.

Where do people with those new-fangled hoops in their eyebrows, noses, lips, tongues, belly-buttons, and God knows where else, find time to be so stressed? Is this a new way to stay awake for those last minute exam study sessions by piercing portions of their anatomy? Well, it would sure keep me awake. I think I'll choose caffeine and nicotine over needles any day.

Now is the Spring of our Discontent, professors are all grumpy—we're talking major influxes of a PMS epidemic transcending gender barriers. Seems as though I'm not the only one with too little time to get too much done.

Those students who aren't lying about getting a tan are snapping at each other in the hallways, shoving each other in registration lines, and putting each other in headlocks over computer terminals in the labs.

Even the secretaries are getting in the act—and who can blame them? They have to deal with the malcontents: harried professors, strung-out administrators, and leagues of procrastinating Profrickian pupils (look it up, I don't have time to explain).

So, what to do? My nails are gnawed to stubs, I'm probably going bald (did I already say that?), my liquor tab is growing at the local watering hole, and I've become so anal-retentive a pound of Ex-Lax wouldn't help (right, Dr. Newlin?)

By the way, has anyone seen my children? I think I had two, at least from the physical evidence—stretches marks, sagging breasts, no money, and a chauffeur's license. I mean, here it is April 14th, do you know where your children are? Maybe those pictures of two kids collecting dust on my bookcase are really just for show for the Internal Revenue Service. After all, tomorrow is D-Day, as in Deduction Day. So, are my kids live or are they Memorex? Am I really setting a good example of a studious academic type for them—or just a harried mom?

As I just lit my 17th cigarette in the last hour, I realized I need to redirect my stress back to the issue at hand—surviving the FINAL DAYS!

To make matters worse, I have this recurring nightmare that I'll show up for commencement, only to be told I have one more year! This would, of course, be torture for those I've tortured over the last couple of years.

Dr. Veit would probably retire early without benefits simply to escape my babbling (did I already say that?) Dr. Frega would scream if confronted with even one more year of my incessant questions. Dr. Rugoff would go insane if he had to bear another semester of office hours interrupted by my eager beaver shining face popping through her doorway.

That's okay, guys, it was just a nightmare. No magic realism here. Anyway, I have a new victim designated for next year when I'm in graduate school. You know who you are, Dr. Dodson. Have you paid up on that life insurance premiums, Doc?

In the meantime, why don't they just let me go home now and quit pummeling me with these trivial little matters of final papers, and exams. What do they want, blood?

Everything I Need To Know I Learned at UNCW

Although it seems like it was only a few months ago, it has actually been four years since I came down here from Dabrun County. I can still see mom standing out on the front porch, wiping tears away with her dish towel, and watching as my dad and I drove off with everything I owned in the back of his old Ford ranger and my old Mustang. He now has a new Ranger and I have a newer Mustang, but it would take twenty trips in each to carry all of my stuff back home. As the ticker winds down towards May 14, and more specifically 10:00 am on May 14, I am in awe as I look back over the four years I've spent here at UNCW (aka "Seahawk High"). I think about all of the people I have met, and all of the friends I have made. Many of them I don't even know, but they know me from reading this section of The Seahawk (Fishwrap) over the past few years. I wish that I would have been able to meet them all. You see, I believe that there is much more to getting an education than lectures, reading assignments, studying, and testing. It also includes the people we meet and the ideas and life experiences we share. It includes the places we go and what we do there. It includes all that we see, hear, touch, That's just a small part of the pie. I think we also get a lot out of the other things we do or should be doing outside of the classroom. Membership and leadership in clubs and organizations, attending lectures and debates outside of the classroom, most anything presented in Kenan Auditorium, individual and small group discussions with professors and classmates, a book a week out of Randall Library, writing weekly semi-collective newspaper columns, and the list goes on for ways to contribute to your own education.

While I'm on the subject, let me go ahead and issue my official "Required Professor List." I have not had every professor at this institution, but of the many fine ones I have had, I have composed a short list of those which I think should be required in order to get a degree here. This list includes Dr. Larry Cable of the History Department, Dr. Carl Lundeen of the Biology Department, and Dr. Gerald Shinn of the Philosophy and Religion Department. Each of these professors has a unique teaching style and unparalleled abilities to stimulate student interest in what they teach. Their methods of evaluation are all creative and allow for the subjective expression of what the student has learned. They all seem dedicated to facilitating the learning process at UNCW, and I believe they each have a concern, expressed in various ways, for the welfare of the students they teach. I will remember Dr. Cable for those blessed "gateway" writing assignments, Dr. Lundeen for his insistence on seeing the forest and the trees, and Dr. Shinn for telling me how and where to find answers and not just always giving the answers.

I have had some great (and some not so great) professors at UNCW, and I don't mean to slight any who read this. I just picked these three because they have stuck out in my mind and contributed greatly to my education. This is, of course, a two-way street. What we get out of our four years here is a function of what we put in and not just related to courses and professors.

In closing, I'd like to leave you all with a little thought about my philosophy of life. Author Robert Fulghum put it much better than I could right now, so I will quote from his book The Pie in the Sky which is famous for well, things hang on my bedroom wall.

"All I really need to know about how to live and what to do and how to be I learned in kindergarten. Wisdom was not at the top of the graduate-school mountain, but there in the sandpile at Sunday School. These are the things I learned..."

Share everything. Play fair. Don't hit people. Put things back where you found them. Clean up your own mess. Don't take things that aren't yours. Say sorry when you hurt somebody. Wash your hands before you eat. Flush. Warm cookies and cold milk are good for you. Live a balanced life—learn some and think some and draw and paint and sing and dance and play and work every day some. Take a nap every afternoon. When you go out into the world, watch out for traffic, hold hands, and stick together. Be aware of wonder. Remember the little seed in the Styrofoam cup: the roots go down and the plant goes up and nobody really knows how or why, but we are all like that. Goldfish and hamsters and white mice and even the little seed in the Styrofoam cup—they all die. So do we. And then remember the Dick-and-Jane books and the first word you learned—the biggest word of all—LOOK. Everything you need to know is in there somewhere. The Golden Rule and love and basic sanitation. Ecology and politics and equality and sane living. Take any one of those items and extrapolate it into sophisticated adult terms and apply it to your family life or your work or your government or your world and it holds true and clear and firm. Think what a better world it would be if we all—the whole world—had cookies and milk about three o'clock every afternoon and then lay down with our blankets for a nap. Or if all governments had as a basic policy to always put things back where they found them and to clean up their own mess. And it is still true, no matter how old you are—when you go out into the world, it is best to hold hands and stick together."

Now, I realize this week's edition is a little different from what you are accustomed to seeing from me. I promise I'm not losing it, I just wanted to take this almost last edition to show you the "other side" of Phil. I wanted to point out some observations and give some advice about the college experience. I really want to encourage you all to MAKE THE MOST OF YOUR UNCW EXPERIENCE. Make an impact on the university just as it makes an impact on you. If you do this, you will end up a better person, and this is a better place. I want to encourage you to be active, pay attention to what is going on around you, and take appropriate action.

Friends, I've enjoyed writing for you over the past few years. I've done about 65 different columns, and had a hall doing each and every one. I thank you all, both new readers and the long time faithful semi-coherent readers. Those who have written to me, as well as those who haven't, I thank you for words of encouragement and pats on the back. I want to thank my parents for supporting me and encouraging me in my efforts (I wouldn't be here without them, literally or figuratively). Above all, I thank God for seeing me safely through these four years, and with my sanity mostly intact. I must also thank The Seahawk and the editors who I've watched come and go, for letting me take a little space to give everyone a piece of my mind. In my very first column, I warned readers that they "may be a tidbit offended," but that they may also laugh at the same time. I think that has been the case. I hope that I've also been able to stimulate some thought and discussion about issues which affect our campus and world.

Until next time... Keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Letters To The Editor

Why Change The Roadway Through Campus If It Works?

Dear Editor,

After reading the article about the new highway proposal that would construct a major roadway through the UNCW campus, I have come to the conclusion that this is not what UNCW needs. There are other problems on campus we need to focus on, for instance more parking spaces for students. We need more on-campus housing to relieve overcrowding in the dorms. We also need more concern over the safety of our student population.

The highway proposal would change UNCW forever. There's enough traffic on campus to cause problems without adding to the problem by putting in a new highway. Students who have to cross South College road have enough problems worrying about traffic getting to class. We don't need to make it a bigger problem. The students that walk down Crews Drive every day to class are in great danger already. We need a crossing guard to help them cross the street. The speed limit is only 25 mph, which is easy to control. How do you control cars and trucks racing past one another at 55 and 65 mph on their way to Wrightsville Beach? How is this safe for the students crossing to go to class?

what do we do? Build a bridge so students can walk over the traffic? I don't think so! We as students who pay to attend safe university should not have to suffer because of poor planning by the city of Wilmington. Wilmington can find other ways to ease its traffic problems, other avenues to turn into highways. UNCW has a smooth, not perfect traffic flow. Why make a good situation bad for students, and better for random visitors? Why change what is working for those who help pay the bills at UNCW? Why change?

Don't Underestimate Yourself; We Will Do It For You

Dear Editor,

Having studied in other schools systems around the world, I find it puzzling as to why the American educational system is the only one I have found still using multiple guess (choice). In my view this archaic method of testing only tests the short term memory. It appears that the student only needs to half study go to the test throw up the information and leaves with a retention span of who knows. What has happened to original research, when I ask I am told "that's graduate work". This writer wonders who really benefits from this format, is it easier for the student or can the professor simply throw the scantron sheet through their machine. On more than one occasion I have been tested using tests that are 1 or 2 years old. Come on it's time to compete, stop living in the past and start learning.

a look at the arts

UNCW DEPARTMENT OF FINE ARTS

April 13-16, 8 p.m., Sun. matinees 3 p.m., Play: Reckless by Craig Lucas. SRO Theatre, Kenan Hall. $6
April 21, 8 p.m., Kenan Auditorium. Honors Recital. Free.

UNCW DIVISION OF MUSIC

The UNCW Saxophone Ensembles, under the direction of Frank Bongiorno, will perform a concert in Kenan Auditorium on Sunday, April 17 at 8 p.m. The concert is free and open to the public.

Comprised of UNCW students studying saxophone, the UNCW Saxophone Ensembles consist of two groups which include a saxophone quartet and a large ensemble of nine saxophonists. The music on this concert will feature a variety of style periods from the Baroque to classical as well as American music such as spirituals and jazz. The featured work for the large ensemble will be a transcription of Mozart's Quintet while the quartet will perform Eugene Bozza's Andant et Scherzo. Other compositions scheduled for this performance are Canon and Gigue by Pachelbel and an arrangement of Dam That Dream by Jimmy Van Heusen.

The UNCW Jazz Program, under the direction of Frank Bongiorno, will host its 12th annual Jazz Festival and Concert on April 22 and 23 in the University Center Ballroom. High school as well as college ensemble performances with clinics by the guest artist will be from 1-5 p.m. on each day, culminating with a concert by the UNCW Big Band featuring guest artist Denis DiBlasio on Saturday evening at 8 p.m. The afternoon clinics and the Saturday evening guest artist concert are free to UNCW students with valid LD.

The art of spontaneity is personified in the playing of saxophone and flutist Denis DiBlasio. DiBlasio served as both musical director and arranger to Maynard Ferguson and his big band during the '80s. As featured soloist on tour of Ferguson's recordings, DiBlasio also co-produced the legendary Body and Soul release. Today, DiBlasio stays busy leading his own quartet performing across the nation and abroad. He has three solo recordings including his critically acclaimed recent release entitled Catch Me. DiBlasio will conduct clinics and critique jazz ensembles during the afternoon sessions of the festival and will be featured soloist on the Saturday evening concert with the UNCW Big Band. He will perform on baritone, saxophone, flute, and scat vocals on such arrangements as Anthropology, La Fiesta, I Got News for You, A Meeting of the Minds, and Three and One, among others.

UNCW ART EXHIBITS

Hampstead artist, Jan Lewis will have a collection of her works on exhibit in the University Center Lobby from April 5 through May 19.

Lewis has an Associate Art degree from Stratford College, a Bachelor of Arts degree from UNCW, and has attended the Pan American School of Art. She participates regularly in juried art shows in the area and has won several awards at South Eastern Community College. She is also a member of the Hampstead Art League. Her work is currently showing at Cape Fear Coffee and Tea Company on Front Street in Wilmington. Lewis uses acrylics and pastels in her abstract, landscape, and still life work. She experiments with texture, using layered paint and various materials with staining variation.

The Randall Library at UNCW will present the works of eight distinctive Southeast Carolina artists to be exhibited from April 8 through June 2.

The exhibition will include sculpture, photography, ceramics, and painting and constitutes a rich variety of expression from realism to abstraction.

Sculpture: Viewers will experience the vigor of large and small charcoal forms to metal, some seven and eight feet in height, and companion forms, always monumental, of sculptor Al Frego. In stark contrast, find the sharp, angular, attenuated, incisive sometimes threatening forms of sculptor Marshall Milton.

Ceramics: Traudi Thornton's masterful ceramic images, wall and standing pieces, are organic in form, highlighted by subtle glazes creating a fused energy. Ceramist Gayle Tustin works earthbound in color and texture with an interplay of whites and pastel hues.

Photography: Photographer Debbie Luster explores the rural scene. She is nearing completion of a second publication, "The Lost Roads Project" to be published by University of Arkansas Press. Luster creates absorbing poetic documentations of rural life and countryside.

Painting: Painters Pam Toll, Dick Roberts and Leon Schenker display unusual diversity, the former of two expressing personal worlds, exterior and interior with vividness and intensity. Memories of rural Oklahoma, the earth, family and friends are richly portrayed by artist Pam Toll. There is also a distinct sensual manner best expressed in her fantasy images. Dick Roberts' paintings, dark, with brooding figurative solemn, ritualistic, dramatic and confrontational. Schenker's paintings appear in sharp contrast to the works of Toll and Roberts. They are a deft interplay of line, geometry and color often charged with painterly action.

New Hanover County Public Library

British mystery authors Stephen Murray and Gillian Linscott will present Crimeline, an entertaining overview of crime and detection fiction from the Stone Age to the present, on Thursday, April 14 at 7:30 p.m. in the Meeting Room of the Main Library. The program is free.

The two authors are touring libraries in Georgia, the Carolinas, and Virginia during the month of April to promote crime fiction, particularly their own. In their program they discuss murder at King Author's court and in the works of Shakespeare, Dickens, Poe and Doyle. They describe how to plan a murder in the best English country house style. They also read from their own mysteries. The program concludes with a Crimeline quiz for the audience.

Jim Clark

Random Blasts

In the fine tradition of ESPN's Jim Rome, I will present my Random Blasts. Hopefully, New Orleans Saints quarter back Jim Everett will not be around to physically disagree.

*Advertisers are really starting to tick me off. Have you seen that new Reebok commercial that is nothing more than the Flintstones there with bikes and shoes? Now, I'll bet Reebok is somehow involved with the new Spielberg movie starring John Goodman. This is nothing more than the controllers of the airwaves getting 'A' rated in our heads.

*If you think that it doesn't work, think back to last summer when Steve Miller's song "Wide River" was high on the charts. What was the major news story of the time? The flooding of the Mississippi. It was simply a case of great timing by Miller because the song wasn't that good, but he's "laughing all the way to the bank."

*Kurt Cobain blew his head off and now thousands of fans are comparing this recent merger on the scene to Jim Morrison and Jimi Hendrix. Please!! Ask any musician about the music Nirvana put out and they will say there was nothing special about it. Cobain was at the right place at the right time. Having a good MTV video helped sell that song to the "learned" masses.

Cobain couldn't deal with reality, based on his heroin addiction and alcoholism. If having a wife and kid isn't enough to bring a man to face his responsibilities and live up to them, he really isn't much of a man. Blowing your head off is the chicken shit way out.

Cobain was an idiot and proved it on a Friday morning.

*How can anyone commit suicide on a Friday? I would at least wait until Monday. Why was a weekend? I guess in Cobain's case, every day was a Friday.

*How come butterflies are called that? I think they should be referred to as flutterbies because they flutter by.

*Many people think basketball is the greatest sport around. I did, too, for a while, but not any more. Until the referees start calling traveling violations, three-seconds, and fouls on "Superstars" late in the close games when appropriate, the league cannot be taken seriously. I am tired of seeing great plays that are nothing more than rules violations. Until the NBA cleans up its act, give me hockey anytime. Heck, just give me hockey.

*The next time I hear how basketball players are the world's greatest athletes, I will scream. Give me a soccer player any day. When the World Cup starts this summer, see how much these guys run and how many times the game is stopped for commercials or a time out.

*While everyone is jumping back on the Braves' bandwagon, remember this team is basically the same team as last year. Yeah, Otis Nixon and Ron Gant are not around, but the core of the team is there (the pitching staff) and the Braves' farm system is one of the strongest. The man responsible for the youngsters is none other than the man who has more career homers and RBIs than anyone in baseball history, Hank Aaron.

*There are many people who still believe that inane notion that blacks can't run an organization, be it a group of athletes or an entire franchise. Nolan Richardson, Cito Gaston, Aaron, and others have put that notion where it belongs, in the trash.

*One political note: Those of you who think you can change the government, remember this: the Senate is made up of millionaires. The House is not too far behind. The U.S. government is for the rich, of the rich, and by the rich.

Think about any issue that seems clear cut as to how Congress should rule. The reason for indecision is money provided by special interests groups and PACs. Few congressmen are going to adamantly go against a PAC because it will mean a loss of revenue come reelection time.

*For those of you who disagree with me on these, good for you. Think about a response and write to this newspaper. You only have the next issue to show your views to the campus. And please have the intestinal fortitude to sign your name to it.

Jim Clark will finally be out of your hair May 14th.

Silk to Perform at UNCW

"We wanted to make a universal album," declares Silk's Gary Jenkins, "something for everyone. The older crowd jumps on the Delphonics remake, 'For the Love I Gave.' We got the hip hop style on 'Happy Days,' and then we come across with the love songs, 'Girl U For Me' and 'Lose Control,' and then a sexy song like 'Freak Me.'"

Silk succeeded better than ever imagined. The smoky, sophisticated groove and impeccable harmonies of their debut album, Lose Control, has propelled them towards double platinum, spawning three Top 10 singles, including the #1 "Freak Me." A veritable staple on the Arsenio Hall show with four appearances to date along with The Tonight Show, the Atlanta-based newcomers also contributed a track to the soundtrack of the Whoopi Goldberg/Ted Danson hit, Made In America, and stole the show on the Coca-Cola Superfest tour. "The evening's most enchanting harmonies," declared the L.A. Times, while USA Today praised their "rich vocals and updated Temptations moves."

"You don't wanna get your hopes up too soon, so you just wait," says Timothy Cameron about Silk's unprecedented success. "Then it started happening, we really did it all realize it, because we were working so hard on our promotional tour. It really hit us when 'Freak Me' went #1 nationwide. We woke up and just couldn't believe it!"

Silk's mentor and Keia label head, Keith Sweat, prepared the young band well. "He told us, keep a level head, always be respectful to others and stay true to our craft," recalls Gates. Lose Control, is their first release on Keia. "Silk take what they do very seriously, and believe in working hard. All of that is very important when you're trying to succeed in a business like this."

Gates was born into it. "My dad had his own blues band, Time, E.Y. and Energy," he explains. "I was in the sixth grade, watching TV, when I saw a jazz saxophone player — he just had this really nice groove, and I started to feel it, get into it. And that's when I told my dad I wanted to get into music, too." While still in his teens, Jimmy hooked up with his co-workers Timothy Cameron and Jonathan Rashboro at the local McDonald's, and Silk was formed. (Gary Glenn and Gary Jenkins signed on in 1990 and '91, respectively.)

"When we first started, it was very easy, because we didn't plan on making it," laughs Jonathan Rashboro. "We didn't know anything about the business; we were singing for fun, doing school talent shows, a school every week. But after a year, we saw we had something good."

Enter managers Louie and Lonnie Ferguson, who'd caught wind of Silk's increasingly stellar grassroots reputation. Keith Sweat became involved after a Fourth of July barbecue at Ferguson's house. "I came over and Silk was there, singing Boyz 2 Men songs," Sweat recalls with a laugh. "They made a big impression on me. They had this soulful thing, plus great harmonies, and a nice brotherly situation. They're very versatile — it's hard to find guys who can do uptempo as well as slow material. I started working with them in the studio, and they caught on real quick."

"I learned a lot from Keith," adds Gary Glenn. "We used to have a church-y sound, because our backgrounds are gospel. He took three of us and made a blend, and built the other two of us around it, and it came out silky smooth." From the seductively funky "Happy Days," to the serene, accoutre feel of the "For the Love I Gave," Lose Control comes off both sexy and spiritual, a shimmering collection of music that's as sweet as it is unforgettable.

It's the sexy side that raised a few eyebrows with the distinctly raunchy "Freak Me." "When Keith introduced it to us, we thought it was kind of risqué ourselves," admits Jenkins. "We thought people were going to turn against us because of those lyrics, us coming out of church and all. But our fans love the song."

Dedicated artist that they are, Silk continue to advance to a higher level every day, and not just in sales. "I've gotten a chance to see what I could do," says Jenkins, "reaching people in the crowd, not just seeing someone from the stage, but making them feel exactly what you're singing about. We're a sensual, emotional kind of group and we're going to keep on bringing those kinds of feeling out of people."

Tickets are now on sale at the University Union Information Desk, Poindexter Records, and School Kids Video and Music for $6.00. The show will be at Brooks Field on Sunday, April 17th at noon.

Prong, Course of Empire

By Sam Cuthrell
Entertainment Writer

Friday night's performance of Prong with Course of Empire at the Mad Monk left a lot to be desired, as far as good concerts go. This was a repeat performance for Prong, who were just here last December with Bad Brains and Dig.

After a show of such huge proportion as that, I suspected that Prong would have a long way to go to one-up their last concert, I was right.

Course of Empire opened up shortly after 10 p.m. (there was supposedly a third band that was supposed to open, Lucy Brown, but I'm not sure what happened, they weren't around, anyway.) course of Empire released a video several weeks ago, "Infested", which was featured on MTV's 120 Minutes. This is probably one of their better songs, and it was great performed live. Course of Empire's entire show was better than I had expected it would be (after previewing their CD). I'm always a little hesitant about live performances of industrial-type music, but COE pulled it off extremely well.

Prong's set, however, just wasn't quite there. I guess seeing them with the Bad Brains tainted my judgment, but everyone I talked to seemed to be of the same opinion. (One person in particular went so far as to state "You just can't listen to an hour and a half of Prong.") Maybe he's right.

The stage presence just wasn't there this time around. Maybe they were trying too hard, maybe it was because I'd already seen them once, maybe their new CD just isn't as good as their earlier stuff. Maybe it was a combination of the three.

The Prong frontman berated the Monk staff for their attempt at stemming the violence that was erupting in the pit. (to give you some idea of how bad it was, just imagine about 20 tattooed skinheads without shirts on jumping around and hitting each other. I was scared.) Since the Monk staff "didn't do s last time" (when he was knocked unconscious by a beer bottle thrown from the crowd), then he thought that they shouldn't do anything this time, either. For added flavor, he added that the Monk security staff was the worst security staff in the world, which brought hoots from the crowd.

Bad Brains are due to reappear sometime in May. I hope that they can do a better follow-up of their last show than Prong managed to last Friday. If things are the same during their subsequent shows, then maybe Prong should consider opening for Course of Empire, instead of the other way around.

CD's To Avoid

Your Filthy Little Mouth. David Lee Roth. Reprise. Since leaving Van Halen in the mid 1980s, singer Roth has seemed lost. The Californian's move to New York a couple of years ago has given him some new subject matter (the subway, night life, the heat) but little else. Even in a more familiar vehicle, the would-be-humorous ranchy-rock of the double-entendre (car/woman) she's my Machine, Roth is just spinning in circles.

Ellen Chesler to Give Lecture On Her First Biography

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

Ellen Chesler will lecture on "Margaret Sanger: A Biographer's Journey" at 8 p.m., Wednesday April 20, in Cameron Hall auditorium. The event is free and open to the public.

Chesler wrote an authoritative biography WOMAN OF VALOR: Margaret Sanger and the Birth Control Movement in America. It was published to critical acclaim. She illuminates Sanger's turbulent personal story as well as the history of the birth control movement. Anchor Books published WOMAN OF VALOR in paperback.

Margaret Sanger went to jail in 1917 for distributing contraceptives to immigrant women from a makeshift clinic in a tenement storefront in Brooklyn. Sanger seized on contraception as the key to redistributing power to women in the bedroom, the home, and the community.

Chesler will talk about this fascinating history and its relevance to contemporary policy issues in the fields of family planning, abortion, population, and public health.

A graduate of Vassar College, Ellen Chesler holds M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in history from Columbia University. She lives with her husband and two children in New York City.

This lecture is being sponsored by: The Office of the Dean, College of Arts and Science, the Faculty Women's Network, the department of history, the YWCA, the North Carolina Nurses Association, District 22, Nu Omega Chapter, Sigma Theta Tau, and the New Hanover County Commission on the Status of Women. For more information contact the history department at 395-3307.

Second "Chancellor's Forum" to examine Legacy of Communism

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will host another "Chancellor's Forum" panel discussion to examine "the Legacy of Communism" at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, April 14, in Cameron Auditorium. Four guests, Ambassador Gennadi Gerasimov, Dr. Richard Stites, Dr. Susan McCaffray and Dr. Bill Wadman, will discuss what will be left behind in the former Soviet Union after 70 years of communist rule. Dr. James R. Leutze will serve as moderator.

Ambassador Gennadi Gerasimov, visiting professor in communication studies and political science at UNCW, is from Russia. He was spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs under Mikhail Gorbachev and ambassador to Portugal under Boris Yeltsin. He will be talking on "Russian Views of the Outside World".

Dr. Richard Stites is a history professor at Georgetown University. He is currently working on a book about popular culture in post-Soviet Russia. He also written several other books about Russia. He will speak on "Popular Culture in Post-Soviet Russia".

Dr. Susan McCaffray is an associate professor of history at UNCW. She has been on a previous panel discussing the rapid changes in the Soviet Union. She has also edited a book by historian W. Bruce Lincoln, The Great Reforms: Autocracy, Bureaucracy and the Politics of Change in Imperial Russia. She will talk about "The Capitalist Spirit in Post-Soviet Russia".

Dr. Bill Wadman is an associate professor of economics and finance at UNCW. He has taught a class called comparative economic systems for the last eight years. This class looks into communism, socialism and capitalism in different countries around the world. He will speak on "Is Communism Truly Dead as an Alternative to Capitalism?"

The panel will offer short presentations on their topic followed by discussion and questions from the audience.

The event is being sponsored by the departments of history, political science, philosophy, and religion, The college of Arts and Sciences, and The Cameron School of Business. The program is free and open to the public.

UNIVERSITY GOVERNANCE COMMITTEES

These committees are designed to provide students opportunities for active involvement in campus life. All students are encouraged to participate, either as a student representative to one of these committees or indirectly through input to the student representative. Both types of participation can assist students in the development of leadership skills and the improvement of campus life.

CHANCELLOR'S ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEES

The chancellor appoints students to several important committees. The students are first nominated by the Student Government Association, then approved by the chancellor. To participate on any of the following chancellor's committees, stop by or call the SGA office. Let them know you want to get involved.

Campus Judicial Board (six students)

As the highest disciplinary hearing body of the University, its main function is to educate and discipline students. Applications for appointments are in the SGA office. This committee meets every Tuesday from 3:15 until 5:00 pm. Training and advising provided by the Dean of Students Office.

Student Organizations Committee (five students)

Reviews all areas pertaining to student organizations, including registration of student organizations, making recommendations for "The Code of Student Life," and serving as a judicial committee when needed. Applications for appointment are in the SGA office. Advising provided by the Student Activities Office and the Dean of Students Office.

Human Relations Committee (unlimited)

Advises the chancellor on issues relevant to human relations, as well as serves as a task force and "working" committee when deemed appropriate.

Parking Appeals Committee (four students)

Hears appeals of students, faculty and staff who believe they have unjustly received parking tickets on campus.

Calendar Committee (two students)

Makes the schedule of the academic year, including the scheduling of commencement, holidays and length of terms.

Athletic Council (two students)

Reviews general services and recommends policies pertaining to athletic programs and athletic facilities on campus.

Safety Advisory Committee (four students)

Advises the chancellor on matters of public safety on campus.

Student Health and Wellness Committee (three students)

Acts in an advisory capacity to the director of the Student Health and Wellness Center in matters regarding the management and operations of the services and programs.

Building and Grounds Committee (two students)

Aids in the formulation of plans and policies concerning buildings, roads, and grounds of the university, including use, maintenance, safety, security, and development of the physical facilities of the university and forwards resulting recommendations on policy.

Chancellor's Substance Abuse Advisory Board (ten students)

Acts in an advisory capacity in matters regarding substance abuse education and prevention on campus. Sees to the establishment of policies and procedures and the general operation of the campus Substance Abuse and Prevention Center.

University Union Board (ten students)

Acts in an advisory capacity to the director of the University Union in matters regarding the management and operation of the Union.

University-Community Relations Committee (three students)

Develops methods of cooperation and positive relationships between the University and its surrounding community. Identifies ways in which the University and the community can work together, and be supportive of each other. Finds ways of assisting the University in maintaining a positive image within the community and assists the University and the community in anticipating and adapting to the changes that accompany university and community growth.

Chancellor's Advisory Committee Regarding AIDS (one student)

Advises on policies, procedures, and educational efforts needed to deal with AIDS and AIDS-related issues on campus.

Investigating and Hearing Panels (five students)

Secures the rights of students to freely discuss and express personal opinions. Also, ensuring that these discussions and other expressions do not willfully disrupt the educational process, destruction of property, or interfere with the rights of others within the community.

FACULTY SENATE COMMITTEES

The Faculty Senate offers students the opportunity to become a part of their standing committees. The positions for students are first nominated by the Student Government Association, then approved by the Faculty Senate.

Bookstore Committee (two students)

Aids the bookstore manager in the formulation of general bookstore policy, in the development of bookstore services, and serves as a liaison between the bookstore, faculty and students.

Computer Services Committee (one student)

Aids Academic Computing Services in the formulation of general academic computing policy and in the development of academic computing services, as well as advises the director of Computer and Information Systems in the allocation of academic computing resources.

Library (two students)

Aids the director of Library Services in the formulation of general library policy and in the general development of library services, as well as advises the director in the allocation of funds.

Evaluation Committee (one student)

Reviews existing and proposed evaluation instruments and procedures, including student perceptions of teaching effectiveness, peer evaluation of faculty, and faculty evaluation of administration.

Largest Donation in University History Benefits School of Education

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

Trustee Chair Eunice T. (Bambi) MacRae and Chancellor James R. Leutze today announced that the university's School of Education will be named for the late Donald P. Watson, in recognition of his most recent contributions to the university.

Watson's donation, which brings his lifetime giving to the university to more than $2 million, establishes a distinguished professorship and an endowment for the School of Education plus a major merit scholarship program for the university.

With this gift, the largest in UNCW's history to date, the $15 million capital campaign is now at $13 million. MacRae and Leutze announced the donation at the regular quarterly meeting of the UNCW Board of Trustees. "This is an historic occasion because Don Watson has done something of significance that will have an important impact for years to come," Leutze said. "He was a man of vision. Not only was he thinking of what would help the school in 1994, but he looked ahead to 2094. This is an important endowment."

Robert Warwick, co-chairman of the capital campaign, agreed, saying, "It's a major gift that will be an asset to the university from now on."

A long-time Wilmington businessman and former president of Pepsi Cola Bottling Company of Wilmington, Watson believed the key to economic prosperity in the Cape Fear area was through education. His way of insuring that was by providing financial support to the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, particularly the School of Education.

A donation of property valued at approximately $1.3 million was made jointly last year by Watson and business partner Carl Brown. That contribution was used to establish two endowed chairs, one in the School of Education and another in marine sciences.

"Don Watson was a real leader who was extremely generous with his wealth and assets. He believed education was very important to the people of Wilmington and New Hanover County and that the university was a major factor in the economic development of the county," Warwick said.

"He really did have a giving way about him. He was very generous. When something was shown to him and there was a need, and it would benefit a large number of people, he was willing to go out and work for it," said Brown, who was both a business partner and a close friend of Watson.

A portrait of Watson, who passed away March 19, will hang in King Hall which houses the Donald R. Watson School of Education.

Before Watson's death, the School of Education presented him with a resolution which recognized the dedication in his "personal, public and business life to advancing the quality of life for the citizens of Wilmington".

The resolution also pointed out that Watson "expressed his beliefs in the mission of the School of Education in producing teachers for public schools who are of the highest intellectual ability, who demonstrate excellence in technical competencies and who display a deep and abiding passion for developing the minds of our community's youth."

Controlled Burns to Protect Long-Leaf Pine?

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

Controlled burns on the undeveloped portions of the UNCW campus is the topic of a panel discussion at 7 p.m., Wednesday, April 20, in Kenan Auditorium. The group will examine the feasibility, impacts and positive effects of these burns to protect the long-leaf pines. This is sponsored by the Chancellor's office, Biology Club, and the Environmental Concerns Organization of UNCW.

"Fires are needed to control the local ecology. To protect the native long-leaf pine forest, a burn is desperately needed. The long-leaf pine is dependent on fire to regenerate the seed bed and remove the competitive hardwoods," said Heather Woodson, president of the UNCW Biology Club and event organizer.

A controlled burn on campus would be supervised by the Nature Conservancy and local fire officials, who will be present at the discussion to address concerns or questions. Qualified members of the university faculty and staff as well as county and city officials will also be present.

The public is encouraged to attend the panel discussion and is free of charge.

Senior Athlete Profile

BY JOELLE KIBLER
Sports Writer

Mike Rhodes is a senior on this year's UNCW's Track and Cross-Country team. This distance runner from Tampa, Florida will graduate in May of 1994 with a degree in Criminal Justice and a minor in Sociology.

Mike's interest in running sparked from his sixth grade physical educator, Coach Wilson, who entered him in a school race one day because he thought Mike would be good. Mike just happened to win that race and since he proved to be a good runner, Mike remained with this sport throughout junior high and high school. Mike went on to college for a while and then decided to join the Marine Corps. He has been an active Marine for the past sixteen years. Since Mike is currently an officer without a college degree, the Marine Corps decided to put him through college to obtain a degree.

Mike transferred to UNCW in the Fall of 1992, because he "didn't want to go to a large school and to get lost in the crowd again." Mike states the main reason he came to UNCW was because Douglas Johnson in the registrar's office made him feel comfortable and special treating him like an individual. Originally when Mike came to UNCW, he was looking to be an assistant coach for the Track and Cross-Country team. He thought about competing but thought it was impossible at age thirty-five. However when Coach Sprecher asked Mike about his running times, he suggested that Mike should wear a uniform. So Mike trained all last season and worked hard to be a part of this years UNCW's Track and Cross-Country team as a senior.

Mike has greatly benefited from being a part of a UNCW athletic program. Mike states, "For me to come back and do this - compete collegiately - is a dream come true. The 'young studs' on the team help push me and motivate me; we all get along like a little family." Mike also credits his 4.0 GPA to being on an athletic program. Mike comments on the nature of running by saying, "Running for me helps me in everything I do. I feel better. I feel energetic. I love the competition - competition is what it is all about."

Mike feels the program has doubted in its development over just this past season. "Coach Sprecher is heavy into recruiting beating the streets getting quality athletes. It has grown a lot, he is recruiting people for every event," comments Mike. The only thing that Mike would like to see changed in the program is to have more emphasis on the program itself starting from the top down.

Mike expects this years UNCW track team to finish in the top three at the conference meet. He hopes to finish his one and only one season as a Seahawk strong with the will of always striving to do better.

Mike has a great support system and reiterates this by saying, "Anyone that knows me supports me." Mike receives support from his wife, mother, sister, brother, "roadrunners", professors, and students. He also receives support from his teammates who keep him going, especially Douglas Liming who helps Mike out a lot and motivates him. "My coaches have also always supported me in everything. They want you to excel and reach your goals, and they always stay on us about academics," Mike speaks highly of Coach Sprecher and assistant Coach Sanders.

Mike is currently a Criminal Investigator and after graduation he hopes to go on to law school to become a prosecutor. Mike also would like to continue to compete in the road-race circuit, biathlons, and triathlons. Mike comments, "No matter what I do, I want to do it the best."

Mike sums up his UNCW experience by saying: "I wouldn't trade it for anything at all in the world - nothing. I'm glad I came here and I'll never forget it."

This Week In Sports

Track & Field

The Seahawks, making their fifth appearance of the outdoor season, continued to enjoy a strong spring campaign by competing in the mammoth Duke Invitational over the weekend.

Coach Jim Sprecher's young squad, one of approximately 100 teams seeing action in Durham, tuned up for this week's CAA championships with some solid times.

In women's action, three thinclads snapped school records. Junior Heather Fenton broke her own mark in the 1,500 Meters with a time of 4:38.98, freshman Sara White snapped her record in the 400 Hurdles with a 1:04.09 and first-year performer Kim Wolfer added two more feet to her standard in the hammer throw with a toss of 106-2.

On the men's side, freshman Thomas Coughlin led a strong showing in the middle distance events, running 3:56.39 in the 1,500 Meters. Sophomore Jeff Teigs and junior Tim Cox also broke the four-minute barrier, clocking 3:57.83 and 3:58.50 respectively.

Freshman Terrell Macklin sliced time off his 400 Meters record, racing to a 49.29, and the 400 Meter Relay team of freshman Joseph Harder, freshman Freddie Gaines, sophomore Sean Thomas and junior Steve Benfield took another tenth off the school record with a time of 43.5.

Softball

The Lady Seahawks went 0-4 in the Tar Heel Invitational over the weekend, extending their losing streak to seven games. Overall, UNCW has lost 12 of its last 13 contests on the softball diamond.

Coach Maggie St. Ledger's experienced a power shortage in dropping games to national power Florida State (5-0), East Carolina (3-1), Georgia Tech (9-1) and UNC Charlotte (4-3) in the Chapel Hill tournament.

As a team, UNCW is batting .280 to .307 for opponents. Individually, senior Luellyn Piver paces the team at the plate, batting .392 with team highs in hits (47), RBI's (33), doubles (12) and triples (4).

The Lady Seahawks, who stand 9-5 at home this spring, entertain Mt. Olive Tuesday in a doubleheader at the UNCW softball field, starting at 3p.m.

Baseball

The Seahawks captured two of three games from conference rival George Mason over the weekend to move into a second place tie with Richmond in the Colonial athletic Association.

UNCW swept a doubleheader from the Patriots on Saturday behind a strong pitching performance by Brian Smith and John Babson. A senior righthander, Smith allowed no earned runs in nine innings, striking out six, and Babson claimed his fifth straight decision to improve to 6-2 on the season.

Senior third baseman Battle Holley went 2-for-10 in the GMU series to fall to .382 on the season. He continues to lead the team in almost every offensively category, including batting averages, at-bats (152), runs (31), hits (58), RBI's (27), doubles (11) and homers (7).

The Seahawks are struggling with three in scoring position, hitting .236 when runners are on second or third. In the GMU series, UNCW went 5-for-30 with men in scoring position.

Freshman Bryan Britt enjoyed an outstanding week at the plate for the Seahawks, the Wilmington product (E.A. Laney HS) went 7-for-19 and drove in seven runs as UNCW posted a 4-1 record. Britt's totals included three doubles and one homer.

UNCW steps out of the league for three mid-week games this week before entertaining first place Old Dominion in a key CAA series this weekend. UNCW's busy week has the Seahawks hosting Campbell and N.C. State at 7p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday, before traveling to The Citadel on Thursday for a 6p.m. tilt.

Golf

Coach Lea Dudley's Lady Seahawks closed out the 1994 season by capturing the Azalea-Seahawk Invitational over the weekend at Topsis Greens Golf Club.

The women trailed by four shots after the first day and cut the deficit two strokes following the second round before fashioning a 319 on the final day for a five-stroke victory.

Individually, senior Gwen Gravina fired at 76-86-76=238 to end up tied for third behind Longwood's Charlaene Coetzee and Charleston's Eve Lux.

Azalea-Seahawk Invitational Team Results: UNC Wilmington (329-329-319=977), Methodist (333-323-326=982), Charleston (340-329-325=994), Alabama-Birmingham (330-338-336=1004), Longwood (341-343-324=1008), Dartmouth (407-375-377=1159), Concord (469-448-448=1365).

News Briefs

Rodney King wins $3.8 million

LOS ANGELES — Rodney King, the motorist beaten by police officers in 1991, was awarded $3.8 million in compensatory damages on Tuesday.

Beginning today, the jury will decide whether 14 defendants, including the officers who beat King and former L.A. Police Chief Daryl Gates, must pay punitive damages.

Zulus join South African vote

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi launched his campaign for president one day after ending a boycott of South Africa's first all-race elections.

In leading his Inkatha Freedom Party into next week's election, Buthelezi backed off his demand for a sovereign homeland for the country's 7.5 million Zulus.

Make school tougher, Americans say in poll

NEW YORK — Americans favor making education tougher by adding several weeks to the school year, increasing homework and imposing a national curriculum, according to an Associated Press poll.

Low test scores have fed doubts about whether U.S. schools measure up to those of economic competitors such as Germany and Japan.

Clinton seeks more air strikes against Serbs

WASHINGTON — President Clinton began lobbying allies Wednesday to step up NATO air strikes against Serb forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Clinton will consult with NATO and Russian President Boris Yeltsin, a Serb ally. The United States will offer a plan to NATO in the next few days.

High court strikes down sex bias in picking juries

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that lawyers may not exclude jurors from a trial on the basis of sex.

The 6-3 decision should end sexual stereotypes about juror sympathies in choosing panels for criminal and civil cases. Sex discrimination in jury selection is as unconstitutional as racial bias, said the court. Justice Harry Blackmun said in the majority opinion.

Stroke puts Nixon in critical condition

NEW YORK — Former President Nixon was in critical condition Wednesday with swelling of the brain, one day after suffering a major stroke. Nixon, 81, was partially paralyzed on his right side.

How To Have A Hassle Free Tassel Day May 14

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

For about 900 students at UNCW, it's cap and gown time. For everyone who plans to walk down that isle, here are your official instructions for having a "hassle-free tassel day!"

Caps and Gowns can be picked up from the UNCW bookstore from April 25-May 14 between the hours of 7:45 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Size is determined when you pick up your cap and gown. The cost was included in your $50 graduation application fee. Pick up your tickets at the same time. Each graduate gets five tickets due to limited seating in Trask.

On graduation morning, the bookstore will open at 7:45. For everyone who was too busy running around with their heads cut off to pick up their stuff before that.

Remember to pay any debts or fines by May 10!!! You will not be issued a diploma or have transcripts forwarded if you owe money.

All graduating students must meet in Hanover Hall no later than 9:15 a.m. on the morning of May 14. The Dean of Students Office will coordinate the processional led by student marshals. Students will be recognized as a group by degree. Some awards will be given at commencement. These include: the Alumni Award is presented to the senior with the highest grade point average; the Hoggard Medal is presented to the senior showing the most improvement during his/her years at UNCW; and the Senior Leadership Award is presented to the senior showing outstanding leadership experience on campus or in the community.

Thirty minutes after commencement ends, Academic Departments host receptions for their graduates and their guests. Diplomas are given at the receptions. More awards are also given.

The university asks that students behave with a certain degree of decorum during the ceremony. According to the "How to Have a Hassle Free Tassel Day" pamphlet, "use of alcoholic beverages or participation in other disruptive activities during the ceremony is not considered appropriate behavior. Also, the cap and gown should be worn with pride; not defaced by printed signs or messages; and worn without additional ceremonial attire."

That's all there is to it! Get all your last minute details taken care of and I'll see you in Hoggard Hall at 9:15 a.m. on Saturday, May 14, 1994...A day that will live in infamy!

UNCW Students Win Honors In English Writing Competitions

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

Dr. Richard Veit, chair of the English Department, presented a number of awards to UNCW students during the English Club end-of-the-year party Monday night at Dr. Keith Newlin's home.

Veit awarded the English Department's Textbook Scholarship Awards to Robin Sue Tysinger and Harry Van Esendelft. The recipients were chosen by the English Department faculty. The scholarships were provided by the University Bookstore.

Tysinger and Van Esendelft will each have $125 towards the purchase of textbooks and supplies in the University Bookstore at the beginning of either the fall or spring semester during the next academic year.

The annual awards for the Sam Ragan Poetry Contest were given to the following: Barbara Block for 1st place; Ginny Ivamoto for 2nd place; and Catherine Sexton, for 3rd place. Winners were awarded $50, $30, and $20 were awarded respectively.

Winners of the Jesse Redner Short-fiction Contest were Jeffrey Becker, 1st place; Cathryn Hayes, 2nd place; and Barbara Block, 3rd place. Respective awards for the amount of $50, $30, and $20 were given.

The English Club Writing Contest winners were also announced for three separate categories. In Poetry, Dawn Radford's "Blood Sister" took first place, and Barbara Block's "The Road Taken" won second place.

In the fiction category, "After Great Pain a Formal Feeling Comes" by Barbara Block was chosen first place winner and June Oravits' "Bugs and Bones" second place.

The Essay category yielded "Lawn Mowers Make Good Friends" by June Oravits for first place and "Bill" by Harry Van Esendelft was chosen for second place.

First place winners of all three categories received $15 gift certificates to local bookstores. Second place entries were awarded $10 certificates.

The English Club Writing Contest was funded by Bristol Books, Little Professor Book Center, Publisher's Warehouse, Two Sisters Bookery, and Between-the-Lines.

The Literary Journal Surfaces At UNCW

BY AMY BRENNAN
Executive Editor

The legendary lost underwater continent of Atlantis is representative of creativity and wisdom and the effect of those things on all cultures. UNCW's literary and art journal, the Atlantis, strives to carry on that tradition of beauty and thought. The thirty-fourth volume of the magazine is back from the printer and is free to all students.

The Atlantis contains original photographs, poems, drawings, paintings, and short stories by UNCW students.

Editor, Amie Childers says the Atlantis strives to publish a variety of work. "We look for work that's not cliché, that hasn't been done over and over again. We like to use stuff that's a little bit beyond," Childers said. "All the work that's picked is strong. It says a lot about UNCW and what's going on."

All the literary submissions were given anonymous codes and then judged by student judges in each genre. Art work was judged by Bauhaus Art Studio/Gallery.

Childers says one of the great things about the Atlantis is that it gives students a way to be published and get recognition for their work. She said some of the contributors are good enough to be published nationally.

Despite its value as a literary magazine, the Atlantis has always been rather quiet. Childers wishes more students would get involved with the magazine, whether through submissions or working on the staff.

The Atlantis will have its premier at Bauhaus Gallery at 7 p.m., April 29, at 130 North Front Street. There will be an author reading as well as an open mike. The Atlantis staff is planning a fundraiser for the Spring. The magazine must raise money to cover printing costs.

Copies of the Atlantis can be found in Randall Library, University Union and Center, Morton and Keran Halls, St. John's Museum of Art, Cafe Phoenix, Bristol Books, and the Bauhaus Gallery.

The symbol on the front cover is different than that of past editions. The old symbol was supposedly inscribed on the stones of sacrificial alters of Atlantis. This new symbol is in the shape of the continent and has lines extending in all directions which represent the pulls of creative impact Atlantis has on all people.

UNCW Board of Trustee's Meeting

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington Board of Trustees approved the refinancing of the Trask Coliseum bond which will result in a net savings of $276,000.

The trustees, who met April 12 and 13, also adopted a resolution rescinding their support of the effort to build Greek housing off-campus. The trustees had agreed not to build any on-campus residence halls for a 5-year period.

The agreement not to build on-campus housing was contingent on the success of getting the off-campus project off the ground. The Student Affairs Committee reported that despite best efforts, no financing was found to support the project.

The decision to rescind the housing agreement opens the door for the possibility of building new on-campus residence halls, although none is planned at present.

The board of trustees also approved a recommendation by the Business Affairs Committee that mandatory student fees be increased from $267 to $279. The $12 increase will go towards the student union fees supporting cultural programming activities and events.

The Business Affairs Committee also recommended a one-time orientation fee of $15 be charged for new admission students. This action was approved by the trustees.

The Academic Affairs recommended the marine biology facility at Myrtle Grove be funded before any significant expansion of the Morehead City facility. This was approved by the trustees.

The Myrtle Grove facility is part of 50-acres being developed for marine biology studies in the North Carolina University system. Although there will be some modest expansion at the Morehead City site, the bulk of development will take place at Myrtle Grove.

The trustees also agreed to a recommendation that UNCW and UNC-Chapel Hill cooperate in a Ph.D. in Marine Sciences program.

In a special meeting of the Board of Trustees on Tuesday, April 12, the School of Education was officially renamed the Donald R. Watson School of Education.

This action was taken to recognize over $2 million worth of gifts and other philanthropic efforts by Donald R. Watson. These gifts bring the Capital Campaign funding to a total of $15 million.

In other actions taken by the Board of Trustees, a change in parking regulations was approved. The trustees agreed to establishing a fine of $25 for anyone parking over one-hour in designated parking space in front of the Student Wellness Center. The issue was brought to the attention of the trustees following complaints by students attempting access to the Student Wellness Center.

At A Glance

The Chancellor's Student Hours are Thursday, April 28.

The Chancellor's Student Health and Wellness Center Advisory Committee wishes to invite students representing the diversity of our campus population to apply for membership in this committee for the 1994-95 academic year.

The general purpose of the committee is to act in an advisory capacity regarding policy and administrative matters concerning those matters involving medical procedures. Members are appointed by the Chancellor. It will promote an understanding of the role and function of the Student Health and Wellness Center in the university community. The committee will hear complaints about alleged inequities in student health services and make appropriate recommendations to the vice chancellor for student affairs.

A one-session workshop, PREPARING TO TAKE THE GRE will be presented on two dates, Monday, April 25 and Tuesday, April 26 from 4-5:30 p.m. in the Social Behavior Building room 106. Graduate Record Exam scores are required for application to a variety of graduate programs, including many at UNCW. The workshop is particularly designed for those taking the GRE in October or December of 1994, but those planning on taking the test at other times, including this June are urged to attend. The program will emphasize the GRE Aptitude Test, reviewing its contents and scoring and providing some suggestions on both preparing for and taking the test. Some review materials will be provided. GRE information/application booklets are available at the Student Development Center in Westside Hall. Sponsored by the Department of Psychology and the Graduate School, the workshop will be presented by Robert T. Brown of the Psychology Department. There is no charge for the workshop.

Play It Again Sports announces Spring Skatefest Sunday, May 1 from 1-6p.m. at the Wagoner Hall parking lot in the rear of UNCW. There will be clinics for beginning In-Line skaters and novice skaters, as well as hockey and races. The cost is $12 and includes "Spring Skatefest" T-shirt. Payment must be made at Play It Again Sports at 351-25 South College Road by 7 p.m., Friday, April 22.

You're invited to come enjoy All That Jazz II, a lively spring Fashion Show and dinner. Sponsored by the University Women of UNCW, the proceeds go to their scholarship fund. The program begins at 7 p.m., Thursday, April 28, in the University Center Ballroom. Tickets are $15 and are available at the UNCW Information Center or call 395-3841 for other ticket outlets.

The value of each scholarship varies. Interested persons should contact their local Rotary Clubs for application materials and local deadline information. Students from New Hanover County can obtain information and application forms by writing to: Rotary Scholarship Program, c/o Wilmington Machinery, 4628 North Chase Parkway, Wilmington, NC 28405. No clubs may accept completed applications after June 1, 1994, and some may set earlier deadlines.

Attention children of disabled, deceased, or POW/MIA veterans: If your father was a resident of North Carolina when he entered the service, or if you are a lifelong resident of North Carolina, you may be eligible for a scholarship from the state of North Carolina to attend one of the universities, community colleges or technical institutes within the state of North Carolina. For details contact your school guidance counselor or the New Hanover County Veterans Service Office at 251-9934 or write to the District Office, NC Division of Veterans Affairs, 721 Market St., Wilmington, NC 28401.

The UNCW Alumni Association is on the Move!

The Office of Alumni Relations will now be located in the Wise Alumni House at 1713 Market Street, next to Chancellor Leutze's residence. The move takes place on May 2.

Director of Alumni Relations, Pat Corcoran, wants students to know they are welcome to drop by and visit any time. If you have any questions, or just want some more information, their new number is 763-1748. They're always eager to chat!

Ice Patrol Ship HMS ENDURANCE to Visit Wilmington April 28-May 6

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

The British Navy's Ice Patrol Ship HMS ENDURANCE will visit Wilmington April 28-May 6. The public is invited to attend welcoming ceremonies at the Coast Guard Dock at Riverfront Park starting at about 10 a.m., followed by bagging by Kirk Rose. The New Hanover High School Band will provide music for the occasion starting at 9:30 a.m.

HMS ENDURANCE has a company of 16 officers and 105 men. British Antarctic Survey scientists are also carried for short periods. The ship comes to Wilmington after being deployed in Antarctica since December 1993. This will be the third visit for this particular ship, and the fourth for the crew of ENDURANCE.

Once again the popular Dial-A-Sailor program is being offered starting April 28. Families or individuals who are interested in hosting a sailor for meals, shopping, or other recreation are invited to call 799-4254 or 343-2994, the on-ship number.

Although the ship will not be open for general public tours, visiting will be allowed everyday from 10-11 a.m. for groups of 20 or fewer except on the day of arrival and May 2. The hours for Sunday, May 1 are 12-2 p.m. Tours must be pre-arranged. To make reservations for these visits, call the Dial-A-Sailor number 799-4254 before the ship arrives; after the ship arrives call 343-2994.

The Cape Fear Rugby club will host the sailors in a game at 1:00 p.m., Saturday, April 30, at Legion Stadium. The Michelob of Wilmington Soccer Club will host a soccer match at 2:00 p.m., Sunday, May 1 (place to be announced). The public is invited to watch both of these activities.

Local businesses who want to give special discounts or coupons for the crew of the Endurance, please call Dial-A-Sailor at 799-4254 before 5:00 p.m., Monday, April 25.

Captain of the HMS ENDURANCE is Alan Phillips of the Royal Navy, who was educated at Britannia Royal Naval College in Dartmouth. He assumed command on June 30, 1993.

Formerly the HMS POLAR CIRCLE, HMS ENDURANCE was originally built in Norway and launched in 1990 as class 1A1 ice-breaker MV POLAR CIRCLE. Conversion work was done enabling operation of two Lynx helicopters, and POLAR CIRCLE was commissioned in November 21, 1991, to replace the former HMS ENDURANCE and continue her work. ENDURANCE had maintained a British presence in Antarctica and the Falkland Island Dependencies since 1968. She also earned the Wilkinson sword of Peace for the Royal Navy for her work supporting the British Antarctic Survey. POLAR CIRCLE WAS RENAMED HMS ENDURANCE in October 1992.

Powered by twin diesel engines, she has a top speed of 15 knots and long range capability. The ice breaker bow enables the ship to cut through 0.9 m thick ice at 3 knots. She is 91 m long with a beam of 17.9 m and displaces 2500 tons. The red hull of the ENDURANCE makes her easily recognizable from the air, and her bridge is fitted with some of the most sophisticated navigation and maneuvering aids in the world. ENDURANCE will depart Wilmington at 10 a.m., Friday, May 6.

Mercy Ship Says "Thank You" for Enthusiastic Reception

RECORD CROWDS ARE expected to have toured the world's largest non-governmental hospital ship by the time she leaves the city in a few days.

Hundreds more people have turned out to see the visiting "Mercy Ship" than during the last time she was in Wilmington, in 1990.

And as visit organizers prepared for a busy final weekend opening the ship's decks to the public, they paid tribute to the people of Wilmington for making the stay "such an enjoyable time."

The 11/695 on Anastasis arrived at the Port of Wilmington on April 6, the second stop in a five-port goodwill tour of the East Coast.

In the four years since the flagship of the Lindale, Texas-based Mercy Ships fleet was last in the United States she has sailed with free medical care and developmental help to six African countries.

During her four-month "Homecoming Tour," the 522-foot ship is reporting back on her latest missions of mercy, and gathering donated materials and volunteers for her next voyages.

The largest turnouts in Wilmington follow similar enthusiasm in her first port of call. Her three weeks in Jacksonville drew 11,500 visitors and saw donations of goods and supplies totaling almost $250,000.

"We won't know for some time, but the full results of this particular visit, the warm response of the people of Wilmington has once again overwhelmed us. We are so grateful," said Bernie Kay, a member of the Advance Team coordinating the stay.

Individuals as well as church, medical and community groups have visited the ship to learn more about her work firsthand from crew and medical staff.

"We are hoping that we might see many volunteers from the area sailing with us in the future," added Kay.

A converted cruise liner complete with operating rooms and ward, the Anastasis is equipped entirely through donations and manned completely by volunteers—including crew and medical staff.

Together with two smaller, sister ships the Anastasis saw Mercy Ships give away over $3.5 million worth of free care last year.

The flagship returned to the US from Senegal, West Africa, where in a four-month stay she performed more than 300 operations and over 2,000 dental treatments, as well as delivering materials worth $558,000.

Her time in Wilmington has been officially declared "Mercy Ship Anastasis Week" by State governor James Hunt.

From North Carolina, the ship sails to Norfolk, Virginia, and then on to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Albany, New York. Later this year she returns to Africa, to spend five months in Ghana.

Hour-long tours of the Anastasis take place daily, Wednesday through Saturday between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m., with final visits possible on Sunday, April 24 from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Interviewing at Ease

BY KRISTI BROWN

Hey, job hunter! Do you want to know how to make a good impression at an interview and be a success?

Don't worry. Every one gets nervous during job interviews. Everyone from high-priced executives to minimum-wage workers. You are not alone.

Career experts give the following advice about interviewing.

*Market yourself as a unique product.

You need to polish your interviewing techniques more than ever before. Why? Because there are fewer good jobs. The competition is sharper. And companies have improved their hiring procedures.

*Plan, plan, plan!

Take the advice of the late Green Bay Packers coach, Vince Lombardi, "Practice doesn't make perfect—perfect practice makes perfect."

Learn as much as possible about the company and its key players. You won't use most of the information, but your knowledge of the company will show you're serious.

Do a mock interview with a friend. Get instant feedback on your answers, the volume and rhythm of your voice and your physical mannerisms.

*Relax, relax, relax!

Arrive near or at the employer's office well before your interview. Don't announce yourself, though, until five or ten minutes before your appointment.

Calm down. Take a few deep breaths. Like an athlete, visualize yourself doing well. Pray or meditate. Think positive, up lifting words or image—whatever gives you confidence.

Research shows that introverts do better in interviews because they prepare thoughtful answers, Nandruft said. They also tend to be better listeners than extroverts. And they're good observers who read others well.

Extroverts benefit from their easy smiles and outgoing personalities. But they tend to ramble and give lengthy answers.

Preparing for an interview won't guarantee you the job. But it will help a lot. A strong, well-coached job seeker will always have a big edge over others.

UNCW Professor Wins Chapbook Competition

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

The North Carolina Writers' Network has announced that Professor Kathleen Halme of UNCW has been chosen the 1994 Harpersprints Chapbook Competition winner.

This honor is given annually to one North Carolina writer for an exceptional collection of poetry. Halme will receive an award of $300, 50 copies of the chapbook, and will be honored at a public reading and reception following publication of the winning chapbook.

Halme is an assistant professor of English at UNCW teaching creative writing and composition. She will also be teaching at the UNCW Oceanside Writers' Conference to be held June 12-17. Halme holds an M.F.A. in Creative Writing-Poetry from the University of Michigan.

She has been the recipient of a number of fellowships and awards including Alan Collins Scholar to Breadth/Writers' Conference, Cahill Research Award, Emerging Artist's Grant, National Endowment for the Humanities Grant, and the Jules and Avery Hopwood Award.

Halme has served as Poetry Editor for The North Carolina Humanities Review and presenter for the North Carolina Center for the Advancement of Teaching.

Some of her publications include

"Desire Lines," "Carnivores," "The Everlasting Universe of Things," and "Delish in Dixie" in American Voice and Virginia Quarterly Review; "Anthropological Quarterly," "A Poet's Sampler," introduced by Alice Fulton in The Boston Review; "Aspirations and Postulations" in Michigan Quarterly; and "English to English" in North American Review.

The 1994 Harpersprints Chapbook Competition program was made possible by Harpersprints, the North Carolina Arts Council, the National Endowment for the Arts, and the North Carolina Writers' Network.

Well, it's finally come down to it...my last issue as Executive Editor of the Seahawk. I'm going to do that senior thing and say goodbye and thanks for everything.

I don't really feel like I had the typical college experience. I've lived in Wilmington for a long time now. When I applied to colleges, I got accepted at others, but at the last minute I decided I didn't want to leave the beach or my friends. OK, so I had a boyfriend that I didn't want to leave either, although I realize now that he wasn't a good enough reason to stay. At my rate, since I lived at home and hung out with my friends that I'd grown up with, I didn't spend a lot of time on campus except going to class. As a result, I only met college students in class and at parties. Not exactly the best way to get to know people. Anyway, I feel like I didn't get that stereotypical college experience. I'm kinda sad about that now.

Working at the Seahawk has been the most important part of college for me. It helped me meet a lot of people and experience the events that I used to blow off. There have been times when I've hated this job and the people who walked through the door wanting something or complaining about something in the paper. But it really has been great. I'm going to miss it in a demented sort of way. I've been counting down for so long and now that it's here and the new editor is making plans, I feel little pangs.

I wish I'd done a lot of things different. I tried to do a good job. I'd like to say I always did my best, but that might not be true. I did work hard and I did care about putting out a good paper, but I wanted to make everyone happy. When I realized I couldn't satisfy everyone no matter how hard I tried, it really put a damper on my spirit.

I want to thank all of the people who worked here for putting so much heart into a job that was very unrewarding at times. Thanks for putting up with all my shit—especially when I turn into the Mega Bitch when I get hungry. I couldn't have done it without you, even though I didn't say that very often. You guys are supposed to be able to read my mind and know these things. I'm going to miss all of you.

There are people I've dealt with for stories that I would rather not have printed. I've had to print things that people would rather not have printed. Whether you believe it or not, it was nothing personal. It was my job. It's the part of my job that I like least. It's enough to make me think about some other line of profession.

I can't quit without thanking some other people as well. Dr. Röhler, you've been incredibly helpful and supportive with everything. Dr. Noor-Al-Deen, I took every class I possibly could with you. I always learned a lot and thought a lot about what I was learning. Dr. Weiss, you gave me a few unexpected pats on the back, and it really meant a lot. And of course, Dr. McKinney has been with me since the beginning. I also have to thank Mimi Cunningham, for having confidence in me and believing in me when I didn't believe in myself. I learned so much from you. I think I might like to continue in that field. Lastly, Cheryl and Barbara in the Dean of Students Office. You helped me make it through. I absolutely couldn't have done it without you!!!

Reading back over this, it kinda has a sad tone to it. I didn't mean to sound bitter or sad...that's not the case at all. It's just supposed to be sincere.

Anyway, I guess that this is really it. I don't have much else to say. Good luck with the paper next year, June. I know you'll do a great job! See ya!

Jim Clark

Goodbye, Farewell, Amen

Has it come to this? On and off for three years, I've written for this newspaper and now the final issue is here. I wish I could say I had bitter-sweet feelings about this, but I don't. I am glad this is the final issue.

When I came here, my first impression of the school was how it was improving as an institution of higher learning. The Cameron School of Business was gaining national attention, the School of Nursing has always been among the best, the Marine Biology Department continued to reap rewards for its work, and the English Department will soon offer an M.F.A. program.

Most of the credit for UNCW's rise to prominence and continued growth has to go to Chancellor James Leutsa. The Chancellor has brought new life to this school. It may be a few more years before the benefits are fully realized, but it will be worth the wait. If you see the Chancellor, tell him your thoughts about the campus, but also tell him thanks.

No journey is accomplished alone. I would like to thank all the people who have made my visit here fun. I would like to think I am a better person now, as opposed to when I arrived, and people I came in contact with are responsible. There are some people I have disappointed, some more than once. I wish to say I'm sorry.

I wish to especially thank Prof. Philip Gerard for his guidance, patience, and insights. I wish every student had an instructor who means as much to them as Prof. Gerard means to me. I've been blessed to have access to a professor who will give me a pat on the back when it is deserved, point out errors, and lend an ear when it is needed.

Other people I feel indebted to include: Dr. Kathy Rugoff, Dr. Jerry Shinn, Dean Leonard, Cheryl and Barbara, the zany women in Dr. Bryan's office, Dr. Bryan, Gloria Sasser and the rest of the English Department office, Linda Moore, and Frank Tascione. There are others, and I will stop by and thank you, hopefully.

There are probably hundreds of students I have worked with and against

Bob Haywood/Still Point

The Eternal in the Present

I was sitting in my office the other morning on a day with bright sunshine streaming through my window, azaleas and dogwoods in bloom and, within my office, a sense of not being overwhelmed with an incredible list of things to be done. It was a moment of grace and peace. In that stillness there was an immediate upsurge within me of a sense that life as a whole is full of grace and goodness. The peace and awareness of that moment grew in me an awareness of contentment.

Our lives don't normally generate much of a sense of contentment. Almost every student that I meet these days is weary with the load of impending papers and quizzes and the accelerated teaching to get all the material covered by the end of the semester. So many are tired and frustrated. The most common statement I hear is, "I'll sure be glad when this semester is over." Harried, hurried and hassled make so many of our lives; mine, too, at times.

I am in no way saying that we can live our lives in total peacefulness at the other end of the "harried" continuum. But I do believe that we can gain more balance in our lives which broadens our sight and allows a sense of goodness to be sown in our busy schedules as a kind of yeast that brings the sense of contentment and fulfillment into what we are doing.

To be thus blessed does demand that we stop, pause in our rushing lives long enough to still ourselves so that our perceptions can expand and we can see our lives more holistically than we can when we are caught up in its rushing fragments. We need oases of peace, and we often make the mistake of thinking that they can only be found at the end of a semester or the end of a project or, in the extreme sense, at the end of life. It simply is not so. There is an oasis of quiet and harmony available in every present moment if we are simply willing to stop, become still and quiet and allow our consciousness to expand so that we can be aware of beauty and love and all the little ways that our lives are graced.

We can make any present moment a place, not of frustration, but of grace and peace. We can gain a sense of our compulsions that drive us, the needs to please others that make us crazy and connect ourselves with the rhythm of our beings which is where the truth lies. I agree with a spiritual master of the sixteenth century who writes "the understanding of souls who are faithful to their duties, quietly obeying the inner most movements of grace, meek and humble in all things, is worth more than the most penetrating insight into mystery (the mystery of God)." It does take times of quiet and reflection to discern the "inner most movement of grace."

Most of the time we spend our days avoiding or dealing with everything which seems rushing towards us on that narrow two lane road of our lives. If we can learn to pull off the road onto a roadside park, stop, relax and become aware of all the goodness with which our lives are surrounded, just as our lives are surrounded these days by the beauty of dogwood and azaleas, we can discover the immediate rest and refreshment to our souls. It is the present moment that holds the greatest opportunity to the best of contentment and joy.

Be at peace.

June Rapp Oravits

Don't You Just Hate It?

Are there things that just bug you to death, trivial little things that occur at the most inopportune moments?

Stuff happens no matter what you do, like when you're running late for class, but you have to go to the bathroom so bad you're hopping around in the halls and crossing your legs like a spastic cricket.

You dash into the bathroom, do your thing—and guess what? There's no toilet tissue. So, there you are—trapped in the bathroom stall, late for class, and praying someone will come in to hand you the missing paper. Eventually someone shows up, but all they give you is two of those dinky little squares of paper not even worthy to wipe an ant's butt. Don't you just hate it?

Then there's the case of the required concert attendance mandated by the music department for those taking music classes. You spend hours in classes, hours in the library, hours in the computer lab, hours working some menial job to pay for all this fun, but somehow you manage to work in actually making it to the concert.

Do you really think you can now relax and listen to some music?

Hell no, because of the minimal number of hours you've actually had any sleep, you find yourself nodding out in the concert. Your head jerks around like one of those puppies with its head on a spring you see bouncing around in the back windows of cars. Your reward for attending the concert? Whiplash! Don't you just hate it?

Now that I'm on the subject of these concerts, there has been this little thing going on that really deserves to be attended to—my pronto!

It's this requirement that we get a concert attendance slip from a faculty member at the door prior to the start of the concert. We have to fill out the slip and personally deliver it to the hands of the very same faculty member at the end of the performance. This information is supposed to be recorded somewhere in our hallowed halls on the Almighty Computer (AC) and a print-out delivered to the instructor.

The policy is that without the attendance slip and subsequent recording on the AC, "no excuses will be tolerated" for the lack of this verification. Sounds simple, but naturally, it's not.

Where the hell are the faculty members to distribute these stupid attendance slips? They sure aren't at these concerts, at least not on a regular basis. We've complained to our instructors, but to no avail. The mystery of the disappearing faculty members is still unsolved.

The way I look at it is just as simple as their system, only mine is much more straightforward. If I am required to be there and be submitted to this humiliating experience of proving my attendance, then by damn, you faculty members responsible for giving us the slips better get your butts on over there, too! And I'm not going to allow any excuses, either! Don't you just hate it?

As long as I'm bitching, here's another pet peeve. When I'm on a deadline for a paper and exams are looming over my head like a bad nightmare, exams which will certainly contribute to whether or not I graduate, I'm very careful about protecting my time.

"Please don't call me," I plead with everyone who may have noted my phone number off the bathroom wall. "I still have 571 papers to write. No, I can't go out; I don't care how many good-looking guys will be there. Won't they still look good in two weeks, or is beauty really that transitory?"

Of course, on the day I plan my attack on those class projects, and I'm blowing dust off the old computer in a frenzy to get stuff actually accomplished, 500,000 of my closest friends and relatives call to ask how the studying is going.

"Well, just fine. I haven't opened my books yet, because you are my 439th caller in the last half-hour."

I just can't believe it. Why, oh why, do they hate it? Don't you just hate it?

Another really bad scene is the professor (who will remain unidentified in order to protect my own skin; I may be a lot of things, but stupid I am not) who delights in making a last minute project assignment which never appeared on the original syllabus. This is not only irritating, but stupid, inconsiderate, downright rude and disgusting, and just plain sneaky.

This is the sort of person who deserves to receive tenure in a very special place. I recommend the eighth pouch of the eighth circle designated for fraudulent counselors in Dante's infamous version of Hell. Don't you just hate it?

June Oravits will quit bitching at the end of the semester. But don't breathe a sigh of relief yet just because she graduates in May. She'll be back in the fall as a graduate student—and executive editor of the Seahawk. Don't you just hate it?

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor

Can you remember the worst day of your life? Good, at least you are still here to remember that day and how you made it through to have a chance to make the next day better. Life is not all bad. It is the resolution of the tragedies that make people appreciate the good times. This may sound cliché to some, but maybe not to enough desperate souls out there who think there is an easy way to escape their troubles.

Suicide is the third-leading killer of teen-agers in this country. Is it any wonder with cultural leaders like Kurt Cobain influencing the minds of young, impressionable people in this country who want to be a part of the mainstream?

Right at the top. That's where the band "Nirvana" was when their lead singer, Kurt Cobain, blew his face off with a shotgun last week.

Nirvana has been an important part of the American "alternative" music scene for 2 1/2 years with teen-agers as their biggest fans. They have released songs, such as "Milk It" which contains lyrics like, "Look on the bright side is suicide." The last song Cobain recorded was titled, "I Hate Myself and I Want to Die." Did no one take him seriously? Why didn't someone try to help this person, obviously in need of serious emotional assistance? Now, I'm for freedom of speech as much as your next American, but when an influential figure, like Cobain, takes these words to heart and acts upon them, someone must assume some type of responsibility. Who is going to let the young followers of this irresponsible leader know that suicide is not the "mainstream" way out of tough times? If responsible repercussions is not carried out for this anti-social act, Cobain's most influential followers are in for a dim, and perhaps, short future.

For the band "Nirvana" to have any standing as far as I am concerned, they must attempt to reconcile with their fans this self-inflicted tragedy of their lead singer's death. They must educate the young listeners to the dismal demise that suicide leads to. Cobain should not be praised for his actions (as has been done with the MTV Kurt Cobain Tribute). The memory of his life and music should instead be used as an example of the complexity of suicide. We as a society should study the signs Cobain showed towards self-destruction and be aware of the possible outcome of idolizing a person like this.

I say "a person like this" very judiciously. I am referring to someone who would leave a young wife and child to escape personal persecution. I'm talking about someone who takes the easy way out, only to leave a legacy of confusion and misunderstood teen-agers to make their decisions based on what they have seen their paragon do.

At various times while typing this piece, I found myself punching the keys of my typewriter with rage and disgust at the happening described. So childish and irresponsible are the thoughts that fueled my emotion. Wait until the first young "Nirvana" fan commits suicide (I have already heard reports). I hope that isn't what it takes to make today's teen idols realize what responsibilities lie on their shoulders before the next one tries to take the easy way out.

In what seems like enough time to make a good visit to the restroom, I have completed my undergraduate education. I've watched the fall of communism and rise of Beavis and Butt Head. I've watched the UNCW Bookstore textbook markup go from 300% to 500% (sorry Mrs. L, one last jab). I've watched the campus police go through, let's see, about four complete fleet turnovers (they drove Chevy's then Fords, then Chevy's then back to Ford, and I couldn't tell what they are driving around in now. Have you heard the latest though? They have VIDEO CAMERAS installed in the cruisers)!! I guess now they can film themselves writing tickets. I wonder if I could go by "Headquarters" and use my ID Plus card to check out a new few?

The point here is that over the past four or so years, I've seen and heard a lot of stuff. And, I've written much of it down in weekly editions of The Fishwrap just for your reading enjoyment. The magic of it all is that, thanks to my handy dandy Macintosh Typo-Savo 2000, I can bring it all back up to offer you—much as a mother bird offers a partially digested worm to her little ones—my "Phil's All Time Review." I began this whole affair with an expose on my first trip to the UNCW bookstore (also called the "Campus Bandit Shop" by one of my professors). In that inaugural piece, I talked about such things as convenient parking down by Wagoner Hall, an overloaded Seahawk Shuttle, and being frisked down by a campus cop. Unfortunately, that was before the Clarence Thomas Supreme Court confirmation hearings, and I did not know enough about sexual harassment to file my charges.

Speaking of the confirmation hearings, I got in a little trouble over my piece on that long lived fiasco. It seems that I made a crack on South Carolina Senator Strom Thurman and his inexplicable penchant for saying the words—and I leave the translation to you—"hawd caw pown." I think I even made a crack or two on South Carolina, about the most popular South Carolina pick up line... "Mighty nice tooth you got there, ma'am." Anyhow, I got a scolding letter the next week from disgruntled reader Jay Russell, who informed me that I had, "Failed to properly analyze the hearings...and instead, showed ignorance as to the cultural and educational history of South Carolina." Imagine that.

That brings us to the next major Anti-Philuprising...LISA KELLOGG. I never personally met Ms. Kellogg (there was one "near miss" when I went to register my bicycle), but she often sent scathing letters and I am told she carried around an AK-47 semi-automatic assault rifle "just in case I ever see that brat." It all began when I made a crack about the campus police units patrolling the UNCW basketball games. Ms. Kellogg, a devoted card carrying member of The International Association of Campus Security Services Workers, became inflamed and engorged over my comments and felt inclined to write nasty letters and say nasty things. So we went back and forth for a couple of semesters until she finally graduated, never to be heard from again.

While I'm already on the popular subject of the UNCW University police, I may as well review that. If there is one group that has taken some abuse, it has to be them. One of my favorite lines was when I was talking about the new "your speed is" sign they had put out, and I countered with a "your weight is" sign of my own. Now I realize that this is not the nicest thing in the world to say about these fine people, but even one of my friends on the squad agreed that a few of them could stand to drop a pound or two. And then there was the time that I broke the news about their new "land cruisers" which came complete with heavy duty suspension, a Trane air conditioning unit, and a custom console which holds up to a gallon of coffee and a half dozen donuts.

One thing that has been a recurrent feature of the column is my ill-devised, hastily created "Top Five Lists." I was never creative enough to come up with a Top Ten List, so I always went with five. Some of the items covered include the Top Five... Ways to Avoid UNCW Parents Weekend, Things To Do With $19,000,000 in Bond Money, Reasons to Throw Toilet Paper at Basketball Games, Reasons to Enjoy Driving in Wilmington, Ways to Survive if Ever Caught in The Plot of A Class B Horror Flick, Problems Encountered if The Hardee's vs. KFC Dispute Were Settled on The Peoples Court, Christmas Gifts You Can Return, and Ways to Make UNCW Basketball Games More Enjoyable.

One of the more drawn out sagas was that "How I Spent My Summer" ordeal. It all started with a welcome back column in which I alluded to some interesting things I had done that summer. I had to postpone writing enough to refresh the memory. There was of course, listed in my top five Christmas gifts of 1991, the "Magic Potty Baby." All I will say about his story is that it involved excrement (or, "Poo" for the biologically impaired). Speaking of bodily wastes, does anyone remember the "Rat Urine" issue. It seems that some researchers, intent on spending tax money on solving one of the greatest discoveries of our century, announced that "Prehistoric rat urine may yield clues as to how the UNCW Six Days of Christmas" one year. As I recall, it began with "on the first day of Christmas my Chancellor gave to me... A Seahawk in a Pine tree," and then got even worse.

One of the neater things I've witnessed, has been the turning around of the men's basketball team. I did not miss many games, and often was able to fit something in here about basketball, like when I announced two seasons ago that the "Hawks had begun with the best start "since the fall of Rome," which was about the truth. I still haven't figured out why that frute (we'll call him "Joe") on the front row kept getting so many phone calls. Once, when he wasn't at his desk, I answered that phone "Domino, may I help you?" Evidently they did not want any pizza.

In reviewing some of the other major NoBull Prize winning headlines, I find still more weird stuff. There was that time I exposed a big coup undertaken by the James Sprunt Community College to try and lure UNCW students away and enroll them in a "swine management technology" program. Luckily the plot was discovered before too many unsuspecting marine biology students (dismayed at the thought of ending up at WalMart) had made the transfer. As a follow up, I learned those who did make it through are now major hog producers and living happily in Pender County. Another interesting story involving my roommates and suds emanating from the dishwasher. They had used regular Dawn detergent in the automatic dishwasher and, as a result, I was met at the front door with a wall of soap suds. At least the apartment was clean, for once. I believe that was around the same time that I reported the apparent slaying of the old Seahawk mascot. Yet another credit to the NRA. I did finally admit that I liked the new Seahawk mascot, although it was not the "kinder, gentler" mascot then President Bush had called for.

I'd also be remiss if I did not mention that time, I believe it was April Fool's day a year ago, when I announced that I was abruptly quitting and would never write again. I got in a little trouble over that because so many readers believed it and sent in "goodbye" letters. I also pulled the wool over a lot of eyes with my front page article which indicated that President Clinton was going to be speaking on the lawn of the University Union that week. I hear that about as many showed up for that as did for the "James Taylor" concert also that week.

About midway through my Seahawk writing career, I introduced the official HAT'S OFF and SHOE'S OFF awards. These awards were started as a way for me to interact with the University Community and reward those deserving reward and reprimand those in need of reprimand. Several deserving individuals, groups, and even campus offices received both awards over time. It was real neat for me to see the looks on people's faces when I actually handed them a certificate (good for free hash rounds at Hardee's of Burgaw) commending their efforts to make life a little better around here. By the way, I am about as behind in handing those out as the medical schools are with holding my applications, so if you are still waiting I'll get to you ASAP.

You will recall that one of my pet topics over the years has been the UNCW Registrar's office. This began with problems I encountered with the previous administration and also with some transcript problems I encountered last year. I must say, that if there is any department on campus which has really done an image change to better serve the students, it is the Registrar's office. They (especially HAT'S OFF Award recipient Kay) seem to be a lot more interested in L'pinj and making things pleasant in their office. Also they have gone forward with efforts to better the registration process. I wish them well in those efforts.

Well sportsfans, it has come to that time. I hope you have enjoyed reading as much as I've enjoyed writing. I began with just my mom and two of my friends as faithful semi-coherent readers. Now, I have my mom, my sister, and ALL THREE of my friends. Before I go let me congratulate the graduates, seniors, and wish them well. I'm sure that there are some things I've forgotten to mention here, but let them be your memories. I just hope that they are good ones.

Until our paths cross...keep you mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Phil Smith is a NoBull Prize winning columnist with The Seahawk and he reminds the Campus Police that they have only a few more days to arrest him.

Thanks For The Memories Baby!

about it because of things that came up in the following weeks, but soon it became such a joke that I had to drag it out all semester. Then when I finally (in the last issue of the semester) divulged the events of that summer, it was less than enthralling. The highlight of that summer was my trip to New York to see my sister. I remember telling about her standing there at the airport with the name "SMITH" scrawled on the back of a cardboard panty hose insert (she has own on special sense of humor too). Little did I know that the guy beside her with the "Gaietckowitz" sign would become so famous.

There have been a literal plethora of truly disgusting things I've reported on over the semesters. Considering the higher levels of journalistic excellence to which I now perspire, I won't give the gory details, but rather just earth has evolved over the past forty million years." I refuse to discuss this any more. I thought droppings study had all but disappeared until I recently reported on that study of Spotted Owl dung, which is to see how stressed out they are. Forget the owls, it sounds to me like there are some stressed out researchers out there somewhere.

Christmas was always a neat thing to write about. There was always a trip home to Dadburn County, where we celebrated the "Smith Family Christmas" complete with Ho-Cake and my dad's "display" (during dinner) of the Duke boxer shorts I always give him. One time he even ran them up my flag pole. This past Christmas even included a visit from my adorable six month old niece. The problem came when she started making these funny faces and my sister told me to "stick your finger in the edge (operative word: edge) of her diaper and see if it's dirty." Friends, "dirty" does not describe what my finger looked/smelled like when I removed it. Christmas also brought with it my annual poem. I did "Twas the Night Before Finals" a couple of times and then did "The

Many people have learned to dread the inevitable arrival of summer, as it signals the beginning of a three-month onslaught by marauding bands of roving tourists, who congest the roads, take the parking spaces, and just create mayhem in general. The Azalea Festival in Wilmington's downtown waterfront is a precursor to this cyclical chain of events.

As much as I would have liked to take Phil Smith's advice and leave town for the weekend, job obligations kept me rooted here. When Saturday night rolled around, I decided to brave the throngs of out-of-towners, and go downtown.

After finally finding a parking space, I brushed up on the skills learned in my "How To Make A Bouncer Think You're 21" class. (By the way, by the time this is printed, my long-awaited 21st birthday will have arrived. Belated birthday wishes/gifts may be sent to PO 23710, or VAX SEC9292. Please no fudgy bonbons.)

The performance at the Icehouse consisted of a local band doing covers of all types of songs, from Prince to Santana to Herbie Hancock (quite a mix, huh?). I even saw my favorite psychology professor (who shall remain nameless, to stifle my embarrassment) "cutting a rug" with his two daughters, while the band played "Kiss" by Prince.

My friends and I even mustered the courage to walk down to the big tent by the Hilton (big mistake). There were about four million people crowded under the tent, listening to some band (I'm not sure who) belt out some sort of southern rock. I had to really fight the urge to run through the massive crowd screaming "PLAY SOME SKYNYRD, MAN!!" Needless to say, we left in short order, and were soon back at the Icehouse.

The best entertainment at the Icehouse was the crowd that had gathered - we watched a chick in tight shorts systematically pick up and then ditch three Marines in half an hour. After an hour of yelling for the band to play more Prince, they finally lapsed into an awful version of "Purple Rain", and I decided that it was time to make an exit.

We retraced our steps to the car, and fought our way through traffic home. I must say, there really wasn't much to the "Azalea Festival" that I could see. There were just a few more people than usual, all looking for an excuse to get intoxicated, and I guess the yearly blooming of pink flowers did it.

Okay - I guess this is my chance to do that "goodbye, see you next semester" thing. So, here it is: SCHOOL'S OUT!! REST AND RELAXATION!! For everyone not returning next semester, (seniors or otherwise) good luck, if you find a job, please put in a good word for me this time next May...

Well folks, the semester is almost over. And with that, the glorious 1993-1994 "academic" year draws to a close. Keeping that in mind, it's time to reflect.

First off, I would like to give an applause and band of thanks to Dr. Phil Smith (I'm being very optimistic) for keeping the entire campus entertained through the years. Even though I could not convert Phil to an Entertainment Writer, I have always read his material before anyone else and often faxed his articles to my father. I'll miss the continual updates on the Campus Police. Lisa Kellogg, and the little guy that answers the phone on the basketball court.

By the way, the police now have video cameras installed in the vehicles to record themselves giving parking tickets. It makes me feel good to know that UNCW has 40 personal computers for its students and an outdated, slow, and inefficient VAX computer system while the police have these nifty and expensive gadgets. (I'll stop being bitter and move on now...)

Well, this deserves some sort of Phil Smith award, but I cannot fill his shoes. "Hat's Off" to Phil.

Also, I would like to thank Sam Cuthrell for his continuing efforts as a dedicated Entertainment Writer. Sam has come through with articles on time for the last year and did a great job! THANKS SAM!

I fine "Thank You" also has to go out to Amy Brennan, our fine Editor-In-Chief for all her hard work and efforts throughout the year. She inherited a pile of shit and dealt well with it. We'll miss you! Good luck in the forest. Congrats to the rest of The Seahawk staff for putting up with everything we had to deal with this year! Typists: have a safe trip back to Washington! We'll miss ya!

I would also like to congratulate David Letterman for leaving the National Broadcasting Network. I have never, in my many years of watching the show, seen him so excited and happy EVERY evening while hosting his show. By the way, it was announced that Arsenio Hall (of the Arsenio Hall Show) will be removed from the airwaves as of May 29th. For those Arsenio fans out there, if any still exist, I'm sorry that your show will cease to exist. That's what you get for laughing about the cancellation of The Chevy Chase Show.

Just think about all the other interesting news-worthy/entertaining things we have seen over the last semester. The Bobbitts, The Menendez Brothers, Michael Jackson, The Campus Police, Matt Jorgensen's article on Barbados. Need I say more?

For those of you that are graduating, congratulations. For those of you who are finally going to become seniors, myself included, HURRRRAY! For those of you who are just getting here, I'm sorry.

With that, I'm going to bid you a fine farewell for the summer. I should have some interesting experiences to tell you about next semester from my summer travels in Europe, but if I forget to mention it, oh well. Everyone have a safe and happy vacation and study hard for those exams!

Race Discrimination: Dorsey vs. UNCW

BY THOMAS CHILDS, Jr.
Staff Writer

For nearly two years, a war of words and litigation has ensued between a UNCW employee and those involved in the hiring practices here at the University. The reason: She feels she was passed over for a promotion because she is black, and the person who got the job was white.

Kathy Dorsey filed a racial discrimination suit against the University in June 1992 when she was turned down two months earlier in her bid to be promoted to the position of Administrative Assistant to the Chancellor.

During two days of testimony in November 1992, Dorsey, UNCW Chancellor James Leutze, then-director of Human Resources Sam Connolly and Lynne Goodspeed (who was the successful candidate for the position in question) testified at an on-campus discrimination hearing presided over by an administrative law judge. The judge found there was no discrimination involved.

From there, the case went to the State Personnel Commission and, as before, it was concluded no cause for discrimination could be found.

For the present, the case is in New Hanover County Superior Court. Mrs. Dorsey hopes to have the case returned to the Personnel Commission. At the same time, she has also filed a federal lawsuit against the University.

Dorsey seems undeterred by the rulings against her. Even though she was promoted to the position of an administrative secretary in UNCW's department of biological sciences, Dorsey firmly believes that she was discriminated against.

After the went through the hiring process for the position of Administrative Assistant to the Chancellor and was not given the position, Dorsey said she "identified problems with people in authority to make change to correct problems and oversee fair hiring. In the process, not only was I discriminated against, but I was subject to character assassination, as well."

She was accused of being "hard to get along with," despite consistently glowing evaluations during her more than 10 years as a UNCW employee. According to transcripts of the hearing (which are part of a public file maintained by the university), the negative comments did not play a part in the final decision-making process.

Another issue Dorsey has raised is that Goodspeed lied on her application for the position. On her application, Goodspeed stated that she graduated from a secretarial school in New York. However, Dorsey's attorney (at the time) obtained information that Goodspeed never actually graduated. She enrolled in 1965 and withdrew from the school in 1966.

According to Sam Connolly, Assistant to the Chancellor for Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmation Action and Quality Management, Goodspeed did not misrepresent herself on her application. She received a "certification of completion" from the school.

It took some time to verify Goodspeed's record and when it did come in, it had been misfiled. Connolly maintains that if her record had not been lost, and the information had been found during the search process to fill the position, Goodspeed would have been automatically disqualified.

However, the hiring was done in April 1992 and because of that, anything else that may have come up after that point is inconsequential. The decision to question Goodspeed's academic record came in November 1993.

Connolly said that another of Dorsey's claims, that she had more experience than Ms. Goodspeed, is untrue. Goodspeed had 17 years and 8 months of related experience, including a number of positions directly supporting vice-presidential level corporate officers, compared to Dorsey's 11 years and 4 months related experience, none of which are above supporting department head or staff-level employees.

Based on that, Connolly maintains that the University felt Goodspeed was the best-qualified candidate for the position based on careful examination of her qualifications in relation to all 14 individuals who applied for the position and all five that were interviewed.

Even though four separate administrative bodies have reviewed the case and found there was no discrimination involved and that the review of job-related qualifications was reasonable, Connolly feels Dorsey has the prerogative to pursue all legal avenues, as is her right as an employee of the state. He feels that, as the one who made the recommendation for the position (as per his duties in his former position as Director of Human Resources), there was no misrepresentation on Goodspeed's part and that, on his part, there was no withholding of information. Dorsey feels otherwise.

Dorsey maintains she is the most qualified and best-suited for the job, although the hearings concluded otherwise that there was no discrimination on UNCW's part and Goodspeed was the best-suited for the job. Despite that, Dorsey is prepared to take the matter to the Supreme Court, if necessary. She feels that in order for others to work in a truly discrimination-free workplace, the existing rules have to be challenged, and in order to clear up the character assassination, she feels she has to litigate it. "I'm prepared for the long haul," says Dorsey.

a look at the arts

UNCW STUDENT WRITERS

UNCW students, faculty, staff, and the public are invited to enjoy readings by UNCW student writers on Tuesday, April 26.

Works to be read include poetry, fiction, and essay. These are polished manuscripts of literary merit representing the culmination of writing courses at UNCW.

The readings will be presented at 2 p.m. in the Glass Room of the University Union. Light refreshments will be served following the readings. There is no admission fee.

UNCW DIVISION OF MUSIC

The UNCW Jazz Program, under the direction of Frank Bongiorno, will host its 12th annual Jazz Festival and Concert on April 22 and 23 in the University Center Ballroom. High school as well as college ensemble performances with clinics by the guest artist will be from 1-5 p.m. on each day, culminating with a concert by the UNCW Big Band featuring guest artist Denis DiBlasio on Saturday evening at 8 p.m. The afternoon clinics and the Saturday evening guest artist concert are free to UNCW students with valid I.D. The art of spontaneity is personified in the playing of saxophone and flutist Denis DiBlasio. DiBlasio served as both musical director and arranger to Maynard Ferguson and his big band during the '80s. As featured soloist on tour of Ferguson's recordings, DiBlasio also co-produced the legendary Body and Soul release. Today, DiBlasio stays busy leading his own quartet performing across the nation and abroad. He has three solo recordings including his critically acclaimed recent release entitled Catch Me. DiBlasio will conduct clinics and critique jazz ensembles during the afternoon sessions of the festival and will be featured soloist on the Saturday evening concert with the UNCW Big Band. He will perform on baritone, saxophone, flute, and scat vocals on such arrangements as Anthropology, La Fiesta, I Got News for You, A Meeting of the Minds, and Three and One, among others.

UNCW ART EXHIBITS

Hampstead artist, Jan Lewis will have a collection of her works on exhibit in the University Center Lobby from April 5 through May 19.

Lewis has an Associate Art degree from Stratford College, a Bachelor of Arts degree from UNCW, and has attended the Pan American School of Art. She participates regularly in juried art shows in the area and has won several awards at South Eastern Community College. She is also a member of the Hampstead Art League. Her work is currently showing at Cape Fear Coffee and Tea Company on Front Street in Wilmington. Lewis uses acrylics and pastels in her abstract, landscape, and still life work. She experiments with texture, using layered paint and various materials with staining variation.

The Randall Library at UNCW will present the works of eight distinctive Southeast Carolina artists: to be exhibited from April 8 through June 2.

The exhibition will include sculpture, photography, ceramics, and painting and constitutes a rich variety of expression from realism to abstraction.

Sculpture: Viewers will experience the vigor of large and small charcoal forms in metal, some seven and eight feet in height, and companion forms, always monumental, of sculptor Al Frego. In stark contrast, find the sharp, angular, attenuated, incisive sometimes threatening forms of sculptor Marshall Milton.

Ceramics: Traudi Thornton's masterful ceramic images, wall and standing pieces, are organic in form, highlighted by subtle glazes creating a fused energy. Ceramist Gayle Tustin works earthbound in color and texture with an interplay of whites and pastel hues. Photography: Photographer Debbie Luster explores the rural scene. She is nearing completion of a second publication, "The Lost Roads Project" to be published by University of Arkansas Press. Luster creates absorbing poetic documentations of rural life and countryside.

Painting: Painters Pam Toll, Dick Roberts and Leon Schenker display unusual diversity, the former of two expressing personal worlds, exterior and interior with vividness and intensity. Memories of rural Oklahoma, the earth, family and friends are richly portrayed by artist Pam Toll. There is also a distinct sensual manner best expressed in her fantasy images. Dick Roberts' paintings, dark, with brooding figurative solemn, ritualistic, dramatic and confrontational. Schenker's paintings appear in sharp contrast to the works of Toll and Roberts. They are a deft interplay of line, geometry and color often charged with painterly action.

AG STUDENTS TREATED TO "JULIUS CAESAR"

Thirty students in Lu Huntley-Johnston's English class, "Varieties of Literary response will perform "Scenes from Julius Caesar" at noon, Friday, April 22, at the Center Stage Cafe. Making up the audience will be Mac Knight's academically gifted fifth graders from Sunset Park and Winter Park elementary schools.

BECAUSE OF INCREASED DEMAND FOR SEATS AT WILMINGTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS, THE WSO BOARD OF DIRECTORS HAS PASSED SOME NEW POLICIES REGARDING THE DISTRIBUTION OF COMPLIMENTARY CONCERT TICKETS. A TOTAL OF 75 TICKETS FOR UNCW STUDENTS WILL BE AVAILABLE AT THE DOOR ON THE NIGHT OF THE CONCERT UNTIL 7:45 P.M. ANY STUDENT ARRIVING AFTER THAT TIME WILL BE TREATED AS ANY OTHER SINGLE TICKET PURCHASER (I.E., WILL HAVE TO BUY A $3 STUDENT TICKET, IF AVAILABLE.)

American Folk Music Singer

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Kazz, an American folk-rock musician, will perform at the Center Stage Cafe on Thursday, April 21, from 8:00 p.m. until 11:00. His songs have an original quality unusual to the usual depictions of blues/folks structures. The music echoes with strong passion. Haunting strains reminiscent of Eastern melodies and vocalizations.

Kazz's guitar style includes simultaneously playing both melody and bass while holding down the rhythm. American folk music is experiencing a revival and, at the same time, experiencing a new transformation influenced by cultural and music influences, and a transcending of traditional genres of folk, pop, country, and rock. In this musical transition, traditionalists have discovered American blues is entrenched in places extending beyond American borders.

Kazz explains his style in relation to the changing role of music today, "In America, it's called acoustic folk-rock, but actually it's music that comes from the world and is being offered back to the world."

Kazz's performance is arranged by Liquid Sunshine and is free.

Sex, AIDS, and the Black College Student

BY RENEE HILL
Staff Writer

April 12, 1994 marked the first information session sponsored by Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc. and Office of Minority Affairs featuring the topic "Sex, AIDS, and the Black College Student." The program was held in the Classroom next to the Hawk's Nest at 7 p.m.

Keynote speaker, Fred McDoe, activist/educator on AIDS awareness in the black community, explained to students how AIDS is contracted and how to protect against the deadly disease.

McDoe also presented statistics on the alarming percentage of black babies born with AIDS, the prevalence of AIDS in the black community and how heterosexuals rank higher in comparison with homosexuals.

"In the African-American community, black females are on the rise for contracting the AIDS virus. Over 30 percent of black babies born have AIDS," said Stanley Jones, member of Alpha Phi Alpha and coordinator of the program.

This was Alpha Phi Alpha's first AIDS information session. Although audience size was lower than anticipated, Jones said, "we will continue to have some form of education session periodically."

"People aren't fully aware of the impact and statistics. If they would've come, they would've been informed. They would have known how prevalent AIDS is in the black community," said Ralph Brown, member of Alpha Phi Alpha and co-coordinator of the program.

Looks like a Vivarin night.

It's 10 PM. You've crammed for finals all week. Took two today. And now you've got to pack an entire semester's worth of Philosophy into one take-home exam, in one night. But how do you stay awake when you're totally wiped? Revive with Vivarin. Safe as coffee, Vivarin helps keep you awake and mentally alert for hours. So when you have pen in hand, but sleep on the brain, make it a Vivarin night!

An exciting feature of the UNCW Leadership Challenge Course is a 35 foot tower consisting of a Climbing Wall and Rappel Station. This feature offers additional programming; opportunities including recreational climbing and preparation for rock climbing trips offered through the Discover Outdoor Leadership Program.

The UNCW Leadership Challenge Course staff is made up of UNCW students and staff who are committed to a high quality and safe program for each participant and group. The staff goes through extensive, on-going training for their own personal and team development as well as to learn methods and develop skills to facilitate this process for others.

The UNCW Leadership Challenge Course is an opportunity for individuals and groups to explore effective leadership, decision-making, problem-solving, cooperation and trust in an exciting, non-traditional setting.

The mission of the UNCW Leadership Challenge Course is to provide exciting experiential opportunities that focus on leadership skills, team-building, self awareness, individual wellness, problem-solving skills, communication skills, environmental awareness, and self-esteem.

A series of "high" and "low" elements make up the Leadership Challenge Course. These elements serve as building blocks which facilitate groups to a higher level of development. The challenge course stretches individuals mentally and physically, but at a level of comfort that is acceptable to individuals and the group.

A Typical Day

A typical day on the UNCW Leadership Challenge Course begins at 8:30am and ends around 4:30pm. Group size may range from 10 to 18 participants. The experience gets underway as participants and staff become better acquainted through discussion of group and individual goals, as well as, expectations the challenge course staff has of the group. Some groups prefer to have a pre-course day meeting with the challenge course staff where in-depth goal setting and discussion of their program takes place.

After goal setting, group expectations, and housekeeping items are discussed, the group takes part in a series of games that are intended to break down the walls that get in the way of play and initiate a shared mind set of working together and learning from and more about each other.

The next steps to a higher level of group development are the "low elements" of the challenge course. These are a series of activities built into the wooded surroundings that present a challenge to the group that can only be undertaken through cooperative interactions of everyone involved. After experiencing the "low elements", the group eats lunch together, reflects back on the morning, and anticipates the excitement of the afternoon.

THE HISTORY OF GOD, CONTINUED...

The Earth Day Seaside Revival

BY ANN MIRARD
Contributing Writer

Plenty of sunshine, frisbees, fun and live music marked Sunday's Second Annual Earth Day Seaside Revival. A lively crowd gathered at Brooks Field to enjoy music by Resol, Cravin' Dogs, the Sex Police and Silk.

The Association for Campus Entertainment, Matt Smith, the Ecology Club, and a small army of volunteers labored in the wee hours of Sunday morning to set up the stage, booths and plenty of recycling bins. Rumor has it that the sound system enabled the horns of the Sex Police and Silk's guitars to be heard as far as Friday Hall. If a highlight of Sunday's show can be named, it has to be when Silk's tour bus drove right up to the stage, drawing cheers from an expectant crowd.

The celebration helped to create awareness about recycling and respecting the Earth. UNCW organizations such as the Native American Culture Society, the Biology Grad Association, the Spanish Club and College Democrats set up information booths. Also represented were the Wilmington Food Bank and Habitat for Humanity.

Everyone who had a blast at the Second Annual Earth Day was reminded to appreciate our beautiful Earth and recycle, recycle, recycle!!!

Executive Officer's Leadership Retreat

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Leaders of campus organizations attended the Executive Officers Retreat on April 15 at Fort Caswell.

"117 organizations were invited to attend the Executive Officers Leadership Retreat," said Tanya Washington, program coordinator for student organizations.

Attendees participated in hands-on workshops in team building, goal setting, member recruitment and retention, delegation, and meeting management.

Workshops were led by Reggie Perry, Lead Consultant, SGA treasurer, and NCAASLC chair; Melissa Ramirez, Lead Consultant, SGA Special Student Senator, member of BPC, and coordinator of COOL (Council of Organization Leaders); and Cathy Birmingham of the Leadership Center and Campus Activities Office.

Student leaders attending the Executive Officers Retreat were Hannah Gavard, Biology Club; Alex Gregory, Global Volunteers; Daren Hill and Gee Barger of WLOZ, Michael Obyron, Marine Biology/Biology Graduate Student Organization; Joelle Ephraim, Environmental Concerns Organization; Jotivi McDuffie, Belk Hall, Colleen Terbet, Galloway and RHA Executive Board; John Zimmerman, Native American Society, and June Oravits, English Club.

Landmark Homes Establishes Merit Scholarship at UNCW

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington today announced the gift of $50,000 from Landmark Homes, Inc. to establish the Landmark Homes Merit Endowment Scholarship.

The scholarship fund is intended to provide undergraduate academic scholarships for students attending the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. First preference for the scholarship will be given to qualified high school students from Southeastern North Carolina and Horry County, South Carolina.

The student will be selected based on strong academic standing and solid moral character. It is also required that the recipient's course of study lead them to a career in one of the following: accounting, marine biology, physics, mathematics, chemistry, marketing, economics, English, computer science, business management, and elementary or middle school education.

The scholarship is the first privately funded scholarship for the University of North Carolina at Wilmington's Honors College.

Bobby Harrison and Rex Stephens from Landmark Homes, Inc., of Wilmington, envisions that "the scholarship will grow over the years and promote the means for many of the best students in our state to further their education at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington."

On behalf of the university and the Leadership Gifts Committee, Bob Warwick, Advancement Committee Chair of Board of Trustees, expressed his appreciation. "The gift will make an immediate and important impact on education in North Carolina. Without the support of our local community, this gift would not have been possible."

Landmark Homes, Inc. does business primarily in Southeastern North Carolina and has been a longtime contributor to the university.

Braye replaces Davis on CFMH Board of Trustees

Cape Fear Memorial Hospital has announced the appointment of James C. Braye, director of Career Planning and Placement at University of North Carolina at Wilmington, to the hospital's Board of Trustees.

Mr. Braye is a graduate of Colorado College and received his master's degree in guidance and counseling from Virginia State University. He is currently director of the Wilmington Symphony and serves on the NC Governor's Internship Commission. Mr. Braye has also served on the planning and zoning commission of Newark, Ct.

Mr. Braye fills the seat recently vacated by Derrick G.S. Davis, of Derrick G. S. Davis and Associates, who served on the hospital's board of trustees since 1976.

Nu Omega: A New Beginning

A new chapter of Sigma Theta Tau, an international honor society in nursing, was chartered on April 9, 1994 on the campus of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Dr. Marlene Rosenketter, Dean of the School of Nursing assisted Dr. Astred Heliwell Wilson, the chartering officer, in inducting 107 new and dual or transferring members into the honor society.

Officials from Sigma Theta Tau were present to offer congratulatory messages from many areas of the state and the country: Dr. Susan Folden, Region 7 Coordinator, Florida; Dr. Mary Curran, Chair of the North Carolina Consortium of Sigma Theta Tau chapters, and Dr. Cindy Stewart, president elect of Gamma Zeta, a chapter of Sigma Theta Tau at Goldsboro; Eunice McRae, Chairman of the University of the North Carolina at Wilmington Board of Trustees addressed the members and congratulated all on the achievement of this prestigious honor.

Dr. Marvin Moss, Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs added his congratulatory message as did Dr. Grace Burton, President of the Phi Kappa Phi a scholastic Honor Society; Dr. Richard Dillman, President of Sigma Xi, Scientific Research Society.

Dr. Marlene Rosenketter was honored for her efforts in guiding and facilitating the establishment of the new chapter at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Mrs. Adrienne Jackson, the new president of Nu Omega expressed great appreciation to Becky Y. Harrison, the past president of the UNCW Nursing Honor Society for her dedication and intensive efforts in helping to Lynda Chambers, Vice President; Sherry Hendrickson, Secretary; Deborah Broome, Treasurer; and Dr. Marla Dowell and Doretha Stine as Counselors.

Prospective sigma Theta Tau members are invited to join the honor society. Nursing students who meet academic and leadership criteria, as well as baccalaureate prepared nurses not presently enrolled in a program in higher education, but are viewed as enrolled in a program in higher education, but are viewed as leaders in the community settings, compose the honor society. The goals of the honor society are to foster leadership and research in nursing.

Minority Awards Banquet Held Tuesday

BY RENEE HILL
Staff Writer

On April 19, 1994, African-Americans, Asians, Native-Americans and students of various other nationalities were honored for their invaluable accomplishments at UNCW. Proud parents, friends, spouses and professors gathered in the University Center Ballroom to witness the occasion.

Gifted guitarist, William Strickland, entertained the audience with acoustic tunes that incorporated Spanish and North African rhythms. Ralph Brown, recipient of an outstanding academic award, served as master of ceremonies.

"Our intention with this program is to give special recognition to African-American and other ethnic minority students at UNCW who have excelled in academic and various leadership roles," said Ralph Parker, director of Minority Affairs at UNCW.

The program featured keynote speaker Kenneth Lemon, a reporter for WECT-TV. Lemon's accomplishments as an undergraduate reflected what the Minority Awards Program is all about. He was president of the NAACP chapter at UNCW, student body president and 1991 student of the year. Lemon relayed to award recipients a message of dedication and loyalty to others.

"Don't stop working just because you've received an award. Make a change by doing something—make your accomplishments apply. Do not simply make the wall or shelf in your room look good," said Lemon.

Forty-eight leadership awards and 199 academic awards were presented to qualifying minority students. For the academic award, students must have completed 12 or more semester hours with a grade point average of 3.0 or better during the spring or fall semester of 1993.

"I felt I deserved it. It is because of these awards and the encouragement of people like Mr. Parker that keep you striving for greater achievement," said Lanette Bethea. Bethea will graduate this spring with a degree in Therapy Recreation and Gerontology. She received an outstanding academic award.

John Zimmerman, the recipient of an outstanding leadership award, said, "I felt happy, excited, ecstatic." Zimmerman, along with Desiree Waldo, founded the Native American Society at UNCW.

Another recipient of an outstanding leadership award was Lemuel Abdullah. "I lead by example. I try to influence other people into doing what I feel is right. A man is not known by his words, but by his actions."

The 1994 student of the year award went to Nathaniel Hill. Hill is a member of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity and the Chancellor's Advisor Committee. He served in the U.S. Marine Corp and has made the Dean's List.

The program closed with a warm reception filled with words of encouragement and appreciation by relatives and friends of award recipients.

Dr. Thomas Glick to Speak in Wilmington

Dr. Thomas F. Glick, internationally renowned historian of science and professor of history at Boston University, will speak at UNCW on "The Reception of Darwin's Ideas in Latin America." The application of these ideas ranged fairly widely, extending from politics to cattle ranching. The talk will be held Thursday evening, April 21, at 8 p.m., King Hall auditorium at UNCW. It is free and open to the public.

Glick is known for his work in the history of science in the Spanish-speaking world. His books include Islamic and Christian Spain in the Early Middle Ages, Einstein in Spain, Darwin y el darwinismo en la America Latina y en el Uruguay, and Converencia: Jews, Muslims and Christians in Medieval Spain (co-authored), among others. He has recently spoken on Medieval Spain at Notre Dame University and at King Saud University in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia; and has been the recipient of numerous awards and honors, including a prestigious Guggenheim fellowship.

The talk is jointly sponsored by the UNCW College of Arts and Sciences, Office of International Programs, Graduate School, and the Science, Humanities and Society Program. It is being offered in conjunction with the annual Virginia-Carolinas-Georgia Seminar in Colonial Latin American History, which is meeting in Wilmington for the first time.

UNCW Cheerleaders Finish 4th Nationally

BY ERICA BRANDON
Staff Writer

The UNCW cheerleading squad finished fourth recently in the national college cheerleaders competition in San Diego.

UNCW competed at Sea World against 12 other college teams from across the United States. Morehead State (Kentucky) took first in the I-A category. Central Florida was second and George Mason was third.

For the cheerleaders to be chosen to compete they submitted a video showing their routines. UNCW cheerleaders have qualified to compete for the past six years. Their best showing is second place. They have not placed below fifth.

The competition will be televised this summer on ESPN and ESPN II.

The squad, which had been seeded 10th, had seven new members who competed and still had a good outcome. But not without some moments of apprehension. Julie Cappell broke her hand the night before the competition, but still performed.

The competition, scheduled to begin at 1 p.m. at Sea World, had to be relocated to San Diego State University. During this change of location, ESPN had to dismantle then reassemble their equipment causing yet another delay in beginning the contest. The UNCW team were finally able to perform at 9:30 that night.

Members who competed in San Diego included Bonnie Carver, Betty Duffey, Alisha Biskie, Heidi Wooten, Jennifer Coyer, Melanie Cantebury, Nikki Harris, Julie Capell, Reggie Ingram, Joe Jones, Eric Carter, Kevin Holleman, Al Baggett and Jeff Dean. They were coached by Michael Lee.

To pay for the trip, the cheerleaders collaborated with Domino's to sell coupons. They also held car washes, and the athletic department helped subsidize the trip.

Russian Author Anatoli Rybakov To Visit

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Russian author Anatoli Rybakov will visit Wilmington and sign his works of historical fiction during a reception on Monday, April 25 at 7:00 p.m. at Bristol Books, the Galleria Mall, Wrightsville Beach.

Rybakov will be signing copies of the controversial, critical acclaimed novel: Children of Arbat and its sequel Feat.

Children of Arbat was completed in the 60s, but was denied publication in the Soviet Union for over 20 years because of its strong criticism and portrayal of Stalin's murderous purges of the 30s. Its publication in 1987 represented the beginning of real change in Soviet social policy and the new freedom of expression resulting from Mikhail Gorbachev's perestroika reforms.

Rybakov graduated from Moscow Institute of Railway Engineers in 1934. He was an engineer for motor vehicle transport companies in Ufa, Kalinin, and Ryazan, U.S.S.R. Rybakov served in the Red Army from 1941 to 1946. He was once exiled to Siberia for alleged counterrevolutionary activity.

His novel for adults, Voditeli, earned Rybakov the Stalin Prize in 1951. In 1973, he was awarded the Vasil'ev Brothers Prize, Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic, for his children's novella Neizvestny soldat.

Rybakov's visit to Wilmington is assisted by UNCW guest professor Ambassador Gerasimov, Mrs. Gerasimov, Independent Opinion Research and Communications, Inc., and Bristol Books. Rybakov and his wife Tonya live in New York City and are here in Wilmington to visit friends and vacation in Wrightsville Beach.

On behalf of the sports department, namely myself, I would like to extend a big thank you to Joelle for all the fine articles she has written - often for free. You have helped the paper and I bet more than you can imagine. Thanks a bunch Joelle!!

Seahawks Sign Scorer From Michigan

Donny Hackworth, a 6-5, 185-pound wing player who finished second in the nation among junior college scorers this past season, has signed a letter of intent to play basketball at UNC Wilmington in 1994-95.

Hackworth averaged 28.2 points per game at Glen Oaks Community College in Centerville, Mich., last season. He was named first-team All-Conference in the Western Michigan Conference, first-team All-Region 12 and first-team All-State after an outstanding season.

"Donny is a proven scorer who was called on to play a number of positions this year," said Kevin Eastman, UNCW's fourth-year coach. "He's also shown he can rebound well from the wing position and that's something we definitely need. He really helps us prepare for the following year when we lose a big portion of our perimeter game."

"We felt we needed to sign both wing positions this year as we'll be losing Chris (Meighen), Ganon (Baker) and Corey (Stewart)...three players who played quite a bit this year. Mark Byington (UNCW's early period signee) and Donny Hackworth are investments in our future."

Hackworth, 21, racked up some impressive numbers for Coach Richard Victor's squad at Glen Oaks last season. In addition to his lofty scoring average, Hackworth collected 6.8 rebounds and 2.0 assists per game, while shooting 61.6 percent from the field, 33.0 percent behind the three-point arc and 81.0 percent at the free throw line.

In high school, Hackworth averaged 20.0 ppg and 7.0 rpg for Coach Jim Hahn's Concord High School club. He joins Byington, a three-point specialist out of Salem, Va., as Seahawks recruits for next season.

The end is here—
Your UNCW athletic career.
The final season is finished,
But memories will never be diminished.

You've worked hard day after day,
Abiding what your coaches say.
Your inner strength prevailed,
What your heavy workload entailed.

The times you waste—
It away,
And not listen to anyone that day.
It would've been easy to give-up,
But instead you got tough.

You gave it all you got,
Working your way to the top.
Even when it didn't seem worth it,
You stayed in there and didn't quit.

There were days when you shined,
And everything seemed fine.
But never forgetting the times in the game,
When no one even knew your name.

The amplifying feelings of a team win;
Everyone is together like neighboring kin.
But facing the consequences of defeat,
Disasters all as they wish to retreat.

There were unforgettable thought,
Along with many lessons taught.
Those truly memorable times,
Couldn't be bought for a dime.

Remember the friends you've made,
And don't let your experiences fade.
For in the years ahead,
You'll reflect upon the life you've lead.

DON'T EVER LET YOUR ATHLETIC SPIRIT DIE!

ACC All-Star Classic Game on Friday

Duke star Grant Hill, who sparked the Blue Devils to three national championship games, winning a pair of titles, headlines a pre-game autograph session and a pre-game clinic before leading his team in the annual ACC All-Star Classic Circuit game this Friday, April 22, at Trask Coliseum.

For the 16th consecutive year and sixth time at UNC Wilmington, Sugar Creek Enterprises, Inc., will showcase some of the country's top collegiate basketball talent at Trask Coliseum.

The game begins at 7:30 p.m., and tickets, $8 in advance and $10 at the door, are on sale exclusively at Boseman's Sporting Goods, New Centre Drive, Wilmington (phone 910-799-5990). The box office at Trask Coliseum opens at 6 p.m. on game day.

"We're very pleased to have another outstanding group coming to Wilmington," says Neill McGeachy, president of Sugar Creek enterprises. "Grant Hill certainly has been one of the elite players in the country over the last four years for Duke."

A three-time consensus All-America at Duke, the 6-8 Hill racked up almost every conceivable honor in his four-year stint with the Blue Devils. The versatile guard/forward was named 1994 ACC Player-of-the-Year, first-team All-ACC and 1994 NCAA Southeast Regional MVP.

Hill sparked the Blue Devils to the 1991 and 1992 NCAA titles and was a finalist for several National Player-of-the-Year awards this season. In addition, Hill recently had his No. 33 retired by Duke at Cameron Indoor Stadium.

Hill will be joined by teammate Marty Clark and UNC Chapel Hill standout Brian Reese. The threesome combined for a 232-51 record over the last four years and three national championships, six Final Four appearances, four regular season ACC titles and three ACC tournament crowns. Hill and Clark amassed an 18-2 record in NCAA playoff action during their careers.

In addition, UNC Wilmington seniors Drew Phillips and Sherif El-Sanadily will compete in the contest. A four-year regular, Phillips set UNCW's career assist record this season and El-Sanadily, the first foreign recruit in the history of the program, enjoyed an outstanding career after arriving from Cairo, Egypt, three years ago.

Other players scheduled to appear include: Marc Blucas, Trelonnie Owens, Charlie Harrison and Stan King (Wake Forest); Marc Lewis, Migen Bikalil (N.C. State); Janko Narat (Davidson).

The game day schedule has Hill conducting an autograph session at Boseman's Sporting Goods from 4-5 p.m. A pre-game clinic, conducted by Hill starts at 6:30 p.m., and the game tips off at 7:30 p.m.

In last year's game, former Duke star Bobby Hurley scored 17 points to lead his team to a 160-144 victory. UNCW's Tim Shaw and Wake Forest's Chris King scored 29 and 28 points respectively for the losers.

Chris McBride
Junior Pitcher
Leland, N.C.

A junior right-hander from Leland, N.C., McBride twirled a three-hitter Sunday to spark the Seahawks over 25th-ranked Old Dominion, 4-3, at Brooks Field.

McBride, a graduate of North Brunswick High School, walked just one batter and struck out three in holding Old Dominion's potent offensive attack at bay. He went the distance in picking up his second victory of the season against five losses.

This Week In Sports Baseball

The Seahawks remain in second place tie in the Colonial Athletic Association after edging 25th ranked Old Dominion, 4-3, Sunday in the finale of a three-game series with the Monarchs at Brooks Field.

Coach Mark Scalf's club, which entertains UNC Chapel Hill Tuesday at 7 p.m., dropped the first two games of the weekend series with ODU, 2-1 in 11 innings and 19-2.

However, junior pitcher Chris McBride fashioned a three-hitter on Sunday against the Monarchs, walking just one and striking out three in the stellar performance.

Sunday's victory leaves the Seahawks with a 24-21 overall record and 8-7 record in the CAA. ODU clinched the regular season title with a 14-4 mark while UNCW, Richmond and James Madison all stand 8-7.

The Seahawks are currently batting .272 as a team, paced by three players over the .300 mark: Battle Holley (.377), Derek Williams (.314) and Tate Joyner (.302).

UNCW steps out of the conference for a pair of games against Atlantic Coast Conference competition this Tuesday and Wednesday before wrapping up the CAA slate with a three-game series against William and Mary this weekend.

The Seahawks face UNC Chapel Hill Tuesday night at Brooks Field. The Tar Heels, who own a 31-4 advantage in the series, are 29-11 overall and 8-6 in the ACC after taking two of three games from Maryland over the weekend.

UNCW has only two home games remaining after Tuesday's contest, vs. UNC Greensboro (April 27) and Coastal Carolina (May 7).

Track & Field

The Seahawks recorded their highest finish in the history of the program by taking third place in the men's competition and fifth place in the women's meet in the Colonial Athletic Association Track and Field Championships last weekend in Williamsburg, Va.

Coach Jim Sprecher's team placed a team-high 13 thirlands on the All-Conference team at William and Mary's oval.

In the men's meet, freshman Freddie Gaines and Dan Keltner both won individual titles. Gaines led a 1-2-3 sweep in the 400 Hurdles with a time of 55.54, followed by teammates John Fernandez (56.10) and Jon Lemon (56.16). Keltner took the hammer throw with a toss of 145-0 and John Yelverton was fourth.

Freshman Joseph Hardee led six runner-up performances for the Seahawks by taking second in the javelin (170-5). Michael McDuffie finished second in the triple jump (49-2 1/2). John Fernandez took second in the 400 Hurdles (56.10) and 100 High Hurdles, Chris Bailey was second in the 800 Meters (1:55.68), Cameron McIver was second on the pole vault and Robbie Moss was second in the high jump (6-7).

On the women's side, junior Heather Fenton paced the Lady Seahawks, earning All-CAA honors in the 1,500 Meters (4:38.98) and finishing fourth in the 3,000.

Also first year performer Cynthia Peters was third in the 400 Meters (58.47), freshman Sara White came in third in the 400 Hurdles (1:04.59) and fifth in the High Hurdles, and Kim Wolfer captured fourth in the discus (119-3). In addition, freshman Chi Wilkins was fifth in both the 100 Meters and Shot Put. Wilkins also joined Heather Fenton, Sara White and Cynthia Peters on the fourth place 4X400 Relay team.

CAA Men's Track and Field Championship Team Results: George Mason (86), William and Mary (69), UNC Wilmington (54), East Carolina (50), Richmond (20), James Madison (17).

CAA Women's Track and Field Championship Team Results: George Mason (112), East Carolina (51 1/2), William and Mary (51), James Madison (31 1/2), UNC Wilmington (17), Richmond (6), Old Dominion (0).

Tennis

The Seahawks wrapped up the spring season over the weekend by placing eighth in the CAA Men's Tennis Championships in Harrisonburg, Va.

Overall, Coach Larry Honeycutt's team finished with a 58-86 (.403) record in singles matches and a 35-43 (.448) mark in doubles this spring.

UNCW Individual Singles Record: David Acevedo (6-17), Gareth Montague-Smith (6-18), Mike Rayos (9-14), Chad Oxendine (9-13), David Eller (13-9), Claudio Silberberg (12-10), John McGuire (1-2), Brian Jackson (2-3).

UNCW Doubles Records: Montague-Smith-Rayos (1-2), Acevedo-Silberberg (1-2), Oxendine- Eller (1-0), Oxendine-McGuire (7-7), Acevedo-Montague-Smith (3-8), Rayos-Silberberg (8-12), Jackson-Eller (1-2), Oxendine-Montague-Smith (5-4), Acevedo- Eller (2-6).

UNCW Scientists Live And Work On The Ocean Floor

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Executive Editor

A new program administered by UNCW is enabling scientists to live and work on the ocean floor to establish a coral reef research program off the Florida Keys.

With the use of Aquarius, the world's only undersea research laboratory, scientists began in April to evaluate the coral reefs in the Florida Keys National Marine Sanctuary to learn how to preserve the nation's only continental coral reef.

UNCW Chancellor Dr. James Leutze participated in an Aquarius mission on Conch Reef in May. Working with Dr. Steven Miller, science director of the Florida Program of the National Undersea Research Program, Leutze is featured in a documentary video about the coral reef research program. UNCW/Marine Graphics assisted with producing the documentary which was released May 23.

Miller said, "Aquarius provides exceptional capability for scientists to work under water."

UNCW scientists believe the coral reefs to harbor secret benefits for current and future generations, as well as being a billion dollar a year commercial fishing and recreational industry.

"We cannot allow these reefs to be destroyed, particularly if it's something that man is doing that is destroying them, whether that be through pollution or through various other activities," Leutze said. "We've got to find out what the problem is. We've got to find out how to preserve these reefs, so that they will be there, not just for tourists, but for mankind."

Aquarius allows scientists to live and work underwater for 10-days at a stretch without having to lose time returning to the surface. With an air-conditioned and dehumidified living environment, team members enjoy amenities such as hot water showers, fresh food, a microwave oven, individual bunks, and a toilet.

A total of eight Aquarius missions are planned for 1994, one each month from April to November.

The April mission had the underwater research team establish permanent deep water monitoring stations at several depths ranging from 30 to 105 feet.

Another Aquarius project from May 15-28 undertook studies of live coral communities and dead coral reef debris in Key Largo to obtain data which will help determine management policy decisions concerning living coral reefs today.

June 14-27 will provide studies on the effects of current speed, zooplankton abundance, and predation on the feeding rates of fish that eat plankton. This study will aid in determining variation in distribution and abundance of fishes on reefs with varying water quality characteristics.

A study on the chemical ecology of coral reef organisms is slated for July, and in August there will be a study of depth dependent effects of ultraviolet radiation on ecologically important coral.

September's mission will focus on the feeding biology of corals. The ecological significance of growth and reproduction by a calcareous green seaweed on offshore reefs in the Keys will be undertaken in October.

The final 1994 Aquarius project in November will study the effects of nutrient and temperature variation on coral metabolism at Conch Reef.

Funded by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), the National Undersea Research Center (NURC) at UNCW is one of six regional centers under the National Undersea Research Program. NOAA provides base funding of approximately $4 million per year.

Aquarius is owned by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and managed by the National Undersea Research Center at UNCW.

Other resources that make research possible in Florida include remotely operated vehicles, manned research submersibles, saturation diving from an undersea laboratory, support vehicles and shore facilities for operation stagings.

Aquarius is now operating at a depth of 20 meters at the base of a coral reef wall off Key Largo and can be floated to the surface and towed to another area of marine research as necessary.

Shinn Receives Highest Faculty Honor

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Executive Editor

Dr. Gerald H. Shinn, a professor of philosophy and religion at UNCW, was presented with the 1994 Oliver Max Gardner Award from the Board of Governors of the 16-campus University of North Carolina on May 13.

The award was presented by UNC President C.D. Spangler, Jr. and Gardner Award Committee Chairman John A. Garwood during the Board of Governors meeting in Chapel Hill.

The Oliver Max Gardner Award has been given annually since 1949. It was initiated in the honor of Governor O. Max Gardner to honor faculty who have "made the greatest contributions to the welfare of the human race." The 1994 award includes a $7,500 cash prize.

Shinn has been a member of the UNCW faculty for 26 years. He was instrumental in establishing the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes. First given in 1975, UNCW gives these prizes every four years to those individuals who exhibit Schweitzer's conviction of "reverence for life" and who excel in medicine, the humanities, and music.

Shinn is also the founder of the North Carolina Educational, Historical, and Scientific Foundations; the UNCW Institute for Human Potential; the UNCW Museum of World Cultures; the annual Living Treasure of North Carolina Award; and the biennial National Living Treasure Award.

You are all probably thanking God, Allah, or the Buddha. Dr. Gerald Shinn speaking at the 1994 UNCW Commencement

In order to fight illiteracy in North Carolina, Shinn instituted his Parnassus on Wheels project. He serves on the advisory council of the Society of St. Andrew, an organization working to end world hunger.

The Committee for the Board of Governors cited Shinn for his "outstanding accomplishments as a professor of philosophy and religion and as a world citizen."

An announcement about Dr. Shinn's receipt of the 1994 Oliver Max Gardner Award was also made during UNCW's 48th Commencement exercise on May 14. In a speech to graduates and their parents, Shinn cautioned the audience not to let "education get in the way of learning."

"Dr. Shinn was the real commencement speaker as far as I'm concerned," said new graduate Gina deArmitt following Shinn's speech. This was echoed by other students during a standing ovation for Shinn.

In his response to receiving the Oliver Max Gardner Award, Shinn said North Carolina began a renaissance "with the establishment of the University of North Carolina which was chartered in 1789. A university worth its salt is perpetually fostering renaissance."

In his closing statement, Shinn said, "Let us... dedicate ourselves to the continuation of the tradition of the North Carolina Renaissance by helping students, young and old, experience the joy and excitement of free inquiry."

Shinn is a native of Charlotte. He currently holds a Distinguished Teaching Professorship at UNCW.

UNCW Graduates 946 In Its 48th 1994 Commencement Exercises

Graduation!

The festivities began with a reception held for graduates and their families and faculty at the Wise Alumni House on Market St. on Friday, May 13. Following tours of the Alumni House, a plaque of names of 1994 graduating seniors was unveiled honoring those students who contributed to the renovation of the Wise Alumni House.

Saturday morning, the day of the big event, started with a continental breakfast held under a huge tent on the lawn in front of Hoggard Hall. Seniors, families, friends and faculty lined up to enjoy pastries, juice and coffee.

Afterwards, beach balls bounced, corks from champagne bottles flew through the air, and creative murals topped many heads as 946 degrees were awarded at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington's 48th commencement exercises on May 14 in Trask Coliseum.

The class of 1994 heralded 887 bachelor's degrees and 59 received graduate degrees.

Dr. Alice M. Rivlin, deputy director of the Office of Management and Budget in the Executive Office of the President, was the commencement speaker.

Rivlin said today's graduates are fortunate because they are entering the workforce during a strong economic period of our nation and at a time when the workplace is changing. "There is a rediscovery that people really matter, and an organization is only productive when their people feel they are truly contributing."

At the close of her commencement address, Rivlin said, "More of a creative challenge is there for each of you (graduates) than those graduating just two or three years ago. Take advantage of this good economy and participate in this evolution."

The 1994 O. Max Gardner Award was awarded to UNCW Professor Dr. Gerald H. Shinn. Shinn received this honor based on his numerous contributions to the "welfare of the human race." The University of North Carolina Board of Governors presents the O. Max Gardner Award as the highest statewide honor to faculty members. The award was established by the late Governor Gardner in his will.

The Hoggard Medal for exhibiting the most improvement during a student's study at the university was awarded to Kelly Marie Brooks of Raleigh who graduated with better than a 3.5 grade point average. This annual award is available through the generosity of the late John T. Hoggard.

The 1994 Senior Leadership Award was presented to Heather Jean Petroff of Wilmington. The award is based on demonstrated ethical, creative, flexible and motivational leadership style, campus life involvement, community service, and academic achievement. Petroff received a $200 cash stipend, the official UNCW lamp, and a personal plaque.

The Alumni Achievement Award, presented by UNCW Alumni Association Chair Marvin Robison, was awarded to Mamie Lynn Strickland of Tabor City, NC. The award recognizes superior academic achievement for the student who earns the highest grade point average among graduating students of UNCW.

Immediately following the commencement ceremony in Trask, graduates attended receptions hosted by their discipline's department. Waving their diplomas, the smiling graduates of 1994 hugged family and friends as they left for jobs, graduate school, and some to the beach for a well-deserved rest.

UNC Board of Governors Approves Native American Scholarships

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

The UNC Board of Governors recommended on June 20th a scholarship program to boost enrollment of Native Americans at the 16 UNC-system schools.

"An inadequate and decreasing number of high school graduates who are American Indians in North Carolina... are applying to our universities," President C.D. Spangler told the BOG. Spangler supported the program, stating, that the Commission on Indian Affairs approved of the program.

Nathan Simms, UNC-system vice president for student services and special programs, said too many Native American students who are accepted into UNC-system schools do not attend. According to a BOG report nearly half of the students accepted for fall 1993 did not register.

The Office of Institutional Research's enrollment figures for the past three years confirm the report. Out of 58 Native American students who applied in 1993, 40 were accepted but only 21 attended. Figures for the other two years were similar. Native Americans comprise less than one percent of the total UNC-system undergraduate body.

The Board of Governors approved The Incentive Scholarship Program for American Indians. It will now go to the General Assembly for final approval.

Spangler said students who participate in the program will be expected to meet all admission requirements at the university where they apply.

Students attending any of the 16 UNC-system schools would be eligible for the scholarship, as well as transfer students. If the General Assembly approves and funds the program, students could begin receiving scholarships as early as fall 1994. The program would be implemented in high schools by class over the next four years. Native American students who are in the upper half of their class will be eligible.

Students who wish to retain their scholarships will be required to perform community service while attending school (six hours each week during the freshman year, eight hours during the remaining three years), maintain a certain grade point average (2.0 during freshman year, 2.5 during the sophomore year and 3.0 thereafter), and uphold high standards of moral conduct, according to the proposal. Community service requirements could be met at the students' school or in the community. Awards are projected to average $1,800 annually but could provide up to $3,000 according to the BOG report. Overall, awards are projected at $1 million annually.

Hurricane Season Is Here

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Executive Editor

The breeding season for hurricanes is June 1 through November 30. Students new to the coast of North Carolina are unaware of exactly how we deal with these monster storms. But thanks to modern detection and tracking devices, the National Weather Service (NWS) can usually provide 12 to 24 hours of advance warning.

It is the policy of UNCW to view each hurricane threat as an extremely hazardous condition, according to the Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs office.

In the event of a threatening hurricane, the local television and radio stations will keep you informed. NWS forecasters issue appropriate advisories as a storm progresses. Students and their families should be aware of the status of a storm and take precautions as indicated by authorities.

Hurricanes usually begin as a tropical depression which is defined by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) as a cyclone with winds of less than 39 miles per hour or 34 knots. Tropical depressions become tropical storms when the winds increase to 39-73 miles per hour or 63 knots.

A hurricane is a devastating cy-clonic storm with winds over 74 miles per hour near the storm center. They are usually tropical in origin. These storms are called cyclones in the Indian Ocean and typhoons in the Pacific. The term hurricane is derived from Indian words meaning "big wind."

A hurricane watch is issued by NWS forecasters when an existing hurricane poses a threat to coastal and inland community within 24-36 hours in the area specified by the watch. In the event of a watch, people living in the watch area should listen closely for further advisories and be prepared to act promptly if a hurricane warning is issued.

During a hurricane emergency, UNCW has a special organization used to manage the emergency. Supervised by the emergency operations coordinator, hurricane-related tasks will take precedence over all other tasks at UNCW during the emergency and recovery period.

Upon notification of a hurricane watch, a mandatory meeting of resident students will be held to clarify evacuation procedures in case beaches are evacuated.

A hurricane warning signifies that a hurricane is expected to strike within 24 hours. A warning means hurricane force winds and/or dangerously high water and exceptionally high waves are expected in a specified coastal area. Precautionary actions should begin immediately.

Local officials will begin the evacuation of low lying areas and beaches approximately 8-12 hours prior to the onset of adverse driving conditions (winds in excess of 40 miles an hour). The exact timing of the evacuation event will be determined by the forecast movement of the hurricane and the projected time it will take to completely evacuate the beach area.

The UNCW Emergency Operations Center will be fully operational during a hurricane warning. Emergency personnel will be available for recall. If evacuation of beaches is undertaken, UNCW classes will be cancelled. The Provost's office will notify all academic deans. Each dean will notify the faculty of class cancellations.

If beaches are evacuated, residents on campus will be immediately notified and will be required to evacuate the Residence Life area. Those students unable to travel home or secure safe housing with family or friends will be directed to a designated shelter. The designated shelter for UNCW is the University Union. The shelter will also provide a safe a safe haven for families of emergency employees and those faculty and staff not part of the emergency team (if space is available).

The University will be closed following evacuation of residence halls at the discretion of the Chancellor or his designee. No one will be allowed to remain in buildings. Following the hurricane landfall, authorities will determine the status of recovery operations. Students are expected to resume class attendance within 24 hours of the official reopening of the academic program.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency and NOAA advise you to stay indoors during a hurricane. Blowing debris can injure and kill. Travel is extremely dangerous. Be especially wary of the "eye" of the hurricane. If the storm center passes directly overhead, there will be a lull in the wind lasting from a few minutes to half-an-hour or more. At the other side of the "eye" the winds will increase rapidly to hurricane force and will come from the opposite direction.

UNCW Psychologists Find That Violent Rap Music May Encourage Violent Acts

BY ROLANDA BURNEY
PR Intern

Exposure to violent rap music may increase the probability that individuals may engage in violent acts, according to research findings presented at a meeting of the Southeastern Psychological Association.

The research was conducted by Dr. James D. Johnson, associate professor of psychology at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, and his colleagues Lee Anderson Jackson and Leslie Gatto. They found exposure to violent rap music may increase the probability that listeners may be more likely to accept the use of and/or engage in violent behavior, and significantly affect the listener's perceptions of the value of academic pursuits or the likelihood of academic success.

Johnson conducted his research with 46 black males aged 11-16 recruited from the Community Boys Club in Wilmington. The research was designed to assess the effects of exposure to violent rap music on the acceptance of the use of violence, including violence against women, and the perceptions of the value of education.

Johnson and his colleagues separated the subjects into three groups: 1) those who watched violent rap videos; 2) those who watched non-violent rap videos; and 3) a control group who watched nothing.

To test Johnson's hypothesis that exposure to violent rap music may encourage violent acts, the three groups read two stories. One featured violent behavior including violence toward women. The other story dealt with a student pursuing a law degree versus his friend who was unemployed but had extensive material possessions, such as nice car, nice clothes, and nice jewelry. The subjects were then asked questions to measure the impact of the rap music.

After questioning all three groups, Johnson found that subjects who had watched the violent rap videos were more likely to find violent acts acceptable, including violence against the women in the story. Also, those who watched the violent rap videos said they were more likely to commit a violent act themselves in the future, including violence against a woman.

In addition to the findings related to violence, Johnson found that those who watched rap videos were more likely to want to be like the character with material possessions rather than the student. Results also indicated that subjects exposed to videos were more likely to have expectations that the students would not complete law school.

"The results of this research are significant, especially in light of last fall's shooting incident involving prominent rappers," said Johnson, a black social psychologist who focuses on how social stimuli affect behavior.

"These findings clearly suggest that exposure to violent rap music may increase the probability that individuals may engage in violent acts. Just as disturbing to me is the evidence that exposure to rap music may program young black men to fail because it leads them to place less value on education," he said.

Johnson, who plans to see if the effects of rap music are generalized to black females, white males and white females, has had his initial research accepted for publication in Basic and Applied Social Psychology, a peer reviewed journal for psychologists.

Innovative Internships On The UNCW Campus

BY ROLANDA BURNEY
PR Intern

Higher education involves much more than book and classroom knowledge. "Experience" is quickly becoming an important facet of a complete college education. Colleges and universities, urged by recent studies to experiment with new approaches to higher education, are becoming more concerned with how they prepare students for the working world. UNCW, in its commitment to enhancing the quality of education, is spearheading a proposal which gives students hands-on experiences in the working world while they apply classroom philosophies.

The program, Minority Participation in Business and Government, now in its second semester, is an internship designed to provide more employment opportunities for students, especially in minorities and women.

Guided by Robert Cutting, lecturer in UNCW's Cameron School of Business, this program places qualified UNCW students in businesses, organizations and government agencies. Initial efforts placed 13 students in businesses, organizations, the media and the courts during fall semester 1993. This spring semester, 14 of the 16 students who applied were placed in similar situations.

UNCW English Major Wins Research Fellowship

Staff Writer

UNCW senior Stephanie Bartlett has been awarded a UNCW Undergraduate Research Fellowship for 1994-95. The fellowship brings a cash award of $1,000.

Bartlett, an English major, is researching works by Charlotte Perkins Gilman, a female author who was writing at the turn of the century and until her death in 1935. Bartlett said she is interested in Gilman's "radical feminist views as expressed in her sociological and utopian novels."

Working with Dr. Keith Newlin, Bartlett will focus on a number of timely controversies in relation to Gilman's works (specifically), but also as these issues pertain to modern educational dilemmas and writers over the last one hundred years.

Bartlett said she will first perform critical readings of Gilman's fiction, non-fiction, and the analytical writings concerning Gilman's works to look for correlation's between the two genres.

The program has received positive feedback from the participating sponsors, including a push by Mike Carleson, president of the local Human Resources Association, to get more businesses involved. Barbara Stumolo, human resources director for New Hanover Regional Medical Center, said the internship provides a realistic link between classroom knowledge and success in the "real world", and in the midst of a job search, the intern is two or three steps ahead of the traditional student because he or she has applied knowledge of the work.

Because the program has been so well received by both students and organizations, plans are in progress to make the internship available as a part of the UNCW curriculum. The course will count as three units of credit for each 10-12 hour per week internship and will be classified as an independent study course. Enrollment will be open to students in any major area who demonstrate academic and leadership skills and who have a GPA of B- in their major area of study and have a 2.5 GPA overall.

Mr. Cutting and the business school are currently looking for funding in order to provide students a stipend for their work. They have two major grants pending approval, a HUD grant and a joint grant with the city of Wilmington.

In addition to identifying the genre correlation, Bartlett intends to research the neglect of Gilman's work by the literary canon and secondary/post-secondary school curricula. This neglect is attributed to "Gilman's intentional use of fiction (primarily her utopias) as propaganda," Bartlett said.

Attention will also be placed on the literary canon itself and the controversy governing the censorship wars. Bartlett said she will "tie the research together as a means of exploring why writers like Gilman, activist-highly politically charged—provocative, are being denied our students."

Bartlett has also been accepted into the Honors Study Program headed by Dr. Robert T. Brown, Professor of Psychology. The Honors portion of the award will earn Bartlett six honors credits and graduation with honors in English.

Along with her studies, Bartlett is a member of UNCW's English Club, a charter member of UNCW's Sigma Tau Delta English Honor Society, and editor of The English Club newsletter.

Writers Roundtable

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

The 1994 Writer's Roundtable, to be held June 4-5, will bring authors, editors, agents and publishers to UNCW.

The Writer's Roundtable will offer workshops covering genres such as Southern fiction, poetry and nonfiction. Editors, agents and publishers will also hold classes in which they will discuss their roles in the writing industry.

The Writer's Roundtable Workshops will run from 10 a.m.-6 p.m. both days.

The Roundtable is designed to provide unpublished writers an opportunity to learn about the writing craft. The event is co-sponsored by the Professional and Creative Writing Program at UNCW.

Attending staff is as follows:

- Lois Bantle, author of Storyville, Southern Women and The Past is Another Country, will teach historical fiction.

- Stanley L. Colbert, president and CEO of HarperCollins Canada and group vice-president of HarperCollins U.S. for corporate development, will lecture on major publishers.

- David Drake, a former Chapel Hill town attorney who became a full-time writer in 1981, will teach science fiction/fantasy. Drake has authored the Hammer's Slammer's and collaborated with S.M. Stirling, William C. Dietz and others.

- John P. McAfee, author of Slow Walk in a Sad Rain, will teach humor.

- C.H. Scott, author of Tales From the Tropics, Sailors Dreams and Pirate Schemes, and Faraway, will teach biography/memoirs. His memoirs of his father, actor Randolph Scott, will be published this year.

- Margaret Jensen, author of First We Have Coffee, Violets for Mr. B and The Sun is Shining on the Other Side, will teach inspirational writing.

- Elynn Bache, author of Festival in Fire Season, Culture Clash, Safe passage and contributor to Wilmington and Its Beaches, will teach short story writing.

- Philip Gerard, director of the UNCW professional and creative writing program, and author of Hatteras Light, Brilliant Passage and Cape Fear Rising, will teach nonfiction.

- Dorothy Dearing, an Atlanta-based literary agent who specializes in new authors, will lecture on literary agents.

- Deborah Adams, author of All the Great Pretenders, All Dark Disguises, will teach mystery.

- Graham Watkins, author of Kaleidoscope Eyes, Dark Winds and The Fire Within, will teach horror.

- Bret Lott, author of The Man Who Owned Vermont, A Stranger's House, Jewel and A Dream of Old Leaves, will teach literary fiction.

- Lois Duncan, author of Don't Look Behind You, The Twisted Window, Killing Mr. Griffin, Stranger With My Face, Ransom and others, will teach writing for young people.

- Tim Razzi, author of Nightstalker and Strike of the Cobra, will teach action/adventure.

- James Applewhite, author of Foreseeing the Journey, History of the River, Lessons in Soaring and River Writing, will teach poetry.

- Teresa Gladden, author of P.S. I Love You, Bad Company and Just Desserts, will teach romance.

- Douglas McMillan, a Carboro-based publisher, will lecture on small presses.

The Writer's Roundtable fee is $30. The fee includes both days of the conference. Pre-registration is May 30, but registration will also be taken the day of the conference. Space is limited. Accommodations are available for a discount rate at the Comfort Inn 1-40 Executive Center and Ramada Inn on Market St.

Registration forms are available at most Wilmington and Raleigh bookstores, or by writing: The Writer's Roundtable, 2801 Lyndon Ave., Wilmington, NC 28405.

Campus Crime Data Made Available

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Executive Editor

The United States Department of Education states that college students and their parents are entitled to receive campus crime data under final regulations published by the U.S. Education Department (USDE).

The final regulations appear in the April 29, 1994 Federal Register. They require institutions to report timely to the campus community on crimes considered an on-going danger to other students and employees.

"Consumers have a right to know what they're buying," said U.S. Secretary of Education Richard W. Riley, "and campus crime statistics and safety procedures provide critical information for any parent or student when selecting a college. If consumers can find out the safety records of motor vehicles, surely they should have access to the same information for college campuses."

According to the USDE, colleges and universities are now required to distribute an annual security report to all current students and employees. Any prospective student or employee will receive a summary of this report and, upon request, the complete report.

This report is published annually at UNCW in the student newspaper, The Seahawk, during the Fall semester.

Although campus staff with "significant counseling responsibility" are expected to provide statistical data for the report, they may continue to honor the confidentiality of victims. These staff persons are not included in the definition of "campus security authority" and are not required to report crimes to law enforcement officials.

The federal regulations fulfill Title II of the Student Right-to-know and Campus Security Act (Public Law 101-542). In accordance with the law, a compilation of campus crime statistics from universities and colleges will be made and a report submitted to Congress in 1995.

The USDE will publish a booklet Campus Security Programs: A First Look at Promising Programs in the near future to outline a comprehensive campus security program. It will also provide examples of effective programs across the country.

Along with the booklet, the USDE will provide almost $14 million during 1994 to colleges and universities to aid in developing campus-wide programs to reduce alcohol and drug abuse.

UNC Student Surveys Hate Speech

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

A study conducted by a doctoral student at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill recently revealed that, of 384 public colleges and universities polled nationwide, all had codes regulating speech and behavior.

Araji Korwar, who conducted the study, found a variety of regulations on student speech and behavior. Nearly 80 percent of the schools surveyed forbid conduct that interferes with "classes, research, and other regular activities."

Hazing was the second-most regulated activity. Seventy percent of schools had provisions against hazing. The University of New Orleans defines hazing as padding, mandating public appearance in "apparel that is bizarre or not in good taste," and forcing excessive fatigue or drinking, for example.

The third-most restricted behavior was verbal abuse. More than 60 percent of the schools prohibited harassment. About half the universities surveyed the restrictions against threats of violence and indecent or profane language.

Korwar said she conducted the study to help define hate-speech codes. "The estimates on how many schools had hate-speech codes had varied so widely. No one had ever tried to define hate-speech codes."

Korwar criticized the codes in her report, saying universities used them to suppress prejudiced expressions and beliefs of students. "They're quick fixes that don't solve the problem of hatred. I'm all for watching what you say and making sure you don't offend other people, but (sensitivity) has to come from awareness, not from the knowledge that there's a rule that will punish you if you do."

The study was published by the Freedom Forum's First Amendment Center in Vanderbilt, Tenn.

UNCW Professor Adcock Receives State Chemistry Award

UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

The North Carolina Institute of Chemists (NCIC) has announced the selection of Dr. Louis Adcock, professor of Chemistry at the UNCW, for the North Carolina Distinguished Service to the Profession of Chemistry Award for 1994. He was recognized at an Awards Banquet, April 23, at Guilford College in Greensboro.

Professor Adcock received his BS in chemistry and MA in analytical chemistry from Duke University. He was employed as an analytical chemist by the International Mineral and Chemical Corporation and the US Army Chemical Corps during the period of 1953-57. He then joined the chemistry Department of UNCW. He obtained his doctorate degree in analytical chemistry from Louisiana State University in 1970. Dr. Adcock became a full professor in 1978.

During his distinguished career, Dr. Adcock has served the chemistry profession by consulting for many companies and government agencies.

Among the companies he currently consults with is Carolco Productions which produces movies in North Carolina. He served for 15 years as director of the NC Academy of Science South-eastern NC District Science Fair. For 30 years, Dr. Adcock has presented a series of five lectures to various classes in the K through 12 levels throughout New Hanover, Brunswick and Pender Counties. These presentations cover diverse material as evidenced by their titles: Chemical Magic; Polymers; and Chemistry Short Courses.

At UNCW he has served as ACS Student Affiliate Advisor from 1973 to present. He also represented the citizens of New Hanover County as a member of its Environmental Impact Committee during 1973-78. An active member of the American Chemical Society (ACS) and Eastern NC ACS Section, Dr. Adcock was their Newsletter Reporter from 1963-72.

Professor Adcock is a Fellow of the American Institute of Chemists

(AIC). He is an active member of North Carolina Institute of Chemists (NCIC), was secretary-treasurer from 1975-77, and president from 1979-81. His dedicated service to the NCIC's Annual Student Awards program is commendable. At UNCW Dr. Adcock has taught General Chemistry, Analytical Chemistry, Advanced Analytical Chemistry, Quantitative Analysis, and the corresponding laboratory courses along with Seminar,

UNCW Introduces Honors Program

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

UNCW is introducing an honors program this year to encourage outstanding students to attend the university.

Officials have raised nearly $1 million for endowing merit scholarships. The University plans to invest the money and fund the scholarships with the interest it earns.

The program will offer small, intense classes. Four honors courses will be offered this year. The university also plans to offer a study-abroad program and seminars, said Marvin Moss, provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs.

Thirty-five incoming freshman have enrolled in the honors program. The program will be limited to freshmen for the first year. Upperclassmen will be able to participate as upper-level classes are added.

Dr. Moss said the program will help UNCW compete better with the other 15 UNC-system schools. "All of them give scholarships," he said. "We have had very few." An honors program encourages successful students to attend UNCW, Dr. Moss said.

Diane Levy, a sociology and anthropology professor, is the program director. Patricia Turrisi, assistant professor of philosophy and religion is associate director.

School officials hope to house honor students in halls where computers are available.

Campus Volunteer Opportunities for UNCW Students

The UNCW Volunteers office is recruiting tutors for the Crossroads program June 27-July 29 from 10 a.m. to 12 noon. Volunteer opportunities are also available in other areas for the fall semester. For more information on the Crossroads program or other volunteer projects, please call 395-3827 or stop by the Campus Activities Office in the University Union in room 202.

EMERGE

Freshman Emerging
As Leaders

Emerge is an exciting, innovative and fun opportunity designed for freshmen interested in developing their leadership potential and becoming active participants in campus life, regardless of their previous leadership experience.

Emerge is a semester-long program designed to help students develop the skills necessary to become effective leaders. Participants in the program attend weekly sessions focusing on leadership styles and principles using group discussion and experiential learning.

Another important part of the program is participation in student organizations. Each Emerging Leader chooses a student organization to join. Through this involvement they test classroom theories, develop leadership skills, and make friends with other leaders on campus.

Applications will be accepted through Friday, September 16, 1994. Sessions begin September 20, 1994 and end November 15, 1994.

Sessions will be held each Tuesday from 3:30-5 p.m. in the Leadership Center.

There will be a special outdoor adventure on a weekend. You will join an organization of your choice.

This program is not for academic credit. It's fun!

UNCW Biology Professor Awarded Grant

BY CHRISTY PREVATT
PR Intern

Wilmington — Dr. Joseph Pawlik, associate professor of biological sciences, has been awarded $21,000 from Sphinx Pharmaceuticals Corporation, in the Research Triangle Park, for a collaborative project investigating the pharmacological activities of extracts of marine organisms. The funds will provide equipment and salary support for a research technician to help Pawlik.

Pawlik and his assistant will provide extracts of marine organisms, both invertebrates and algae, from the Florida Keys, the Caribbean Sea and N.C. waters. Sphinx scientists will use the extracts in a drug screening program, looking for specific activity of compounds that might be used as drugs.

The information will be shared with Pawlik, who wants to see if the activity in their screens correlates with the activity seen in his ecological experiments.

The grant's funds will be matched by the National Science Foundation through Pawlik's Presidential Young Investigator Award he received in 1991.

Pawlik was funded $177,000 in February for three years from the National Science Foundation for his project titled "Assessing the Chemical Defenses of Caribbean Sponges." This project represents the first systematic investigation of the chemical defenses of tropical marine sponges.

Because sponges are dominant and important components of coral reefs, his research will be carried out on Aquarius, the world's most advanced underwater scientific research laboratory situated on Conch Reef near Key Largo, Florida. The Aquarius is a joint venture between UNCW/NOAA environmental research program aimed at better understanding and preserving the coral reef.

Pawlik will be taking graduate and undergraduate students to Florida in July and August to live on Aquarius for eight days and conduct extensive research.

Also in February, Dr. Pawlik was awarded $7,000 from the National Undersea Research Center at UNCW for his project on the chemical ecology of Caribbean Sponges.

The grant will fund observation of tropical sponges in their natural habitat this summer. Pawlik will investigate the hypothesis that sponges produce unusual chemical compounds that might make them taste bad to predators.

Cameron School of Business Overhauls MBA Program

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

The Cameron School of Business has begun overhauling its MBA curriculum at the suggestion of Dean Howard Rockness.

The school conducted an "image study," examining opinions of students, alumni, and business leaders. "We literally started out with a white sheet of paper," said Rebecca Porterfield, director of the school's MBA program. "We said, 'Given the informational output, what do we need to do to achieve educational objectives to get a student ready for the year 2000 and beyond in order to manage a leadership team?'"

The result was a proposal to combine team teaching, group learning, and business-world issues to help graduates manage and deal with a variety of problems.

The Graduate School hasn't approved the plan yet.

"What if you have an environmental spill? What if you have a labor problem? These are the kinds of challenges that managers deal with every day," Dr. Porterfield said.

"They want people that have the ability to work in a changing world."

The proposed approach stresses three areas and could be implemented by summer 1995:

- *Leadership, communication and computer skills, as well as skills for presenting information.

- This also includes accounting and other traditional skills.
- *Knowledge of how companies operate. Students would study the life cycle of companies, and join together to solve problems and to do practicum work. Students would also hear executive guest speakers.

"We are really looking for a stronger and more productive relationship between the business community and ourselves. We want to strengthen those ties," Dr. Porterfield said.

*Perspectives for improving or changing careers. About 90 percent of Cameron's MBA students work full-time and are attending school to advance in or change their jobs.

Dr. Porterfield said: "What we're saying is, 'What does that individual that comes into a graduate program need to succeed in a changing environment?' We want them to be leaders in their work environment... You're providing individuals with the tools and techniques to allow them to develop as leaders."

Big Day Notes

Beach balls, champagne, confetti, and the red eye of Dad's video camera prevailed on Saturday, May 14. The School of Nursing definitely had the rowdiest bunch of celebrants overall. It's hoped that their exuberance will carry over into their medical careers.

Parents weren't forgotten in all the excitement—a lot of mortarboards bore thanks to Mom and Dad. Ye old parents are probably congratulating each other—maybe now the parental coffers will not be so bare.

Students Learn Out of Class
by College Press Service

A Penn State study of college students indicates that undergraduates' experiences outside the classroom can positively influence their academic learning.

Students who interacted with faculty outside of class, read non-assigned books or were involved in extracurricular activities such as art, theater or music placed a higher value on learning for its own sake, the study revealed.

Students' interest in academic learning was influenced positively by their participation in class, involvement in class projects and studying. The study was part of a pilot project for NCPILA's National Study of Student Learning, which is now following approximately 4,000 students at 26 two- and four-year institutions.

More Minority Faculty Urged
by College Press Service

Three regional education organizations have launched a national program to address a shortage of minority faculty at U.S. universities and colleges. The Compact for Faculty Diversity is made up of the New England Board of Higher Education, the Southern Regional Education Board and the Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education.

The shortage is most severe in engineering, mathematics and the physical and biological sciences, but it crosses all disciplines. In 1991, less than 8 percent of doctorates went to African Americans. The percentage of doctorates awarded to minorities has declined over the past decade.

Student Wins Surfing Scholarship Award

BY ROLANDA BURNLEY
Pr Intern

Jennifer Wasson, a Wilmington native and sophomore art major at UNCW, took first place in the Women's Open Division of National Scholastic Surfing Association (NSSA) Eastern Scholastic Open Championships, Saturday, April 23.

A member of the UNCW Surf Club, Wasson competed as an independent in the competition held at Sebastian's Inlet, Florida. She was also honored with a 1994 "Surfer's Scholar Award" for her 3.8 GPA. Wasson, the daughter of Mary and John Wasson of 320 Sabra Drive in Wilmington, is also the recipient of a UNCW Alumni Scholarship and a member of Phi Eta Sigma Freshman honor society.

New UNCW Students Place Among The Academic Elite

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

Applicants had to meet higher standards to get into the 1994 fall freshman class at UNCW. In addition, the university created an honors program to attract the most outstanding students.

"People are aggressively seeking good students, and we have to do the same," Chancellor James Leutze recently told the trustees.

Officials hope that enrolling better students will help reduce the drop-out rate and encourage students to graduate in four years, saving the state money.

Marvin Moss, provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs, said the rising standards don't obstruct regional access, which Dr. Leutze has emphasized since coming to UNCW four years ago.

Dr. Moss said, "We have a tremendous interest in our region. We're not about to lose that. . . . We feel we can do what we're doing with upping quality and still be serving the region."

UNCW can attain these goals if it continues to assist area high school students in boosting their Scholastic Aptitude Test scores and grades so they can meet the new requirements. In 1993, the average New Hanover County student scored 853 on the SAT; the average North Carolina student scored 859; the national average was 902.

The average freshman enrolling at UNCW in 1993 scored 935 on the SAT, earned a 3.15 grade point average in high school and was projected to have a C average at the end of his first year.

The average freshman enrolling in 1994 will have scored 20 points higher on the SAT, earned a 3.25 GPA in high school and is expected to have slightly better than a C average at the end of his/her first year. University officials base these projections on SAT scores and high school grades.

If the incoming class does earn an average SAT score of 955, UNCW will only fall behind Appalachian State University, N.C. State University, UNC-Asheville, UNC-Chapel Hill, and UNC Greensboro. The average freshman score throughout the UNC-system was 967 in 1993.

Competition is on the rise at UNCW this year because the school is accepting fewer freshmen. The fall 1993 freshman class numbered 1,450; this year's class will number between 1,250 and 1,300, according to Bob Fry, director of institutional research. Sixty-two percent of applicants were accepted in 1993, and 56 percent were accepted this year.

Fry said UNCW will study the impact of higher admissions standards on local applicants in the fall.

Mediocre students who've had little trouble getting into UNCW in the past are now being placed on a waiting list.

UNCW's Phi Kappa Phi Initiates 100 Members

BY MICHAEL J. ARNOLD
University News Bureau

On Wednesday, April 20, 1994, the UNCW Chapter of Phi Kappa Phi Honor Society held its Initiation Ceremony in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall. Ninety-six students and four faculty members were inducted into the society.

Dr. William Dallas Herring was the guest speaker at the ceremony. As chairman of the North Carolina State Board of Education for 20 of the 22 years he served on the board, he fought for the establishment of many of the schools that now exist in this state, including UNCW. Dr. Herring, sometimes called the "father of the community college system in North Carolina," devoted his life to creating higher institutions of learning.

Phi Kappa Phi is an honor society recognizing good character and superior scholarships in all academic disciplines. Graduate students, seniors, and second semester juniors are elected to membership based on class standing and grade point average. Seniors must be in the top 10 percent of their class and second semester juniors must be in the top 5 percent for induction.

A member of the association of College Honor Societies, it was founded at the University of Maine at Orono in 1897 and numbers about 250 chapters nationwide. Chapter Number 222 at UNCW was chartered on May 1, 1980.

Frank's Place Frank Tascone

Welcome to Frank's Place. Bob, the cat, and I are out on the balcony enjoying the breeze. Our topic of discussion this week is expanding one's personal horizons. A timely topic given that I, at the ripe age of 31, am returning to school as a graduate student. Yes, the rumors you have heard are true. I am leaving my high prestige professional executive position on the second floor of the University Union. Of course I'll miss the Lexus and the weekend retreats in the Caymans, but I am in pursuit of greater substance. I want to write, study literature, and influence eager, young minds. Excuse me, I believe Bob is choking on a hairball.

Back to expanding horizons. As a professional staff member on a university campus you are limited in many ways. There is an invisible boundary that prohibits you from indulging in certain behaviors and activities. Those walls are now lifted and I am prepared to experience college life from the inside.

If you would just have beer and reggae, people would come.

First of all, I'm going to check into this Jesus Lizard thing I keep seeing signs about. Who is he? What does he want? Is he a good witch or a bad witch? I want to know. Next, I plan to walk around campus, in and out of buildings, in bare foot (such attire is frowned upon in staff meetings). What does it feel like? Do you have trouble with fire ants? Poison ivy? Do you wash your feet before going to bed? I want to know what it's like to walk in student shoes -- so to speak.

I plan to purchase a bike from the Campus Police auction. I'm going to grease and oil it real good so that it makes no noise. Then I'm going to really get crankin' down Chancellor's walk and buzz unsuspecting pedestrians. I've lived this experience from the view of the pedestrian. I want a more complete picture.

I'm not going to take classes between the hours of noon and 3 PM. Instead, I'll be packing my lunch and driving over to the University Center to wait for a parking space as close to my student mailbox as possible. If that means waiting for a couple hours, so be it. I hope some faculty/staff type drives up behind me and motions for me to move, or yells because she/he is late for a meeting. I'll hold my hands up in resignation. "Like what do you want me to do -- park and walk or something?" Jeesh!

I'm going to drift around campus with a skateboard. I won't ride it -- just walk around and use words like "killer" and "bad" when I mean good. I'm going to check out campus events -- especially the ones I have a feeling will be sparsely attended. When they're over, I'll go to the sponsors and give them my opinions on why there were so few people. "If you would just have beer and reggae, people would come." I'm going to put important suggestions in the Chancellor's suggestion box. "Like, why do they only have the word condom or prophylactic (whatever that is) on those machines over in LivWell? I mean shouldn't they just call them 'rubbers' so we all know what they're talking about?" I want this suggestion to land on someone's desk. I want them to have to address it and send a response to me. I'll be waiting anxiously in my car, with packed lunch, for the reply.

Well, I fear I've gone on a bit too long. Bob has lost interest and has cornered a lizard between the railing post and the sliding glass door. The lizard appears to be a friendly sort -- just a little misunderstood at the moment. I think I'll call him Jesus.

5 Students Receive 1994 Mathematical and Computer Science Awards

UNCW Mathematical Sciences Student Awards

The UNCW Mathematical Sciences Department presented 5 awards to outstanding junior and senior majors in mathematics or computer science at its annual student awards ceremony on April 27, 1994. Among the students honored were:

$500 . . . Jonathan T. Rowell, senior mathematics and physics major and son of Mr. and Mrs. Tyrone Rowell of Wilmington. Mr. Rowell was selected by the Mathematical Sciences faculty as the Toney Scholar for 1994-95. This award is presented in honor of the late Dr. Fred Toney, Jr., who was chairman of the department from 1968 to 1982.

$250 . . . Katherine T. Langone, senior mathematics major and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Langone of Wilmington. Ms. Langone was presented the J. Marshall Crews Award. This award was established by the friends and colleagues of Dr. Crews, who was a UNCW faculty member from 1948 to 1981.

$125 . . . Deborah L. Reames, senior computer science major, was presented a Bookstore Scholarship for textbooks and supplies.

$125 . . . Richard Allen Frazelle, senior computer science major and son of Beth Panceo and Barry Frazelle of Wilmington. Mr. Frazelle was presented a Bookstore Scholarship for textbooks and supplies.

June Oravits North Carolina: The Writer's State

Are you writing the great American novel but can't afford to travel to New York to look for an editor? Have you a fantastic idea for a television script but don't relish the idea of living in Los Angeles?

North Carolina may be the answer to your literary dreams. The Tar Heel state is becoming a well-known literary center.

Marsha Warren, executive director of the North Carolina Writers' Network (NCWN), explained the interest in North Carolina as a literary center: "All writers, at whatever stage of development—beginning, emerging or widely published—will find their lives enriched by the many literary resources North Carolina has to offer."

Those resources, according to Warren, include arts councils which offer grants and residencies to "help writers find the time and financial independence to write."

"Community colleges, universities and other academic institutions provide opportunities for continued learning and feedback. Little magazines and small presses often give emerging writers their start, while also publishing nationally recognized writers. Independent bookstores build audiences for literature and North Carolina's fine writers by featuring readings, book signings and by displaying books written by North Carolinians. Writers groups across the state serve as support and critique groups. And the list goes on."

In the last few years, a strong resurgence of interest in Southern literature has added to the lure of living and writing in North Carolina, Cameron Sperry, president of NCWN, said.

Sperry cited some examples of the well-known writers who live and work in North Carolina: Maya Angelou, Margaret Maron, Louise Shivers, Tim McLaurin, Clyde Edgerton, Lee Smith, Randall Kenan, Doris Betts, Robin Hemley, and Lawrence Naumoff.

Tim McLaurin, author of The Acorn Plan and Woodrow's Trumpet, met in March with students at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington to discuss his writing as a native North Carolinian. He said the influx of writers from other states is changing the voice of Southerners.

"I love the South," McLaurin said. "I love the old ways, hunting coons, drinking with the boys, and so on. But the South is changing, it has to. Not that change is a bad thing, but I want to write about it before it's lost."

Sperry said it used to be that you had to go to New York to find editors and publishers. "That's still true to some extent," Sperry said. "But as computer technology advances, New York trips aren't as necessary anymore."

Mark Franklin, manager of Bristol Books in Wilmington, said the economic impact on North Carolina is impressive. Many publishing houses have established themselves in the South and the field is growing, Franklin said. Presses such as Algonquin Books of Chapel Hill, Signal Books in Carboro, Persephone Press in Whispering Pines, Down Home Press in Asheboro, and John F. Blair in Winston-Salem are increasing in number.

"The impact is that money made in publishing is kept in the state. As local authors become well-known, writers from other states become attracted to North Carolina. When they get here, they want to stay," Franklin said.

Philip Gerard, author of Hatteras Light and his recent release, Cape Fear Rising, said, "Writers are picky about where they live; they realize they have choices."

"Writers can write anywhere, why not a warm climate?" Gerard said he chose to move to North Carolina partly because of the weather. Gerard is also director of the professional and creative writing program at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

"Recent history has proven that writers like to take root and do best in reserve areas such as Arizona, San Diego, and even Iowa at one time."

Gerard said. "Now, North Carolina is fast becoming one of their choices."

"Bristol Books invites as many authors as possible to readings and book-signings," Franklin stated. "This gets the public involved in what is available in the way of new books and gives support to writers."

Franklin also points to the movie industry, such as Carolco Studios in Wilmington, as another source of revenue generated by writers. Franklin said there is a big interest in screenwriting workshops for aspiring screenwriters.

But instead of having to go to Los Angeles for dramatic writing opportunities, movie representatives are coming to North Carolina to teach.

One such workshop, a seminar on "What It Takes to Write a Screenplay: Can You Do It?" was held Tuesday, May 17. It was sponsored by Bristol Books and conducted by Ken Hanes, a Los Angeles screenwriter.

"It is a one-hour seminar on the basics of creating a screenplay," Franklin said.

Many writing organizations such as the North Carolina Poetry Society and the North Carolina Writers' Network (NCWN) have become popular in the state. The Oceanic Writer's Conference is held at UNCW each summer, and The Writers' Roundtable holds its events in a different Southern city each year.

The North Carolina Poetry Society offers a forum for publication and discussion by poets in the state. Dr. Robert J. Collins, former president of the society, said, "It's now recognized as one of the best poetry societies in the country. In the last three years our membership has grown 40 percent."

NCWN's executive director, Marsha Warren, said, "The first members were poets from the North Carolina Poetry Society, then slowly and surely the membership grew."

NCWN began with a membership of about 12 people," Sperry, the current NCWN president, remarked. "It has grown to about 1600 members in the last 10 years."

"The North Carolina Writers' Network is unique in the U.S.," Gerard says. "No other state has that kind of organization. They sponsor lectures, readings, and workshops through their Bi-monthal Writers' Program. Bi-monthal Writers travel throughout the state for the benefit of all writers."

The impact on education is changing the way some programs in North Carolina universities operate.

Gerard said, "We've been overwhelmed with students wanting to be in the writing program at UNCW."

To meet the needs of writing students, the university is installing a Master of Fine Arts Degree program in 1995 to its graduate school programs. Other schools, such as UNC-Greensboro, have experienced the same interest in writing courses by prospective students.

"The M.F.A. came out of requests to have more writing programs," Dr. Richard Veit, chairperson of UNCW's English Department, said. "We're excited about the possibilities opening for our students in the writing field."

UNCW professor Kathleen Halme said she is amazed at how fast the resources in North Carolina are growing for writers.

Halme, who teaches creative writing in poetry and composition, said, "It's my dream to see a center for creative writing started at UNCW as an addition to the writing programs. I'd like to see a separate building with an auditorium for readings, a library of journals and videos and other resources for writers, a coffee shop, and rooms to house visiting writers. There's so many wonderful opportunities for writers in North Carolina."

If you are interested in writing, getting published, or just finding out what is going on in the literary world, you may be interested in attending the Writers Roundtable. An article about it appears in this issue of The Seahawk.

Professor Profile: Dr. Keith Newlin A first in a series by S. Bartlett

Although Keith Newlin has been an assistant professor of English at UNCW for only two years, he is well-known and respected among both students and colleagues.

Originally from Colorado, Newlin earned his BA and MA at Colorado State University and then blazed a path east, where he graduated from Indiana University's Ph.D. program.

In addition to publishing his thesis, which deals with the comic style of Raymond Chandler, a variety of Newlin's writings can be found in periodicals such as Mississippi Quarterly and Studies in American Fiction.

He is currently working on a selected edition of American author Hamlin Garland's letters, a project he expects to complete in late 1995.

"I admire the writing of Hamlin Garland...I don't always agree with his cultural ideas, but I believe that he was a more important writer than commonly thought," said Dr. Newlin.

Newlin was awarded a summer stipend by the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) for his planned research on "Selected Letters of Hamlin Garland."

"It's very interesting to see his letters shift from portraying a radical young Garland to a conservative older Garland," Newlin said.

Because Newlin's area of specialization is late 19th and early 20th century American literature and drama, he has taught a variety of related courses at UNCW including: Naturalism, Realism, Modernism, and Early American Literature. In the future, he would also like to offer senior seminars centered around the works of Eugene O'Neill, Ernest Hemingway, and F. Scott Fitzgerald.

Students who attend courses with Newlin can expect to read—a lot!—and respond critically, both orally and in writing, to the works. He describes his instructional methods as "Socratic" and encourages maximum student participation because he would "like to awaken in students a desire to continue their literary education independently."

According to Dr. Newlin, he derives his greatest pleasure, as an instructor, from "speaking with his students about literature outside of class."

When asked whether he has any gripes, Newlin said he is peeved by students who "do not take their roles in the learning process seriously."

Although busy with his courses and writing, Newlin also sponsors the UNCW chapter of Sigma Tau Delta International English Honor Society. He is the advisor for the English Club and is a member of the University Computer Services Committee.

To reward his dedication and willingness to serve the English department and UNCW students, Newlin was recognized by the English department faculty during the May 14 English department's Commencement reception and received a certificate of appreciation.

When asked what his future aspirations were, Newlin stated "An office with a window." (Newlin and Virginia Woolf, how can you lose?)

Hate Speech In College: Censor Or Educate

BY TREY CHEEK
Seahawk Reporter

Over 200 years ago, our Founding Fathers wrote our United States Constitution and placed the Bill of Rights at the heart of our American rights.

Of these rights, few Americans believe more fully in any than they do in the right to free speech that is guaranteed in the First Amendment.

However, many American colleges and universities are challenging this right by creating regulations that limit or ban student use of "hate speech."

In recent study at UNC-Chapel Hill, 36 percent of the 384 schools surveyed were found to have regulations punishing hate speech.

Slurs, taunts, graffiti and many other forms of prejudice are most often considered as hate speech. This speech is targeted at women, blacks, Asians, Jews and homosexuals.

Patricia Leonard, UNCW Dean of Students, said "UNCW does not have a hate speech policy. The university believes in freedom of speech, thus supporting the First Amendment rights of everyone. However, the university also acknowledges that there is such speech that is considered offensive to groups. The university's way of approaching this speech is primarily through education and intervention."

Leonard also said that the Code of Student Life Statement of Diversity specifies what is acceptable behavior by UNCW students. The code does not prescribe punishments for actions outside the guidelines. Leonard said a problem arises when slurs are directed at on specific student and qualify as harassment.

Leonard said that no reports of hate speech have been made at UNCW. She said that if one were made, the university would consider all mitigating factors in determining if the remarks were made as a statement of general opinion, or a personal slur.

"Our goal is to challenge versus censor," she said.

Leonard quoted Georgetown University Law professor Eleanor Holmes Norton, who said, "If the university suppresses rather than takes on bigoted speech, it betrays our faith in the efficacy of education."

Leonard said that if a student feels he has been the victim of hate language, he should go to the Office of the Dean of Students and see her. She guaranteed that the complaint would receive a complete investigation.

The Constitution has guided Americans through many controversial situations. In a time of "political correctness" and fights for and against censorship of speech from the music stage to the campus, the Constitution has been called on by all sides as a guide.

The First Amendment sets a specific guideline - "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment...abridging the freedom of speech" - which says that no institution, including a college or university, can limit a person's speech.

However, the courts have ruled that the First Amendment does not provide a blanket of free speech over all people. In cases where a "clear and present danger" was proved, denial of free speech was allowed. Free speech has also been denied in cases where it could provoke "lawless conduct". The Fourth, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments have also been cited in cases involving free speech on campus.

The Supreme Court has ruled in support of university policies regulating speech which encourages dangerous situations or lawless action.

The University of Michigan set some of the most stringent and challenged rules in regard to hate speech. The Court cited Broadrick v. Oklahoma (1979) in forcing the University of Michigan to change its policy because it was unclear that "men of common intelligence must necessarily guess as to its meaning." Similar charges were brought against the University of Wisconsin by the American Civil Liberties Union.

The Supreme Court set aside certain types of speech as exempt from coverage by the First Amendment in Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire (1942). The Supreme Court justice wrote in this case, "There are certain well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any Constitutional problem. These include lewd and obscene, profane, libelous, and insulting words—those which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. It has been well observed that such utterances are no essential part of any exposition of ideas, and are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality."

The courts have said that speech cannot be regulated because what is said is simply offensive. In Street v. New York (1969), the Supreme Court said, "It is firmly settled that under our Constitution the public expression of ideas may not be prohibited merely because the ideas are themselves offensive to some of their hearers."

In one of the most famous cases regarding freedom of speech, Justice Hugo Black wrote in his dissent in Communist Party v. SACB (1961) that "freedom of speech, press, petition and assembly guaranteed by the First Amendment must be accorded to the ideas we hate, or sooner or later they will be denied to the ideas we cherish."

Survey: Credit Abuse Serious

BY COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

As many as one-third of college students have the potential for serious credit card abuse, according to a study at the University of Illinois at Carbondale.

Although many students graduate with debts that they expected to pay, such as educational loans, some could risk going straight from graduation to bankruptcy because of unexpected financial burdens that result from poor use of credit cards.

Connie J. Armstrong, assistant professor in technical and resource management, and M. Joyce Craven, visiting assistant professor in health care professions management, surveyed 243 students and found that one-third showed credit attitudes and behaviors that indicated future financial trouble.

Some of those factors include owning a large number of credit cards, having multiples of the same card, making minimum payments on balances and being unaware of the cards' interest rates.

"A credit history can become very well known," Craven said. "It could hurt graduates in their future careers because employers have access to credit ratings." A company might not be as willing to hire a recent graduate who has reached the maximum limits on all of his or her credit cards, compared with someone who makes regular payments.

Armstrong and Craven also found that most students in the survey were in debt not because of educational expenses, but because they used plastic to pay for clothes, gas, entertainment, travel, groceries and eating out. Only 3 percent of the charges were for books or tuition.

They encouraged students to avoid running up large credit debts by limiting the number of cards they hold, shopping for low interest rates and paying off the balance every month.

"Remember that the money you're spending today is tomorrow's income," Armstrong said.

SPECIAL TO THE SEAHAWK

President Bill Clinton Experiments, But "Did Not Swallow"

Phil Smith

—A hearty, Hi-Ho, UNC-Wonderful welcome to everyone reading this special summer edition. Whether you are here for our world renowned summer school, our unique (trust me, nowhere else will you find group names like "the seadogs") freshman orientation, or you just got lost trying to find the WalMart, I would like to personally welcome you to UNCW. And, since I cannot personally welcome you all, I thought I'd do it here in The Fishwrap.

What you are about to read was originally titled "Beware of Killer Toxic Soft Drinks" and was originally published in a Spring, 1992 edition of The Seahawk. Since that time, much has changed in regard to what one is allowed to say in both the printed and television media. It has been estimated that during the Lorena Bobbitt trial, the "P" word was said or printed some 374,236 times. Never (in 1992) would I have considered using the "P" word in one of my columns, and since I still "perspire" to high journalistic standards, I won't print it now. I just wanted to point out that it was little guys, back in 1992, forging the way so that someday, Barbara "WaWa" Walters could say (in an interview with John Wayne Bobbitt) the "P" word on national television.

Anyhow, this week's topic was brought to my attention in an intelligent, semi-coherent letter sent in by Lawrence B. Bonad, an intelligent, semi-coherent reader. I read, "Warning, Warning! Caution, Beware! Don't drink that Sun Drop, don't you dare!" The letter went on to explain, in terms not befitting this column, the new found hazards associated with drinking beverages with "FD&C Yellow #5" dye in them.

In case you haven't heard about this most devastating event to hit the soft drink industry since Michael Jackson's hair burned up, I'll try to fill you in so you don't end up with the same problem as Mr. Bonad. According to the Major Side Effects Division of the United States Department of Soft Drink Dye Testing, something in the FD&C Yellow #5 dye prevents the male human reproductive system from, I believe they said, "achieving its fullest potential."

I understand the issue was brought to light on a recent episode of ABC NEWS, 20/20, or Geraldo or something like that. According to Mr. Bonad, who watched the show because he has been a lifelong Mountain Dew drinker, the study was done at a major Women's University with a long history of doing such studies. The research team concluded, after years of sampling, analyzing, and measuring, that the dye in yellow soft drinks does in fact retard the development of the male reproductive system.

To fellow Mountain Dew, Sun Drop, and Mellow Yellow drinkers this news could be devastating. To the companies that make the drinks, it could be even more devastating in lost sales as well as personal injury lawsuits.

In order to get a better idea about how the public was reacting to this developing situation, I pulled some strings and got responses from authorities familiar with the subject matter. The owner of Ruby's Adult Video and Gifts said, "It's been great for business. I can hardly keep the synthetic hormones and creams on the shelves." Pee Wee Herman replied "Well, now you know where the name came from . . . I have nothing to hide." U.S. Senator Ted Kennedy called for a Congressional hearing to determine if recent Supreme Court Nominee Clarence Thomas did, in fact, drink Mellow Yellow to "keep from incriminating himself" just before his testimony in the confirmation hearings last year. Also, former Arkansas Governor and Presidential hopeful Bill Clinton announced that he once experimented with Sun Drop back in the 1960's but that the public shouldn't hold that against him thirty years later (and besides, he "did not swallow"). So you understand that this is an issue that's sure to be in the news for a while.

In a related story, former heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson was sentenced to a six year active jail term after being found guilty of rape charges. When asked what he thought about going to prison he replied that he wasn't that worried about it; as long as they have a boxing ring, weights to work out with, and plenty of Mountain Dew to drink.

For now . . . keep your mind out of the gutter, and your head out of the toilet.

Longing for the Sea and Yet Afraid

Bob Haywood

Stillpoint

Reverend Bob Haywood on "Stillpoint"

I was afraid;
And now I know that we must lift the sail
And catch the winds of destiny
Wherever they drive the boat.
To put meaning in one's life may end in madness.
But life without meaning is the torture
Of restlessness and vague desire—
It is a boat longing for the sea and yet afraid.

—Edgar Lee Masters

Given the incredible variety and opportunities that come with the new beginning of the fall semester here at UNCW, I hope that you will let yourself be aware that one of the most incredible opportunities before you is to "lift the sail and catch the winds of destiny."

This may sound grandiose but there is truly a critical choice that you will be making either consciously or unconsciously. Too many students keep their sails furled and shrink from opportunities that are offered at every level of our student experience. You are surrounded by opportunities to learn rather than just going to class, to experience diversity in people different from you rather than simply hanging onto your small group of friends, to develop relationship skills by sorting through issues with a new roommate rather than just being in new settings by going home to familiar friends and places.

I would invite you to become very intentional as you begin this semester in terms of being clear about your goals for this year. What do you want to accomplish both in the classroom and outside of it? What do you need to accomplish these goals? What kind of support do you want and how are you going to find out how to get it? The University is loaded with resources that relate to every aspect of your life as a college student but you are the one that must reach out and make the connections.

Anyone that is getting ready to set sail on a long voyage deals with fears and thinks, at times, about forgetting the whole trip but with careful planning, prayer and support, most voyages turn into high adventure. This year at UNCW can be high adventure as well. I hope that you will make it just that!

I also hope and pray that you will not wind up the year feeling like "a boat longing for the sea and yet afraid."

—Bob Haywood is UNCW's Campus Minister

I have studied many times, the marble which was chiseled for me—

My Opinion

S. Bartlett

Welcome to MY opinion column. Please remember, the views that will be expressed in this column are not a reflection of the administration, faculty, staff, student body, or anyone else affiliated with UNCW whose position is in any way vulnerable.

You will not find the following phrases in any of my future columns: politically correct, the weaker sex, pagan beast, friendly fire, femme-nazi, God bless the patriarchy, pork is the other white meat, buy more Styrofoam products, gel nail tips, and you can't get AIDS the first time.

I can assure you I will pontificate on most of all of the following topics until the Power Gods pull my IBM plug: the equal empowerment of all people, the lack of daycare facilities on campus, a policy of verbal consent governing sexual behavior, lunch-hour evangelists, the unnaturally perfect hair of TV newscasters, the immoral use of moldy clichés, homophobia, tanning booths, scoopable cat litter, second-hand smoke, the anti-feminist backlash, martyrdom, baking soda tooth-pastes, natural hair dyes, thong underwear, info-commerce, the healing effects of peanut butter cups, and the "Hooters" controversy.

I reserve the creative right to nauseate, inflame, or humor my readers without any regard for factual support or the opinions of others. Please feel welcome to send your opinions to the editor, who gets paid to care about them.

I look forward to tilting Seahawk space with my demonic liberal ideologies for your reading entertainment.

UNCW is dedicated to nurturing the expressive freedom of its student body and our newspaper is OUR forum. (Why am I having visions of Rita Moreno singing "I Want To Live In America"?)

Throwing sarcasm to the wind, I extend my sincere welcome to all new and returning UNCW students and wish you a productive and enlightening 1994-95 academic year. You should find comfort in the knowledge that if there is a place for me at UNCW, there is also a place for you. ("There's a place for us, a time and place for us. . . ." Someone is obviously sending me subliminal showtune soundtracks through my keyboard. The King and I will see you in the fall.)

Disturbing Dream

Mark Hossfeld

The other night I had a disturbing dream. I was in an enormous baseball stadium and on the pitcher's mound was Richard Nixon, standing stark naked. He was shooting broad television sets into his mouth and out of his other end he was ejecting reams of shredded classified documents. This dream was caused, no doubt, by the recent media apotheosis of this marvelously villainous crime criminal in an "elder statesman," his ascent to some kind of Mount Rushmore heaven supervised by an unlikely combination of an ex-anti-war demonstrator, non-inhaling Democratic president and the surviving sycophants of the only presidential administration to be forced out of power before his time.

I am of the age to have been shaped in my political beliefs by the Nixon presidency more than any other. I was too young to have been engaged in the Vietnam controversy, so it was Watergate that made me react viscerally against our government (Democratic or Republican) as I would to a Mafia family. The fact that the leader of the Democratic party presided over the rehabilitation of Richard Nixon merely confirms my beliefs.

I was thirteen or fourteen when I was a page in the Mississippi State legislature, running errands for the provincially powerful (usually cans of chili and corn dogs), when, during the height of Watergate, Richard Nixon came to Mississippi for a rally of support in a state whose political leanings were somewhat to the right of Augusto Pinochet. I was eager to see the President, much like a young teenager might be eager to see a living tyrannosaurus Rex -- that is, my eagerness reflected less a political stance than a gawking one.

...Mormon missionaries on my doorstep, who ask me politely if I want to hear about the Lord Jesus Christ. I answer them without forethought "No, but do you want to have sex?"

As I milled around in the crowd, all I could see was the shoulders and necks of the sweaty Republicans around me (I've always been at a disadvantage in crowds), so I contented myself in looking at the unappealing Baptist girls and sucking on my over-iced Dr. Pepper. I then heard a commotion and, hopping like an acned frog, I thought I could see the tops of the heads of the secret service agents moving toward the Jackson Coliseum.

A strange feeling came over me, something akin to the feeling I get when young Mormon missionaries come to my front door. I hurled my styrofoam cup of Dr. Pepper dregs up and over the crowd, toward where I hoped Nixon was walking. There were incoherent shouts and scuffling noises which I took to be the secret service agents wrestling my cup to the ground. People in front of me looked back frantically to see if an inflatable Lee Harvey Oswald were somehow present. I put on my best Little Orphan Annie eyes, blank and Republican, and was passed over by the collective glare as something small and insignificant.

I don't think I hit Nixon with my styrofoam cup and to this day I'm not sure why I threw it. But as I mentioned before, the feeling is somehow related to that of encountering Mormon missionaries on my doorstep, who ask me politely if I want to hear about the Lord Jesus Christ. I answer them without forethought, "No, but do you want to have sex?"

In my dream I hurled a styrofoam cup from high in the bleachers of the baseball stadium at the naked monster on the pitcher's mound. I awoke before it landed. I will always miss Richard Nixon.

Surviving Your First Day At UNCW

Welcome to UNCW. On my first day here I was terrified I was too old, too stupid, and way too un-cool to be a student at this university. Then I realized everyone else new on campus that first day was just as frightened and unsure of themselves as I was.

Having a rather gregarious personality helped me talk to perfect strangers, ask questions even when I knew they might be considered stupid, and most important of all -- involve myself in the life and activities on campus.

There are over 100 organizations on the UNCW campus that offer opportunities to be involved in social, cultural, sports, and community-related activities. You can advance your career goals, find people interested in the same things you are, contribute to volunteer efforts, be involved in the student government, and make any number of friends. What value you place on your time at UNCW is ultimately up to you. The opportunities are here.

We have the advantage of being near the beach, but there is a downside to our proximity to the sea -- severe storms. In this issue of The Seahawk, we have tried to let those of you unfamiliar with hurricanes know how we plan for these emergencies. One of the most important things you can do during a hurricane watch or warning is to phone home on a regular basis and let your folks know what is happening. This helps alleviate calls that tie up the phone system and personnel during emergency operations, and it lets your family know you're safe. The university takes hurricane season very seriously and so should you.

While you're having fun at UNCW, remember you're here for a purpose -- to get an education. As Dr.

Shinn, a UNCW professor of philosophy and religion, noted during the 1994 commencement exercise, "Don't let your education get in the way of your learning."

I take that to mean be willing to think critically for yourself, ask those delicious questions that tantalize you, stretch your imagination and creativity, and most of all -- be involved in life.

You'll survive your first day here, I did. Now that I'm in the graduate program at UNCW, I'm comfortable with the campus, the faculty, staff, and my fellow students. I've made a place for myself here. It's up to you to forge your own place in the sun and on the campus of this university.

Recipe for "Carrot Top" Supreme

Ingredients

Start with: 1 Full Head of Wild bright red-orange hair
1 Wardrobe of extremely colorful mismatched clothes
1 magnetic personality

Mix these ingredients with...

1 Outrageous Imagination
3 Tons of energy
1 Truckload of charisma
4 Trucks of side-splitting, knee-slapping, tear producing material

Place on center stage and let cook on high for one hour, then allow to simmer one on one with the audience. Keep in mind that Carrot Top may be served over and over because the recipe never goes stale.

Smilla's Sense of Snow

Smilla's Sense of Snow by Peter Hoeg ($21) is one of the best books I have read in a long time. In a genre dominated by the heated climes of Florida or the bleakness of Yorkshire, Hoeg's Greenland and Denmark become exotic in their iciness. Smilla herself promises to be one of the most interesting women of the decade, her harshness is rescued by what I can only describe as her artistic appreciation of ice in its many forms. Hoeg skillfully steers Smilla between episodes of pure espionage and episodes of pure horror, but he is never bloodthirsty. The clues are all there, and only the doubtful character of the mechanic ever gives one pause.

The reader who likes to learn something from the book will learn much from Smilla. Hoeg tells a clear and concise story of cultural tensions between Greenlanders and the Danish. Native pride in the face of discrimination will be all too familiar. But Hoeg concentrates less on tribal customs or cultural oddities, and more on ice flows and falling snow.

The book itself has an almost magical quality to it which reminds one of Tony Hillerman in a different context. You might as well be on another planet. Even asteroids and extraterrestrial life become acceptable in an icy landscape as strange and barren as the moon. But this is a thriller in the best sense and the conclusion, if fantastic, is truly chilling.

Lee's "The Crow" Film Finally Flies

BY IAN SPELLING
Special Correspondent
College Press Service

"The Crow" is finally about to fly. At long last, the film many felt would be Brandon Lee's breakthrough project soars into theaters May 11. Whatever it merits, "The Crow" will be regarded as the film Lee died making. Proof of that comes at a somber Manhattan press gathering on the film's behalf, during which the Lee tragedy and what was done to overcome it and wrap up the film are the main topics of conversation.

"The Crow" eerily tells the story of musician Eric Draven (Lee) who lives with his fiancée, Shelly (Sofia Shinas), in a dark urban city. On Devil's Night, the couple is viciously killed by Top Dollar (Michael Wincott), the local crime lord, and his pals. A year later, Eric rises from the grave, invincible. He's guided by a black crow which links the worlds of the living and the dead.

Eric's soul can't rest with Shelly's until revenge is exacted, so he delivers violent justice, slaughtering Top Dollar's cronies one by one, until a showdown with Top Dollar himself. Along the way, Eric forms an alliance with the cop (Ernie Hudson) who was on the scene the night of his murder, and he bonds with another girl, Sarah (Rochelle Davis), with whom he and Shelly were close.

At the time of his death last March, Lee had just several days of work left on "The Crow," which was directed by Alex Proyas. It had been a brutal production, with much of it filmed outdoors in the frigid North Carolina cold. The days were endless and, with Proyas making his film debut, there was pressure aplenty. Then there were assorted mishaps and, finally, Lee's death.

"It was a totally devastating, sad feeling, and it sometimes comes back," says producer Ed Pressman of Lee's passing, which was caused by a prop gun. "It had been a particularly tight unit before the accident. Afterwards, it was a committed group that found a significance to their work that went beyond the norm."

Technically, there was no problem finishing the film. Only one flashback necessitating Lee hadn't been shot, while several chase sequences were completed using a double. Proyas created new scenes and toiled in the editing room to build the relationship between Eric and Sarah and relate the story through Sarah's eyes.

"The issue of completing the film really was a psychological one," notes Pressman. I always desperately wanted to finish it. It was Alex who, at first, couldn't go on, and everyone galvanized around him to get him to come back and carry on. He had mixed feelings; everyone felt responsible."

Ernie Hudson, best known for the "Ghostbusters" films and "Hand That Rocks the Cradle," seriously considered not returning. Finally, he decided to. "I knew Brandon since 1988. I considered him a friend," he says. "What made him special, his laughter, warmth and smile, are there, in the character. It really comes through. When I saw the movie I was impressed. I'd love for people to see it. It's a good representation of Brandon's work."

"The Crow" began life as a comic book by James O'Barr. Co-producer

Jeff Most, who attended New York University film school and was active in music video, had been looking to find a comic book artist for another project when he met O'Barr, who was then creating his third "Crow" comic. Most optioned the film rights, developed a story treatment with writer John Shirley and brought Pressman the treatment.

"We clicked," recalls Most. Pressman and Most considered "A" names for the lead, then, after seeing "Showdown" in Little Tokyo and "Rapid Fire," cast Lee. "The character had tremendous athleticism, so we needed an actor who had that," says Most. "Ed suggested Brandon. He had everything."

After the accident, Pressman and Most toiled to salvage the film. First, financing needed to complete it nearly fell through. Then, Paramount dropped its "Crow" option, which Miramax picked up. Though some people will be unable to separate the Lee tragedy from the film's events, Most and Pressman consider the film original and effective.

"It supersedes the genre," says Pressman. "It's not just about action. There's an emotional resonance, partly because of what happened and partly because of what's there."

"It's everything I wished for and it's what I promised to let us make a visual adaptation of his comic books," adds Most. "The film stands on its edge. After all that's happened, I'm delighted we have it on the screen."

Souls Raised From the Dead

Souls Raised From the Dead by Doris Betts

"Courage is a kind of Grace" Doris Betts' new book has been 10 years in the making, and it is worth every day of the wait. It is about 12-year-old horse-crazy Mary Grace Thompson who lives with her father, Frank, her mother having run away several years before. Frank and Mary Grace are still trying to make something of their broken home, each horribly afraid that the other might disappear without warning. Mary, with a girl's understanding of how the world works, will not rest secure until she sees her father remarried—preferably to her riding instructor.

However, Mary and Frank's carefully constructed world comes crashing down when Mary is diagnosed with a fatal illness. Betts shows us the pettiness of our own lives in the face of the imminent, and senseless, death of a child. All of the adults who orbit like planets around the sun of Mary Grace find their courses drastically altered and uncertain. Jill, Mary's riding instructor and dream stepmother, finds her maturity and self-possession to be a source of selfishness. Christine, Mary's feckless mother, is suddenly confronted with the internal turmoil one must face when asked to give up a piece of one's self—in this case, an organ. It would have been easy to make Christine a flat, selfish and superficial woman easy for the reader to hate, but Betts shows us instead, Christine's own fear of surgery and her feeling of perpetual isolation. When we are confronted with Christine's terror, however childishly expressed, our own expectations of what is "the right thing to do" becomes arrogant.

The truly remarkable character is Tacy—Mary Grace's grandmother. Far from being a vague little church lady, she is as wise and honest as Mary Grace herself. It is Tacy who first senses that things are not quite right with Mary and Tacy who anticipates Mary's desire to re-unite the two sides of the family, and makes the hard trip across physical and metaphorical barriers to tell Mary's maternal grandmother that something is wrong. It is also Tacy who keeps her course in the end. She has her faith in God sorely tested and perhaps even lost, but she never fails to look Truth full in the face. It is something neither her husband nor her son can do.

Souls Raised From the Dead is a truly beautiful book that will send you between laughter and tears. There is a lesson for us all in it—a hard lesson about courage and grace under pressure.

Ed Note: Doris Betts will be at Bristol Books, The Galleria, Tuesday, June 7th at 7 p.m. to read from her book. She will be available to sign copies after the reading.

RIVER RUN: Down The Cape Fear To The Sea

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Executive Editor

Is the Cape Fear River healthy? That question is the focus of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington-produced documentary River Run: Down the Cape Fear to the Sea which premiered May 25 in the University Center at UNC-Wilmington.

Directed by Broadcast Services of NCSU, the documentary tracks a 3-day journey from the headwaters of the Cape Fear River to the Atlantic Ocean by UNCW scientists, officials and concerned citizens. The one-hour film examines the river's history and ecology.

As the expedition travels down the river, UNCW Chancellor Dr. James Leutze serves as narrator of the documentary. "Everything we do on the river has consequences," he said.

The Cape Fear River is a valuable natural resource for North Carolina and the southeast region of the state, according to the Center for Marine Science Research at UNCW. Because of the river's importance to North Carolinians the Cape Fear River Program was begun. Its mission is to develop an understanding of influences on the river and serve as a medium for sharing information and public education.

The 200-mile river which begins at the junction of the Haw and Deep Rivers near Monrovia is being used today for industry, transportation, recreation, and as a public water source. It is the largest river basin system in the state. The wide lower course of the river which meets the sea is influenced by tides and provides shelter for much of North Carolina's commercial seafood harvest.

Leutze said it is important to look for sources of pollution which could adversely affect the river. But it is not only the obvious and naturally occurring sources of pollution that people need to be aware of, it is also "non-point source pollution you can't see, such as runoff from fertilizing farms or washing cars," Leutze said.

Private citizens have an important role in monitoring the river with continuous monitoring stations all through the river system, Leutze explained. Monitoring the Cape Fear River takes money. Leutze stated, "We want to spend our resources carefully."

River Run: Down the Cape Fear to the Sea was written by UNCW creative writing program director Philip Gerard. It was produced by UNCW in cooperation with Broadcast Services of NCSU and the University of North Carolina.

Elaine Penn composed a ballad to the river while travelling with the expedition down the river. Her song Take A Stand serves as the theme music to the documentary.

Major underwriting for River Run: Down the Cape Fear to the Sea was provided by Applied Analytical Industries, Inc. and Carolina Power & Light.

River Run airs 9:00 p.m., Monday, June 13 on UNC-TV. The Cape Fear River Program is making the video available to North Carolina public school systems along with a curriculum guide to assist teachers in discussing the documentary and river issues.

HOLLEY NAMED UNCW'S TOP STUDENT-ATHLETE AT 1994 AWARDS BANQUET

Senior third baseman Battle Holley, who has led the Seahawk baseball team in nearly every offensive category this season was named UNCW's premier student-athlete during the school's athletic awards banquet at Wagoner Hall.

Holley was presented the Thomas V. Moseley Award, designating him as the school's outstanding student-athlete for the 1993-94 athletic year. Holley is completing his second year with the Seahawks after transferring from Louisiana Junior College two years ago. Holley, from Tabor City, NC, nearly carried the baseball team offensively this season, leading the team in seven categories, including batting average (.363), at-bats (204), hits (74), and doubles (17). Holley was the only player to start all 56 games for the Seahawks.

Also receiving an award was senior forward Sherif El-Sanadilly who was named the "Pizza Hut Basketball Player-of-the-Year". El-Sanadilly was the school's first-ever foreign basketball recruit and wrapped up his career with an outstanding season in 1993-94. El-Sanadilly finished fourth on the team in scoring (10.6 PPG) and first in rebounding (8.0 RPG) in leading the Seahawks to an 18-10 record this past season.

Swimmer Deb Kresho, was the recipient of the Chancellor's Cup Award, recognizing her as the programs outstanding academic performer. Kresho, who is a senior majoring in mathematics, also enjoyed a terrific season that carried over into the classroom, she posted top times in two individual events (50 and 100 Free) and contributed to four relay teams.

Dr. Jim Hundley, the basketball team physician, was honored with the William J. Brooks Distinguished Service Award. Dr. Hundley has been associated with the athletic program since 1978, conducting physical examinations, providing game coverage, and maintaining a sports medicine clinic for the program's 280 student-athletes.

UNCW INTRODUCES ATHLETIC HALL OF FAME

An athletic hall of fame designed to honor former student-athletes, coaches and administrators has been established at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Athletic Director Paul Miller announced, "We're very pleased to announce the formation of this hall of fame. It's only fitting that we honor those who have contributed to the success of the program throughout the years. This will help us recognize key contributors to the program and build on the tradition they started."

The hall, designated as the UNCW Athletic Hall of Fame, will have its inaugural induction during the 1994-95 athletic year. Up to five individuals will make up the first class of inductees. According to established criteria, candidate must have made outstanding contributions during their association with the university. If a student-athlete, the individual must have left the university as a graduate. If a teacher-coach or administrator, the candidate must have held that position for at least five years. Special consideration will be given to significant contributions to society through community activities and performance in chosen fields that bring credit and distinction to the university.

The selection committee will include the athletic director, sports information director, director of alumni relations, senior women's administrator, director of athletic development and a faculty athletic representative. Anyone can nominate a prospective candidate, with the deadline for the first nominees set for Sept. 30, 1994. Nomination forms can be obtained through the sports information office and must be submitted to the athletic director.

The first inductees will be honored at a luncheon prior to a men's basketball game and also at half-time that night. Special plaques commemorating their induction will be displayed in the Golden Hawk Room of the Nixon Annex.

The UNCW basketball team travelled to Europe this summer and played 5 games. The Seahawks went 2-3 playing European professional teams. Preston McGriff was the leading scorer and rebounder on the trip.

UNCW'S ST.LEDGER HONORED BY YWCA

UNCW Wilmington softball coach Maggie St. Ledger was honored recently with a "Cape Fear Women of Achievement Award" by the Wilmington YMCA.

St. Ledger, who initiated UNCW's softball program in 1983 and will direct the school's first women's soccer team this fall, was one of nine women honored for their contributions to the community through the arts, community service, education, business, government, human services and sports/recreation.

"It was certainly a surprise and an honor to receive this award," said St. Ledger. "There were so many outstanding recipients. I am very honored to be included in the group."

In addition to coaching softball and soccer at UNCW, St. Ledger has been involved in the university's "Learn to Swim" program and also coaches the Cape Fear Country Club swim team. She also finds time to direct the Little Seahawks basketball ensemble and works with the Winter Park Optimist T-ball, slow pitch softball, soccer and tennis programs.

Coach St. Ledger will be coaching the women's first soccer team this fall.

SEARCH FOR A NEW HEAD COACH EXTENDED ONE WEEK

The vacancy left by former men's basketball head coach Kevin Eastman has yet to be filled and according to the latest release from the university it will be at least another week before a replacement is named.

The search has been extended one more week which according to athletic director Paul Miller became necessary after two of the top three candidates withdrew themselves from consideration. Duke assistant Mike Brey and Kansas assistant Matt Doherty withdrew citing poor timing as the main factor in their decision to remove themselves from consideration for the position.

Dave Hanners, assistant coach for the University of North Carolina, is still a strong candidate despite the prolonged search. When asked about Hanners, Miller stated that, "Dave Hanners is still as strong as ever as a candidate."

Chancellor Leutze told Miller to extend the search one more week to make sure no qualified applicants were being overlooked. "I want the committee to give me two names," Leutze said from Estonia. "I don't want just one name. It's up to them to come up with two possibilities." Leutze will be returning from his foreign tour Sunday and has stated that he would like to meet the candidates in person before a final decision is made.

Miller said that the application screening committee would review applicants and give Leutze more names to consider. "He told me to make sure we're not overlooking someone on the search committee," Miller said. Miller also stated that he could understand why the chancellor wants more than just one candidate. "If you have only one name, the guy can dictate what he wants."

Move In 1994

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

The first day at college is scary. You've got to move all your important stuff, find out where all your classes are at buildings you've never heard the names of before. Dad is recording it all on his handy-dandy camcorder, and Mom is weeping and admonishing you to be sure and wear clean underwear. What have here is major stress!

"Move-In '94," a new program at UNCW, is helping de-stress the freshmen panic of move-in day. Over 100 volunteers assisted 1,050 new freshmen and their families Saturday as they maneuvered boxes, clothes, stereos and other personal items into residence halls.

"By greeting the new students as if they were guests in our own home, we can show them that this is not a cold, uncaring institution but instead one made up of real life people who care. We are also trying to show them that together, we can help them solve most problems," said Director of Housing and Residence Life Bill McCartney.

Half of those 100 volunteers were UNCW faculty and staff, the other half were Wachovia employees. In addition to manpower, Wachovia underwrote the cost of specially designed t-shirts for all volunteers. Additional help came from Chancellor James R. Leutze and 150 students representing the Greeks, Residence Hall Association, and the Student Government Association.

To continue the spirit of caring, UNCW held a dinner Saturday night in Waggoner Hall for students, their families and the many volunteers. Leutze and Athletics Director Paul Miller thanked the volunteers, welcomed the students and reassured families about the opportunities and challenges ahead for the new students. A boat cruise Sunday night from Carolina Beach tops off a wild weekend of going off to college for 400 new students.

But the fun didn't end with the swaying of the boat. Incoming freshmen also swayed in line dances at Trask Coliseum Monday night. Sponsored by the UNCW Alumni Association's Student Development Committee, this was the second annual UNCW alumni/freshmen pizza party.

John Bennett, associate professor of health, physical education and recreation, led the students in line dancing and other group activities—and you thought P.E. was all grunts, groans, and sweat! UNCW Seahawk's basketball coach Jerry Wainwright was an honored special guest.

Free pizza supplied by Domino's Pizza and fries from Belk Berry and Smash Videos treated all attending freshmen.

All this welcoming for new freshmen makes you want to re-enroll, right? Only until we have to buckle down to actually attending

Pell Grant Recipients Restricted

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

WASHINGTON—The U.S. House of Representatives voted to cap the number of students who can receive grants this academic year through the Pell Grant program, creating what some critics say will be a "first-come, first-served" system that may leave many needy students out in the cold.

The plan, voted on June 29, would limit the number of students who could obtain grants during the 1994-95 academic year to 3.9 million.

Proponents of the bill say that the plan, designed as a one-time budget-saving measure, still allows room for growth in the Pell Grant program. They note the 3.9 million ceiling is higher than the number of students expected to seek grants next year.

But Laura McClintock, legislative director of the United States Students Association, says the new cap "sets a very dangerous precedent" that may deny aid for low-income students.

"It's nothing but bad news for us," said McClintock. In the past, a lack of funds often limited the amount of a student's Pell Grant, but needy students always knew they would receive some assistance from the program, McClintock added.

The cap could especially hurt "open-access institutions" such as community colleges, where students often wait until summer to enroll for fall classes, say critics.

A "first-come, first-served" system would make it impossible for many of these students to receive aid, said Melanie Jackson, director of federal relations for the Association of Community College Trustees. "It would have a chilling effect," said Jackson.

According to a report filed with the bill when it passed the powerful House Appropriations Committee, "the cushion provided is adequate to cover all students under the latest estimate" of Pell Grant demand. The report said the cap is a one-time decision made solely in response to budget constraints.

But predicting the annual need for Pell Grants is a difficult process, McClintock said. Recessions and other economic upheavals often force more students to seek aid, while other students elect to go to college rather than look for jobs in a weak economy.

The cap is part of a massive bill to fund education, labor and human service programs in fiscal year 1995. The bill's main sponsor acknowledged some elements of the measure are controversial but said his staff protected as many programs as possible within tight budget constraints.

"The bill does not make anyone completely happy," said Rep. Neal Smith (D-Iowa). "But I really believe that this is the best we could do under the circumstances today."

Some of education's most prominent advocates in the House voiced serious concerns about the Pell Grant cap but reluctantly voted for the bill anyway.

"This bill fails to put money where Congress' mouth is," said Rep. Major Owens (D-NY). Owens called the bill an "embarrassment" to the president and Congress, labeling the Pell Grant cap "a misguided attempt to cut education costs."

With funding for more than 500 federal programs at stake, however, Owens said he would provide "reluctant support" for the measure.

Other legislators voiced similar concerns. "Under a cap, Pell becomes a race to the application gate," said Rep. Pat Williams (D-Mont.), vice chairman of the House Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education and Training.

"No matter how one looks at it, this is not a good student aid budget," Williams said.

The bill provided few increases for other student financial aid programs. College work/study would receive $616 million next year, unchanged from current funding. However, President Clinton's budget had sought another $100 million for the program, much of it for new community service jobs.

House members also kept funding levels the same at $583 million for Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants. Funding for State Student Incentive Grants would fall from $72 million to $54 million under the House plan.

However, the measure would restore more than $150 million in funding for federal Perkins Loans that were scheduled for cuts in the president's education budget.

Overall, President Clinton's new domestic initiatives helped crowd out funding for Pell Grants and other student aid programs, congressional aides said. For example, the bill allotted $388 million for the president's new Goals 2000 program to improve K-12 education in America. The measure also earmarked $280 million for a new program to help young people make the transition from academics to the workplace.

House members approved the bill by a vote of 339 to 89.

Also, in late July, the Senate Appropriations Committee approved a similar spending bill, mostly following the House of Representatives' recommendations to keep student financial aid spending at present levels. The full Senate is likely to vote on the measure sometime this month.

A House/Senate conference committee is expected to convene before Oct. 1 to reconcile differences between the two bills. The government's new fiscal year begins Oct. 1.

Professor Profile: UNCW's Dr. Robert Tindall Brown Weighs In

BY S. BARTLET
Seahawk Reporter

Yale Alumni Dr. Robert Brown, who has been at UNCW for twenty years, stays psyched for his courses by believing "the science of knowledge changes" constantly.

Through his years at UNCW, Brown has maintained his enthusiasm for Experimental Psychology by continuing research in diverse areas of interest and sharing his often astounding results with his students.

While at Yale, Dr. Brown researched the effects of early experience in the problem-solving ability of animal intelligence and he has, over the years following his dissertation, written a number of significant articles and reports on related topics, such as bias in intelligence fields.

As Co-Editor for Plenum Publishers, along with Cecil R. Reynolds, a UNCW alumnus, Brown's experience and influence can be noted in a variety of publications dealing with many aspects in the field of psychology. One series of professional texts, Perspectives on Individual Differences, explores areas of individuality that can be vital for success in fields like education.

One of Brown's most controversial projects centered on the study of creativity. He wrote a chapter in the Handbook of Creativity, entitled "The Concept of Creativity," which is the result of years of thorough investigation. In his chapter, Brown asserts that while "creative levels can be measured, in individuals, a model creative product cannot be identified."

Dr. Brown further contends without criteria for accurately identifying creative products, there is no solid basis for the concept of creativity. With a laugh, he notes that this is not a "popular concept" among many academics.

Recently Brown has been researching the "basis of paranormal beliefs and why people believe what they believe." In his Science and Pseudoscience course, Brown guides his students through current information on subjects like U.F.O.'s, E.S.P., the Bermuda Triangle, and ghost sightings. He says his aim is to "help students learn to evaluate criteria" and formulate their own theories concerning the above topics.

In addition to the Science and Pseudoscience course, Brown also teaches Experimental Psychology, General Psychology, and the Psychology of Exceptional Children.

He describes his primary methods of instruction as "structured and unstructured discussion and group learning" and feels he is strongest when teaching "concepts and problem solving" skills. Brown does admit he is likely to "[go] off on tangents" during class discussion, but as he reflects on these sessions with exceptional satisfaction, he claims he is "a pain in the ass" to most students.

Students of Dr. Brown can expect "a lot of terrible jokes" mixed in with volumes of pertinent and interesting information about the diversity of psychology-related subjects. His only expectations of students is that they "learn the information" he presents to them, as best they can, and that they "laugh at his jokes."

Brown's desire is that students take from his courses "something that is useful to them—carry over skills" in their post-college lives. His ultimate wish is to "teach students to try to learn to tolerate others," because that is vital for the continued survival of all people.

As Chairperson of the UNCW Academics Standards Committee, Supervisor of the Departmental Honors Program, Co-Editor of the UNCW Center for Teaching Excellence Advisory Board Newsletter, and worked with the Graduate Program for psychology students, which begins it's first year this fall, you may assume Brown's hectic academic life leaves little time for the pursuit of any personal interests.

But, while performing on-going research in many areas, such as the effects of Fetal Alcohol Syndrome and Fragile "x," which is the third most common specific, but little known, cause of mental retardation, Brown finds the time to stay physically fit by regularly working out in the campus weight room.

Brown good humoredly said that although he enjoys lifting weights, he is, sometimes, annoyed by "long-winded students" during his work-out sessions. Is this his only gripe about teaching?

Looking around his cluttered office, his eyes resting on the unusual "Thank you" he had received from an appreciative past student who came to Brown for assistance, he smiled and said "Yes, it is."

Liberal Arts Graduates Are Being Sought By Insurance Companies

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Traditionally, the multibillion dollar insurance industry has been a good home for liberal arts graduates who are frequently hired directly out of college into management training programs in the areas of customer service, marketing and administrative areas.

Among the insurance carriers who actively recruit on college campuses are such giant corporate employers as Aetna (48,000 employees nationwide), Metropolitan Life (54,000), Prudential (100,000), State Farm (58,000) and Travelers (32,000).

Why do insurance companies like to hire non-business majors? According to Lorenzo Pace, Aetna's administrator of college relations, the "flexibility" demonstrated by employees with liberal arts degrees makes them desirable. In fact, over the past few years Aetna has increased its hiring of these employees and today, hires about equal numbers of business grads and liberal arts grads.

At the Chubb Group, a diversified group of insurance carriers with 65 offices in North America and 19 overseas, liberal arts grads are valued for their superior writing and analytical abilities.

Cheryl Kozak, corporate staff recruiter for The Travelers Insurance Co., says the communication skills that liberal arts grads bring to the company are a key asset. "They can see the bigger picture. They're creative and not so specialized, and they bring in new ideas," she says.

Liberal arts grads are hired by Prudential because of their innate "thinking skills," says Joyce Goldstein, vice president for administration. "We look upon thinking skills as analysis, the ability to assess situations, design and organize work, and generate ideas. I think liberal arts grads have a much better foundation than technical people," she says.

Ironically, many liberal arts grads don't even consider a career in the insurance industry.

"I think there are a lot of misconceptions about who we are and what we do," says Aetna's Pace. "Often times, the liberal arts major sees us as insurance salesmen, meaning that's the only type of career area we offer."

In a company as large as Aetna, which manages assets of more than $90 billion, there are numerous employment opportunities in such diverse fields as human resources, law, public affairs, communications, marketing, information systems or training. That's in addition to conventional insurance jobs in underwriting, loss control and claims.

Because it makes good business sense to keep their clients healthy, insurance companies tend to be enlightened about what keeps their employees happy, as well. Insurance companies were among the first to offer such innovations as employee wellness programs, on-site fitness centers and childcare facilities, maternity and parental leaves, work-at-home arrangements, flexible work schedules, sabbaticals and continuing education and training programs.

What does a beginning job in the insurance industry pay? Liberal arts grads can expect to earn between the mid-$20,000s and low $30,000s the first year, plus generous benefits, which can range in value between $5,000 and $10,000 annually.

There are also opportunities for rapid advancement. For example, Metropolitan Life offers a fast-track career path called the Management Associate Program (MAP). The two-year training program offers new hires the chance to try out different disciplines through six-month hands-on work assignments. The vast majority of MAP participants (depending on the year, as much as 75 percent) are liberal arts graduates from a wide range of majors including anthropology, religion, East Asian history, psychology, urban studies, French linguistics, political science and 19th-century English literature.

"Since our philosophy is to develop generalists with a broad corporate view, the well-rounded liberal arts major is an especially good fit for this program," says Georgann Occipinti, Met Life college relations consultant.

In our study of several hundred corporate employers, two distinct prototypes emerged: progressive and nonprogressive. Progressive companies were characterized by innovative programs, such as quality control circles and flexible work schedules; in general they strived to improve work conditions on an on-going basis. It was part of the company's "corporate culture." Senior management of these companies was dominated by liberal arts graduates, and not too surprisingly, these companies tend to hire more liberal arts graduates and promote them faster than nonprogressive companies.

The "perfect employer" does not exist. All companies have their positives and negatives. But as a whole, insurance companies tend to be progressive employers and therefore, the most attuned to a liberal arts philosophy.

UNCW Welcomes the Collective for Women

BY S. BARTLETT
Seahawk Reporter

A number of students and faculty, who have been meeting since the spring of 1994 semester, have formed the UNCW Collective for Women.

Although the Collective for Women was organized, specifically, to "address the needs of women and issues of gender" at UNCW, the members are dedicated to the common goal of equal representation for all people on the UNCW campus.

Two of the immediate items on the Collective for Women's agenda are: a women's resource center and a space to not only hold meetings, but also to go to for one on one confidential advice, day care referral and babysitting networking, information on community organizations for women, safe ride and roommate advertising and informal gatherings that allow women "to develop a voice without interference."

Men will not be barred from meetings or, if made available on campus, any area designated for the Collective for Women.

Members have met with the UNCW Dean of Students, Patricia L. Leonard, and found support for this progressive concept. A group of members have also visited sister campuses in the UNCW system, who provide similar programs for women, to investigate the feasibility of such an organization at UNCW.

So far, the Collective for Women has been welcomed and encouraged by students, faculty, and administration.

If you are interested in attending the Collective for Women's meetings, you may contact Dr. Janet Ellerby in the English Department in Morton Hall. The next meeting will be held Monday, August 29 at 6:00 p.m. Call Dr. Ellerby for location. UNCW staff and students are welcome to attend.

"In redefining femininity women were recovering their own strengths and power, but they were also rediscovering the meaningfulness of life in the notions of sisterhood."

UNCW English Professor Wins English Award

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Have you wondered whether or not anyone actually reads those student evaluation forms we complete each semester on the target (excuse me, professor) with whom we've just spent a rather hectic semester?

Apparently someone does because Dr. Michael D. Wentworth, associated professor of English at UNCW is the recipient of the UNCW Board of Trustees' Teaching Excellence Award. A 1992 UNCW graduate said, "Dr.

Wentworth's approach to teaching is uniquely his own. He is engaging and animated and always entertaining... His comments both in class and on assignments are encouraging and constructively critical. He encourages new and independent thoughts. I cannot remember a single instance when he has caused me to feel ignorant or inadequate. He is never condescending."

In issuing his congratulations, Chancellor James R. Leutze applauded Wentworth's hard work and commented on the satisfaction he must feel in knowing that others recognize and value his efforts. Leutze said, "I am certainly among them."

Wentworth was chosen because of his proven leadership as a mentor to many colleagues and new faculty, and especially due to his philosophy and approach to teaching.

Since joining UNCW in 1983, Wentworth was instrumental in providing many new and interesting courses such as The Beat Generation in American Culture and Elizabethan Literature.

This professor's previous college teaching experience includes the University of Kansas and Northland College, Ashland, Wisconsin. He holds a doctorate in English from Bowling Green State University (1979), a M.A. in English from Eastern Michigan University (1971) and a B.A. in English from the University of Kansas (1969).

In addition to the honor of receiving the Teaching Excellence Award, Wentworth received $1,500 in cash. Not bad for a student evaluation form, wouldn't you say?

UNCW'S Honor Code—Is It Fact or Fiction?

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

"If you do not tell the truth about people you cannot tell it about other people," said Virginia Woolf in The Moment and Other Essays.

Students at Rhodes College in Memphis, TN take the truth seriously. In fact, honesty is not just the best policy in the minds of Rhodes students, it's the only policy.

Rhodes College is considered to have one of the toughest honor code systems in the nation, according to the College Press Service. As such, it is assumed that students do not lie, cheat or steal.

Students who eat lunch in the cafeteria can drop their backpacks on the floor confident that nothing will happen to their possessions. No one checks to see if they have paid for their meals. Professors leave classrooms unattended during tests. Examinations are left on computer programs that are accessible to students, and if a student elects to take a test early, it is expected that he or she will not divulge any of the questions.

"It gives students a sense of control over their environment," said Chris Campbell, president of Rhodes College Student Honor Council, which investigates alleged infractions of the code. "Students have more at stake in what's going on in the classroom. If one student cheats and the professor happens to grade on a curve, that affects the others in the class. It's fairer for students to be judged by their peers."

All first-year students are told they have to sign a pledge not to cheat, steal or lie and that they have to report anyone who does. New students walk up, one by one, and sign their names in a large leather volume that is the honor code book itself and pledge to live up to the standards of community life at Rhodes College.

"These standards, by which we all agreed to live, protect our personal freedom by encouraging a climate of trust, concern and respect conducive to learning and growing," the pledge reads in part.

The Honor Council is tough on violators. About half of the students hauled before the student-run council were turned in by other students. In the past five years, the council has placed 47 students on probation, suspended 16 and expelled seven.

Milton Brown, professor of religious studies, said he likes the message that the system conveys to students.

UNCW also has its honor code. As the section on academic honor code in the annual catalogue states, our university is committed to the proposition that the pursuit of truth requires the presence of honesty among all involved."

"It is therefore this institution's stated policy that no form of dishonesty among its faculty or students will be tolerated," the catalogue states.

Although students at UNCW don't participate in a ceremonial signing of a leather-bound honor book as do students at Rhodes, members of our academic community are "encouraged to report occurrences of dishonesty." Further, we are also reminded by the catalogue that "honesty is principally the responsibility of each individual."

UNCW's honor code may be just as supportive of individual responsibility as that of Rhodes, but that same sense of trust experienced by Rhodes students will not be found here. Tests are not left on computers for the convenience of student schedules and rarely do professors leave classrooms unattended during exams of any type. At the same time, purses left unattended will disappear and papers submitted are not always free from plagiarism.

Despite Rhodes' pride in their honor code system, they haven't completely eradicated dishonest behavior, nor has UNCW.

Dean of Students Patricia L. Leonard said that during the 1993-94 academic year, five students at UNCW were disciplined for cheating.

During academic year 1992-93 there were seven adjudicated cases, Leonard said. Five of those cases were for cheating and two for plagiarism. Seven students were disciplined during 1991-92 for plagiarism.

Leonard pointed out that these are only the reported cases of breaches of the honor code. Many times, the faculty member takes some action on his or her own and the case never reaches the dean of students office. Sometimes, students who witness violations never say anything.

Although our honor code calls for individual responsibility for enforcing it, "If the faculty doesn't enforce it, you can't expect the student to enforce it," Leonard said. "People don't report it [honor code violations] as they should."

When asked about the honor code, Dr. Robert Brown, psychology professor, quotes Gandhi, "I think it would be a good idea."

Brown said academic integrity stems from personal integrity. The honor code "would be a good idea, but functionally we don't have one. We have one on paper, but I don't think it's working."

UNCW's academic honor code is found in Section V of the Student Handbook and Code of Student Life 1994-1995 which each student at this university receives whether a new or returning student. UNCW's philosophy on academic honor is stated as follows: "The University of North Carolina at Wilmington is committed to the proposition that the pursuit of truth requires the presence of honesty among all involved. It is therefore this institution's stated policy that no form of dishonesty among its faculty or students will be tolerated. Although all members of the university community are encouraged to report occurrences of dishonesty, each individual is principally responsible for his or her own honesty."

The handbook identifies academic offenses as being: (1) plagiarism, which includes word-for-word copying, mosaic copying (inserting your own words in amongst someone else's words), and paraphrasing without acknowledging the source of the work; (2) bribery; and (3) cheating.

What do you do if the student sitting next to you in the exam is cheating? According to Section V-3 (B), student responsibility is to "report academic violations to their class instructor, department chair, or to the dean of the college/school in which the course is taught."

Not saying anything does not relieve a student of academic honesty responsibility. Once you are aware of an infraction, you can also be considered cheating if you are "participating in, or permitting," any acts of cheating, according to Section V-1 (C) of the honor code.

Details on the university's expectations of honorable behavior, statements of responsibility, reporting and adjudication procedures are outlined in the Student Handbook.

WHAT IS RUSH?

Rush is a time for interested students to take a closer look at Greek Life at UNCW. You will meet sorority and fraternity members, discuss Greek life and begin new friendships. Also, rush will allow you to learn about the different activities and programs of each group.

If you are undecided about Greek membership, participation in rush should help you decide. Rush in itself is fun and provides you with the opportunity to meet new people. Participation in rush does not obligate you to join any group.

Sorority rush registration forms and fees must be received by Tuesday, September 13, 1994.

Information concerning all aspects of Greek life can be directed to the Greek Affairs Office @ (910) 395-3056, located in the University Union.

BENEFITS OF GREEK MEMBERSHIPS

You'll have a group of supportive friends to help you make the adjustment to college and who will be your friends for life.

You'll have excellent scholastic resources available to you to help you achieve your academic goals.

You'll learn important leadership skills and get a chance to practice them as a chapter officer or committee member.

You'll be encouraged to get involved in other clubs and campus organizations.

You'll participate in intramurals and campus events like Greek Week and Homecoming with other fraternity and sorority members.

You'll get to help others less fortunate than you through community service projects.

You'll be exposed to career opportunities through interaction with fraternity and sorority alumni.

Welcome Back!

Throughout my career in higher education, I have always felt a sense of excitement and renewal with the start of a new academic year. There is a sense of freshness—new books, new professors, new subjects to study. I'm pleased to be joining you in the classroom again this year with History 343, a course I developed on "Wilmington: A Study in Development." So, in the truest sense, we are all starting this semester with new perspectives and new opportunities.

As I welcome the freshmen, transfers, returning students and other members of the university community, I urge you to remember one thing: faculty, staff, and administrators are here for one purpose—to help you succeed in your college career. Your obligation is to take advantage of this opportunity to learn from our fine faculty. We cannot make you learn; we can challenge you, encourage you, expose you to ideas, but only you can learn. To do so you must put forth your best effort. Our purpose is not to see if the admissions office made a mistake when you were admitted, we are here to help you graduate. With your enthusiastic participation, we will all succeed in meeting our goals.

That philosophy underlies the spirit you will find here at UNCW. When there are problems, let someone know. Talk with your professors and get to know them outside the classroom. They are a wonderful group, truly dedicated to education.

If you have an idea for a better way to do something, use the suggestion box in either the University Center or Randall Library. Your comments will be read and evaluated. Those ideas with merit will be rewarded and implemented.

Communication is at the heart of preventing misunderstandings from blooming into full-fledged problems. To this end, my door is open. I have established student hours—for this fall they are as follows:

Sept. 19	Monday	3:30-5:00 p.m.
Sept. 29	Thursday	3:30-5:00 p.m.
Oct. 31	Monday	8:30-9:00 a.m.
Nov. 16	Wednesday	3:30-5:00 p.m.
Nov. 30	Wednesday	8:30-9:30 a.m.
Dec. 6	Tuesday	3:30-5:00 p.m.

Another avenue for communicating your concerns is Dr. David Miller, enrollment manager. His job is to take down roadblocks, whether it's unaccommodating course mix-ups or pointing you in the right direction for help in study tips. You can call him at 395-3540.

Again, welcome to UNCW, one of the finest young universities in the nation. My best wishes for your success.

UNCW's School of Nursing has a new dean. Dr. Virginia W. Adams' appointment was approved by the Board of Governors of the University of North Carolina and became effective July 1, 1994.

"We are very pleased to have attracted such a highly-qualified professional from such an outstanding school to UNCW," said UNCW Chancellor James R. Leutze.

A member of several national nursing and health-related associations, Adams is a Lieutenant Colonel in the U.S. Army Reserves and is an active researcher of health issues related to children.

Before being appointed as the second dean of UNCW's School of Nursing, Adams was serving as interim dean of the College of Nursing at East Tennessee State University, Johnson City, TN. She holds a bachelor of science in nursing from Winston-Salem State University; a master of science in maternal child nursing from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill; and a doctorate degree in child development and family relations from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Adams' appointment is one of many made since Leutze arrived at UNCW in 1990. Leutze said the choice of Adams "proves again that we are competitively seeking and hiring the best people in the country."

Feminist Colloquium Meets At UNCW

The Feminist Colloquium meets monthly on alternating Wednesdays and Thursdays for a brown bag lunch and discussion.

First meeting is Wednesday, Aug. 31.

Dr. Karen Deck, mathematical science professor, will lead a discussion on "Science: Comparisons Across Cultures."

Meetings to follow will address issues of literary couples, women and nature, and women aging.

There are always relevant readings on reserve at the library under the name of Dr. Janet Ellerby that accompany the discussions, but it's not necessary to read these articles in order to participate.

Everyone is welcome, students, staff and faculty.

The Feminist Colloquium addresses issues of identity as they relate to our current lives.

UNCW Campus Briefs

A C is no longer just a C. Soon Mom and Dad are going to know just how really close you came to getting that dreaded D. Effective fall semester '94, UNCW will go to a plus, minus grading system. This system adds + and - to the A-D system. But don't get your hopes up, an F is still an F.

Don't forget the new telephone grade inquiry system is in operation. Students can call, enter their appropriate identification information, and receive a list of their grades. It makes the wait between the day of exam and the day the mailman brings the dreaded results less torturous.

UNCW isn't taking any chances with their new super-smart freshmen. This fall a new four-year honors program becomes effective. Approved by the UNCW Faculty Senate last academic year, 40 students in the freshman class will be the initial participants. These honor students' average SAT score is 1100 and their high school GPA averages to 3.93. The honors program will include basic studies and a special interdisciplinary seminar. Half of students in the program will live in Schwartz Hall, designated Honors Residence Hall. Phaedra Dukakis, senior honors student, will live with the honors student as their mentor.

The war on substance abuse is on. A new Master of Arts degree in psychology will be offered for the first time this fall. It has two tracks—one prepares students for entering a doctoral program in applied or experimental psychology; the second track is designed for those students wishing to focus on the use of psychotherapy for the treatment of substance abuse problems. The new MA will assist students in preparation for the NC Psychological Associate License Examination and the NC Substance Abuse Professional Certification Examination.

Look out, middle-schoolers. The Watson School of Education is offering a new concentration in its Master of Education program focusing on middle grades education.

We're really going to see something concrete out of the abstracts of politics. New ground will be broken Sept. 30 for the new 100,000-square-foot science building. This new campus building is financed by bond issue money authorized by voters in November 1993. An addition to Bear Hall will also be paid for with bond issue money.

If you whistle while you work, is that an inherited trait? Joining UNCW this fall in the Department of Biological Sciences is Dr. Laela Sayigh, visiting assistant professor, whose specialty is signature whistles of free-ranging bottlenose dolphins. Sayigh has been studying a group of 100 dolphins off of Florida and how they pick up their signature whistles from their parents.

Bodies, bodies everywhere! UNCW is expected to have an opening total fall enrollment of approximately 8,300 students, about 150 more than enrolled in the fall of 1993. New enrollments were kept to a minimum because of space and program limitations. Until the new buildings are completed, UNCW will experience only limited growth including limiting the number of new students accepted for admission.

Getting into UNCW is getting more difficult every year. This year over 6,650 hopeful freshmen applied to UNCW for admission this fall. Only 57 percent were accepted, the second lowest acceptance rate in the UNC system.

Do you even remember what you scored on your SAT's? The average freshman SAT score is expected to reach 964 for the first time in the university's history. That figure is up 29 points from the 935 average for 1993 and 1992 freshman classes.

From the number-crunching sector—UNCW's total African-American enrollment is expected to be 520, about the same as fall '93 (the largest in the school's history). 469 enrolled in '92 with a total enrollment of 622. Total minority enrollment in fall '93 exceeded 700, up from 922 a 622. Fall '94 total minority enrollment is expected to increase only slightly. About 50 international students are expected during Fall '94 representing over 30 countries. For information on these or other statistics, call Robert Fry, assistant to the chancellor and director of institutional research, 395-3520.

Who said we don't contribute to the community? UNCW will have an anticipated economic impact on the area economy (Brunswick, Columbus, New Hanover, and Pender counties) estimated to be $400 million. That equates to 10 cents from each dollar according to Dr. W. W. Hall, director of the Center for Business and Economics Services at the Cameron School of Business.

U.S. Campus Shorts

COLUMBIA, Mo.—A new bookstore at the University of Missouri-Columbia has come up with a unique promotion to get their business rolling—free books for athletes.

MBS Textbook Exchange recently opened a store in Columbia, providing direct competition to the college-owned University Stores. In a gesture that's part aggressive sales pitch, part campus goodwill, the new store has announced it will donate 250,000 textbooks to the school's athletic department over the next three years.

The books will be distributed to Missouri's 400 athletes on partial or full scholarships, who will then be required to either return or buy the books at the end of the semester.

According to the NCAA's Steve Mallonee, the donation of books to the department is allowed under current NCAA rules, providing that the athletic department gives the free books to only those athletes who are eligible to receive them.

The donation won't be a problem," Mallonee said. "It depends on whether or not the student who receives it is entitled to free books under his or her financial aid agreement."

The store's co-owners, Bob Pugh and Dan Schuppman, have a strong connection to the school's athletes. Pugh worked for several years as the school's official scorer at basketball games while Schuppman played at MU as an undergraduate.

Alas, UNCW athletes don't receive such special "donations."

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich.—A University of Michigan student who was denied custody of her daughter because she places the child in day care is appealing the state judge's decision.

On June 27, Circuit Judge Raymond Cashen found both Jennifer Ireland, 19, and Steve Smith, 20, to be competent parents but turned over custody of their daughter, Maranda Ireland Smith, to Smith so that the 3-year-old can be cared for by "blood relatives."

Cashen ruled in favor of Smith, who filed for custody last year, because Maranda would be raised by Smith's mother while he attends classes at Macomb County Community College. Ireland places Maranda in day care while she attends classes at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. Ireland and her daughter stay at her mother's home during weekends and breaks from class.

"A child gains the feeling of security, a safe place by virtue of permanency," Cashen said in his decision, adding that Maranda would be "raised a great part of the time by strangers" while living with her mother, as opposed to "blood relatives" while with her father.

Julie Field, Ireland's attorney, said she plans to appeal the case and have the custody transfer blocked. Field said the appeal will focus on four main issues: the judge's disregard of evidence in favor of Ireland as the custodial parent, the over-importance of the subject of day care, the fact that Smith's mother was essentially granted custody of the baby and that evidence of domestic violence by Smith against Ireland was virtually ignored.

Smith was scheduled to appear in court on Aug. 11, the day he also was to gain custody of Maranda, on charges of misdemeanor assault and battery. Ireland accuses Smith of bruising and choking her on occasions in December 1992 and January 1993.

ATHENS, Ga.—Students caught cheating at the University of Georgia could be flunked on the spot if a new cheating policy is approved.

Students would not only receive an F in the class, but a notation on their transcript would indicate that the grade was a result of academic dishonesty.

The proposal was approved by the University Council and the Student Government Association and is pending final approval from University President Charles Knapp.

"The grading move was made to help promote a more academically honest campus," says Larry Dendy, a university spokesperson. "The University of Georgia wants to send a strong message out that it does not tolerate cheating in any form."

The proposed measure would be added to the university's current punishment for cheaters, which is automatic suspension for one academic quarter.

According to Dendy, the new policy would allow students to petition professors to have the notation removed and the grade changed after one year, provided the student has no further academic violations.

You'd better check our own Academic Honor Code for guidelines to keep yourself out of trouble at UNCW.

FLORENCE, Ala.—When University of North Alabama incoming freshmen dialed a toll-free number this summer for information about their new school, they were greeted by a soft, sultry voice that purred, "Hello, sexy."

It seems, a typo on a brochure distributed at freshman orientation instructed incoming students to call 1-800-UNA-TALK, the One-on-One Live Sex Line, instead of 1-800-TALK-UNA, the university's information line.

While that's probably enough information to prompt many male high school seniors to send in their application, it's not exactly what UNA officials had in mind.

The school sent out letters apologizing to students and parents, and the school's correct phone number for their information line.

Big Bucks For Books-Have I Got A Deal For You!

You've managed to come up with your tuition money and apartment or dorm room fees; your supply of CD's are up to date, you've bought a calendar with deliciously large blank spaces to enter all your social activities, and your wardrobe ensures you'll fit in to campus life. You're ready for college—or maybe not!

What about those heavy textbook tomes you have to purchase? You know the ones, they're the books listed on the syllabus as required (for the one paragraph that may or may not be referred to during a lecture) and cost as much as the current proposed national health plan.

Textbooks are big business in college bookstores. How else to afford a bookstore on campus that delights in the really important business of expensive collegiate clothing.

Maybe UNCW professors are under some kind of straits to owe allegiance totally to the campus bookstore, but I'm not. I appreciate the convenience the campus bookstore offers, but as even the United States Consumer Service will advise you—be a smart consumer. If you find a better deal elsewhere, go for it.

The SGA sponsors a consignment bookstore for used textbooks. They're in business now and you can usually find a great deal.

Post notices of books you need on bulletin boards and look for lists posted by others. Cross-check your lists of books with friends, they may have just the book you need.

If you have a discount card for a bookstore, go ahead and use it. They can and will order a book for you. Before ordering, you can check the price you'll pay against the purchase price of a new or used book in the campus bookstore and then choose the store that makes you the best deal.

During one semester of undergraduate school, I was especially lean in the old financial pockets and found every book I needed in the Randall library. If you use this route, do remember the books you find are library books—don't highlight or mutilate the books in any way. If your need to mark something surges through your blood, photocopy the particular page enticing you—then mark away to your heart's content.

If Randall library doesn't have the book you need, see if you can order it through interlibrary loan. This is a wonderful service and avoids you of almost unlimited resources.

Don't forget we also have the New Hanover County Library. Plunder through their shelves as well for the books you need.

Share a book with a friend in the class. Either you buy one text, your friend buys another and you both share them, or find some way to do something special for the privilege of using their book for free. Do their laundry, give them a ride to class, surely there's something you can barter for without compromising your principals.

You can probably think of more ideas than I've presented here. Whatever you do, just remember—textbooks are expensive but necessary to accomplishing what you're doing here in the first place.

Frank's Place

Frank Tascone

Welcome to Frank's Place. Bob, the cat, and I are out on the balcony enjoying the breeze. Our topic of discussion this week is expanding one's personal horizons. A timely topic given that I, at the ripe age of 31, am returning to school as a graduate student. Yes, the rumors you heard are true. I am leaving my high prestige professional executive position on the second floor of the University Union. Of course I'll miss the Lexus and the weekend reveals in the Camyans, but I am in pursuit of greater substance. I want to write, study literature, and influence eager, young minds. Excuse me, I believe Bob is choking on a hairball.

Back to expanding horizons. As a professional staff member on a university campus you are limited in many ways. There is an invisible boundary that prohibits you from indulging in certain behaviors and activities. Those walls are now lifted and I am prepared to experience college life from the inside.

First of all, I'm going to check into this Jesus Lizard thing I keep seeing signs about. Who is he? What does he want? Is he a good witch or a bad witch? I want to know. Next, I plan to walk around campus, in and out of buildings, in bare feet (such attire is frowned upon in staff meetings). What does it feel like? Do you have trouble with fire ants? Poison ivy? Do you wash your feet before going to bed? I want to know what it's like to walk in student shoes—so to speak.

I plan to purchase a bike from the Campus Police auction. I'm going to grease and oil it real good so that it makes no noise. Then I'm going to really get crankin' down Chancellor's walk and buzz unsuspecting pedestrians. I've lived this experience from the view of the pedestrian. I want a more complete picture.

I'm not going to take classes between the hours of noon and 3 PM.

Instead, I'll be packing my lunch and driving over to the University Center to wait for a parking space as close to my student mailbox as possible. If that means waiting for a couple of hours, so be it. I hope some faculty/staff type drives up behind me and motions for me to move, or yells because she/he is late for a meeting. I'll hold my hands up in resignation. "Like what do you want me to do—park and walk or something?" Yeah!

I'm going to drift around campus with a skateboard. I won't ride it—just walk around and use words like "killer" and "bad" when I mean good. I'm going to check out campus events—especially the ones I have a feeling will be sparsely attended. When they're all over, I'll go to the sponsors and give them my opinions on why there were so few people. "If you would just have beer and reggae, people will come."

I'm going to put important suggestions in the Chancellor's suggestion box. "Like, why do they only have the word condom or prophylactic (whatever that is) on those machines over in LivWell? I mean shouldn't they just call them 'rubbers' so we all know what they're talking about?" I want this suggestion to land on someone's desk. I want them to have to address it and send a response to me. I'll be waiting anxiously in my car, with packed lunch, for the reply.

Well, I fear I've gone on a bit too long. Bob has lost interest and has cornered a lizard between the railing post and the sliding glass door. The lizard appears to be a friendly sort—just a little misunderstood at the moment. I think I'll call him Jesus.

S. Bartlett Student Soliloquies

Summers school. Is there any form of sadomasochism less appealing?

I used to believe I had relatively good self-esteem. But after twelve credit hours and ten weeks of stressful days and sleepless nights, I was reduced to a permanent premenstrual pulp.

My sons constantly begged me to allow them to move in with their grandparents across town. The eldest informed me I was "positively primeval" and he "just wasn't comfortable with my attitude." Nice talk for a 5-year-old, huh? Damn those Disney movies.

I have two cats who still hiss and bare their teeth at the sight or smell of me. They sneak up on me when I sleep, licking my eyelids with their Brillo tongues and nipping at my nostrils with their poster-pink teeth. I recently decided to have them neutered. Losing your sex drive isn't so bad. I've been searching for mine for three years and I haven't lost my cheerfulness.

I think I had a friend or two last May. Now when my phone rings, I know it's #1 a bill collector, #2 a wrong number, #3 the weirdo that lives across the court, watches me through the windows, and then calls me to tell me what I'm doing. At least he makes me feel something. When you have nothing else, anger and disgust do count.

The only living things I have maintained a healthy relationship with this summer are my gladiolas. I never even watered them, but they forgave me before they died. I sincerely believe they would have bloomed if my younger deserter hadn't karate chopped them to the quick while pretending to be the Red Power Ranger.

Okay. Maybe the boys got tired of seeing straws-reduced flames shooting out of my eyes as the flesh peeled away from my skull revealing a pregnant brain ready to numerous instructional methodologies and three-part thesis statements.

Okay. So the scoopable cat litter (which, by the way, is a total farce. Once you have scooped the stinking, sweltering clumps there is nothing left in the pan but a reeking odor. If it were truly scoopable, you could scoop some and have some left in the pan. As it is, you may as well empty the entire pan and begin with a fresh batch. AND, don't you hate it the way cats stand by, grinning sardonically, and wait for you to put fresh litter in the pan just so they can immediately foul it up? Felines have no concept of appreciation rarely got scooped. May 22 and July 29 to be exact.

Okay. So friends don't leave ugly messages on their answering machines, like—"If you're not a single parent attending summer session full-time, I invite you to go to hell and prod dead. In that order. BEEP." Friends also do not screen their calls and yell obscenities at the few brave soldiers who leave messages.

If I had not terrified every man I have ever met since I lay, I wonder if my hormonal imbalance indicated and impending birth. It would be nice to blame the new dimples in my thighs, in which a small child could lose her fist, on pregnancy and not the interminable hours worshipping my IBM clone. Actually, I don't mind the you? New study habits? New connections with people? New commitment to exercise and good eating habits? New determination to explore your spiritual life? Think about three or four specific decisions you can make today which if implemented would leave you feeling satisfied at the end of this semester. Then decide what the first step is in carrying out each of the decisions.

Make it happen! You are in charge of your own well being. You stand now in between past and future. It is today, a today whose use will be determined by memory and dreams, both of which are very powerful forces, both of which are inside you. And YOU are special, unique, and powerful. Know it! Believe it! Set your own course. New horizons beckon. Again...

Happy New Year!

JASON STRICKLAND

A secluded pond owned by UNCW was the site of a fatal accident this summer.

On July 3, Dennis Miller, 24, of Wilmington, and approximately 35 other people were trespassing on private property when the casualty occurred. Miller was riding a jet ski when he suddenly fell off and screamed for help. Andrew Scott, another person at the scene, said Miller knew how to swim, but for some reason he sank. The pond is located off Harris and Gordon roads and is accessible only by two dirt roads.

Lt. C.E. Willis of the University Police Department said measures are being taken to enforce against trespassing on university property. Signs warning against trespassing are posted but area residents says they are often ignored. Miller was not a UNCW student.

The summer months held few other incidents for university police. Lt. Willis said it had been a quiet summer besides a couple of bicycle larcenies.

This year, the Seahawk, in cooperation with university police, will be offering a number of crime prevention tips to help keep unwanted incidents on campus at a low.

Resumes Can Grease Skids For Job Candidates

BY JOHN TUTTLE
Special Correspondent

Volunteer work and graduate school are viable options for those who, for whatever reason, want to put off diving into the job market. However, not everyone can get into graduate school. And many volunteer organizations can be as selective in choosing candidates for positions as corporate employers.

So, many are forced to dive right into the job application pool fresh out of college. But without a graduate degree or a year of volunteer service under their belts, how can these candidates compete?

Beverly Stennett, a counselor at the career development center at George Mason University in Fairfax, VA, says career development centers at most schools offer free services such as resume critiques, workshops on interviewing skills, networking and more.

Knowing where to start looking for a job is the first step. The employment section of the newspaper seems like the most logical place to start, however, Stennett said that most emphasis should be placed on networking.

"Consider everyone a potential contact for you," she said. Friends who have graduated, relatives, professors, and your friends' parents are all potential networking opportunities. Many professional associations have college chapters. These provide excellent networking opportunities as well.

However, Stennett said, do not ignore published ads. "About 20 percent of your emphasis should be on the classifieds," she said.

According to Stennett, both the cover letter and the resume should match what the employer wants. By this point in the job search, everyone should have a resume, which should include:

*Education - List, in reverse chronological order, colleges attended and their location, your major or degree, and your GPA if it is above 3.2.

*Work Experience - List, again in reverse chronological order, any jobs or internships, even if they were unpaid. Explain your duties at these jobs and accentuate the positive, but don't be too creative. Employers know that "custodial engineers" are janitors.

*Activities - List extracurricular, sports, and community activities, which can be great places to develop valuable leadership skills. Be sure your prospective employer knows about them.

*Don't include personal information such as height, weight, hair color or other irrelevant facts. They're likely to get more laughs than telephone calls. There are dozens of books on how to write a good resume. Many are worth the investment.

You can't judge a book by its cover, but you can judge a resume by its cover letter. Employers do. A good one can get you a job.

A cover letter should tell the reader that you wish to apply for a job, how you heard about the job, and why he or she should bother to look at your resume. It should be short, flawlessly written, unique, to the point, bold, yet conservative. Impossible? Nearly, but it can be done. Again, see your career counselor and buy a good book.

Advice for UNCW's Weary

Stephanie Bartlett and Katherine Smith

Hi! I'm Emma and this is Jane. These aren't our real names. We can't use our real names because every loser in Wilmington will call us at home to ask us stupid questions. We serve only the elite losers of the academic world. When June (also not her real name) begged us to write this column, we were a little leery about accepting the monumental responsibility of telling people where to go and how to get there as quickly as possible. Then we realized that truly is what we do best.

Dear Emma and Jane: I'm an 18-year-old male from the North. I moved to North Carolina over a year ago and I just can't adjust. The people are so different here. The men all know each other and most of them are named "Bubba". The women say my accent makes me sound dumb. I can't find a job making more than minimum wage. And I hate the fleas and huge flying cockroaches you have here. I don't want to move back home and make people think I couldn't cut it somewhere else. How can an upstate Easterner survive at UNCW? Signed: Lonely in the Low Country

Dear Lonely: You need to adjust one step at a time. You can't expect to enter a new culture and immediately find a niche. Why are you here anyway? Are you here to make buddies with Bubbas, impress women, or make a cool million in under a year? It's not happening guy. If you're at UNCW to get an education—get it and quit whining. If you put half of the effort into your studies that you're putting into your whimpering, you'd be on the Chancellor's List every semester. Who cares what anyone else thinks about you? Everyone is as insecure and identity-less as you are. Wake up and smell the flea bomb, bub. And don't put down our "roaches". They happen to be a good source of protein for many underpaid undergraduates. Why don't you give the South a chance? If you want to fully enjoy the North Carolina experience you must attend at least one pig-pickin'. Be a friend—bring the PBR.

Dear Emma and Jane: This is my senior year and I'm scared about entering the "real world". What advice can you give me to help me prepare for the years following graduation?

Signed: A Scared Senior

Dear Scared: What do you think these past four years have been about? Can't you see that it you've been searching for reality, college isn't the place you'll find it? Do you know one instructor who exists in reality? Graduate—if you can, and then leave. That's your plan. What do we care what you do after you leave UNCW? You won't be writing us anymore. You'll find an entry level position somewhere, in a field that has nothing to do with your academic major, work your way up the proverbial ladder as far as you can, and then you'll die. Why should you be any different than the rest of us? What an ego.

Dear Emma and Jane: I'm a 21-year-old who is about to start my senior year at UNCW and I have a major problem. My boyfriend wants me to quit school and marry him right away. I am so close to graduating, I just can't see why he can't wait one more year. I want to finish my Elementary Education degree, but I can't even consider life without him. My parents and friends keep giving me advice, but I don't know who to trust since no one really likes my boyfriend anyway. Help!

Signed: Almost Through

Dear Almost: Where have you been for the last three years and why have you been there? Isn't the whole point to finish? You can find a husband with almost a degree, but can you really trust a husband to feed you for your entire life? Statistically, 50% of the marriages in the US don't make it past the first five years. Once you get the degree, it will be food for a lifetime. Besides, nobody gives you a job because you almost have a degree. If your boyfriend isn't willing to wait nine months for you to finish your education, what are the chances he'll be understanding about waiting for anything? Or maybe he just has a nine-month problem—could make it tough if you get pregnant. C'mon little sister, straighten your spine, make a well-thought out decision, and stick to your guns. Personally, we'd finish the degree and let the boyfriend deal with this problem. It's obviously his problem and not yours. Trust us on this. We've had some experience in this man-marriage-career-divorce-widowhood-single-parenthood-successful student thing. "Nuff said."

Got a problem you dare to think we can't handle? Try us anyway, we operate well under the constraints of crisis management. We'll be thrilled to tell you where to go and even what day to do it. Write us at UNCW PO Box 34095.

Grant Awarded To UNCW Proffessor

BY JASON STRICKLAND
Staff Writer

UNCW announced on June 23 that a $40,000 research grant had been awarded to psychology professors Dr. James D. Johnson and Dr. Nora Noel.

The grant was given by the Alcoholic Beverage Medical Research Foundation for the professors' submitted proposal entitled, "The Effect of Male Perceiver Intoxication on the Perceptions of Female Sexual Intentions."

Misunderstanding by males of females' intentions tend to be a factor in a high percentage of acquaintance rape. Studies suggest that as many as 55 percent of men who commit sexual assault do so under the influence of alcohol.

Dr. Johnson said, "It is very possible that alcohol use by the male could increase the probability that such a misunderstanding would occur."

Lt. C.E. Willis of the University Police Department said, "This year a main concern will be sexual assault."

If you, or someone you know, has been raped, remember these few suggestions:

- *Get to a safe place, possibly with a close friend.
- *Call the Rape Crisis Center at 392-7460. It is open 24 hours or,
- *Call the University Development Center at 395-3746 for support and valuable information.

The Alienist

by Caleb Carr (Random House, $22)

"Alienist" was a turn of the century term for psychologists back when society viewed the profession with suspicion. It's 1898 and New York City is being haunted by a serial killer. The police commissioner, knowing he can't rely on the antiquated and even corrupt methods of his regular police force to confront such a menace, assembles an unusual group of people to track the killer down. At the head of the group is Dr. Laszlo Kreizler, an alienist who is about as respected as such men go in a prurient society—that is to say, not very. At Kreizler's side is a reporter named Moore whose intentions are the best.

Kreizler's task is to find out who could commit the butcheries which appear with the regularity of religious holidays. His theory is that if he finds what sort of man it could not be, they will be that much closer to the type of man it is. He must operate in secrecy, lest an angry public hear of his involvement. And who is the police commissioner willing to go to such extraordinary lengths, even at the cost of bypassing his own department and angering his constituents? Teddy Roosevelt, of all people.

Let me assure you that Roosevelt did in fact hold this position in 1898. Carr is too good a historian to mess with a major fact like that. He is, after all, the editor of Military History Quarterly. It is the historian's attention to detail which is the crowing glory of the book. Carr deals succinctly, but thoroughly, with the social pressures of the day. They are portrayed so vividly that readers will find themselves seeking the reassuring existence of automobiles and electricity. Irish and Italian semi-organized mobs settle on the streets. The police force is rife with graft and under the strains of a forcible reformation. Carr's enthusiasm for a colorful period is so infectious that the reader won't mind even the rather unlikely introduction of J.P. Morgan.

Laszlo Kreizler is Sherlock Holmes. He takes delight in using his observational science to arrive at conclusions which seem miraculous to his befuddled companion. He is cool, aloof, and scientific. He is a friend of street urchins. True, he does not play violin, but he does love opera. Kreizler even is a fair boxer. The book is even narrated by Moore, a man who can be counted on for blunt work and almost blind obedience. Against the backdrop of late 19th century New York, the "Holmesian" aura is almost overwhelming.

Yet, one cannot deny the originality of The Alienist. The plot is fast-paced with suitable twists and nagging details. The "team" put together to find the killer includes, aside from Kreizler and Moore, two young detectives from Roosevelt's force who were foolishly dependent on modern (and therefore suspect) forensic methods such as fingerprints. The last member is the unlikely character of Sarah. She is a woman who would be a police officer, poor girl, and has succeeded only as making herself secretary to Roosevelt, who will obviously try anything once.

There is perhaps more social tolerance than one would expect. Sarah, for example, is accepted onto the team with a puzzling equanimity. The largest hurdle she appears to face with the other men is their reluctance to say dirty words in front of her. There is also the nature of the murders. The victims of this particular serial killer are boy prostitutes. Decent society doesn't like to admit the existence of prostitution, much less homosexuality. Yet the group remains laudably (and unconvincedly) accepting.

As a study in psychological profiling, The Alienist is so complete and so plausible we are left wondering why such a method doesn't seem to work as well today. (It is, perhaps, a littleirkesome that it all comes down to the killer's mother.) Indeed, the character of the killer is narrowed down so specifically that it seems unlikely. Oh well, those were simpler days, no doubt.

Written on The Body

by Jeanette Winterson (Vintage, $11)

Jeanette Winterson has written an original love story. By original, I mean both "unique" and "first"—prototype. The lovers in Written on The Body are untroubled by anyone else's ideas of love. Their love begins and ends entirely with themselves, the beloved is a married woman named Louise. The lover is, well, PASSIONATELY IN LOVE. That is all we know.

It certainly isn't easy to write a novel without referring to the name, occupation, or even the sex of your lead character. Winterson dances through this task with such flair that if I hadn't said anything, chances are you wouldn't have noticed. (Well, not at least for half the book.) Her offhand and natural tone makes this glaring omission seem merely coincidental. Hats off to Jeanette Winterson, we all know that there is no such thing as "coincidence" in a novel.

Of course, the obvious question is what does the author want to tell us with this—it is almost too beautifully done to call it a "device"? Is her point that LOVE transcends gender? Are her characters supposed to be archetypal symbols of love? They seem to be very rooted in the physical world for that. Some passages are so erotic they will leave you panting.

Is Winterson suggesting that LOVE is an end in itself? That gender is irrelevant to desire? If so, she has made an old idea sound completely new. She has also had a good laugh over the heated arguments every reader has had over the sex of the narrator.

Winterson gives LOVE a thousand faces in this story. There are the married (both happily), who have traded excitement for security. There is the philanderer who seeks in lust something that he(he?) sees lacking in marriage. Then there are the obsessed, as Louise and her beloved surely are, who notice other people only as irritants, even husbands.

In this one red-hot affair, love is at its most tender and its most cruel. The author asks, what would you sacrifice for such a love? Your friends? Your family? What about your own future? What about your lover's?

I'll leave you to decide if the narrator in this story is male or female. It may be irrelevant, but this writer has her own opinion. Perhaps the really pertinent question in the book is asked early on: "Why," the writer wonders, "is the measure of love...loss?"

Playing for the Ashes

by Elizabeth George (Bantam, $21.95)

This woman writes my favorite kind of murder mysteries; stories where method takes a backseat to motive, and the motive is not greed, but love. In all of her books, the murderer is driven by an excess of love, and Playing for the Ashes is no exception. George has a disturbing talent for taking mundane situations and making them dark with passionate, even murderous, intent. Simple everyday situations like a slightly dysfunctional family, a rebellious child, or a possessive mother, become dangerous in George's universe.

The book opens with the discovery of the body of a famous, and murdered, cricket player. England regards cricket with the same sort of fanaticism which Americans reserve for football: so this murder is big news. CID Inspector Thomas Lynley and SIt. Barbara Havers sort through the murdered man's personal and professional entanglements, which are as complicated as any normal person's. Havers, ever practical, pounces on the unfortunates with no alibi. Lynley, ever romantic, focuses on what seems (to him) to be the most compelling motive. Both detectives have a good ear for lies. Both have their favorite suspects. As usual, nearly everybody is lying (except, possibly, their favorite suspects).

George's writing is at its best when she has a new character to develop. It is what made her first book, A Great Deliverance, so stunning. It is also why the best passages in Playing for the Ashes are to be found in the chapters marked "Olivia." Olivia is a person so vivid in her disability and illness that one feels the author must have a real connection in her own life.

George's characters are always compelling, even when they are not exactly likable. There is Miriam, one of those people who uses kindness as a kind of manipulation. Or Chris, who can't possibly be as good as he seems. There is Gabriella, a woman as sexy and exotic as her name. There is Jean, who is as simple and as honest as Gabriella is not.

The author, thankfully, restrains her impulse to give us the very latest in the personal lives of her main characters. The trials of the St. James's, having taken up two previous books, are ignored. Passages devoted to Havers' life are refreshingly practical (how to get a large refrigerator into a tiny apartment). True, Lynley does finally propose to Lady Helen Clyde (Lord knows why), but even the author doesn't seem too interested in that can of worms.

In fact, Lynley and Havers are so minimally involved they are almost just tools which George uses to tell a tragic story. Lynley does have the annoying habit of finding out whodunnit, but refusing to tell lesser mortals (like his partner or the reader). He excuses himself on the grounds that he lacks proof. But, Elizabeth George understands how little one can rely on "proof" of the material, circumstantial kind. In the end, the solution to the case comes down to somebody's sense of honor and justice.

"Justice" has an ironic ring when it demands the sacrifice of your mother, or your son.

UNCW Alumni Association Awards Scholarships

BY JUNE ORAVITS

Staff Writer

Nine undergraduate students and one graduate student have been awarded scholarships covering in-state tuition and fees for the 1994-95 academic year.

The awards, valued at $1400 each, are presented annually by the University of North Carolina at Wilmington Alumni Association. The scholarships are based on proven academic achievement and demonstrated financial need. The minimum grade point average accepted is 3.0.

This year's recipients include graduate student Frank Tascone and the following undergraduates: Gershon L. Alaluf, Nicholas Allen, Tommie E. Ellis, David C. Heller, Kathy L. Kerns, Steve L. Lee, Becky J. Mussat, Laura Styron, and Jennifer Leah Louise Wasson.

The Alumni Association consists of all graduates of UNCW or students who have attended classes and completed any resident credit. For information on applying for a UNCW Alumni Association Scholarship, contact Pat Corcoran, director of alumni relations at the Wise House, 251-2681.

Icons: Housewives and Other Goddesses

BY JUNE ORAVITS

Staff Writer

Find yourself boxed in? You'll understand why when you get a look at artist Sandra H. Ihly's work on exhibit in the UNCW University Union Living Room through Sept. 23.

Entitled Icons: Housewives and Other Goddesses, Ihly's work is an expression of her interest in women's issues. A display of mixed media construction, Ihly's exhibit illustrates a number of subjects relating to women. Subjects such as the fear of rape, onset of menses, sexuality and motherhood are depicted in this unusual work of art.

In constructing her work, Ihly combined boxes and objects pertaining to homemaking with collages of 1950s women's magazines.

"I chose to use boxes because women are sometimes referred to as 'vessels' and 'boxes' as a euphemism for their sexual organs. Boxes are also symbols of confinement. Housewives of the 1950s were often isolated while performing chores of ironing, cooking, and cleaning."

Ihly has won several awards while participating in one person and group exhibitions throughout North Carolina. She received a BA from the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill and pursued her interests by taking art classes at North Carolina State University.

Graduate School Receives New Dean

BY JUNE ORAVITS

Staff Writer

UNCW's Graduate School received a new interim dean this summer in the person of Dr. Joan D. Willey.

Willey is not a newcomer to UNCW. She began her career here in 1977 as assistant professor of chemistry. Until this summer Willey had been graduate coordinator for the Department of Chemistry, oceanography program coordinator and professor of chemistry.

UNCW's graduate program coordinators and members of the Graduate Council chose Willey from a number of applicants. Willey's name was then given to UNCW Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Dr. Marvin K. Moss.

Willey holds a bachelor of science in chemistry from Duke University (1969) and a doctoral degree in chemical oceanography from Dalhousie University, Nova Scotia (1975).

The glorious red-haired one is back! Carrot Top will entertain, delight, amaze and shock you all in the name of fun Thursday, Aug. 25 at 7:30 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

Students moving into UNCW dorms have been toting trunks all weekend, but not one student has five flower-splashed trunks like that red-haired maniac Carrot Top.

This crazy entertainer pulls the nuttiest things out of his bottomless trunks with the glee and mischievous of an oversized elf. The juxtaposition of common items like ice trays and cups and strings used as a telephone (with an extra cup attached for call waiting) captivate audiences with twists of the absurd.

A native of Coco Beach, FL, Carrot Top began his career as a comic when dared to enter an amateur comedy contest while still a college student. Now he has become one of the top comics in the country.

In addition to inciting bladder accidents while forcing students at UNCW to laugh uncontrollably, Carrot Top's future plans include surprisingly normal goals such as doing a sitcom, a children's show, making a difference concerning the environment, homelessness and animal cruelty, and working with Comic Relief. Finally, he wants a seat in congress. No, he doesn't want to get elected, he just needs one of their seats for a prop.

Tickets are available for $5 at the University Union Info Center and at Kenan Auditorium box office for UNCW students, staff and faculty only. There is a two ticket limit with your UNCW I.D.

What a wacky way to start the first day of the semester.

1994 Male Comic of the Year Carrot Top

The Mask Covers Theatres Everywhere

Ian Spelling
COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE
LOS ANGELES—Smolkin!

It's the catch phrase in Jim Carrey's new movie "The Mask," and it serves double duty as the perfect adjective to describe the current state of the funnyman's career.

After all, the stand-up-turned-TV-star-turned-film-star first found big with the ensemble Fox TV show "In Living Color," during which the rubber-faced Carrey introduced to the world his Verna De Milo and Fire Marshall Bill characters. Then, out of the blue, came the surprise hit film "Ace Ventura: Pet Detective," which had audiences laughing and Hollywood celebrating its latest sensation.

Now there's "The Mask," an outlandish special FX-laden comedy-musical that's far better than "Ace" and expected to be an even bigger hit. More than a month before "The Mask's" unveiling, a calm and friendly Carrey faces the media at a Los Angeles hotel to discuss the film, his sudden success, and the pressure of being a $7 million dollar man, which is what he'll earn for his next film, "Dumb and Dumber."

"When I started 'The Mask,' 'Ace' wasn't even out yet. Even when we'd finished 'The Mask,' it wasn't out," notes Carrey. "I was just hoping 'Ace' would do well enough to introduce me before 'The Mask' came out, because I had big hopes for 'The Mask.' And 'Ace' went nuts. Now, I'm going, 'The Mask' better pull through!"

"The Mask" very much bears the Carrey stamp of outrageousness, which is tempered by his ability to make viewers like his character. In this case, Carrey plays Stanley Ipkiss, a bank employee who's luckless with the ladies. One day, Stanley finds an ancient mask. When he puts it on—Zowie!—he transforms into a lean, green, singing, dancing and joke-telling machine. As the Mask, Carrey, courtesy of mind-boggling special FX, can bounce off walls, turn into a wolf, and so on.

What's more, there are bad guys, a beautiful love interest (Cameron Diaz), musical numbers and the incredibly smart and loyal Milo, Stanley's Jack Russell terrier, who deserves a dog Oscar. "I loved the project," enthuses Carrey, "not so much just for the 'Mask' parts, but it was an opportunity to do, hopefully, a three-dimensional character that doesn't just rely on tricks. The most important part, for me, was to create a character for Stanley that was entertaining on its own, that you'd feel 'I could watch a whole movie with this guy.' I also get to play the thing people will want to see, which is the Mask, the crazy, 'In Living Color' aspect of my personality. So, it was really fun and exciting. It was just a dream part."

Born and raised in Ontario, Canada, Carrey realized early on he could make people laugh. Encouraged by his parents, he moved to L.A. to pursue stand-up. Work, lots of it, followed. Later came some film duds, such as "Once Bitten" and "Earth Girls Are Easy." Then Carrey landed "In Living Color," the often controversial comedy program that was recently canceled after a five-year run. "It's always said to move on," he says, "but I was actually relieved because I have so much stuff going on. When I did 'The Mask,' I was doing 'In Living Color' at the same time, going back and forth. It was hellish, schedule-wise. I believe the show could have started with an entirely new cast, just like 'Saturday Night Live' did. I don't know why they didn't do that. It was great while it lasted."

Next up for Carrey will be "Dumb and Dumber," a comedy co-starring Jeff Daniels. "It's about two guys who are as dumb as hell, get together and go on a pilgrimage to return somebody's luggage," explains Carrey, chuckling. After "Dumb and Dumber" will be "Batman Forever," in which he'll play the Riddler, then an "Ace" sequel.

As Carrey's star rises, so too does his price. But is the price he's paid for his success worth the price he pays? His growing fame and busy schedule played a part in the recent breakup of his marriage. And he knows the more famous he becomes, the more privacy he'll lose. He may not be thrilled about all that, but it's part of the game, he acknowledges. Likewise, Carrey refuses to concern himself about the hoopla surrounding his per-picture fee.

"The money doesn't bother me, because I've been poor. (Being wealthy) is a much better problem to have," he says, a smile crossing his face. "The only thing that concerns me is that people start thinking of me more as money than as a performer. I want to make sure the work is always good. That's all I think about. I don't wake up thinking about money. I wake up thinking about, 'What am I going to do today that's different.'"

It's that attitude, plus having "really good" people supporting him, that has helped keep Carrey grounded. And, he expects, he'll retain that attitude and those good people no matter how big a star he gets to be. "It's not like the Elvis situation. 'Red, get me some blues. Blue, get me some reds,'" he draws in his best impression of the King. "I have good smart people around me. It took me 15 years to put this team together."

Fame. Money. Hit films. It's everything Carrey has worked for, where he wants to be. "It's a great time," he says. "I really can't downplay it. It's like we won the election."

SNL's Adam Sandler Rocks in "Airheads"

The film's plot is simple: Desperate to get a demo tape of their would-be classic song played, the trio inadvertently takes a radio station hostage.

BY IAN SPELLING
Special Correspondent

New York — "Airheads" is a perfectly wonderful, silly-goofy end of summer flick, the kind that keeps you laughing, rocking, and spits you out of the theater with a sore throat and a headache. So what if, the next morning, you may not even remember the film's name?

What movie goers will remember is that the normally serious Brendan Fraser, Steven Buscemi and Joe Mantegna become, respectively, the lead singer and bass player for the band The Lone Rangers and a veteran rock radio station deejay.

Even better, they'll recall that Adam Sandler, one of the few bright spots on "Saturday Night Live" these days, thanks to his Opera Man, Cajun Man and Canteen Boy characters, was given a showcase for this off-beat humor. In "Airheads," Sandler plays Buscemi's brother Pip, The Lone Rangers' slightly daft but lovable drummer.

The film's plot is simple: Desperate to get a demo tape of their would-be classic song played, the trio inadvertently takes a radio station hostage. The more desperate the situation gets, the funnier the film. Somehow — to a cheering audience's delight — Pip manages to get it on with Suzzi (Nina Siemasko), the station's deep dish secretary.

"It was a good time," says Sandler during an interview at a Manhattan hotel. "I didn't know any of the guys when I got there, and all of a sudden it became a family. Mantegna, Brendan, Buscemi and (Michael) McKean (the station's slimy program director), they're all good friends of mine now. It was like being in summer camp. It was also my first part in a movie, so it was exciting."

Shooting "Airheads" brought Sandler back to his high school days, when he was considering a career in music. "I was a guitar player and sang with my (rock) band," says Sandler, who delivers solid Axl Rose and Eddie Vedder imitations on "SNL." "Every time we'd be in a situation (in the film) where the band was set up to play I was very excited. But" — he mock moans — "they wouldn't turn on our amplifiers. So I was kind of frustrated."

Moving on, there's SNL, which took a critical beating this past season. Sandler agrees that "SNL" had "some good shows and some shows that didn't click," and argues that staying on top isn't easy. That much is true: Every few seasons, "SNL" has needed to regroup, be revamped and virtually start fresh.

When "SNL" returns this fall, Sandler will be back, as will Chris Farley (who plays a put-upon cop in "Airheads") and Michael McKean (who joined "SNL" late last season, after filming "Airheads"). Gone are talented Phil Hartman, Rob Schneider and Julia Sweeney and the one-note Melanie Hutsell. Sandler hopes the funny-to-not-funny ratio will lean more toward funny, but knows failure is part of the game. "The best part is that you can have a bad show one week, and you're just dying for the next Saturday to redeem yourself," he says. "If you stumble it haunts you because you know it'll be repeats for the rest of your life. But the next Saturday, you go on and if it goes well, it erases that mistake."

Shortly after "SNL" returns, Sandler's next film, "Lifesavers," will head into theaters. In it Sandler plays a guy with a crush on Rita Wilson, who's involved with Steve Martin. "I keep flirting with her," he reveals. "I'm in the movie just to get Steve a little jealous. It's got a lot of cool people in it, Juliette Lewis, Rob Reiner, Gary Shandling, Madeline Kahn. I'm really getting to meet and work with a lot of good people."

Not bad for a 27-year-old Brooklyn-born kid who was raised in New Hampshire and earned a fine arts degree from New York University. At 17, Sandler began performing stand-up comedy. During the 1990-91 "SNL" season, producer Lorne Michaels hired Sandler as a writer after seeing him at a comedy club. He got his first screen time in a skit with Tom Hanks and Dana Carvey. "I had two lines," recalls Sandler. "I got out there and said to myself, 'This is it.' My head was spinning. I was saying, 'Don't faint.' I didn't think I'd faint, but if I did it would have looked pretty stupid. I would've been a famous guy right away...the fainting guy."

As if things aren't already going just fine for Sandler, he's got a girlfriend he "loves very much," a comedy album selling well and another movie, which he co-wrote and will star in, ready to roll. "Billy Madison" finds him going to school from the first to 12th grade, two weeks in each grade. All in all, Sandler has few complaints about the way his career has evolved. How could he actually? "I guess it's what I expected," he says of success. "It hasn't changed things for me. I'm not Marky Mark, with people screaming and crying when they meet me. It's just on occasion. It's someone saying, 'Hey, "Saturday Night Live!"' and I go, 'What's up!' That's it. That's how it changed. On occasion when I'm in a restaurant someone will watch me chew for too long."

"Now I give my food 23 chews just to make sure I set the right example."

"First Light" Dance Ensemble To Perform During Welcome Week At UNCW

BY MICHAEL ARNOLD

The professional dance ensemble First Light Dance Theatre of Knoxville, TN, will perform at 8 pm, Friday, Aug. 26 at Kenan Auditorium. The dancers are scheduled as part of a series of events sponsored by Campus Activities designed to welcome new and returning students back to school, called '94 Welcome Week.

The First Light Dance Theatre is a non-profit organization supported in part by private donations. Directed and choreographed by Greg and Julia Larson, the company includes Lisa Holden, Mariah Malec, Polly Patton, and Josie Rose. Jeff Reed is stage manager, Adam Dunaway is lighting designer, and costume and set coordinator is Teresa Gregory.

Tickets for the unique dance performance will be $3 for general admission and free admission for students with a UNCW ID.

Among the 10 dance works to be presented Aug. 26 will be one titled "Who's There?," a work inspired by the mystery of the Brown Mountain lights in North Carolina. According to program notes, tiny lights appear in the Brown Mountain area; the phenomenon has been studied extensively and no scientific team has given an explanation of their source. This work of choreography is the hypothesis of Greg and Julia Larson developed from January 1992-March 1993. In the dance, they invite the audience to "meet the woodland spirits of the Brown Mountain lights."

Former UM Football Player Sues Over Broken Promise

By College Press Service

Miami—Former University of Miami football player Bryan Fortray is suing his former coach and college for the one thing he says he was promised and never received—the chance to be top quarterback for the Hurricanes.

Fortray, 22, says he was promised by head coach Dennis Erickson that he'd be the starting quarterback for the 1991 season. But during the fall practice, Erickson named Gino Torretta to the role instead.

Fortray, who is seeking to join the NFL as a free agent, is seeking $10 million from Miami, claiming the school breached an oral contract and damaged his chances for an NFL career. He is suing the university and various individuals on 29 counts.

According to Fortray, 1991 was supposed to be his breakthrough season. But when Torretta was given the starting position, Fortray's future was placed into question. He transferred to Rutgers before the season's opening game and was forced to sit out the season in compliance with NCAA regulations.

Torretta, on the other hand, went on to win the Heisman Trophy and is currently in the NFL as a member of the Minnesota Vikings.

Robert Kickman, Erickson's attorney, says the UM coach never promised Fortray the starting job. The university of Miami has asked Federal District Judge Federico Moreno to dismiss Fortray's lawsuit, saying it is a "morass of claims which defies an intelligible response."

Men's Basketball Team Welcomes Coach Wainwright

BY ERIK TOTTEN
Sports Editor

Jerry Wainwright, considered one of the nations most experienced and colorful coaches, took over the helm of UNCW's men's basketball program following the departure of Kevin Eastman, who resigned to accept the head coaching position at Washington State.

Wainwright, 47, assumes control of the Seahawks after being an assistant coach at Wake Forest for nine years. Wainwright was an aide under Bob Staak and Dave Odom and played a key role in the revitalization of the Demon Deacon program into an upper level team in the Atlantic Coast Conference. While at Wake Forest, Wainwright helped the Demon Deacons attain NCAA Tournament births four straight years and fashion back-to-back 20-win seasons for the first time in 10 years. Besides on the court coaching, he assisted in recruiting NBA draft picks Chris King and Rodney Rogers.

A 1966 graduate of Colorado College, Wainwright earned his graduate degree in exercise physiology from the University of Denver before entering the coaching profession on the prep level. At Montrose High School in Denver, Wainwright was named Colorado Coach-of-the-Year in 1975 and at East Leyden High School in Chicago, he helped to teams compile a 104-4 record in a four-year period. Wainwright's last high school coaching was in 1982-83 at Highland Park High School in Chicago where he coached his teams to back-to-back appearances in the state's "Sweet 16". Wainwright was named Coach-of-the-Year following both seasons.

Wainwright broke into the Collegiate coaching ranks in 1984-85, joining Staak at Xavier. He then came to Wake Forest with Staak after one season in Cincinnati. After four years with Staak (1986 thru 89), he remained at WFU when Odom took over the program in 1989.

In his first head coaching position Wainwright brings a wealth of experience in coaching and recruiting that will help keep the UNCW program, which has won 35 games in the last two seasons, on track.

Everybody has a dream job and this one is mine," said Wainwright. "I could have stayed at Wake Forest for the rest of my life. But since the first time I came here and scouted for Wake Forest, I thought of this as my dream job. The thing that stuck in my mind, after visiting as a coach, was Trask Coliseum. The atmosphere was unbelievable. It's a great atmosphere with great fans."

Wainwright is only the fifth coach in the 43-year history of UNCW's program. Bill Brooks (21 years), Mel Gibon (14 years), Robert McPherson (4 years) and Kevin Eastman (4 years) combined to lead the Seahawks to 566-521 overall record including 265-237 in 18 years of NCAA Division I play.

"We are very excited about getting an individual with Jerry's experience," said UNCW Athletic Director Paul Miller. "Jerry's track record proves he has the knowledge and experience to direct a growing program. He will be a terrific asset to the University and the community."

The men's basketball season kicks off Nov. 5 when the Seahawks take on the Charlotte Royals in an exhibition game.

1994 Seahawk Soccer Outlook

A unique blend of veterans and newcomers, featuring 10 returning lettermen and 15 freshmen, has second-year coach Keith Cammidge excited about the prospects for the 1994 men's soccer season at UNC Wilmington.

The Seahawks took major strides in rebuilding the program one year ago as Cammidge piloted the team to a 9-9-0 overall record and 3-4-0 league mark, the best-ever finish by the team in the Colonial Athletic Association. Now, it's time to move on to the next step.

"We've set a realistic goal of having a winning season," Cammidge said. "That's something the program hasn't accomplished in five years. We came very close last year, but we must stay focused and move toward that goal this year."

"We set down a solid foundation last season and we hope to build on that this year. We obviously don't want to stay where we are...we want to improve. How big an improvement we make remains to be seen."

Cammidge does have some experience to depend on in 1994. The Seahawks return five fullbacks, three midfielders and two forwards, including top scorers Bucky Corban and Joel Myers.

Corban erupted for 12 goals and six assists last season en route to first-team All-CAA honors. Myers, meanwhile, added 12 goals and two assists.

"One of our strengths last year was our attack," said Cammidge, whose team scored 25 more goals in 1994 than the previous season. "We encouraged the players to go forward and make the most of scoring opportunities."

An area of concern for Cammidge is the defense, which returns fullbacks Bryan Oakley, Allan Frazelle, Mike DeMelis, Greg LaMendola and second-team All-CAA Steve Kozovski. The Seahawks will also be looking for a replacement for departed goalkeeper Ken Lentz. "We gave up 39 goals, so we want to be a lot more consistent and organized defensively than we were last year."

The 1994 schedule is arguably the toughest in the school's 29-year soccer history. Cammidge has upgraded the schedule significantly, going up against 1993 NCAA Division I Tournament participants Duke, Boston, UNC Greensboro, James Madison and William and Mary. North Carolina State is also on the slate.

"We will embark on the most competitive and challenging schedule ever played by a UNCW team. Five of our opponents competed in last year's NCAA Division I tournament and five were ranked in the Top 15 nationally at one point or another last year."

Overall, Cammidge sees this season as an important stepping stone for the program, which begins its 19th season of NCAA Division I action this fall. "We're certainly bringing in some new talent, but it's inexperienced talent. Some of the players will have to come in and contribute right away if we are to be successful this year."

"Our biggest challenge will be to bring in these new people and form a cohesive unit as early as possible. We don't have the luxury of developing new players and bring them along slowly. That's the biggest question: how fast can we develop as a team?"

Convocation 1994

BY LAURA A. CORSO

Staff Writer

Celebrating twenty-five years as part of the University of North Carolina system, UNCW held its third annual academic convocation. The convocation is an academic tradition to welcome a new academic year and to commemorate all of the faculty who diligently serve the learning community. Many professors were rewarded for their outstanding work with excellence awards.

Dr. Joan D. Willey was presented with the Award for Faculty Scholarship for her significant contributions in the scientific profession. Dr. Willey, professor of chemistry and interim dean of the graduate school was recognized for what Dr. James P. McNab describes as "serving our community of learning with integrity and intelligence with a clear sense of what is important and what is not."

During her remarks, Dr. Joan D. Willey demonstrated her admired Faculty Scholarship by describing her sincere belief in scholarship as being, "all we do and all we aspire to do."

Also recognized in the ceremony were six instructors who were presented with Distinguished Teaching Medallions. Dr. Marvin K. Moss, who presented the awards, said the recipients were chosen for "their significant contributions through their dedication to the students."

Dr. Michael D. Wentworth, a professor in the English department, was the recipient of the Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award. Dr. Wentworth was recognized for his unique and effective approach to teaching.

Recipients of the Chancellor's Teaching Excellence Awards were, Dr. Hatha A. Hayes, Education; Dr. Luther D. Lawson, Economics and Finance; Dr. Melton A. McLaurin, History; Dr. Patricia A. Turrisi, Philosophy and Religion; and Dr. James D. Johnson, Psychology.

Distinguished Teaching Professors were also presented to those faculty who have made outstanding contributions to the learning program at UNCW. Each recipient was nominated by their department or school and will receive a $5,000 annual stipend for three years and a Distinguished Teaching Medallion. The recipients are Dr. Luther D. Lawson, Economics and Finance; Dr. Carol Ann Pilgrim, Psychology; and Dr. Kenneth W. Spackman, Mathematics.

There was a motivational assembly when Dr. Gerald H. Shinn gave the Convocation Address. Dr. Shinn translated UNCW's motto "Discere Aude" according to Dr. William Randall as meaning, "When learning first hand you must be courageous." "Cherish the freedom of inquiry," Dr. Shinn said and "don't be afraid of anything or anybody." With that he wished all students and faculty a great year and a new frame of mind with "Discere Aude."

Discere Aude

Dr. Gerald Shinn

Fellow students and colleagues! Welcome to the 1994 convocation of The University Of North Carolina At Wilmington. For returning students and faculty: welcome back. For transfer students, new staff, faculty and administrators, welcome to your new heuristic home. To the Freshman class of 1994, we extend a special welcome because you are our silver wedding anniversary class. For, on July 1, 1969, Wilmington college married the consolidated University Of North Carolina. The Freshman class of 1994, henceforth to be known as our sterling class, will be called upon specially to help us celebrate our twenty-five incredible years of wedding bliss. We have come a long, long way. We still have much to do. Like North Carolina's official song, The Old North State: "We were once weak, we are strong and now we are working on becoming great."

For those of you who have joined our university family for the first time, it might be beneficial to you to define exactly what we are and what we do here at The University Of North Carolina At Wilmington. We are, indeed, a university, one of the sixteen campuses of the University Of North Carolina. Consequently, our heritage is the western tradition of universities which began in Europe during the twelfth century renaissance. Our English word "university" comes directly from the twelfth century Latin word "universitas." This word never meant a place where all subjects were taught a sort of intellectual cafeteria where one could graze at will. Originally, "universitas" meant a gathering together, a convocation, of students, faculty, staff and administration from all over the world in order to investigate worthwhile phenomena in the universe. A university, if it is true to its heritage, will teach and be taught by, learn and learn from, individuals native to the east, west, north and south of the planet.

A university then, is, by nature and design, composed of diversity in its student body, faculty, staff and administration. Here at The University Of North Carolina At Wilmington we celebrate our diversity in order to fulfill our underlying unity of purpose. Our unity of purpose is encapsulated in the unique motto of The University of North Carolina At Wilmington: Discere Aude.

In order to translate our Latin motto properly, we need to know its historical background. Without its context, Discere Aude does not convey its full and trenchant meaning. Our motto was created by Dr. William Madison Randall, the next to last president of Wilmington College. Dr. Randall was a linguist and a librarian. For a short time, he was a professional actor. He was awarded both Bachelor's and Master's degrees from the University of Michigan. He graduated Summa Cum Laude from Hartford Theological Seminary with a doctor of Philosophy degree. He was a professor of library science at the University of Chicago, director of libraries and student affairs at the University of Georgia, academic dean of the United States Merchant Marine Academy, member of the Commission to Reorganize The Vatican Library, Dean of Wilmington College 1951-58, and president from 1958-68.

During World War II, Dr. Randall was with the war department intelligence service stationed in Cairo, Egypt and Casablanca, Morocco. Dr. Randall, who was impeccably fluent in Arabic as well as German, disguised himself sometimes as an Arab and sometimes as a German officer and slipped behind the Nazi lines in North Africa to learn critical information first hand. As a result, Dr. Randall helped, in a singular and significant way, to oust the Desert Fox.

The library of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington is named for Dr. William Madison Randall, and his personal things are in the west wall of the circulation desk. (Go by and meet him sometime!) No other university has a tradition like ours. No other university has a motto like ours.

With the historical background in hand, we are ready to translate the meaning of Discere Aude as Dr. Randall understood it. According to him, Discere, an infinitive, comes from a Latin verb meaning to learn by discovering first hand. Aude, an imperative, comes from the verb "audeo"; and means: Be courageous! Consequently, the essential meaning of Discere Aude is: In order to discover truth first hand, be courageous! Don't be afraid of anything or anybody. What a splendid motto for a university which has as its task the discovery of truth wherever the leads, no matter the risks encountered.

There are three corollary concepts that emanate from Discere Aude. The first is: "Know yourself." This Greek aphorism was inscribed on the temple of Apollo At Delphi. The key to success here at the University of North Carolina At Wilmington and in the rest of our lives, is self concept. All wisdom begins with self knowledge. Socrates knew that he did not know, therefore, the Delphic Oracle adjudged him to be the wisest person of all. As a result, an important undertaking at the university is discovering our individual talents and potentials which will not merely prepare us for examinations, but will prepare us for life.

The second corollary to Discere Aude is: "Think for yourself!" Let me share with you an ancient story to illustrate this principle. About the same time Homer was singing the Iliad in Greece, Valmiki penned the Ramayana in India. Both of the wars in these two epics were occasioned by wife stealing. In those days, wife stealing was a most serious offense. Such theft could launch a thousand ships or mobilize an army of elephants. The Ramayana is, however, not just about war and theft. It is a tale about a prince who became King. It is also an educational parable to illustrate the foolishness of naive recapitulation of memorized information. Young Prince Rama was brought up in the royal court and taught by the Brahmins. Now the Brahmins were the government officers in charge of education. They taught and devoutly believed that if you did what the Brahmins said, when they said it, and exactly how they said it, then you would be healthy, wealthy, wise, educated and acquire a terminal degree (which sounds rather deadly). The Brahmins also gave true-false and multiple choice tests. They also did not allow questions in class.

Prince Rama, being an impressionable and naive young 'un, fervently believed everything the Brahmins taught. When his father died, Prince Rama became King and married the most beautiful, and most desirable, Sita. The Brahmins, of course, became the new King's advisors. King Rama remembered the lessons of his undergraduate years well. He did everything the Brahmins told him without question. Doing so, King Rama first lost his wife, then his brother, all his money and finally his kingdom. He was turned out of his palace and sent packing to wander naked in the woods.

There in the midst of the forest, King Rama stumbled upon Valmiki the exiled poet. Valmiki gave Rama clothing, food and shelter. Valmiki listened to Rama's tale of personal ruin. Then, by means of insightful parables about a philosophical grasshopper, a talking cow and four jealous fishermen, Valmiki helped King Rama begin to think for himself. In doing so, the king won back his horse, his brother, his money, his kingdom and, after a bloody battle, his beautiful queen Sita. The moral of the story: Beware of the Brahmins. Instead of blindly following the Brahmins, learn to think for yourselves. That is why you have come to the University of North Carolina At Wilmington. Research the primary sources at hand before you appropriate knowledge. And, in order to do sound research, begin to build personal libraries of primary sources for yourselves. By using such libraries, you will equip yourselves to educate yourselves the rest of your lives. Your libraries will also enable you to read out loud to your young 'uns before they are born and after they arrive. It is very difficult to raise young 'uns to think for themselves if they do not have access to primary source libraries in their homes.

Thomas Jefferson, who had an extensive primary source library, wrote to Francis Hopkinson in 1789: "I am not a Federalist, because I never submitted the whole system of my opinions to the creed of any party of men whatever, in religion, in philosophy, in politics, or in anything else when I was capable of thinking for myself. Such an addition (of submitting to opinions without questions) is the last degradation of a free and moral agent. If I could not go to heaven but with a party, I would not go there at all."

The third corollary: If Discere Aude is to operate at an optimum level on our campus, we must at all cost maintain and cherish freedom of inquiry. The European university arose by establishing their freedom from both monarchies and from the ecclesiastical authorities which surrounded them. Let me cite for you an example of just how jealous the young universities were of their freedom. During Spring Break in 1229, University of Paris students engaged in a drunken brawl inside a local tavern. Later, the students were illegally attacked, some were even killed, by the Queen's bodyguard. The University Of Paris attempted to obtain justice for its students, but was openly rebuffed. Because its freedom was jeopardized, the entire university left Paris and dispersed to Angers and Orleans. On withdrawing from Paris, the students damned the Roman Legate and cursed the arrogance of the queen. It is heartening to note that the spirit of undergraduate has not changed much in seven hundred and sixty-five years.

Being free to learn and teach research, however, bears with it certain responsibilities. Everyone here at the university is free and has rights guaranteed by our nation's constitution and bill of rights. But our rights and freedom must not impinge upon the rights and freedom of any other member of our university society. Otherwise, no one is free. Gandhi said, "Liberty never meant the license to do anything at will."

Let me commend to you an ethical system which underlies all our rules and regulations in the code of the University Of North Carolina At Wilmington Student Handbook And Code Of Student Life. The system proposed to you, if honestly engaged, will help ensure our freedom of inquiry and protect us from chaos on one hand and oppression on the other. It has four unconditional propositions: Two are negative and two are positive.

The negatives first:

- 1) Never, ever, do anything, anywhere, to harm your own human potential.
- 2) Never, ever, do anything, anywhere, to harm any one else's human potential.

In the rest of this century and the next, we are going to need all of the human potential we can possibly muster.

Now the positives: They are more important and much more fun.

- 1) Always, everywhere, do everything in your power to discover, unlock, and realize your own human potential.
- 2) Always, everywhere, do everything in your power to discover, unlock, and realize her or his human potential.

These propositions are operable at the Beach, T.J.'s, the classroom, the Ice House, the basketball court, the residence halls, the Mad Monk, the soccer field, the Hong Kong, and the library. Or, anywhere else in the universe you happen to be.

If you are unable to recall these four propositions in an emergency situation, then hopefully you can remember Mark Twain's advice: "Do what is right. It will gratify some people and astonish the rest."

Welcome to the beginning of an auspicious and exciting university year as we celebrate our silver anniversary. Let us all work together in our community of learning to practice Discere Aude by knowing ourselves and thinking for ourselves through free inquiry. May truth, beauty, and freedom surround you always.

Cars And Cars And Cars, OH MY!

Had enough of the congested traffic which abounds the intersection of Randall drive and Crews drive? Having problems entering and leaving the postoffice parking lot because of someone eagerly waiting to swerve into the next available parking space? Fortunately for all new and returning students, we may not have to experience these frustrations thanks to the UNCW Parking Administration.

Over the summer, changes were made to aid in the traffic problems on campus. Barriers were placed in entrance ways to lots C and G (or Morton Hall lot), in that commuters coming onto the campus by Crews drive who want to park in Morton. However, considering that 15,000 pass through the intersection of Crew and Randall a day, this will cut down on the stretch of vehicles that would normally develop when trying to turn left into Morton's parking lot.

You may have already met the policeman standing in the post office parking lot, directing you to the new location of the 12-minute post office parking lot. It, too, was relocated over the summer. The new location is in lot E, first row on the right facing the University Union building. In its place is an additional handicapped space, two service vehicle spaces (painted teal blue), and staff spaces.

Charles Maimone, Director of Auxiliary Services, said that the reason for moving the 12-minute space would sit and wait in front of the post office causing lines of cars to stretch out onto Riegel Road. Drivers would sometimes get impatient and go around the line of cars unaware pedestrians may be crossing between the stopped cars. Now, instead of having to sit behind someone for minutes drooling for a parking space, Maimone said you can use the time to "do a little exploring and get the parking spaces you need."

A Light At The End Of The Hallway For Students: Room Shortage Should Come To An End Soon

BY AMANDA JESSE

Staff Writer

As a result of overbooking dormitory rooms, the Housing And Residence Life office reported Thursday that approximately 45 students were placed in temporary housing when room check-in began last week.

According to Bill McCartney, Housing and Residence Life Director, overbooking of the dormitory rooms is standard at the university. He said, "Our role at the university is to provide housing and help as many students as possible. We are being fiscally responsible by filling those beds."

McCartney said that due to the fact that 35 to 55 students are "no shows" at check-in, approximately $70,000 housing dollars would be lost if there was not a waiting list for the rooms. The $70,000 lost would be minimize renovations to the dormitories such as adding carpet, computers and appliances.

Most students living in temporary housing are staying in the academic support lounges at Belk, Hewlett, Graham, and Galloway halls. In each study lounge, there are three bunk beds, carpeting, and a private bathroom. The six students in each lounge share a large oak table for studying. According to McCartney, the living situation is both accommodating and comfortable.

In addition to the students staying in study lounges, some are sharing rooms with resident assistants (RAs). Housing and Residence Life is also making an effort to permanently place students in the same residence halls in which they have "temped." McCartney said the reason for this is so that see "Room Shortage" on page 6

New Medical Center to Focus on Women's Needs

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

A new $1.9 million addition and remodeling project to Cape Fear Memorial Hospital is being planned to develop the Center for Women's Health, according to a statement by hospital spokesman Kevin Krisher on Aug. 24.

The 17,500 square foot Center will offer comprehensive resources for the obstetric, diagnostic, surgical, and health education needs of women.

Planning for the Center began four years ago. It is the area's first facility to address virtually the whole spectrum of women's special healthcare concerns, Dr. Linda McClain, obstetrician/gynecologist, said. McClain will be the Center's first Medical Director.

In addition to the recently remodeled obstetric and newborn facilities, the Center will also receive three new birthing suites, a new operating room for Caesarian sections, and two other operating rooms for gynecologic, reconstructive, and cosmetic surgery.

Also new in the Center for Women's Health will be a mammography suite for the diagnosis of breast cancer, a lending library containing books and videotapes concerning women's health, and conference rooms for seminars, workshops, and support groups.

Dr. McClain said, "We're very excited about the Center for Women's Health. It will be a uniquely comfortable and patient-friendly place for medical care. Also, its educational facilities should help the patient to gain better control over her and her family's health."

Construction is slated to begin before the end of 1994. The Center is scheduled to be open by fall of 1995.

UNCW History Professor Is Awarded $63,248 Grant

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Dr. Melton A. McLaurin, UNCW history professor, has been awarded a $63,248 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH).

The grant will allow McLaurin to host a seminar in June, 1995 giving high school teachers and English professors across the nation an opportunity to study The 20th Century Segregated South through Autobiography.

In this study, participants will examine four texts: Lanterns on the Levee, Black Boy, The Making of a Southerner, and I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings.

A similar program in 1993 was also hosted by McLaurin. In that seminar, 15 teachers out of 136 applicants across the United States were chosen to participate. Two foreign teachers were also able to attend. Each teacher received a stipend.

This is only the second time UNCW has ever received an NEH grant. A total of 307 new NEH grants were awarded. The grants total approximately $29.6 million.

"Each of these projects will make an important contribution to the humanities—and to our society," said Sidney Hackney, NEH chairman. "Through these grants researchers, teachers, students and the general public alike will have an opportunity to gain new insights and knowledge. This is of value to our society because, as NEH's founding legislation points out, Democracy demands wisdom and vision in its citizens."

The NEH is an independent federal agency supporting research, education, preservation projects and public programs in the humanities.

Nearly $160 million in grants was awarded in 1993 to museums, libraries, universities and individual humanities scholars and teachers.

"Each of these projects will make an important contribution to the humanities and to our society,"

An Entertainer With Solo Act Nerves Of Steel

BY JUNE ORAVITS

Virginia songstress Vicky Pratt Keating will appear Thursday, Sept. 1, in UNCW Center Stage Cafe at 8:30 p.m. Sponsored by Liquid Sunshine Coffeehouse, Keating will demonstrate her unique style of acoustic/folk combined with her experience in rock-n-roll.

"Music has been the constant in my life. I share my glimpses of reality, dreams, fantasy, experience, emotion, truth, darkness and light through music and words. That is the work and challenge I have chosen for my life," Keating said.

Keating was born and raised in the Washington, D.C. area. She spent summers as a child deep in the Appalachian wilderness at a southwest Virginia camp. No wimpy overnight camp, but a "stay away from your parents for two months camp" full of mystery and adventure, Indian legend and lore, and the wildness Keating says stayed with her...horses, hikes, trail rides 20 miles into Kentucky...and music.

Camp music included the Doors over the loudspeakers. Sing-alongs brought her the music of Eric Anderson, Bob Dylan, Joni Mitchell, and Joan Baez. Later, it was The Beatles who profoundly influenced Keating's whimsical, melodic acoustic/pop sound and style. At 17, as a member of a rock-n-roll band, she played pieces by The Grateful Dead, Rolling Stones, and Jefferson Airplane. This experience, in combination with the old Motown and R&B standards, honed her guitar chops, taught her voice projection and the, sometimes, tedious job of pleasing difficult audiences while simultaneously refraining from killing the soundman.

Free coffee, sodas, cookies, and everything will be available, according to Susan Szews, ACE organizer for Liquid Sunshine Coffeehouse events.

African American Cultural Center at UNCW

BY TREY CHEEK
Staff Writer

UNCW will begin renovations to the University Union this fall to add an African American Cultural Center to the Union's second floor. Construction is expected to begin soon and be completed by mid-fall.

"I think the entire university community will feel very proud of the center once it is in place," said UNCW's Director of Minority Affairs, Ralph Parker.

The blueprints for the center show it will be located at the top of the University Union stairs between the Minority Affairs office and the Dean's office. It will replace the old TV lounge, which will be moved downstairs.

The purpose of the center is to provide all UNCW students and faculty with a setting to learn about the arts, heritage, history, and literature of African-Americans, according to Mr. Parker.

Mr. Parker said he hopes all students will take the opportunity to visit the African-American Cultural Center.

Freshmen Aren't the Only Ones in Orientation

BY DEBBIE BURDICK
Staff Writer

New graduate teaching assistants were treated to breakfast, lunch, and advice at their orientation on Tuesday, August 25.

After opening remarks by Dr. Joan D. Willey, interim Dean of Students, Philip Gerard, Professor of English and recent recipient of a Teaching Excellence Award, shared teaching and learning experiences. To illustrate that ideally, students should be taught how to learn, Gerard related the story of his high school geometry instructor who invited the class to "invent a universe," complete with its own rules for existence.

A panel of former teaching assistants, Trip Dennis, Cindy Heffern, Lee Phillips, Susan Stern, and Meredith Cornell, shared advice as well. All agreed that as teaching assistants they will gain more respect for the field and the work involved in it.

But their individual experiences differed as well. Stern, whose field is history, commented that helping Freshmen make the transition from learning by memorization to conceptual learning was her biggest challenge, while the others remarked primarily on the relationship between student and teaching assistant. Cornell, who taught English, said she was just a little surprised to find that students were so generally respectful of her position.

After their forum, Pat Leonard, dean of students, discussed a number of sensitive issues effectively, yet with a flair for humor. Describing herself as a student advocate, she added "I am the one person on campus who gets to talk about sex, drugs, and rock and roll." Leonard detailed problems common to campuses everywhere, from academic dishonesty to substance abuse, and prescribed methods of dealing with them. Leonard emphasized that while many problems can be solved by means as simple as a chat, UNCW also has a network of supportive services students can be referred to for help.

Dr. Charles R. Ward, assistant vice chancellor for academic affairs for information technology and special academic programs, outlined academic resources teaching assistants should be aware of, including the new Learning Lab.

S. Bartlett Student Soliloquies

Not all feminists have hairy legs and armpits. Some of us do, some don't. We are not all lesbians. Although some of us are. We don't despise men. We don't hate children—except maybe our own occasionally, and that one little heathen with the perpetual runny nose, dirty face and heaving donkey laugh who lives on my street and rips off my sons toys.

Shocking stuff, I know. Well, John Q., its time to face the facts. Whether you can stomach it or not, it's a more pluralistic world than it used to be and the demand for equitable space and recognition is stronger than ever before.

For those of you who think equality has been achieved—get your heads out of the political manure pit, wipe the pludge from your eyes, and take a fresh look around you.

Those of you who believe the feminist movement is dead have put your faith in a bogus prophecy. We can't die. We haven't ruled the world yet.

That is what we truly want, isn't it?

A race of superwomen who will humiliate men, and raise dogs who will humiliate AND bite men. But, please don't take it personally fellas. Besides what is the chance of feminine overprowment ever really happening?

Ben Franklin knew the score. He wrote, "regarding only what is below the Girdle, it is impossible of two Women to know an old from a young one (because) as in the dark all Cats gray." If you can't trust one of our Founding Fathers, who can you trust?

But don't take my word for it. I am an older woman and I will probably get all of this feminist foolishness out of my head as I continue to age. The more desperate I become for male companionship, the sweeter I will be. Ask Ben if you don't believe me.

Ben says, "when Women cease to be handsome, they study to be good." Nice talk, huh? Electricity? Right.

I don't want any letters from you

English people either. I know Ben was using satire when he wrote "Old Mistresses Apologue."

Satire is the one concept I comprehend.

I suppose it's comparable to today's Dumb Blonde jokes. Sexism is acceptable as long as it is funny to someone. Does it really matter if that someone is a narrow-minded, backward Freudian apostle whose apartment is located in the Oedipal Complex off Electra Avenue?

I mean no offense to all you Andrew Dice Clay fans out there. Hey, if you want to continue looking at women as players in a down the O.P.P. game, go for it. Some of us with hairy bodies, female lovers, and rotten kids as neighbors will continue to support the sisterhood as we push our agendas.

We still won't hate men, though. Who would be stupid enough to hate 50 percent of the human race simply on the basis of gender?

Bob Haywood's Still Point Getting There

I had the opportunity this summer to be part of a crew on a really beautiful sailboat on a seven day journey: from Bermuda to Wilmington. Our course was west. Guess what? We couldn't sail on our course because the winds were right on our nose. The imaginary line that marks our course on a chart is called the "lay line." To get to our destination we had to bear off to find favorable winds and change course back and forth over the seven days of our journey in order to find ourselves at the sea buoy off Wrightsville Beach on beautiful Saturday morning that marked the end of our voyage.

This academic year, what is your destination, your goal? It is so easy to let the syllabus of each of your classes become the total focus of your academic life. Homework, chores, meetings, deadlines - all can eat up each day and leave you tired and vaguely restless as you climb into bed at night.

If you set some goals for yourself, then your days take on more focus and energy, the same kind of energy we felt through the constant motion of our sailboat as it moved steadily on to our destination. What kind of goal could you set that would leave you feeling as a good student. What could you accomplish for yourself personally in terms of health and nutrition or involvement in activities or dealing with some issues that get in the way of your living effectively? What has to happen in order for you to stand at the end of exams next May, look back over the year and feel good about what you have done? Before I set sail, I was aware that I wanted to increase my sense of confidence as a sailor, carrying my share of the load as a crew member, enjoying myself, and if possible avoid getting sea sick. All this came to me as I was trying to reach my destination. It was a truly exciting and satisfying moment.

At the same time, our trip was not all smooth nor direct. We had to deal with 10 to 12 foot waves and going against the current of the Gulf stream during a stormy night plus the fact that the wind caused us to tack back and forth in order to reach our destination. Very few of us ever reach our destination by a direct straight line or "lay line". You too will encounter obstacles to whatever goals you set. You may have a class in which you simply cannot do well, no matter how hard you work. You may find yourself feeling personally uncertain at times so you don't get involved like you want to. Something may happen in the life of your family or to your relationship with a significant other which becomes terribly upsetting. Storms and high seas happen in the course of everyone's journey. A framed thought in my office reads "You can't direct the wind, but you can adjust your sails." If you are clear about your goals and your destination, you can deal with whatever obstacles get in your way in order to stay the course towards your destination.

When things get tough, it is also important to have a good crew on board. On a sailboat there is only one person who is captain but each of the crew has their own strengths. When your life gets off course there are all sorts of "crew" here at the university and among your friends to whom you can turn for support and guidance.

Your voyage has begun. I wish you clarity of destination, adaptability of spirit and fair winds to carry you onward.

Here's What I Have To Say About It...

It amazes me that people inside, as well as outside, the academic setting assume that just because I'm a non-traditional student attending UNCW full-time, I have a lot of money to pass out for everything even remotely associated with trying to better the quality of my education.

Money? Are they kidding? I'm no longer sure just what actual money looks like. I had real dollar bills in my hand longer than two seconds, it must have meant I wasn't required to pay for anything else and its most practical use at that point would be for Kleenex.

First on my academic shopping list was trying to pay for tuition. Next came trying to pay for the zillions of textbooks I need. Following that nightmare was digging in my kids' piggy banks to come up with $80 to pay for that ubiquitous dream—an actual place to park.

As Mr. Kurtz cried in Conrad's Heart of Darkness, "The Horror! The Horror!"

My classes are a breeze compared to the problem of traffic and parking on campus. While stuck behind 3,000 cars on Crews carrying only the driver (long way to commute from Campus Walk, Campus Edge, etc.—isn't it?), I desperately wish there really was a Star Trek Scottie to beam these people the hell out of my way.

Along with visions of transporters, I imagine humongous holes opening in the road and all the cars falling in one after the other like the sheep led over the cliff in Far From the Madding Crowd.

The blame, however, cannot be solely attributed to drivers too lazy to walk (I live at a distance from the college—so don't point your finger at me). Some of the responsibility to improve traffic flow lies with the UNCW administration.

I witnessed Dick Mittar, campus parking enforcement officer, installing roadblocks in my normal entrance to Morton and Bear Hall as well as one of the entrances by Kenan Auditorium just before classes began this semester. I pulled my car over to the side of the road and asked him what in the world he thought he was doing? (Gee, can you tell I work for a newspaper?)

"Students go in the out and out the in, so we're blocking these entrances," Milar said.

"Well, I think it's going to cause a big mess at the intersection by the water tower," I said.

Guess what? I was right—on the first day of classes, and frequently since then, traffic has been backed up in all four directions on a regular basis.

Because I'm not content to just complain about a problem, I decided to try and find out just what UNCW plans to do about this automobile nightmare. So, on Monday, I called the Campus Police and then Dick Scott, assistant vice chancellor of business affairs.

"What are you guys going to do about this? I want some answers," I can be quite a pain in the ass when I'm trying to play Super-June to get a problem resolved.

I expected some bureaucratic superpeak about how everything possible is being done to ease our driving stress. At the least, I expected some lecture about it being all the students' faults for driving on campus in the first place.

Surprisingly, genuine concern was expressed about our problems and I discovered the campus gods are actually working on a way to help us lowly godlets. I don't know why I should be so surprised, the administration and all the little administration buddies have to drive on campus as well as students.

I discovered that a study (yeah, I know—another study) was just completed in July and a meeting will be held next week to discuss recommendations made to save us from resorting to lasers to dispose of wayward cars in our way.

Scott also told me this was the second study completed about UNCW's traffic problem. I'm too tired to ask what recommendations were made by the first study—making the whole place?

The study's results will be presented to the Chancellor's Cabinet by Scott and Billy Dossman, UNCW's chief of campus policy. Suggestions made will be considered, choices made, and a time-line will be devised to plan the implementation of whatever decisions are made.

I have asked and received permission to get a copy of the study completed in July. Naturally, I'll be sharing this report with you. Hopefully, the cabinet will have met and made their decisions. That information will also be given to you as soon as possible.

We are all under stress to live as well as possible in our academic community. When there is a problem, we should also give suggestions towards solutions instead of just bitching to each other. There is a Chancellor's Suggestion box available. I'm sure you've probably seen the one in the University Center. Chancellor Leutze also has office hours available to meet with you (see his welcome letter in last week's Seahawk).

We are the "residents" of this academic community. The Chancellor himself said at the Leadership Banquet held at the end of last academic year that he wants to know the bad as well as the good things about UNCW. Okay, I can handle that, and so can you.

I'll make some suggestions right now. Extend Crews (I call it Racine) straight through the campus. I think that will help some of the traffic flow. A stoplight at this intersection (Crews/Randall) would help.

Further, I'd put a big parking deck right smack in the middle of the campus between the S&B building and the library. Your student ID could be used as the computer card, or whatever it may be called, to open the gate to let you in. Or else, let the campus police have only one area where they have to run around and ticket cars without permits. Seems to me that would cut down on their manhours, therefore cutting salary expenses, and the savings could go toward building the parking deck. I'd much rather know they're available if something bad happens to me than worrying about whether they're too busy giving you a ticket for parking in a faculty parking space.

My last suggestion is for the faculty. Special consideration is given in having reserved faculty parking. I do not in any way begrudge you that one small benefit, but I would certainly appreciate it if you would use your own parking spaces and not the few left for students on this campus.

Frank's Place

Frank Tascone

Greetings once again from Frank's Place. We're back out on the balcony enjoying the unseasonably cool weather which will no doubt be gone by the time you read this.

Bob is busy pawing (literally) at his new collar and ID tag. At first it may seem he objects to the constraining properties of the collar, but I believe he feels more constrained by the plainness of the name inscribed on his tag, "Bob." I guess now that he's a minor celebrity he feels he deserves a flashier name, perhaps like his brother up north, "Flash."

Actually, Bob's little dilemma leads us to today's topic. I recently received a call from a friend of mine who lives on the west coast. She's a little down about the going nowhere, the direction she feels her life is headed. Low pay, low prestige, no advancement, life passing by; the basic Generation X sort of stuff. She shares a large apartment house with several other people.

"So what do they do?" I ask. "They're all in bands," she replies. "Everyone on the whole damn west coast is in a band." She speaks as if this statement explains everything. Well, perhaps it does. I mean how nice it must be to reply to the dreaded "what are ya doing with your life" question by saying "dude, I'm in a band." All is accounted for by this short phrase: the group owned van with loose doors and bald tires, the absence of a conventional and consistent upwardly mobile career path, the "I really like you baby, but my music comes first" attitude toward relationships; the ability to acquire tons of sound equipment and beer while struggling to pay rent, the hair whether it be long, butchered, shaved on one side, spiked or colored aqua—all explained by "I'm in a band."

So, what does this have to do with Bob's ID tag? Well it all has to do with labels. We all, like it or not, have at some level a need to be labeled. I'm not talking about the negative stereotypical ones we usually think of. I'm talking about a positive prideful title that accurately portrays our being, our philosophy of life, our direction. Furthermore, it is helpful if our label is concise and easily understood by others. I know this from personal experience.

When I was working in Student Activities my career label was somewhat nebulous and not so easily understood. Oh, the dreaded holiday dimmers at Aunt Elsie's.

"So, Frank, what is it again that you do over at the college?"

"He's a counselor for crisis sakes, Elsie," uncle Jack would chime in. "He told us that before; right, Frank?"

"Well, actually, I work in Student Activities with student organizations and campus events," I explain.

"You don't have to deal with those god awful protests do you? I mean people of the same sex holding hands and parading and chanting gay is the way, I can't imagine."

"No, Aunt Elsie," I reply, "that's not the kind of organizing I was talking about, although if a student group wanted to have such a rally they may ask for my assistance."

"He's the guy who takes away everyone's beer at dances," cousin Billy the high school senior belts out. "Yea, that's what I do," I mumble into my mashed potatoes.

I must admit that since I've returned to school to study creative writing, this aspect of my life has gotten a bit easier. Now, when someone asks what I'm doing with my life, I can say with pride and confidence: "I'm studying to be a writer." For the most part the responses are quite positive. "Oh, how exciting!" "I always wanted to write." "It must be great to have the courage to do that." "You know I've got a story I know would be great..."

Unfortunately, sometimes I run into someone who is not satisfied with the concise expression of my new label. "What are you working on now?" "Have you been published?" "You know everyone thinks they can be a writer." There's not much money or career opportunity in that is there? During these times I can feel the "Beavis and Butt-head" cartoon balloon forming over my head: "Like, uh, why don't you like, uh, go away or suck!"

For most of us this label discovery thing is not easy. In fact, a lot of us just kinda fall into something. We get so sick of people asking us "what's your major?" "What are ya gonna do when you get out?" "Is there a future in pizza eating?" At some point we just give in and say: "I'm a psych major, now leave me alone before I begin publicly revealing all of your neuroses."

For those of you struggling to find your label I have a suggestion. Get yourself a copy of a book called What Color Is Your Parachute? by Richard Nelson Bolles. You can find it in the bookstore—just about any bookstore. The basic philosophy of the book is that if there is not a label (career) out there for you, then invent your own. There are self discovery exercises that lead you to this end. Yes, the exercises take time and some effort, but hey, this is your life we're talking about. A book is not the end-all solution to this quandary—but it is a start. The rest, I suppose, requires diligence, patience, trial and error, and the adoption of the maxim: "there's still time to change the road you're on."

Well, Bob has an appointment at the dumpster and I need to clean up for an evening downtown. Have a good one, and if I see you out and make the unfortunate mistake of asking: "whatcha doin with your life?" Just say, "dude, I'm in a band."

We Need Your Opinion

Please complete and mail to:
UNCW PO Box 24095

Part A:

1. Do you think UNCW needs a child care facility on campus for students, faculty, and staff use?

2. If child care services were available at UNCW would you use them?

Part B:

1. Would you like to have a Women's Resource Center instituted at UNCW to aid students, faculty, and staff to meet a variety of women's needs and issues.

2. If a Women's Resource Center was on UNCW campus, would you use this service?

Thank you for helping us in our endeavors to meet the needs of all UNCW people.

Leadershops

Leadershops are weekly, one-hour leadership development workshops available to all students who wish to increase their leadership abilities or knowledge. You may choose one or more workshops depending on your interests. All students may attend. Ideal for members of student organizations. For more information stop by the Leadership Center, University Union, Room 212 or call 395-3877.

Advice for UNCW's Weary

Well, we're back! We know that you have been holding your breath in anticipation waiting for us to dispense yet another round of our invaluable advice to all of you losers out there who can't seem to think for yourselves. We received so many responses to our last column, it took us most of this week to decide who of you was confused enough to be worthy of our wisdom. You people made choosing who to blow off rather difficult, but after careful consideration we think we have picked only the most misguided of UNCW's weary to enlighten. We just never believed there could be so many of you! We now realize we may be forced to continue writing this column even after we graduate.

Dear Emma and Jane,

I am a sophomore who is returning for my second year at UNCW, after completing my first year with a GPA of 1.25. My parents seem to think that I am spending too much time at the beach and not enough time in class. Can you believe that? I mean, after all I did pass. How can I convince them that it doesn't matter what my GPA is as long as I graduate?

Signed: Fun in the Sun

Dear Fun,

Wake up! Do you know how many college graduates can't find a job these days? Besides, if you think your parents are nagging you now, imagine what it will be like if you are still living at home when you are 35? If going to the beach is your only reason for going to college why are you wasting everybody else's time? Why don't you just be like so many others around town and use your parents Visa card to hit the tanning booths? Read the papers once in a while and you'll discover that microwave tanning is a more efficient way of getting melanoma—without the nuisance of sand. Jane, have you ever met an instructor who gave extra credit for a buff tan? Me either. Big zero on that one. Fun. As for the importance of maintaining a high GPA, read the article printed in this edition about how prospective employers feel about your grades. You may be shocked to learn your GPA will follow you beyond the UNCW gates. If you truly are having difficulties with your courses, check out some of the helpful programs offered on campus, such as The Writing Place. You've got plenty of time to age prematurely so put down the Banana Boat and hit the books.

Dear Emma and Jane,

What's up with all of these body piercings? Every time I turn around I see someone else with an ornament dangling from some strange part of their anatomy. I don't consider myself ultra-conservative, but I find this practice repulsive! It interferes with my concentration during class when I'm sitting next to someone who has an earring in their eyebrow, cheek, nose, or lip. I don't think UNCW needs a whole code, but shouldn't someone explain to these people that when you poke a hole through your flesh it can leave scars? And what about AIDS? Don't these people think about stuff like this? Or am I the one who is out of it?

Signed: Happy to be Hole-less

Dear Happy,

We also have pondered this piercing of body parts. Alas, we have more questions than you and no real answers. Questions like: What happens when a person with a nose-ring has a cold? Can an innocent bystander be killed by a wayward earring traveling over a hundred mph if a nose-pierced person sneezes? Doesn't Kleenex get stuck to the earring? And why is it called an earring if it's in a person's nose, eyebrow, etc.? Moreover, we've read about people who have had more sensitive areas pierced, like nipples, clitorises, and foreskins. Of course, this opens, if you'll excuse the expression, a whole new can of worms. Having your clitoris pierced has got to hurt and how does a woman with an earring there handle normal situations, such as menstruation, childbirth, or, even, sex? Emma, that's gross. Well, Jane, I have to tell you, I'd run from a guy with a gold hoop in his forehead. Anyway, we're interested to know who does these piercing jobs and how much money they make. Also, why would someone want to pay for pain? Enough. Just try to avoid staring—if it bothers you as much as it seems to. In the grand scheme of your life, what does this really matter? Study hard and stay focused on what's important to you as an individual. One of the truly great aspects of college life is the diversity of the people you will find in the academic world. Try to accept and respect these pierced people as you want to be accepted and respected. If you're having trouble with this, burn some incense, light some candles, and listen to some 60's music. We recommend anything by Bob Dylan or Leonard Cohen.

Dear Emma and Jane,

I'm a new student here and I'm angry about the parking situation on campus. Has it always been this bad? The first day of classes, I got here half an hour before my class at 9:00 and still could not park. The second day, I came at 10:00 for an 11:00 class and drove around for forty-five minutes before I could park. I was so happy to find a space, I pulled right in and didn't notice it was a faculty spot. Now I have to pay a $15 ticket. I don't think this is fair. Can you give me any hints on how to park without having to get here over an hour before my classes start?

Signed: Pissed about Parking

Dear Pissed,

You are not alone. We've received numerous complaints about the new traffic pattern and lack of parking here at UNCW. We, too, are confused and irate about these problems. We don't find parking spaces any easier than you do and we're the smartest, most scheming people we know. So get a grip, get here early like the rest of us, and stop bitching. Who knows why the administration does some of the goofy things they do? Point is—just gotta live with it. By the way, if you're circling the lots and see us, you need to back off 'cause we'll snatch your space and scream obscenities at you without blinking an eye. College life is competitive, just like real life, so eat or be eaten, park or walk to class. If you're going to let lack of parking end your college career you probably won't make it through anyway.

Grades Count to Employers, Study Shows

BY ELISSA LEBOWITZ

Washington—The higher your grade point average, the more likely you'll land a high-paying job after college, a recent study suggests.

According to the "The Generation X Recruitment Study," companies hiring recent college grads may care more about potential employees' grades than their leadership experience. The study was conducted by the Hanigan Consulting Group, a New York-based management consulting firm.

"Recruiters tell students to get involved in school government and campus organizations if they want to land the best jobs," company President Mary Hanigan said in statement. "Unfortunately, the hiring data tells students to cram at the library."

Hanigan and her staff interviewed 200 graduating students, 50 student leaders, and managers at 100 large companies, including Citibank, the Marriott Corporation and Coopers and Lybrand.

The study found that students with GPAs of 3.5 and higher on a 4.0 scale receive 15.7 job interviews and 3.1 job offers. Those with GPAs of 3.18—the average GPA of those student leaders interviewed—less get 11.3 interviews and 2.6 job offers.

"Some companies will just look at a GPA as a badge of honor to say they plucked this student from this campus with this GPA," said Thomas Oh, a Hanigan senior research associate. "It's kind of the problem companies today have to face. They want to keep up appearances that they're hiring the best and the brightest."

Chris McLaughlin, student association president of Georgetown University in Washington, said he certainly sacrifices better grades for his leadership position.

"There is a sacrifice when you take on a big leadership role at a university. Then it's obvious you're not going to have a 4.0 unless you're innately brilliant," said McLaughlin. While some people "measure success by the model number on a shirt," others determine it by how much they have made a difference in peoples' lives, he said.

Anne Scammon, employer relations coordinator at the George Washington University in Washington, said jobs today are often with small and medium-sized companies—not large corporations, Scammon said.

Kendra Nelson, a counselor at the Career Center at the University of Texas at Austin, said the results of the study surprised her.

"I certainly don't think employers say they don't care about GPAs," she said. "But the strong message is that experience is the key to get out there."

Most companies want a "more well-rounded experience" in a new hire, Nelson said. Employers will wonder how students without job experience will perform on the job when they have to juggle many roles.

Scammon agreed, saying GPAs matter only for certain technical careers, such as engineering and accounting. "If you're going to build a bridge, you need to know what two and two equals. You need to have gotten through those courses," she said.

Students in more people-oriented jobs, such as journalism and public relations, need "other skills," she said.

Generally, student leaders should not worry about being unemployed after college because they will land almost as many offers as high GPA students, said Oh.

Among the study's other findings:

*Overall, those companies interviewed have increased recruiting by 8.4 percent since 1993.

*More than 69 percent of 120 undergraduates surveyed said they have held an internship or a co-op job during college.

*Almost half of all college students begin their job search during their senior year. Thirty-eight percent start during their junior year.

*One in five recent college graduates rated job content and challenge as their top concerns. Pay ranked third.

Mark Hossfeld

One of the rhetorical jabs made during the endless debates on health reform suggests that the American people should have the same health plan as their representatives in Congress. While I completely agree, I think that the logic of the idea should be extended to the crime bill as well: the American people should be subjected to the same criminal justice system as their representatives in Congress.

Beyond the benefit of general equality (and we all believe in that), I expect that the cost of my kind of crime bill would be considerably lower than any "three strikes your out" legislation. Now granted, the American people would have to receive subsidies to pay for legal defense teams of the caliber of Representative Rostenkowski's—but even this would cost considerably less than incarceration for life—even less than the monthly cable bills.

Of course, I already hear you objection that a bill that would allow the general public to behave like a Congressman functionally a pro-crime bill and, since my dirty little secret is out, let me inform you that I am the founding member of the P.C.P., or the Pro-Crime Party (tip of the hat to Russell Baker).

We are a terribly misunderstood organization. We have been smeared, in a thoroughly bipartisan way, at virtually every election in the history of this republic. And it is only because we espouse openly what the government practices in secret that we face the verbal wrath of the politicians. I say verbal wrath, of course, because they are of our party with out acknowledgment.

We are also a truly conservative organization. The last thing we want is another government bureaucracy. Crime, like everything else, is totally ruined when the government intervenes. Perfectly wonderful criminal enterprises are suddenly and inexplicably renamed "campaign contributions." Conspiracy and collusion become "regulation." Extortion becomes "foreign policy." Fraud becomes "religious expression."

We believe that, as in health care, the problem of crime is a problem of access. Crime, like health care, is only accessible to the very rich or the very poor. We propose to end that sad state of affairs with universal access. Our critics complain that our plan will inevitably involve some sort of rationing. On the contrary. Unlike health care, the amount of crime available, when free from government interference, is as infinite as the human imagination.

Rebuilding the Buddy System:

Drawing Distinct Barriers in Same Sex Relationships

BY S. BARTLETT

Staff Writer

Male-female relationships are not the sole breeding grounds for social ills like sexual harassment and violence.

Many feminists are discovering the need for implicit boundaries in their female to female relationships.

As Mary E. Hunt reports in her article, "Degrees of Separation: Good Boundaries Support Good Relationships," "Creating boundaries and setting limits to relationships are particularly important when there are differences in power and status."

For feminists, drawing definitive lines that separate their professional careers from their political and personal lives can cause extreme tension and guilt.

Patricia M., who teaches history and women's studies at "a university where feminism is still a dirty word," has found turning away her fellow feminist student's offers of support and friendship painful.

Although Patricia M. knows she must maintain distinct barriers between herself and her students to function fairly as an instructor, she is aware "some students feel hurt and wonder about her [dedication to] feminism."

According to Hunt, "most power arrangements in patriarchy are predicated on a male in power and a female beholden to him," but same sex relationships endure more delicate power struggles.

These struggles are especially strenuous in relationships that place one feminist in power over another because the concept of sisterhood is unquestionably strained.

Such problems only heighten, Hunt says, because the feminist in power often feels torn between supporting her sister and performing her professional duties, while the subordinate feminist may be seeking to bond with the other in a mentor-pupil or equal friend manner and become angry or disillusioned when this does not happen.

This can lead to, as Hunt notes, "breaches of safety, frequent occurrences in patriarchy... [which] are a major source of trauma for those who have been betrayed."

One way to avoid inequalities among women and still maintain the necessary professional boundaries is for feminists to adopt a new understanding of mutuality.

Hunt says, "Mutuality means that each person has the right to make choices" and that "mutuality is not necessarily an agreement, but respect for choices, and above all, respect for the choosers."

Another essential aspect of safely drawing boundaries is through role clarity. "Clarifying and keeping reasonable role expectations," says Hunt, "and not investing a professional relationship with expectations appropriate to friendship will help keep everyone safe."

The concept of safety, as it is being used by Hunt, refers to emotional, professional, physical, and political security. Hunt, who is the author of Pleasant Tendencies: A Feminist Theory of Friendship, which won the Crossroads Women's Studies Award in 1991, makes note of texts that address the difficulties feminists face when creating these boundaries and provides further reading about which recommended authors, such as the Reverend Carter Heyward's When Boundaries Betray Us and bell hooks' Sisters of the Yarn: Black Women and Self-Recovery.

Above all else, Hunt declares, "feminist relationships should be characterized by mutual respect and equality."

To battle unethical behavior on any front, according to Hunt, we must address it as bell hooks does in her book: "She names it, claims it, and seeks to get rid of it."

Housing

students do not have to leave the friends they met while in temporary housing. As of this publication, Housing and Residence Life hopes to have most of the students placed in permanent housing. "After we identify the 'no shows' and make a first run of assignments, we will have a few males still in temporary housing," said McCartney. All of females on the waiting list should be placed in permanent housing by the end of this week. Those students who are not placed in permanent housing by fall break will be credited $200.00. However, McCartney estimates that all students should be out of temporary housing in two to three weeks.

WE'RE LOOKING OUT FOR YOU

Professor Profile: Dr. Robert Tindall Brown

This article is being reprinted because of major glitches in last week's article.

BY S. BARTLETT
Staff Writer

Yale Alumni Dr. Robert Brown, who has been at UNCW for twenty years, stays psyched for his courses by believing "the science of knowledge changes" constantly.

Through his years at UNCW, Brown has maintained his enthusiasm for Experimental Psychology by continuing research in diverse areas of interest and sharing his, often, astounding results with his students.

While at Yale, Dr. Brown researched the effects of early experience in the problem-solving ability of animal intelligence and he has, over the years following his dissertation, written a number of significant articles and reports on related topics, such as bias in intelligence fields.

As Co-Editor for Plenum Publishers, along with Cecil R. Reynolds, a UNCW alumnus, Brown's expertise and influence can be noted in a variety of publications dealing with many aspects in the field of psychology. One series of professional texts, Perspectives on Individual Differences, explores areas of individuality that can be vital for success in fields like education.

One of Brown's most controversial projects centered on the study of creativity. He wrote a chapter in the Handbook of Creativity, entitled "The Concept of Creativity", which is the result of years of thorough investigation. In his chapter, Brown asserts that while "creative levels can be measured, in individuals, a model creative product cannot be identified."

Brown further contends that without criteria for accurately identifying creative products, there is no solid basis for the concept of creativity. With a laugh, he notes that this is not a "popular concept" among many academics.

Recently Brown has been researching the "basis of paranormal beliefs and why people believe what they believe." In his Science and Pseudoscience course, Brown guides his students through current information on subjects like U.F.O.s, E.S.P., the Bermuda Triangle, and ghost sightings. He says his aim is to "help students learn to evaluate criteria" and formulate their own theories concerning the above topics.

In addition to the Science and Pseudoscience course, Brown also teaches Experimental Psychology, General Psychology, and the Psychology of Exceptional Children.

He describes his primary methods of instruction as "structured and unstructured discussion and group learning" and feels he is strongest when teaching "concepts and problem solving" skills.

Brown does admit he is likely to "[go] off on tangents" during class discussion, but as he reflects on these sessions with exceptional satisfaction, he claims he is "a pain in the ass" to most students.

Students of Dr. Brown can expect "a lot of terrible jokes" mixed in with volumes of pertinent and interesting information about the diversity of psychology-related subjects. His only expectations of students is that they "learn the information" he presents to them, as best they can, and that they

"laugh at his jokes".

Brown's desire is that students take from his courses "something that is useful to them—carry over skills" in their post-college lives. His ultimate wish is to "teach students to try to learn to tolerate others, "because that is vital for the continued survival of all people."

As Chairperson of the UNCW Academics Standards Committee, Supervisor of the Departmental Honors Program, Co-Editor of the UNCW Center for Teaching Excellence Advisory Board Newsletter, and an active participant in the Graduate Program for psychology students, which begins it's first year this fall, you may assume Brown's hectic academic life leaves little time for the pursuit of any personal interests.

But, while performing on-going research in many areas, such as the effects of Fetal Alcohol Syndrome and Fragile "x," which is the third most common specific, but little known, cause of mental retardation, Brown finds the time to stay physically fit by regularly working out in the campus weight room.

Brown good humoredly said that although he enjoys lifting weights, he is, sometimes, annoyed by "long-winded students" during his workout sessions. Is this his only gripe about teaching?

Looking around his cluttered office, his eyes resting on the unusual "Thank you" he had received from an appreciative past student who came to Brown for assistance, he smiled and said "Yes, it is."

Sexual Harassment:

An American Phenomenon

BY S. BARTLETT
Staff Writer

According to recent studies by the Center for Research on Women and the American Association of University Women Education Foundation, sexual harassment in American educational institutions begins in primary schools and continues, unabated, throughout post-secondary systems.

Suzanne Levine's article, "Challenging What Little Boys Are Made Of," featured in the current magazine, On The Issues, reveals the shocking results of surveys performed in elementary and secondary schools.

Levine contends that "sexual harassment is disturbingly common in elementary and secondary schools" in America and is often considered as harmless "teasing, flirting or initiation rites." Dr. Nana Stein, director of the Sexual Harassment in Schools Project of the Center for Research on Women at Wellesley College, is quoted by Levine as agreeing that "sexual harassment is tolerated as a true-blooded, healthy American phenomenon, a normal stage in adolescent development."

The Center for Research on Women's study found that 89% of the 4,200 teenage girls surveyed "had experienced unwanted sexual comments, gestures, or looks" and 83% "said that had been touched, pinched, or grabbed in a school setting." The same survey revealed that as many as 37% of these same female teens had been "pressured or forced to perform sexual acts."

A similar study, conducted by the American Association of University Women Education Foundation recently "found that 4 out of 5 teens report they have been the target of some form of sexual harassment during their school life." Although Levine does not define the terms of what constitutes sexual harassment in this study, any unwarranted and unwanted behavior, from "pulling bra straps [to] using sexually derogatory language," is considered unacceptable.

On the post-secondary front, the College Press Service, in a report from Ann Arbor, Michigan, provides current information on the harassment of women faculty in American colleges and universities. According to a joint survey conducted by the University of Michigan and the University of California-Los Angeles' researchers, "nearly one out of seven female faculty members at U.S. colleges and universities report that they have been sexually harassed on the job."

The researchers surveyed 30,000

faculty members, both male and female, from 270 public and private colleges and universities. While nearly 7% of those surveyed said they had, at some time in their teaching careers, been sexually harassed, women were, statistically, most often the targets. The report concludes "about 15% of women faculty reported being harassed, compared with about 3% of the men."

Intriguingly, the results of this study also revealed a surprising difference between tenured and non-tenured faculty members who had been harassed. According to the researchers' findings, "full professors were much more likely to report having been harassed than instructors or assistant professors."

UNCW has addressed the issue of sexual harassment in various seminars held on campus. On March 29, 1994, a discussion was held in the Cameron Hall Auditorium called "Gender and Power on Campus." The three female panelists, including Dr. Eleanor McKenna, an UNCW English professor, discussed the effects of sexual harassment in a university setting.

One common conclusion, noted by Levine but shared by the researchers in each of these studies, is "widespread sexual harassment is a significant barrier to the personal and academic achievement of female students."

To rectify the disadvantages female students suffer, as a result of sexual harassment, experts have been heatedly discussing viable solutions that can be incorporated in the policies and procedures of American educational institutions.

Levine reports "a few states have enacted legislation requiring elementary and secondary schools to develop sexual harassment policies."

Most post-secondary campuses, such as UNCW, provide carefully detailed sexual harassment policies in their student handbooks to inform students and faculty of the administration's procedures intended to ensure a safe and equal working environment.

Unfortunately, federal and state laws and formal, administrative policies are not enough to prevent the occurrence of sexual harassment. Many researchers believe "that the causes of sexual harassment must be addressed and uprooted long before men and women enter the work force." Parents and educators are needed to work together to instill in children the importance of, what Levine describes as, "gender respect."

Leadership Workshops

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Think you're a leader? Not sure you have the skills to be a leader?

Many opportunities to improve or enhance your leadership skills are available at UNCW through their special programs. All are available at no cost to you.

The first, EMERGE, is an emerging leader program designed for freshmen interested in leadership, regardless of their prior leadership experience. Freshmen can register by contacting the Leadership Center at 395-3877.

The Council of Organizational Leaders (COOL) is a program composed of the executive officers of student organizations. COOL provides opportunities for its members to network with other student leaders. Held monthly, members are presented with topics relevant to student organizations.

The first meeting for COOL is Wednesday, Sept. 7 at 7:00 p.m. in University Union room 103. Call the Leadership Center at 395-3877 if your organization is interested in participating.

A third leadership program offered is the UNCW Volunteers! This program recruits volunteers for area community service agencies on an on-going basis.

Service agencies offering volunteer opportunities include the Brigade Boys Club, Good Shepherd House, Family Services After-school tutoring, Williston Middle School, and College Park Elementary. The Leadership Center has a directory listing other agencies that need volunteers.

If your student organization performs community service activities, your organization should be registered with the UNCW Volunteers! office in order to receive recognition.

The UNCW Volunteers! program also provides student organizations with placement opportunities.

The fourth leadership program offered is a series of ten weekly workshops at UNCW sponsored by the Leadership Center to help you become an effective and productive leader.

Dr. Stephen Harper, professor of management, kicks off the new weekly leadership workshop series Wednesday, Sept. 7 from 4:00 to 5:00 p.m. in the UNCW Leadership Center in the University Union.

Harper's workshop topic will be "The Impact of Leadership Style on the Character of an Organization." This workshop will explore how the role of a leader's vision, values, and example impacts in the development of an organization's character.

Other opportunities available to develop your leadership skills include a Personal Assessment such as the Leadership Practices Inventory and the Leadership Effectiveness and Adaptability Description. These are available for all students.

There's no excuse to complain of boredom at UNCW. From Domino's pizza to finding a few surfing buddies, the Campus Activity Involvement Carnival had a little something to offer everyone.

Along with the requisite syllabi on the first day of classes, new and returning students were treated by music with WLOZ, Christian fellowship, games, food supplied by Domino's, and opportunities to inquire or join any number of student organizations.

Women's Soccer

The UNC Wilmington women's soccer kicks off its first season of varsity competition at Towson State this Saturday (Sept. 3) at 3 p.m..

A trio of rookies - Maria Sabella, Jaime Betts and Isabel Bordo - anchor Coach Keith Cammidge's young Lady Seahawk team this year. Cammidge will be assisted by Maggie St. Ledger and graduate assistant David Allen this fall.

A local product from New Hanover High School, Sabella, a mid-fielder, was a two-time team MVP and earned All-Region honors. A defender, Betts earned first team All-Conference and academic All-Conference laurels at Millbrook High School in Raleigh, NC. Both Sabella and Betts were selections for the 1994 East-West All-Star Game.

The lone goalkeeper for the Lady Seahawks this year, Bordo is another local graduate who garnered All-Conference laurels at New Hanover.

Junior forward Joanna Walker, an All-North Carolina choice at Millbrook, heads up the attack, and fellow junior Meredith Lindsey bolsters the mid-field. Lindsey was named team captain and second team All-District at South Lakes High School in Reston, Va.

After opening the season on the road at Towson State and Chowan (Sept. 6), the women's soccer team makes its home debut on Friday, Sept. 9, with a test against visiting Radford.

Volleyball

The Lady Seahawks kick off the 1994 season this weekend with five starters returning off last season's 20-16 squad which logged a fourth-place finish in the Colonial. Despite the loss of first-team All-Conference selection Amy Chilausky, UNCW has a solid core of returnees with some talented newcomers.

Middle hitter Debby Taydus (Northwood H.S./Pittsboro, NC), a starter in every game in 21993, is the lone senior on the roster this year. Sophomore setter Ginger Moon (Quince Orchard H.S./Gaithersburg, Md.) looks to follow-up a strong rookie season in which she led the Lady Seahawks with 1,290 assists.

UNCW open the campaign with three matches this weekend in the UNC Asheville Invitational. The Lady Seahawks face the host Bulldogs this Saturday at 7 p.m.. On Sunday, UNCW plays UNC Charlotte a 11 a.m. and Appalachian State at 1 p.m.

Cross Country

Coach Jim Sprecher carries his men's and women's cross country teams to Greenville, NC this weekend to compete in East Carolina University's Hokum Karum race.

The Hokum Karum, slated to start at noon, features two-person teams splitting a total of six miles for the women and eight miles for the men. Besides the host Pirates and the Seahawks, other teams involved include Coastal Carolina and Campbell.

Sprecher, who begins his third year with the Seahawks, plans to take 12 women and 20 men to the season-opening race.

The Seahawks, keyed by the return of several veterans and some outstanding newcomers, open their second season under Coach Keith Cammidge this weekend with a first-ever appearance in the University of Central Florida's Invitational in Orlando, FL.

UNCW meets Stetson on Saturday at 3 p.m. and faces the host Knights Sunday at 3 p.m.

Cammidge has 10 lettermen and eight starters back from last year's team that finished 9-9-0 overall and 3-4-0 in the Colonial Athletic Association. UNCW's fourth place finish in the CAA marked the best in the school's history.

First-team All-CAA performer Bucky Corban (Walton H.S./Marietta, Ga) and Joel Myers (E. A. Laney H.S./Wilmington, NC) look to provide the offensive firepower. Each player scored 12 goals apiece one year ago for the Seahawks, who outshot opponents, 273-238.

Defensively, second-team All-CAA defender Steve Kozovski heads a young group. The sophomore from Scarborough, Canada, will be joined by sophomore Matt Cumiff (Christleton H.S./Farndon, England), sophomore Nikko Schubert (Permambuco H.S./Recife, Brazil) and freshman Paul Forster (Monkseaton H.S./Tyne & Wear, England) on the defensive side.

A question mark for Cammidge's club is the goalkeeper position, where senior Josh Hopfer begins his first season as the full-time keeper. Hopfer has played three years for the Seahawks, but has only seen action in five games and made his only start of the season last year in a 5-1 victory over Chowan.

After making a trip to Florida, the Seahawks return home for six of their next eight games at Brooks Field, beginning with a matchup next Thursday, Sept. 8, vs. Chowan.

SWIMMERS HONORED

The women's swimming and diving team at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has been honored once again by the College Swimming Coaches Association of America (CSCAA) for its work in the classroom.

The Lady Seahawks, with a cumulative team grade point average of 2.943, compiled the 56th best GPA in the country for the Spring 1994 semester, according to the recently released report. It marked the fourth time in the last four years that Coach Dave Allen's team has been singled out by the national organization for academic achievement.

"We're certainly very pleased with this report," said Allen, who enters his 19th season with the Seahawks in 1994-95. "Doing well academically was on of our team goals at the beginning of last year and we achieved it. We'd like to improve our overall standing this year, and continue to do well in the classroom."

UNCW was one of three North Carolina schools mentioned in the rankings. N.C. State's women finished 45th with a GPA of 3.032 and UNC Chapel Hill came in just ahead of the Seahawks at 55th with a GPA of 2.950. Richmond, ranked 35th with a GPA of 3.090, was the only other Colonial Athletic Association school in the women's listing.

Maryland led all NCAA Division I schools with a GPA of 3.424. St. Louis (3.420), Toledo (3.390), South Carolina (3.367) and UC Santa Barbara (3.347) rounded out the top five.

Late Night at the Gazebo

The Office of Campus Recreation will be holding its first Late Night at the Gazebo on Friday, Sept. 9 from 9:00 p.m.-1:00 a.m.

This alcohol alternative program will feature a live band, food, doubles sand volleyball tournament, 3 on 3 basketball tournament, club sport demonstrations, 4 on 4 razzle-dazzle flag football tournament, "Games, Games, and more Games," and a home run derby.

There will be plenty to eat and drink, so come early and stay late. The first 150 students to arrive will receive a Late Night '94 t-shirt.

Campus Recreation will be having a sand volleyball tournament on Friday, September 9, from 9:00 pm to 1:00 am. Go out and join the fun!!

USAir Tournament Set To Fly

Two-time champion UNC Wilmington will defend its title against in-state rival UNC Asheville and high-powered Troy State faces Murray State in first-round matchups of the USAir East Coast Basketball Classic this December at Trask Coliseum.

Troy State and Murray State go head-to-head at 6 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 2, while UNCW and UNCA square off at 8 p.m. The consolation and championship games are scheduled for Saturday, Dec. 3, at Trask Coliseum.

The Seahawks are playing their first season for new skipper Jerry Wainwright after winning the first two tournaments under former coach Kevin Eastman. UNCW defeated Auburn, 91-80, in the 1992 championship and tripped up South Florida, 70-62, in last year's title clash.

UNCW returns three starters and nine lettermen off last year's 18-10 club that finished third in the Colonial Athletic Association. The team's top three scorers, guard Chris Meighen (14.5 ppg) forward Corey Stewart (13.9 ppg) and center Darren Moore (11.9 ppg), are back for the 1994-95 campaign.

UNC Asheville, meanwhile, begins its second season under former UNC Chapel Hill assistant Randy Wiel. The Bulldogs faced the fourth toughest schedule in the country and went 3-24 last season, but welcome back five lettermen, three transfers and four solid recruits to this year's club.

UNCA returns starting guard Josh Kohn (16.1 ppg, 4.3 apg) and starting forward Mario Joyner (5.8 ppg, 5.3 rpg). Willie Black, a red-shirt senior, returns after averaging 12.0 ppg and 3.4 rpg two years ago for the Bulldogs.

Troy State features one of the country's most explosive attacks, ranking second among 119 teams in scoring last season with 97.0 points per game. The Trojans and 13-year coach Dan Maestri also led the country in three-pointers in 1993-94.

The Trojans, new members of the Mid-Continent Conference, are well-known for their potent offensive attack. As a Division II power, Troy State led the nation in scoring three straight years and set a national record in 1992 with a 258-141 victory over DeVry Institute of Atlanta, Ga.

Murray State makes its first appearance in Trask Coliseum after an outstanding 1993-94 campaign. The Racers and fourth-year head coach Scott Edgar carved out a 23-6 record last season, including a 15-1 mark in the Ohio Valley Conference.

Murray State, which lost to Bradley in the first round of the National Invitation Tournament (NIT) last year, returns just one starter—junior guard Marcus Brown—and four lettermen this year. Brown is a good one, though, having averaged 18.0 ppg and 3.8 rpg en route to first-team All-OVC and Honorable Mention All-American honors one year ago.

Edgar's recruiting year did receive a boost with the signing of Larry Johnson, a 6-2 guard from Odessa (TX) Community College, who collected 18.0 ppg, 5.0 rpg and 4.0 apg last season.

Traffic Bombards UNCW

UNCW Traffic Study Makes Recommendations

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS
Staff Writer

UNCW has over 650 acres of campus and many times that in terms of the numbers of vehicles, pedestrians, and bicyclists traversing that acreage. As UNCW grows, so grows the number of complaints and concerns repeatedly voiced day after day, semester after semester, about traffic on campus. So, what is being done about it?

The university hired Leftwich Consulting Engineers, Inc. of Winter Park, FL, to conduct a campus traffic study to assess UNCW's growth and future transportation needs. The study, released August, 1994, updates a previous study by the same consulting firm undertaken in 1988.

According to the report issued by Leftwich, the goal of the study is "minimizing vehicular traffic within the University Campus while maximizing the internal movement of people."

Specific objectives outlined were:
"Updating the University's current transportation conditions and comparing these conditions to those which existed five years ago."

Updating and presenting data and information on the various factors that influence campus internal circulation. Indicating general recommendations to meet the current and future transportation needs of the campus."

Traffic counts were taken by Leftwich to determine the volume of road use accessing and exiting the campus and internal traffic patterns within the UNCW campus. Four key intersections were identified, Randall Drive and Wagoner Drive, Crews Drive and Randall Drive, Riegel Road and Hamilton Drive, and that intersection comprising Hamilton Drive and Hurst Drive.

The most heavily congested intersections on campus were the first three of the list above, requiring campus police directing traffic "during the time periods from fifteen minutes before each hour to approximately five minutes after each hour between 7:45 a.m. and 5:00 p.m."

According to the report, a traffic count at Riegel Road and Hamilton Drive was performed in order to consider how this intersection would be affected by closing Street C to through traffic, an option under consideration by UNCW.

In comparing the 1994 study to that performed in 1988, Leftwich finds that the average daily vehicle trip per person has remained the same at five trips per person per day. The Leftwich report points out this indicates efforts by UNCW to minimize per person vehicle traffic has not been effective.

As such, the consulting firm suggests "stronger efforts to encourage alternative modes are necessary in order to avoid continually decreasing levels of service or else wider roadways will be necessary to meet the demand."

At the same time, Leftwich admits that "it would be almost impossible to control the high number of trips coming to and leaving the campus because of the nature and location of the campus, and the fact that today's students are almost obligated to obtain a job to support themselves through their campus years."

Parking space use for various college factions is designated by use of colored striping in the parking lots: blue for service vehicles, white for students, and yellow for staff, faculty, handicapped, visitors, Deans of Colleges, and the Chancellor. When employee parking is unavailable, staff and faculty have the option of parking in student designated parking spaces. Permission to park in specified parking lots and/or spaces are indicated by the type of decal purchased.

In opposition to the common belief held by most students at UNCW that parking is hard to find or nonexistent, Leftwich states "the total number of parking spaces are sufficient to provide the total needed spaces as indicated by an overall observed occupancy of 70 percent."

According to the report, 77.9 percent of parking spaces are designated for student use, 17.6 percent for faculty and staff, 2.4 percent for handicapped spaces, and 21 percent for campus visitors. Since 1988, parking space allotment has increased 26.8 percent.

Because of UNCW's commitment to being a "pedestrian-oriented campus," sidewalks have become an integral part of the traffic study and ensuing plans. Not just for those on foot, the sidewalks are also utilized for bicycle traffic because of a lack of paths specifically for bicycles. That area with the heaviest concentration appears to be Randall Drive west of the entrance to Lot G.

The study states that "sidewalks should be added to both sides of Wagoner Drive and Randall Drive, extend the sidewalk north of Riegel Road from the University Center past Belk Hall to Hewlett Hall, and extend the sidewalk presently leading from Schwartz Hall to the S&B building to that of the sidewalk on Riegel Road at the Burney Center."

Leftwich determined that pedestrians and bicyclists can learn to share the sidewalks and suggests this may best be done by "the implementation of rules and regulations that can be applied and carried out by the Campus Police." In order to accommodate the increase in bicyclists on campus, UNCW has established some bicycle paths, but as Leftwich points out, "the discontinuity of this system of bikeways can present operational and safety problems for bicyclists."

The study recommends that UNCW complete a bicycle path system through the campus and include "both directions for roadways connecting all parking, housing and academic areas on the campus." The study indicates that four-foot bicycle lanes should be provided on any new roads built. The establishment of bicycle paths should also include meeting the needs of those students living in apartment complexes adjacent to the university, such as Campus Walk and Campus Edge.

In addition to strictures involving new roads on campus, the study suggests that existing roadways also have four-foot bicycle lanes built and allow for pedestrian use as well.

In addition to bike lanes, bicycle racks have been provided for all building locations on campus. However, Leftwich finds that a number of these locations are not truly convenient for bicyclists and that some buildings have too many racks and others not enough. It is also recommended that covers be built over bike racks to help protect bicycles from the weather and that all new bike racks utilize the Wave design presently in use at UNC-Chapel Hill.

In examining the transit system available at UNCW, Leftwich finds that an on-campus shuttle system can help coordinate movement of riders using the Wilmington Transit Authority system. The shuttle system on campus should be coordinated so that riders will arrive at the WTA bus stop prior to, and within five minutes of, the arrival of each WTA bus, the study reports.

Hampering this transit movement is the WTA schedule of only two routes which operates on an hourly schedule with half-hour intervals with UNCW having a one-hour headway for each of the routes serving the university.

In order for UNCW to meet future needs as enrollment numbers grow, Leftwich says that "the need for a transit system within the UNCW campus will become a necessity." This would offer alternatives to the high use of automobiles and would reduce the expenses involved in building and maintaining parking areas. Although the expense of implementing a transit system would be large at first, the study maintains that this expense will be recovered as the "need for new parking lots is reduced."

An interesting aspect of this suggested new transit system is the consulting firm's belief that "students should be able to park once and access all buildings from either the Pedestrian Mall or the Seahawk II Express without having to 'drive around campus'."

In order to meet that single trip to campus effort, Leftwich offers the idea of the Public Safety Department considering designating parking lots S, T, U and V as parking for commuter students. They would park once and then access the transit system or Pedestrian Mall for inter-campus travel.

This internal loop system could be operated by students, the study states. Further, it could be maintained by UNCW's Physical Plant. To fund this project, Leftwich suggests a transportation fee be added each semester. Another source of funding could also come from selling advertising space on vehicles. Although not specifically stating so, the Leftwich report seems to indicate vans used as the Seahawk II Express be the vehicles used for advertising.

Shorter headways and a route that is more flexible are two areas in which the present Seahawk Express can improve and encourage rider use. At present, there is only one Seahawk Express vehicle which takes 30 minutes to circle the campus. According to Leftwich, random students being interviewed for the study report that "the established schedule is not being met." The Seahawk Express schedule presently in force is only for those hours between 6:00 p.m. and 12:00 a.m., Sunday through Thursday. On Friday, the schedule is 6:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. A more flexible schedule with expanded hours meeting student needs was urged by students completing the traffic study survey.

Extending the hours of operation would require adding two vans. In addition to the vans circling the campus at night, a service for "call-ins" (similar to airport limousine service) could be offered. This would mean installing cellular phones in the vans and service would be on a "first come, first served" basis.

The use of vans can be extended to that of a tram system. According to Leftwich, "a typical tram can carry 30 passengers per car and can have up to three cars attached to the main unit. This provides enough capacity for 120 people per tram." The consulting firm likens this tram system to those systems being used in theme parks around the United States.

Completing the Hooker Road Extension and parking lots S, T, U and V could supply the tram with access between the lots and academic areas. One route suggested is that around the campus perimeter and another following the Pedestrian Mall between commuter parking lots and Randall Library. The study already suggests that these two routes may need to be expanded so that riders only need to wait two minutes or less during peak periods.

The 1994 traffic study conducted by Leftwich with its findings and suggestions for improvement will be presented to the upcoming Chancellor's Cabinet meeting on Thursday, Sept. 15. At that time, suggestions for adoption of any of the recommendations will be planned and a time-line executed for meeting those actions to be undertaken.

Finally, proposed recommendations will be presented to the Board of Trustees during its Nov. 1 and 2 meetings.

UNCW Traffic Study Recommendations

ROADWAYS

Inclusion of bicycle lanes on future roadway construction
Improvement in the signing of all University streets by forming a Signing Committee
Deletion of through traffic on Street C at the east side of Lot A by construction of a landscaped separator with mountable curbs to allow access for emergency vehicles.
Construct a narrow driveway between Lot A and Lot E for service vehicle access.
Evaluate the financial feasibility for installing traffic signals at selected intersections
Expand the internal roadway system as contained in the UNCW 2013 Masterplan

SIDEWALKS

Institute bicycle/skateboard guidelines for sidewalk usage.
Extension of Riegel Road sidewalk to Hewlett Hall.
Extension of Price Drive sidewalk to Riegel Road at Burney Center.
Addition of sidewalks to Randall Drive and Wagoner Drive.
Move pedestrian crossing on Randall Drive near Lot G to the west in front of Bear Hall.

BICYCLE PATHS AND RACKS

Bicycle rack usage monitoring on a semester basis.
Continue free mandatory registration of bicycles yearly.
Hire students to ticket bicycles attached to hand-capped rails, trees and other in appropriate locations.
Install covered bicycle corrals at the housing areas to encourage use and reduce the number of bikes parked in the stairwells and under balconies.
Increase present capacity at the housing areas.
Use new Wave rack design for all new bike rack installations.
Require students to sign statement acknowledging vehicle regulations.

PARKING LOTS

Construct new parking lots U and V as scheduled.
Establish remote parking lots as commuter lots with reduced parking fees.
Close access to Lot G from Randall Drive.
Close west access to Lot C from Randall Drive.

Change entrance/exit to Lot E to a one-way pair. Enter Lot E on the west side and exit on the east side (clockwise circulation).
Close access to Lot A on the east side.
Combine Lots G and M when Lot M is moved as in Masterplan.
Close Lots E as scheduled in Masterplan.
Add lighted walkways from Lots A and F to front of University Center. These lots should be established as parking for University Center events.
Remove parking spaces along Riegel Road.

TRANSIT

Encourage Wilmington Transit Authority to increase headways of bus service to UNCW.
Expand the Seahawk Express service to daytime hours. Revise evening service to allow call in by students.
Add two vans to the Seahawk Express.
Add cellular phones to the vans for student call-in during evening hours.
Pilot Study of a van service to be upgraded to a tram service in the future.

Newly installed barricade to the parking lot at Morton and Bear Hall to prevent "students going in the out and out the in."

Thinking of Sleeping With Your Professor?

BY JUNE RAFF ORAVITS

Staff Writer

She's in her professor's office to ask about an assignment when the eyes lock. For a split second, she swears he's going to ask her about the Locke essay that he'd assigned and she never read. Instead, he asks her out for coffee, maybe dinner, her choice.

Sure, the student replies.

What's wrong with this scene?

In a report released by Marco Buscaglia of the College Press Service, the answer provided by Professor Barry Dank is absolutely nothing. Dank, a sociology professor at California State University-Los Angeles, has organized a nationwide group of professors and students speaking out against universities that try to prohibit relationships between students and academics.

"If a student is dating an instructor, there is still this image of the lecherous college professor coercing a female student into sex in exchange for higher grade," says Dank. "There are universities that are either forbidding sex between students and professors or forcing those in relationships to come forward and register that information with the school."

"This is not only unacceptable, but it's unconstitutional. These administrations are abusing the rights of individuals."

Few universities nationwide actually prohibit consensual sexual relationships between students and professors. However, increasing concern over sexual harassment has caused some campuses to re-examine their policies on faculty-student relationships and institute stricter guidelines for faculty members.

Some universities have questioned whether relationships between professors and students should be allowed at all, given the potential for exploitation and conflicts of interest.

"A lot of times, relationships that start out consensual turn sour, and people end up feeling exploited, particularly when it's an older male professor and a younger female student," says Linda Fisher, a professor at the Dickinson School of Law and a member of the American Association of University Professors' Committee on the Status of Women in the Academic Profession. "There is this whole stigma of charisma that goes along with being a professor. It's easy for that sense of hero worship to get exploited in a relationship."

Last year, the University of Virginia decided to ban sexual relations between professors and students under their supervision, after rejecting a blanket proposal to ban sexual relationships between any faculty member and any student.

"After a lot of discussion, the University settled on a ban on relationships between professors and students in their classes under the university's conflict of interest policy," says Louise Duffy, spokesperson for the University of Virginia. "Most people thought that was reasonable solution."

The University of Virginia is not the only college to place restrictions upon student-professor relationships.

The University of Iowa has a policy banning "amorous relationships" between faculty members and students when the faculty member has any kind of professional responsibility to the student. According to UI officials, such a relationship is unacceptable, even if the student consents, because of "the fundamentally asymmetrical nature of the relationship."

Professional guidelines at Vermont State College spell out that relationships between students and professors are entirely inappropriate. Even those relationships that students enter willingly may later result in sexual harassment charges if the relationship ends, say Vermont State administrators.

Policies at Antioch College in Yellow Springs, Ohio, state that sexual relationships between students and professors are unacceptable and constitute professional misconduct.

After reading and doing research on the campus movement to ban student-professor relationships, Dank began to make presentations to professional meetings and found that "there were a lot of people who saw the situation as I did," he says, "but they were invisible."

As a result of his presentation to the National Conference for Ethics in America in March, 1994, Dank and a number of others in attendance at the meeting decided to form Consenting Academics for Sexual Equity, or CASE, an organization that rejects any limits on sexual relations as long as both parties agree.

CASE is currently composed of about 100 former and current professors and students who communicate mostly by e-mail on the Internet at Case@Beach1.CSULB.EDU.

Dank insists the organization is not made up entirely of men looking after their own interests. "We're a very diverse group," he says. "There are an equal number of students and professors, men and women."

Ann, a student from the University of Kansas and a member of CASE, is currently involved with her professor. She says organizations such as CASE are necessary because of the negative connotations that professor-student relationships have.

"It's important to differentiate between consenting relationships and unwanted advances," Ann says. "The University of Virginia's ban on relationships assumes that families aren't capable of standing up for themselves. I resent that. It makes all the effort of the women's movement, an empowerment movement, seem worthless."

Nicole, a student from California who is a member of CASE, says she supports Dank's approach. "When people say women can't date professors, even if they're not teaching their class, they're taking away our right to choose," she says. "It's not someone else's right to make those decisions for us. Even if we make a mistake, it's still our mistake to make. This talk about power relationships is unfair. I don't believe that someone has power over you unless you give them that power."

While the increased awareness about sexual harassment on campus overall has been a positive movement, it has led to misunderstandings as to what constitutes harassment, says Daphne Patel, a professor of women's studies at the University of Massachusetts.

"We have people who are very happy to get on the backs of other people all in the name of defending the rights of others," says Patel, who is not a member of CASE but supports its actions. "Sexual harassment is a real problem, but it is being undermined by the tendency to overextend its definition. Consenting relationships between students and professors is not a matter of sexual harassment."

However, critics say student-professor relationships, specifically those in the same classroom, are inherently unequal, simply because of the academic power a professor holds over a student, and that universities must establish policies to protect the student.

"Like it or not, the professor-student relationship is a 'power' relationship because the professor has academic power over the students," says Bernice Sandler of the Center for Women's Policy Studies in Washington. "None of the policies stop students from sleeping with professors, they stop professors from sleeping with students. The responsibility lies with the person who has the power."

Sandler is an advocate of the University of Michigan's policy on professor-student relationships, which requires that professors involved with students in their classes remove themselves from grading responsibilities. The policy states that professors in that situation disclose their relationship "to the appropriate administrative supervisor so that arrangements can be made for objective evaluation and decision-making with regards to the student."

Dan Sharpborn, the university's assistant general counsel, says the reasons for the policy are obvious. "It's really just a logical extension of our policies on nepotism," says Sharpborn. "If I taught my kids, I shouldn't and wouldn't be allowed to grade them."

Dank says he has ethical reservations about professors who have relationships with students they have in class but adds that policies banning or registering such relationships are wrong.

"Student-professor relationships occurring while a class is ongoing are often fraught with potential difficulties," admits Dank. "However, we feel it is inappropriate for authority to coercively repress such relationships."

Sandler suggests that sincere professors wouldn't have a problem with the policy. "The guy who finds that he is really interested in one of his students won't have any problem with going to his supervisor and saying, 'Look, I'm falling in love with Mary Jones, and I don't want to grade her papers,'" he says. "The professor that's just fooling around probably wouldn't want to do this. If you sleep with someone you're responsible for, you're contaminating the relationship."

Horror stories about professors who use grades as a lure to students are largely a myth, says Dank. "I've never seen a student who would sell himself for grades," he says. "I'm sure it does occur, though, and in those instances the professor's and student's behavior is grossly inappropriate."

But students who've dated their professors say seldom is the scenario that black and white. "It's like anything else, people will say anything during the relationship, but once it's over, all bets are off," says Ellen, a graduate of Penn State University who began dating one of her history professors her junior year.

"By the next semester, I was getting this weird treatment from some of the other professors in the department, like I was looking for a new relationship with one of them. It was too late for me to switch majors so I just kept my mouth shut. Now I see people with these sexual harassment cases, and I can't help but think it's half of what I went through."

Lisa, a graduate student at Georgetown University, says she transferred from the University of Miami after a relationship with a professor went sour. "I had heard all the warnings but figured it was tired rhetoric," she says.

"I enrolled for a 300-level required literature class taught for the next semester, but by the time the class started, we were pretty much through. The class was tough enough, and I felt like I never got a fair shake. The comments on my papers were pretty biting and real personal, and I ended up dropping the class."

Lisa says she was accountable for entering the relationship but now realizes the stakes were much higher than she thought.

"The situation made it impossible for me to tell anyone about it. It looked like I had signed up for his class again to get an easy A, but that's not the case," she says. "It is fine if organizations like CASE want to protect the rights of these relationships but they should set up some of their own guidelines because there are responsibilities to the students. Personal feelings can affect a grade, which really flies in the face of what education is all about."

Fisher says that professor-student relationships are not simply one-on-one affairs. "You have to look at the other students in the class," she says. "Relationships between professors and students can sexualize the entire classroom. It makes students think they stand to get higher grades by making themselves more sexually available."

Meanwhile, it's up to each university to define sexual harassment policies that protect the student without infringing on the individual rights of a faculty member. With no uniform standards yet established by courts, universities often find it difficult to achieve a balance.

Although Fisher recommends that school officials have policies on professor-student relationships in case of eventual lawsuits, she says that it's difficult to mandate a ban on such relationships. "You may infringe on a person's right to privacy but at the same time, that professor may be infringing on the rights of his students," she says. "But if a court finds the university had knowledge of the relationship, especially with a professor who makes a habit of such practices, they could be held liable."

UNCW has no specific policy banning professor-student relationships, Dean of Students Patricia L. Leonard told graduate students during orientation last week. Leonard had responded to a question from a female graduate student in the audience asking whether it was permissible to date professors at UNCW.

Leonard cautioned that common sense should dictate the decision on dating or not dating professors. It isn't wise to become involved with a professor who has power over you. Graduate teaching assistants were also included in those academic members with power over students. Leonard said it's a position of trust and it shouldn't be abused.

UNCW's Student Handbook and Code of Student Life 1994-1995 state that

"Students have the right to enjoy a university environment free of unlawful discrimination, including sexual harassment. In all institutional relationships, the university expects its employees and students to show discretion and civility and to treat each other with equality and dignity. Discriminatory behavior, including sexual harassment of students by any university employee—faculty or staff—is a violation of both state and federal law and university policy."

Appendix K of the Handbook states that sexual harassment

"a form of discriminatory personal conduct, is defined as unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature when

(1) submission to such conduct is made explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment, academic or student status; or

(2) submission to or rejection of such conduct by an individual is used as a basis for employment, academic, or other institutional decisions affecting that individual; or

(3) such conduct has the purpose or effect of unreasonably interfering with an individual's work performance, academic activities, or student experiences, or creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive working, academic, or student life environment."

To ensure complete understanding of the term sexual harassment, the Handbook adds that it may be "summarily defined" as "the improper introduction into a university relationship of speech or conduct of a sexual nature."

UNCW's policy in (3) above appears to imply that intimate interpersonal relationships, even when there is consensual agreement between both parties, can bear the connotation of disrupting academic life. Whether welcome or unwelcome, advances made by a professor towards one of his/her students or, conversely, intimate approaches by a student to a professor may be interpreted as sexual harassment.

Although each member of UNCW's academic community is expected to take individual responsibility for his/her actions, the professor appears to bear the larger share of that responsibility for moral and ethical behavior involving a student.

Game room Gets a Facelift

BY LAURA CORSO

Staff Writer

Game On! And it's going on in the University Center's new and improved game room.

Over the summer, the game room budget allowed for a much needed renovation. After investigating other schools' game rooms, "improvements were made both internally and externally," according to Renate Eichinger, game room manager.

New external features include a dart board, lights over the billiard tables, and a wide-screened television set, complete with in-house stereo sound.

Eichinger said, "The lights bring a more recreational atmosphere" and add a bit of class and distinction.

MTV is on, continually, throughout the day due to its diversity of sound and style. The constant music serves as a comfortable backdrop to a relaxing environment. Major sporting events will also be aired throughout the semester.

Internal changes have also made a big difference. A new computerized cash register was installed to ensure more efficient bookkeeping. Most importantly, a renewed, enthusiastic staff has taken charge again this year.

The highly motivated staff has many ideas and plans to focus student attention on the new game room. One staff member, Jason von Sciver, has a possible billiard league in the works. The staff is also working towards having a professional billiards expert visit during UNCW's Intramural billiards, darts, and table tennis, which are open to anyone interested. All events are printed in this semester's calendar of events.

Improvements are still being made each week. After Labor Day, the latest video games will be added. They are being delivered by the game room at Jubilee Park via "Cool World" on Oleander Drive. Oh, and for all of you hockey fans, an air hockey table will be installed as soon as possible.

If you need to let off some steam and relax a bit, the new game room is definitely the place to go. The comfortable setting will surely put you at ease. Game On!

S. Bartlett Student Soliloquies

As usual, I'm disgusted. While standing at the check out in the grocery store, you know the local "Food Line," I was forced to occupy my mind by reading magazine covers.

It was either that or make small talk with the lecherous guy in front of me who was pretending his kids weren't annoying him by twirling to and fro on the conveyor belt as they repeatedly whispered "Butthead" in his direction. Because I didn't see any reason to reprimand them for their wonderful insight into this human's nature and was relieved they weren't torturing me, I read the titles splashed across the covers of the Gag Mags.

I'm not talking about the tabloids. I have great respect for tabloids. At least their lies are ridiculously obvious. Maybe some people do believe that a "Dog-faced Baby Sings Like Elvis" or "8-Year-Old Hermaphrodite is the Reincarnation of Marilyn Monroe." I can live with that. After all, some folks still contend that William Faulkner was a good-humored guy who adored women.

The rags that bring my bile to a boil are those helpful, professional looking gender mags. Young Miss. Good Housekeeping. Gentlemen's Quarterly. Ladies' Home Journal. Parents. These Not-Ready-For-Recycled-Toilet Paper magazines are replete with insane articles and Quick-Fix-For-Life advice.

First of all, if I wanted my house to resemble a single shack depicted in the pages of these handy little fixer-up manuals I would have to sell my children, kill my cats, donate a pound or two of plastic, and write about $10,000 in bad checks. Oh, yea. I would also have to buy pot-pourri everything. Glass cleaner, toilet freshener, carpet powder, furniture polish, wax pads, deodorant, AND a quaint Lilliputian-sized crock pot in which I can simmer more dead leaves and weeds.

Now that my house is in order, I can read a few more of these banal Ten-Step programs and learn how to lose weight, cure my acne, comb my hair to get that perfect sultry/business woman "do," apply my natural-looking makeup with a trowel, dress to hide the weight I could not lose because of genetics, make love to my significant other so he/she will never leave me for someone younger (or someone who would lose the weight on the grape leaves and pomegranate diet), get what I want without being a bitch, be soft and non-threatening so I can succeed at my profession, and find inner-peace by following Barbara Streisand's workout for the mind program.

Let's not forget to check out the parenting guides. I can make my kids listen to me without ever raising my voice, even when they are screaming at me in an ear shattering pitch. I can teach them to respect others by allowing them to pummel me. I can praise them for their cleverness when they put the cat in the dryer and send him on a high-beat tumble. I can encourage them to not pelt me with healthy foods by arranging fruits and vegetables into precious Claymation characters atop their Barney dinnertime. I know, if I just followed the advice provided in these magazines, they would never again pick their noses and then suck on their fingers.

It's all right there. Why am I such a propaganda failure? I know I could find love and success, in every area of my life, if I would just succumb to the advice of these gurus of good living. So, what's my problem?

It can't be that I am a thinking, autonomous woman, can it? Something has got to give. I either have to give up my integrity as an individual or I have to join the fold. I mean, I want small thighs, "Buns of Steel," an attentive, committed lover, intelligent, well-adjusted children, healthy house plants, and a deodorant that holds out in the Carolina heat for longer than five seconds. Of course. Who wouldn't want perfection? And NOW!

Jolly Roger's Neighborhood

One thing that students learn more about during their undergraduate experience is "community relations." This community can be as small as a double as Graham, Hewlett or Belk, or as large as the city of Wilmington. Residents in the community can be as few as a roommate or as many as the inhabitants of New Hanover County. But many or few, good relations among residents have several characteristics in common. These characteristics include: consideration, empathy and common sense.

Roommates often sit down and work out an unwritten set of rules for room behavior. Many rules in a larger community are unwritten as well. For example, students without morning classes may agree that quiet time in their room need not occur until after Lectures. In the real world, most citizens must rise early to attend work or prepare their children for school. Therefore, students who find themselves in community neighborhoods late in the evening, should adjust their noise level to fit their surroundings. The local residents will greatly appreciate this.

In addition, most students agree: rooming with a slob is no fun. Roommates usually have an understanding about the length of time dirty clothing and food can remain "as large" in their environment. Local residents take pride in their yards and gardens. They find it upsetting to have to pick Ice Light beer cans off their property—especially if they were not the ones who got to enjoy the contents!

And remember that imaginary line that divides a Hewlett double? "You and your stuff stay on your side; I'll stay on mine."

The same invisible boundaries should be honored in the larger community. A woman's house is her castle; a man's garden is part of his real estate equity (Spot, the resident pool, wants to be sure that all territory markings are his... Nough said.)

There are many new things to claim a student's attention at the start of the school year. Community relations may not be at the top of the list, but wherever UNCW students go, from the residence halls, to the neighborhoods surrounding the campus, to downtown Wilmington, they are making an impression. Do they want to be seen as noisy, trashy trespassers or young men and women earning a quality education at a first rate institution? Part of a UNCW student's education include knowing how to be a good neighbor and a good citizen. After all, UNCW's symbol is the Seahawk, not the Jolly Roger.

Here's What I Have To Say About It...

In the Aug. 28 issue of the Sunday Star News, Larry Conley, an assistant editor for the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, wrote an editorial entitled "The poor are the same as you."

Among the points he made were that poor people want to work to support their families—just like you; poor people love their children—just like you; poor people respect the law and human life—just like you; and, finally, poor people have small vices and weaknesses—just like you.

Conley wrote his editorial based on comments he heard while standing in checkout lines at the grocery store from shoppers deprecating people who were paying for their groceries with food stamps.

Before I enrolled at UNCW, I was a case worker in the food stamp department of the New Hanover County Department of Social Services. It was, and probably will be, one of the most depressing jobs I will have ever undertaken. Day in and day out I was inundated with the horror stories of families without food, shelter, clothing, or even simple utilities such as electricity.

My job literally broke my heart. I could not bear the sadness and frustration I felt each and every day of the week. As a newly separated and soon to be divorced mother of two children, I was terrified I, too, would become one of these poor people crying out for help. I swore I would whatever I had to do to have the control over my life these people had lost. I returned to college.

Much as Conley witnessed, I have heard derogatory remarks made about people using food stamps. I've seen the cashier's eyes roll and heard the impatient and nasty comments from other people in the checkout line as some woman with two small children clutching her shuffling through her purse for her food stamp coupons.

She, too, hears the comments; she's a human being and has feelings. I am embarrassed for her—not because she's using food stamps, but because she is being treated inhumanely by a fellow human being.

Husbands leave families, wives leave families, both parents leave families—for reasons of divorce, death, or other circumstances. No matter who does the leaving, someone is left behind. Generally, that someone has to make up the difference without any prior notice or planning. A lot of times, the person leaving has left behind an inordinate amount of debt. And, naturally, in our materialistic society—somebody has to pay.

So, the person left behind tries to deal as best he or she can. Looking for work that pays decently is hard. If you have young children, you have to find work that pays enough to cover child care bills along with rent, utilities, medical expenses, clothes, school supplies, food, and gas to get to work.

Health insurance? Movies? Dinner out? New sneakers for the kids, much less Mom? Forget it! There are too many demands for just the basics in life, spending money on luxuries such as a night out at the $1.50 movie just aren't on the budget.

I've even heard UNCW students comment negatively about someone in Wilson's paying for their groceries with food stamps. There's a bit of irony in that. Many students at UNCW have sought and been awarded financial aid in order for them to attend school.

I would not have been able to obtain my undergraduate degree without financial aid. I certainly would not have progressed so far and been accepted in the graduate program without it. Isn't that somewhat similar to receiving public assistance so you can eat? Isn't it odd there is not any stigma attached to being on financial aid at UNCW? You aren't going to get any apologies from me for asking for help in order to better the quality of my life and my children's lives.

You don't know why or under what circumstances that man or woman at the checkout line is using food stamps. Not many of us have lived the terror some of these people have had to live with, not many of us have literally starved until we were desperate enough to cry out for help. None of us have the right to judge others.

When you've been there, then you can call me and tell me what you think about the public assistance programs. Until then, I suggest you stick to the studies your financial aid is helping subsidize.

At Conley said in closing his editorial, "Poor people are not some alien race, devoid of the feelings and desires that you have. They're not bad people or even necessarily weak people. They're not criminal or violent or lazy or stupid. They're just poor."

Bob Haywood's Still Point Wind, Keel, and Self-Love

In our university lives our days are filled responding to class schedules, stacks of papers on our desks demanding action, meetings and other events to attend that usually lead to more meetings and more events to attend. In a day of day response to such demands, it is easy to lose sight of some of the deeper, or foundational issues that we need to attend to for the sake of our long-term well-being.

Scott Peck in his current book, "Further Along the Road Less Traveled" states "There is nothing that holds us back more from mental health, from health as a society, and from God than the sense we all have of our unimportance, unloveliness, and undesirability." If you add them together, such an attitude represents a sense of low self-worth which can become one of the most paralyzing forces in our lives. As a counter to this force, I find it essential to develop and maintain a sense of mature self-love. Self-love implies the care, respect, and responsibility for and knowledge of the self and it is an essential dimension of any fulfilling life and is quite distinct from self-centeredness.

It is so easy to be caught up in other directed life where satisfaction is sought in pleasing a significant other or a group of others, where climes about how we should behave and dress are taken from a group of peers, or success is defined by our immediate environment or our broader society. The problem is that all those forces are very unstable, undependable, often shift, and are often not congruent with our own deeper values. Most of us can identify moments in our life experience when we realize we are truly alone. The positive side of such realization comes when that experience encourages us to learn more about ourselves so that we can identify the core of identity that we want to claim as our own and which becomes the foundation for a lifelong sense of self in which we find satisfaction and an appropriate form of pride, i.e. becoming inner directed rather than other directed.

Everyone who goes sailing with me for the first time and feels the boat heel over when the wind powers up the sails, reacts with an expression of anxiety about the boat tipping over. I hasten to explain to them that there is a heavily weighted keel under the boat that in almost every condition of high wind will keep the boat upright or return it to an upright state should a strong gust blow us way over. That keel of what provides stability for my boat and is a positive counter force to an errant gust of wind. A strong sense of self, and mature self-love, is the keel of our lives. No matter how life may change all around us; no matter how often the things we tend to rely on to support our egos may fall away, we can be uprighted by a strong sense of self-worth. It is simply essential to any possibility of long-term well-being.

All of us have to work on developing and maintaining such appropriate self-love, which is developed as we identify and claim strengths we find in ourselves, identify our needs in a particular environment and make some self-determination that we are going to utilize our strengths and meet our needs to become more and more the person that God created to be. An exercise I commonly use to get a fix on self is to ask people to complete the sentence "I am..." 10 times with words or phrases that are adjectives, roles, and feelings (e.g. I am strong, I am husband, I am depressed). Try it. It will give you a monetary fix on your identity. Then do it again with the phrase "I want to be..." That will give you a fix on your agenda.

A high sense of self-worth or self-love comes from taking charge of our own personal agendas in order to become the kind of person whose clear sense of self provides the foundation that sustains us through our rapidly changing lives, that provides the keel that keeps the ship of self upright and moving on.

Frank's Place Frank Tascone

Welcome back to Frank's Place. Bob and I just finished reading Dr. Shinn's Convocation speech in last week's Seahawk (actually, Bob found it more satisfying to bat around a wadded up page from USA Today's baseball news).

As I read Dr. Shinn's words, and reflected on the events of the past couple weeks, I came to the conclusion that UNCW has finally arrived. Even the most diehard of you would admit to having difficulty referring to our fine institution as "UNC by the K" anymore.

There are several signs that validate this truth. The fact that Dr. Shinn was given the opportunity to deliver his meaningful and moving speech at convocation, shows that we no longer need to summon someone from a "real" institution of higher learning to speak during these hallowed occasions. Other signs include the many community service, research, and artistic achievements made by our faculty, staff, and students each year; the number of quality out of classroom programs occurring on campus; the influx of new faculty and staff members who realize the unique and exciting opportunities available here; and, of course, the ever increasing number of quality students applying to, and attending UNCW.

Yes, these are all signs that UNCW has arrived. But, there are other signs that are even more significant and more indicative of just how far UNCW has come. Let me introduce you to the "PLC" (Parking, Lines, and Comm) principle of college and university development. The theory is simple, yet fool proof (or is that full proof?). The first principle in the model is parking. All good schools have parking problems (parking problems is defined here as "you can't always park where you want to"). I believe it was that great educator Dr. Zachary Smith who espoused the now infamous doctrine "show me a campus with easy parking, and I'll show you a campus full of parked minds" (this saying should not be confused with his also famous "William! William! The pain—the pain"). Yes, friends the cognitive dissonance you experience when trying to make that fateful decision whether to wait like a value for an open space, or drive around like a chicken with the proverbial head chopped off, is the result of a planned system designed to "unpark" those relaxed brain cells—"work those flabby neurons—work those flabby neurons—work those flabby neurons."

The second element of the model involves lines. Ah, yes, you're saying, those dreadful lines for registration, for dinner at Wagner, for Carrot Top tickets. But, the lines of which I speak are those found in front of the "Wave Hog," "Ice House," and even "Rods." It is a generally understood concept that the length of the lines in front of popular establishments in a college town on weekends, is directly proportional to the level of "coming of age" of that particular college or university. Some of you skeptics are laughing; but who can refute my empirical evidence? Just travel to Chapel Hill, NC State, Penn State, Ohio State, or University of Tennessee—Knoxville on a Friday night and see for yourself. Would you not agree that these institutions have "arrived"?

The days of the laid back casual Friday evening in downtown Wilmington are long gone, friends. There was a time not too long ago when an individual, such as myself, could depart a crowded place with crowded rest rooms, enter a not so crowded place with not so crowded rest rooms, and return to original crowded place in about 5 minutes. Not so, anymore. Friday night found me waiting in the rain to utilize this now archaic pattern of social comfort: prepared to do battle with anyone (smaller than myself) trying to beat the system by cutting in front.

Just to show that this theory is not half baked, consider the foundation of the principle. Universities which appeal to, and admit independent, active, albeit socially motivated, students, are attracting those individuals who want to explore, try something new, stay here on weekends, and, it appears, have larger bladders.

Finally, the third article of this thesis: "comes." I am talking about the familiar fluorescent orange pyramidal shaped objects located throughout the civilized American landscape. Show me any developing area, and I'll show you cones. I know you know what I'm talking about. You've seen them reserving parking spaces for people other than yourself, limiting your path to one lane (by the way there be cones on the information superhighway), serving as warning that there are potholes in your path (why fix 'em if you got cones), and popping up like roadblocks with blinking lights in apartments and fraternity houses everywhere. Have you noticed the increase in cone proliferation this year? Like sprouting mitochondria within the muscle tissue of a training athlete, cones at UNCW represent the highest level of institutional development. Yes indeed, UNCW has arrived.

Well folks, it's time Bob and I got back to work. We have been devising a plan to deal with the parking nightmare on campus. I noticed that when Mr. Matlock was last week, there were many spaces being kept open by those bright orange symbols of American ingenuity alluded to above. If just so happens that there are two such cylindrical cones stationed around a pothole in front of my apartment. We figured that later tonight we may "barge" in case I have and strategically place them in a prime space near the Union. Tomorrow morning you can find me "in the front row" Bob thinks I should wear an official looking Matlock "cone" badge in case I am spotted. I wonder if cones cost less than eighty bucks by the way?

Letter To The Editor

Dan Sullivan

Student Government Vice-President

Dear Editor,

I am writing to offer some advice for students looking for a job on campus. I am a junior and have applied for a job in the University Union information office three times. The first time was as a freshman, the second as a sophomore, and the third as a junior. The first two attempts at the position I was told that my schedule was not compatible and being a lower class student that upper class students had priority. I was told to keep in touch and that my application would remain active in their files. During my sophomore year I was selected to be a Resident Assistant for housing. The summer before the RA job began I received a call from the Union and was offered a position in the information center. I turned down the job because of my new position in Housing. Last May I applied once again for a position in the information center and was turned down after my third interview with the Union. After receiving my rejection letter I met with Wally Deschamps and asked why I was not hired. I was given several reasons which include: he did not think that I was very accessible, I was too knowledgeable for the position, and I had poor interviewing skills. He then suggested that I go to Career Services for help. I concluded the meeting by asking for a written statement which detailed the reasons for not being hired. I received the letter three months later and there were only two reasons listed, one of which was that I had a scheduling conflict. Since receiving this letter I have been hired in Housing and Residence Life. I guess the point of this letter is, if you are a student and want a job in the Union, remember three things; don't have a class schedule, don't be very knowledgeable, and most of all, don't expect immediate results. Good luck to all of you freshman that apply in the Union, and remember if the Union will not give you a job try Housing, they have plenty of opportunities for students.

Advice for UNCW's Weary

People, people, people... What can we say? We thought surely after two weeks worth of our advice at least a few of you would have been enlightened. But, judging from the massive piles of inane letters that have accumulated on our desks, we realize there is a slim possibility we may have overestimated our hapless readers. So, instead of spending our Labor Day at the tanning booths slathering ourselves with accelerator lotion, we are sorting through all of your various ramblings in hopes of finding one or two questions worthy of our superior intellect.

Because we would hate to fabricate a solitary word of our column and lying simply expends too much energy, we are always looking for a worthwhile dilemma to ridicule. If you think that you might have a delicate personal trauma you would like to have publicly denigrated, please reveal it to us, in writing, and send to UNCW P.O. Box # 24095.

Dear Emma and Jane:

I am a 25-year-old sophomore and before you make fun of me by asking, "Hey, Loser, how many years is it going to take you to get your degree?" let me tell you that I am a non-traditional student who has just recently returned to college. The problem I am writing you about is that I am being pursued by a man who is older than my father, who is 49. I am very attracted to him, but I am worried about what everyone else is going to say to and about us. Am I being silly because I am worried about the opinions of others or do you feel that I am not using my new-found college smarts to make an intelligent decision in dating this man?

Signed: Turned on by AARP

Dear Turned On:

Fortunately for you, we have unlimited experience with Geritol Joe's. We find older men so much more intriguing and satisfying, both emotionally and physically, than we do men under 45. And it's not just us. As you have probably noticed, society has always reveled in the idea of May-December romances. Frank and Kathie-Lee Gifford are a perfect example of this type of successful transgression of the decades. There are 23 years between them and that's longer than most college students have been alive. We understand that poor little Elektras, like us, can't help but be taken in by the charisma and experience of financially secure, lecherous, old farts. Who can blame 'em? Younger men might have hard, sleek bodies and full heads of luxurious hair, but they party all of the time, work lazily at low-paying jobs, and do not have the stamina to keep up with ambitious, strong, intelligent women—like us. Sure, when you are on a date, people are going to ask if he is your dad. But, aren't you going to enjoy those Denny's senior citizen's discounts and getting primo parking everywhere with that handicapped hangy-thing on your rearview mirror? Ignore those people who will stare in wide-eyed disbelief at the sight of you and your Geriatric Love God, they are obviously jealous. Yes, we do think you're silly, but that is probably what will make you popular with older men (well, any man for that matter). Who cares if people think you're a gold-digger and he is a cradle-robbler? You know the truth. You're hooked on an attentive and sensual beast with clogged arteries and a big insurance policy bearing your name. Need we say more?

Dear Emma and Jane:

I get the feeling that you guys [sic] are feminists. You don't get into any hardcore male-bashing, but your advice to women seems anti-male. I also read about the Women's Collective and Feminist Colloquium in the Seahawk and I'm curious about this recent influx of your kind on campus. Is UNCW being taken over by you gals [sic] or what?

Signed: Fearful of Femme-Nazis

Dear Fearful:

We are appalled by your unwarranted accusations that we may be autonomous, intelligent womyn with high levels of self-esteem and healthy sexual identities. Who would ever choose to be an individual in a breed of exemplary, yet persecuted, humans? We understand your concerns and think you should get up out of your Papa-sin chair, turn off Rush Limbaugh, and go to the mall. If you can't find the mall, don't stop and ask for directions, it is on a street—you're bound to pass it. Once you're there, locate a book store. That's a place where you'll find things that look like your t.v. guide, only bound in heavy cardboard and thicker in width. At the bookstore, wander aimlessly around until you see these titles (hint: titles are the big words on the front of books) on two books we recommend you buy. The first is Backlash, by Susan Faludi, and the second is Revolution From Within, by Gloria Steinem. Have a trustworthy buddy read these books aloud to you, since some of the words exceed 3 letters, and then write us back. We're interested in you helping us to understand this frightening phenomena. If the books confuse you, as we feel certain they will, try attending meetings of the Women's Collective or Feminist Colloquium. I understand there are some good people at these meetings who would love to offer you guidance. Good Luck!

Dear Emma and Jane:

I'm in the middle of my basic-studies curriculum and I aspire to become a Kindergarten teacher. Here's the problem... I recently started working at a day-care center to earn extra money and have realized I DESPISE CHILDREN! Do you think this is a passing phase and I should continue my studies as planned or do I seriously need to consider a new major?

Signed: Abhors Ankle-Biters

Dear Abhors:

If you've spent any time around kids then you know that children have the capacity to be like disgusting trolls who wipe their sooty noses on your clothes and the interior of the windows of your car. You never knew that something so small could excrete so much mucus? They use their grimy paws to eat, instead of utensils (if you can get them to eat at all), they have limited bladder control, and from the moment they begin to speak they say embarrassing or vindictive things like: "Mama's got a big butt" or "Who was that man in the shower with you while Daddy was at work yesterday can I have a Sega system?" They spill Incredible red Kool-Aid on your eggshell colored velvet sofa and use indelible black markers to write newly acquired obscenities on the living room walls. We could go on forever, but you get the frightening picture. If they do this stuff at home and they, supposedly, idolize their moms, imagine the variety of horrors you would be subjected to in your classroom. You obviously are having second thoughts about spending your life condemned as a hottie pole for this curious clan of curtain-climbers. Use the minuscule amount of common sense you possess and sprint to your advisor's office to beg for a transfer to the Cameron School of Business. Wouldn't you rather make a living crunching numbers instead of being arrested for punching minors?

stop by or call
The Leadership Center
University Union Room 212,
395-3877

Emerge is an exciting, innovative and fun opportunity designed for freshmen interested in developing their leadership potential and becoming active participants in campus life, regardless of their previous leadership experience.

Emerge is a semester-long program designed to help students develop the skills necessary to become effective leaders. Participants in the program attend weekly sessions focusing on leadership styles and principles using group discussion and experiential learning.

Another important part of the program is participation in student organizations. Each Emerging Leader chooses a student organization to join. Through this involvement they test classroom theories, develop leadership skills, and make friends with other leaders on campus.

Sessions begin
September 20, 1994 and end
November 15, 1994

UNCW Global Volunteers

UNCW Global Volunteers is sponsored by The Leadership Center and United Campus Christian Ministries at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. It is open to all students, faculty and staff. Each year the group plans a service-learning trip to experience a different culture and do volunteer work. It is a chance to discover more about the challenges and beauty in other parts of the world as well as learn about ourselves and others.

The first trip was in 1990 to Pueblo, Mexico where we lived with families and worked at a local school. In 1991, we did a home repair project in the Appalachian Mountains. Other trips include Barbados and Jamaica.

For more information, contact United Campus Christian Ministries (UCCM) at 799-8497 or The Leadership Center at 395-3877.

Baby Busters Contemplate Babies Of Their Own - Or Not

BY JANET SINGLETON
Special Correspondent
College Press Service

One in six women born in the late '50's will never have children, the Census Bureau estimates, and if the trend continues, that generation will have almost twice the percentage of non-moms than the previous one. But what about women born in the early '70s who are today's college seniors? Will even more childless couples emerge from the younger generations well? The answers are complicated. One reason is the more childbearing years a woman has ahead of her, the more difficult it is to predict whether she'll have children. Most childless women under 40 plan to have children in the future, but a certain percentage will not succeed or will change their mind.

The Census Bureau estimates up to 24 percent, almost one in four, of women now age 18-24 will never have children. Only 8 percent of women in their grandmothers' generation were childless.

Still, the class of '94 is just getting started, and many graduates are unsure of where they'll end up. "most of my friends are more worried about getting dates than getting married," said senior Kenny Baer of the University of Pennsylvania. "Children seem way off in the distant future."

But the Bureau tends to be a good guesser when it comes to population patterns. Twelve years ago, its figures predicted that as many as 17 percent of women, then 25-29, would remain childless. Today 19 percent of those women remain childless. Last minute births are expected to cut that group's childless rate to 15 percent.

Not having children is more acceptable among college students of the '90s, said Leslie Lafayette, of the ChildFree Network, in Roseville, CA. Lafayette works to debunk what she says are the idealistic myths of parenthood, and show people childlessness can be a rewarding option.

"When I speak at colleges, I'm bearing more and more young people saying they're not going to have kids because they don't like what's going on in society," she said. "Their attitude is they won't have control over what's happens to the child."

"Personally, I don't want children," said Clint Talbot, an editor at the University of Colorado-Boulder's Colorado Daily. "I don't want them to mess up my life and I'm worried about the environment."

Roxanne Hawn, 26, and her husband Tom, both of Denver, have been married for two years and are worried about the economy and safety. "I don't know how people can afford kids," she said. "It's a dangerous world. I would be afraid my child would get killed."

A college education is a more powerful determinant of whether and when a woman has children, than race or religion. Women in graduate school programs have an even greater rate of childlessness. "The more education a woman has, the less likely she is to have children," Lafayette said.

The Rape Crisis Center is dedicated to providing crisis intervention services for sexual assault victims.

Volunteer training is scheduled for September 8 - October 4, 1994 on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, 5:30-8:00 p.m. at 1131 Wrightsville Avenue. The educational sessions will prepare volunteers to act as victim's advocates.

SCHEDULE

Thursday, September 8, 5:30 p.m.

Orientation
Orientation will provide an opportunity for new volunteers to become acquainted with each other and the Rape Crisis Center. The educational focus will be: RCC, goals and objectives, Confidentiality, Center overview, confidentiality laws, Molestation for the training will be distributed.

Thursday, September 11, 6:30-9:00 p.m.

Crime of Rape/Crisis Intervention
Educational session will focus on the criminal aspect of rape and crisis intervention counseling for victims. Crime of rape: profile of the rapist and effect of sexual assault on the victim. Counseling: Dynamics of a crisis, victim's advocate's role in crisis intervention including responsive listening and telephone counseling.

Thursday, September 15, 5:30 p.m.

Child Sexual Abuse Victims
Participants will learn about possible indicators of sexual abuse, investigative procedure and Department of Social Services mandated reporting procedure. Louise Currell, ISS Social Work Supervisor, will present "Child Sexual Abuse Victims."

Thursday, September 20, 5:30 p.m.

Hospital Protocol
Volunteers will visit New Hanover Regional Medical Center Emergency Department where the medical staff will provide an informational program on the hospital procedure for sexual assault victims. The collection of evidence by medical personnel will be explained.

Thursday, September 22, 5:30 p.m.

Law Enforcement Investigation
Detective Mike Sugg from New Hanover County Sheriff's Department will be the guest speaker, offering information about the investigation process and his experiences in investigating rape/sexual assault cases. North Carolina sexual assault statutes will be discussed.

Thursday, September 27, 5:30 p.m.

Legal Procedure
Assistant District Attorney John Carriere will present "Sexual Assault: A Prosecutor's Viewpoint". The program includes information about legal process, NC laws and courtroom testimony.

Thursday, September 29, 5:30 p.m.

Aftereffect of Rape
Long-term effects of rape and Rape Trauma Syndrome will be presented and discussed by Hope R. Lanier, Psy.D.

Thursday, October 4, 5:30 p.m.

Policies/Procedures Documentation
Rape Crisis Center policies and procedures will be explained and discussed. Volunteers will become familiar with documentation required and they will schedule individual interviews with staff. Certificates of Completion will be awarded and refreshments served.

Volunteers bring a variety of knowledge and skills in their role as victim's advocates. The experience can be rewarding. If you are interested in attending the training program, please call:

Women's Collective: Meeting the needs of UNCW Women

BY AMANDA ROGERS
Contributing Writer

You may have noticed, in the first issue of The Seahawk, the announcement of the formation of the Women's Collective.

The purpose of this group is to bring together members of the campus community who are interested in women's issues. Some of the topics currently under discussion within the Women's Collective include identifying the basic needs of UNCW women, the establishment of a day care facility on campus, sexism/racism/heterosexism, women's health care concerns, and the establishment of a Women's Center.

We invite you and your organization to participate in the work of this group. If you are interested in taking part in the efforts of the Women's Collective, we request that you attend or send a representative of your group to our next meeting.

Our members welcome people who enjoy discussions, activism, and creating progressive programs. We feel that your members would be a real asset to the Collective. Within the Women's Collective, all views and ideas are welcome (and much needed!) and each individual is respected.

We hope that you will join us as we develop these and other ideas for the future.

The Women's Collective is an exciting venture that will benefit not only UNCW women, but also the entire University community.

If you have any questions or are unable to attend this meeting, please feel free to contact Janet Ellerby at 395-3764.

We hope to see and hear from you on the 7th.

"Recipes for Reading Success"

a new teacher training class at the YWCA, will be held on Thursdays, from 7:00-9:30 p.m., beginning
September 15 and running through October 6th.

Cost is $40.00, plus a yearly YWCA membership of $15.00. For more information or to pre-register, call the YWCA at 799-6820 or come by the office at 2815 South College Road.

This course will familiarize teachers with strategies and components useful in a literature-based reading program. Four components to reading will be explored using trade books, poetry, graphic organizers and cooperative learning. These areas will be discussed and specific strategies will be modeled. Students will have hands-on practice with many of the strategies explored. This course offers 1.0 unit of renewal credit for North Carolina certified teachers.

Instructor LaDonna Hauser teaches workshops for New Hanover County Schools. She has a master's degree in Reading Education and is the only teacher in North Carolina published in the Whole Language Catalog. Hauser currently teaches fifth grade at Bradley Creek Elementary School.

Atlantis Literary Magazine

Atlantis Is Riding The Waves Again

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Want to get published but think you can't because you're a student? Atlantis, UNCW's student literary magazine, is looking for student creative endeavors—art, poetry, short stories, essays, photography, and philosophical prose.

The first Atlantis meeting will be held Tuesday September 13, at 7:30 p.m. in room 205A of the University Union. Refreshments will be served during this student interest meeting.

Amie Childers, editor of Atlantis, is looking for students who may want to serve on the magazine's staff, students interested in Atlantis's plans for this academic year, and anyone who has ideas they want to share. At the meeting, Childers will explain how the journal functions.

"We are absolutely drooling for some short poetry written in a foreign language. It is a truly cool thing that we want people to do," Childers said. "Any language will do, French, German, Spanish, Italian, Greek, Swahili, Chinese, Japanese, whatever."

Assisting with this year's production of the Atlantis is Dr. Kathy Rugoff from UNCW's English Department.

Childers said the Atlantis was established in 1969 as a means for students to express themselves in various literary genres. The literary magazine is funded by student fees allocated through the Student Government Association.

One of the "founding fathers" of Atlantis, Dave Smith, parlayed his experience into a career in the publishing business in the Wilmington area. Smith and Wilmington Printing Company assisted with the 1993-94 issue of the Atlantis. They will also be helping with this year's edition.

Smith worked on the Atlantis for four years while attending UNCW. He was editor in chief during his senior year.

"Then, as now, Atlantis was small, but really fun to produce," Smith said. He added that the older issues served as stepping stones to what the Atlantis is now and is shaped by what many people would like it to be.

Childers said that as a student literary effort, much student involvement is needed and encouraged. "Please, students, come to the meeting," Childers said.

Billiard Demonstrations To Be Given In Game Room

BY ROB GUEST
Game Room

The University Center Game Room will begin its programming for this semester with billiards demonstrations on September 9.

Nicholas C. Nett, who has been teaching and instructing for 20 of his 40 years in the game of playing pool, will offer individual instruction sessions on September 10 from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. On September 9, he will offer a billiards exhibition from 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Each show consists of combined lecture, demonstration and time to practice. Covering the fundamentals, Nett will work with the students on proper stance, cue selection, the proper stroke and aiming techniques.

"The clinics will give every student an opportunity to learn more about the game, the strategy and the skills to make everyone a better player," comments Wayne Williams, Game Room attendant.

Even players that consider their play advanced well beyond the beginner level will find that there is something in his advanced play section of his lecture that they can use to enhance their game.

"I started out pretty steady my freshman year. My roommate and I played quite often. But now my skills have degressed, due to the fact that I have not played since then. The clinic for women gives me a chance to revitalize my interest in the game, while learning more about the game," said Bianca Hutchins, who as a junior is interested in the upcoming ladies night.

To coincide with the Billiards Expo the center has planned for this week, the Game Room will kick off its tournament season with four tournaments scheduled for next week. On September 14, a spades tournament will be held starting at 6:00 PM in the Center Stage Cafe Area.

Also on September 14, there will be a darts tournament held in the Game Room at 6:00 PM.

"We are trying to provide a place where students can interact, socialize and compete in a really fun, diverse and relaxing environment," commented The Game Room Manager Renate Eichinger. "We are looking forward to a lot of student interaction, and on our part, we will do a lot of marketing and advertising to increase student awareness."

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

- CREF Stock Account *****
- CREF Bond Market Account *****
- CREF Social Choice Account *****

ISN'T IT NICE WHEN THE EXPERTS DISCOVER SOMETHING YOU'VE KNOWN ALL ALONG.

Over 1.6 million people in education and research know that choosing TIAA-CREF was a smart move. And now everyone else does too. Because Morningstar—one of the nation's leading sources of variable annuity and mutual fund information—has some stellar things to say about our retirement investment accounts.

"The comfortable combination of risk and return has earned the CREF Stock Account a five-star rating."

After studying CREF's performance history, Morningstar gave five-stars—its highest rating—to both the CREF Stock and Bond Market Accounts, and an impressive four-stars to the CREF Social Choice Account. In fact, the CREF Stock Account was singled out as having "...one of the best 10-year records among variable annuities." Of course, past performance is no guarantee of future results.

"...CREF is far and away the cheapest variable annuity out there."

Morningstar also called attention to CREF's "...rock-bottom" fees—something that can really add to the size of your nest-egg down the road. What's more, TIAA's traditional annuity—which offers guaranteed principal and interest plus the opportunity for dividends—was cited as having the highest fixed account interest rate among all annuities in its class.

We're happy to accept Morningstar's glowing ratings. But nice as it is to focus on stars, we'll keep focusing on something more down-to-earth: building the financial future you want and deserve.

The Randall Parkway Extension Revisited

In October 1993 the Planning and Research Branch of the North Carolina Department of Transportation Division of Highways proposed the Greater Wilmington Urban Area Transportation Plan which included a proposal that Randall Drive be extended to Hooker Road.

This extension would involve that part of Randall Drive contained within the UNCW campus. If this proposal is carried out, the traffic volume using Randall Drive would increase from the more than 15,000 vehicles traveling it today to possible volumes up to 26,500 cars per day.

In order to accommodate this heavy use of Randall Drive, the Parkway would require a four-lane road through campus. The UNCW administration has adamantly refused to allow this Parkway extension through UNCW property.

In addition to the already congested traffic flow on campus, pedestrian and bicycle traffic safety would be endangered, access to other UNCW property on the north-east side of campus would be limited, and future expansion of UNCW thwarted.

Leftwich Consulting Engineers, Inc. included this proposed Parkway Extension in their model of campus traffic study projections and found that the extension of Randall Parkway is not necessary because:

No additional lanes would be needed on existing roadways without the extension.

No extrusion would provide safer roadways for crossing pedestrians and bikes on campus.

A major transportation facility carrying high volumes of through traffic is not consistent with college atmosphere.

The extension would limit expansion of the campus on the north side.

Former Nursing Student Lawsuit To Be Appealed

BY LISA MAY
Contributing Writer

A UNCW student learned last week that the written word isn't necessarily written in stone.

Seeking more than $10,000 in damages, Jacqueline Brewer Long, sued UNCW in May 1993 after being denied admission to the university's nursing school even while meeting admission requirements as defined in UNCW's student catalog.

According to a report in the Wilmington Star News, Long had been enrolled in the pre-nursing studies program. That, along with other requirements Long felt she met in the student catalog, prompted her to file suit against the university accusing UNCW of breaching its contract with her.

Long had applied for admission to the nursing school for the Summer 1993 program. According to the School of Nursing administration, Long was pre-admitted for the program for 1994. Long chose not to accept and filed suit.

Long sought a temporary injunction last year forcing UNCW to admit her to the nursing program while her lawsuit was pending. She lost that case.

At the time of Long's application, there were more applicants than available spaces for the nursing program. Long was dropped when the university raised its admissions standards in order to deal with the excessive applications.

Long claims UNCW had a contract with her and she met her obligations by fulfilling requirements outlined in the student catalog. UNCW disagrees, stating that information listed in the catalog is not a promise of admission.

The catalog states, "All provisions, regulations, degree programs, course listings, etc., in effect when this catalogue went to press are subject to revision by the appropriate governing bodies of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington."

The admissions chapter of the student catalog further states, "Over enrollment or state budgetary constraints may require the restriction of admissions during a given year. This may require the adjustment of minimum requirements or the establishment of earlier application deadlines."

Dr. Betty Reynolds, Dean of the School of Nursing, explained that admission to the school is confined by the university and the North Carolina Board of Nursing restricting enrollment to 70 prospective nursing students. Deals involving pre-admission supposedly devised by the School of Nursing has never been offered and never will be again.

Superior Court Judge Ernest Fullwood ruled at the end of August that UNCW had no obligation to admit Long to the nursing program.

Long and her attorney, Gary Shipman, plan to appeal the case to the N.C. Court of Appeals. In the meantime, Long is studying nursing at East Carolina University. According to Mark Lanier, special assistant to UNCW's chancellor, Long still wants to study at UNCW.

Lanier was unable to discuss Long's case because it is still in litigation. Harold White, UNCW's attorney, was unavailable for comment.

Poetry Contest Available

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS
Staff Writer

There are a lot of writers on the UNCW campus who have stockpiled poems they've written. Why not submit them for an award and/or publication.

The National Library of Poetry has announced that $12,000 in prizes will be awarded this year to over 250 poets in the North American Open Poetry Contest. The deadline for the contest is September 30, 1994. The contest is open to everyone and entry is free.

Any poet, whether previously published or not, can be a winner. Every poem entered also has a chance to be published in a hardbound anthology.

To enter, send one original poem, any subject and any style to The National Library of Poetry, P.O. Box 704-1981, Owings Mills, MD 21117.

The poem should be no more than 20 lines, and the poet's name and address should appear on the top of the page. Entries must be postmarked by Sept. 30, 1994. A new contest open Oct. 1, 1994.

For more information, contact Pamela Roberts, (410) 356-2000.

7th Annual David Walker Day

Festival Weekend
Sept. 23 & 24 1994

The Friends of David Walker Inc. will host their Seventh Annual David Walker Day Festival weekend September 23-24, 1994.

The family oriented weekend will kick off on Friday, September 23, at 7:00 p.m., in the Gregory School Auditorium with an African Prince and Princess Pageant. This event will showcase the numerous talents of our local youth, 3-12 years of age.

We will continue the celebration through Saturday, September 24th, from 12 noon to 9:00 p.m., at the Robert Strange Park and Martin Luther King Recreation Center. There will be something for every member of the family including arts and crafts, fashion displays, contemporary and native dance, gospel, jazz, blues, R & B, and reggae.

Also featured at the festival will be kiddie rides, games, athletic tournaments, free blood pressure screenings, college career day events, and a variety of culinary favorites.

The festival commemorates the birthday of David Walker, a native Wilmingtonian, whose "Appeal to the Colored Citizens of the World," urged the overthrow of the slavery system. The spirit of freedom that David Walker inspired in our nation, more than two-hundred years ago, lives today through the Friends of David Walker Inc.

Please join us for this cultural celebration!!!

For more information on the Festival or a particular event, please contact Patricia Clette, at 763-3935, or the Martin Luther King Recreation Center, at 341-7866.

This event is co-sponsored by the City of Wilmington Parks & Recreation Department and supported by funds from the Grass Roots Arts Program of the Lower Cape Fear and North Carolina Arts Council.

No Lock? No Bike!

BY JASON STRICKLAND
Staff Writer

Listen up people. Locks were created for a particular purpose, to lock things up. So why aren't they being used and used the right way?

Since the beginning of the semester, theft has been the number one crime on campus. Be it money, personal belongings, or bicycles, things just continue to turn up missing. The reason for this is simple. WEAREN'T LOCKING THINGS UP PROPERLY! When we do use a lock it is not used correctly.

Lt. C. E. Willis of the university police department said, "The contributing factors for the number of bicycle thefts have been due to students not locking their bikes to a fixed object. According to Lt. Willis, many people using locks are simply locking their bikes to themselves and not to something immobile. The police department is continuing its ongoing process of installing new bike racks that are designed to accommodate U-Locks. These racks will be placed around academic buildings and other known areas of bike theft.

Remember that we, as adults, have to assume responsibility for our own property. Don't leave personal belongings in full view of everyone that walks into your room.

In addition, last week, a few local high school students were apprehended and escorted off campus after riding around shooting people with water guns that had the appearance of real guns.

WE BASED THE WACHOVIA COLLEGE ACCOUNT ON THE COMPLICATED PRINCIPLE OF STUDENT TIME MANAGEMENT.

NO HASSLES. NO KIDDING. OH YEAH. FREE CHECKING.

We created the Wachovia College Account specifically for the student who has better things to do than worry about banking. Our College Account includes use of Wachovia ATMs at no charge and the Wachovia Banking Card with Visa Check (it looks like a credit card but works like a check). Other features include your own credit card, a savings account, overdraft protection, and get this, free checking. Stop by your local Wachovia branch to set up a hassle-free College Account. After all, there's more to life than banking.

GLSA Welcomes Students To Cookout

BY AMANDA JESSE

Staff Writer

As part of the welcome week festivities, the Gay And Lesbian Student Association invited gay, lesbian, bisexual students and their friends at UNCW to a cookout.

Sponsored by the Gay And Lesbian Student Association (GLSA), the Division of Student Affairs, and the Chancellor's Human Relations Advisory Committee, the picnic's main purpose was to welcome gay, lesbian, and bisexual students to the campus, said Matt Tenhuelsen, a co-coordinator of the picnic.

"The picnic will help students come face to face and find other students who are gay, lesbian, or bisexual," said co-coordinator Diane Edward. "It is hard for gay, lesbian, and bisexual students to come face to face with others. [The picnic] gives them a network."

Although the GLSA has been an organization on campus for over six years, the picnic was a "first" for the association. When asked why the picnic was planned, Edward said, "It shows that the campus is welcoming them. We have a number of faculty and staff here to show that they are supported."

In addition to welcoming gays, lesbians, and bisexuals to the campus, Edward said that by having the picnic during welcome week, an important message is sent to the students body that there is a place where gay, lesbian, and bisexual students can meet other people of their same lifestyle.

According to the coordinators, the GLSA meets regularly and some activities for this year have already been planned. Inquiries can be directed to Diane Edward at 395-3577.

NCW'S New "Grant"

BY KATHERINE SMITH

Staff Writer

The commencement of UNCW's Fall semester brought new face to Friday Hall. This face, however, may be familiar to some transfer students from Coastal Carolina Community College in Jacksonville.

The name behind the face is Dr. Gilbert S. Grant.

Dr. Grant, a biology professor, left Coastal two years ago to conduct research in American Samoa. Working for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, he studied the Samoan Flying Fox and the Tongan, which are two species of fruit bats native to the islands that had experienced a population decrease of 80-90%, following 1991 hurricane in the islands.

With enthusiasm, Grant explained that the Samoan Flying Fox and Tongan are larger than most bats. They weigh approximately one pound and have a wing span as large as three feet.

Unlike smaller bats, that rely on sonar to navigate, these two particular species have large, highly developed eyes and rely heavily on their sense of sight. Their faces resemble those of a dog or a fox, says Grant, which is where the Samoan Flying Fox gets its name.

While in Samoa, Grant explained that the faces resemble those of a dog or a fox, says Grant, which is where the Samoan Flying Fox gets its name.

Grant's research included performing population counts to determine how well the bats were able to repopulate after the hurricane. To do this, Dr. Grant had to travel to the bats' roosting sites, some of which were on remote islands and only accessible by boat.

Fortunately, he was able to study a large group of Tongan bats which roost in a volcano crater located on the main island. At one time there were as many as 1,600 bats inside this volcano.

But, because the Samoan Flying Foxes roost in trees and are territorial, they are usually more spread out and harder to observe, than are the Tongan bats.

Dr. Grant also conducted a major study of the bats' reproductive habits. He watched the females and their young, noting the frequency of mating and the maturation rate of the offspring.

Grant observed that the Tongan bats were able to breed year round and were even seen mating while still nursing their young, which is an uncommon practice among most mammals.

Grant also notes that the Samoan Flying Foxes follow a seasonal pattern and only mate for about three months out of the year. One of his most memorable experiences during the study was Grant's opportunity to observe the births of eleven bats.

Another part of the study involved capturing a number of bats and collaring them with radio transmitters that allowed Grant to track their movements. The capturing of the bats required using a complicated system of ropes and a net.

After a bat was captured and the collar was in place, it was released. The collars used by Grant, which were designed to break away after several months, allow researchers to monitor the mammals without hurting them.

During the his two year study, Grant collared about 30 bats and tracked a single bat for over four months.

While in Samoa, Grant was able to conduct a great deal of research of tracked a single bat for over four months.

While in Samoa, Grant was able to conduct a great deal of research of his own. His personal studies included the collaring of three Green turtles and tracking them by satellite to Fiji, which is about 1,000 miles from Samoa. He also did work with a variety of the native sea birds on an island about 150 miles away from Samoa.

Grant reports that at the time of his departure from Samoa, the bat population had nearly doubled, since his arrival.

Dr. Grant says he is excited to be teaching again in North Carolina and hopes to be able to conduct research on sea turtles and birds in this area. He is also writing about his work in Samoa.

Grant will conduct a slide show about his research on the bats to the Cape Fear Bird Club on September 20 at 7:30 in Friday Hall. The public is invited to attend.

Students Serving Students Past, Present, and Future

BY KELLY FREDERICK

Membership Coordinator

Welcome back to the 1994-95 school year! My name is Kelly Frederick, and I am the Membership Coordinator for the UNCW Ambassador.

The Ambassador program is one of great pride and accomplishment. Our mission is to assist the Division of University Advancement in promoting positive images for the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Our activities include giving tours to prospective students and hosting social events for parents, alumni, faculty, administration, and friends. These activities make the Ambassador Program a truly unique leadership experience which offers students educational and personal activities that cannot be taught in a classroom.

While not everyone can become an Ambassador, we do have membership drives at the beginning of each semester. To join the UNCW Ambassadors you must be enrolled as a full-time student and have at least a 2.2 cumulative GPA. Freshman will be admitted according to their high school GPA's.

Anyone joining the UNCW Ambassadors should contact either Barbie Cowan, at 395-3004 (Alderman room 108), or me, at 256-9392. Our membership social will be held on September 19th in the Center Stage Cafe from 7:00 p.m. until 8:30.

Applications can be obtained at the University Union Information Desk or from Barbie Cowan.

Thank you for your interest and we will look forward to hearing from you soon!!

Professor Profile: Patricia Ann Turrisi S. Bartlett

Upon entering Dr. Turrisi's new office, the primary response is one of solemn awe.

A cursory glance around her personable space discloses evidence of her dedication to UNCW students, her drive for academic excellence, and devotion to her family.

Turrisi's certificates from Queens College, where she earned her B.A., and Pennsylvania State, the institute in which she completed both her M.A. and Ph.D. in Philosophy, are neatly hung on the wall facing the door. As a result, visitors are immediately struck by an atmosphere of academic pride and accomplishment.

A UNCW instructor for eight years, Associate Professor of Philosophy Turrisi has determinedly forged ahead on an often difficult academic path since completing her master's thesis on the "comparative studies of evolutionary nineteenth century theories focusing on American philosopher Charles S. Peirce," and her dissertation, which is an extension of her thesis entitled "Evolutionary Metaphysics: The Growth of Reasonableness in Nature, Mind, and Science."

She has developed and taught a variety of unique courses, such as Issues in Humanity and Technology, which will be offered in the Spring 1995 semester. Other classes conducted by Turrisi are Philosophy of Evolution (Spring '95) and Issues in Personal Identity, which is a colloquium for majors of Philosophy and Religion that "unites the two disciplines."

The versatile Turrisi views herself as "primarily a logic teacher," within the realm of all the courses she teaches and thinks of her classes as a "laying out of equipment" for students to examine and employ.

Perspective students can expect "to learn some things, rigid ways of understanding the world, and to be really challenged" in her classes.

The majority of Turrisi's sessions are conducted through shared discussions which guide students to incorporate "tools for thinking [and] learning how to speak about specific agendas using these tools."

Turrisi, whose only instructional low point is deciding student grades, says she loves the opportunity for student-teacher interaction because it provides the "chance for [her] to learn something from [her] students."

A proponent of interdisciplinary instruction, Turrisi would like to see provides the "chance for [her] to learn something from [her] students."

A proponent of interdisciplinary instruction, Turrisi would like to see more students benefit from the combined efforts of teams of instructors from different academic disciplines.

As Associate Director of the Honors Scholars Program, which began its first year this semester, Turrisi, along with the program's Director, Dr. Diane Levy, has been able to integrate some of her instructional ideals in the classroom.

She is currently teaching an interdisciplinary Honors Seminar with Psychology instructor, Dr. Julian Keith, called The Examined Life: Discovery and Process, to the freshmen Honors Scholars student.

Turrisi's enthusiasm for Honors Scholars is obvious as she discusses the innumerable positive possibilities open to incoming freshmen who are accepted into program. Honors Scholars offers opportunities for scholarships, co-curricular events, study abroad, out-of-town trips, and even a resident housing section.

In addition to her efforts in "creating [this] program from the ground up," as a revolutionary freshmen experience, Turrisi would like to "develop an active mentor program," involving UNCW senior students and faculty members.

"I see this office as a talent agency," says Turrisi.

Although the development of the Honors Scholars Program and her courses have dominated much of her time lately, Turrisi is also a member of the Academic Standards Committee, the Coordinator of Science, Humanities, and Society Minor, and a Faculty Senator.

During UNCW's Convocation 1994, Turrisi received one of the Chancellor's Teaching Excellence Awards. ***

Sea Line Piloted—Successful Easier Phone Registration On Sea Line In The Near Future

BY AMANDA JESSE

Staff Writer

In addition to the current options the Sea Line Information service offers, students will soon be able to schedule classes via telephone by the Spring 1995 semester.

The Sea Line registration feature was piloted on August 23 when the new transfer students scheduled for their classes. There were about 400 students in this piloting group. Each student was asked to go to an assigned phone and register through the Sea Line system. When asked if the registration was successful, Assistant Registrar Bonnie Howard said, "It went great. We surveyed the students and we had a 95 percent excellence rate on our evaluation."

Although students were assigned to different phones for the pilot of Sea Line registration, Howard said that when the system is used in the Spring, students can access the Sea Line registration from any phone in the world. Statistics from other universities show that an average of 90 percent of their students use phone registration. Howard expects UNCW's statistics to be about the same.

According to Howard, the Sea Line registration will not only make scheduling easier for students but it will decrease the traffic through the registrar's office during scheduling periods. With less people scheduling through the registrar's office, the office will be able to concentrate on those students who need individualized help with their schedule.

In creating the Sea Line registration feature, UNCW looked at other phone registration systems in North Carolina such as North Carolina State University's TRACS system. Howard said, "We talked to almost all the schools in North Carolina, but we wrote our own system."

Preregistration for the spring semester will begin in early November. The registrar's office will be sending detailed information about the phone registration process to student post office boxes when the spring schedule book is available.

Current services available on Sea Line are a grade inquiry and access to a list of your class schedule. The Sea Line can be accessed by dialing 350-4246 and is available from 7:00 AM through 10:00 PM.

Preparing for the GRE?

A one-session workshop will be presented on three different dates for students preparing to take the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) in October or December 1994.

Workshop dates and times are: Wednesday, Sept. 14 from 4:00 to 5:30 p.m.; Thursday, Sept. 15 from 5:00 to 6:30 p.m.; and Friday, Sept. 16 from 2:00 to 3:30 p.m. Times and dates are tentative, look for posters in academic buildings next week. All workshop sessions will be held in S&B, room 108.

GRE scores are required for application to a variety of graduate programs, including many at UNCW. Sponsored by the Department of Psychology and the Graduate School, Dr. Robert T. Brown will give an overview of the GRE Aptitude Test including content and scoring, and he will provide suggestions on both preparing and taking the test. Some review materials will be provided.

GRE information/application booklets are available at the Student Development Center in Westside Hall.

The Coctails: Sounds from the Past

BY J. TRENT LEONARD
A&E editor

A little over two years ago, a new and refreshing sound burst onto the scene of Chicago's nightlife. In some circles it was called "the new thing." This "new thing" was the sound of a new and exciting band known across the Midwest as the Coctails, a quartet that relocated to Chicago from a city another planet away (Kansas City). They are heavily influenced by the pop/jazz culture of the 1950's and 60's and refract it back in weirdly and highly distorted forms. "We started as out as a joke band," says guitarist/drummer Archer Prewitt. "But we're trying to get away from that." The four musicians met while studying at the Kansas City Art Institute. They later emerged as the Coctails with each member donning a lemon-yellow velvet jacket. Incorporating pop jazz, free jazz, surf music, British-invasion pop, folk, polka, and other, lesser known music forms, they released two albums, on black vinyl of course. On the Texas label Hi-Ball Records, the first album, Hip Hip Hooray!, was released and was soon followed by the second, Here Now Today.

Besides Archer, the band includes Barry Phipps (electric bass, stand-up bass, and saxophone), John Upturch (clarinet, banjo, bass, and various saxophones), and Mark Greenberg (drums, organ, electric piano, vibes, and accordion). While in concert, they rotate on these various instruments in a "Chinese fire drill" performance style. "There's no frontman in the group. We would rather be a band of four musicians where each member feels vital," says Barry. Mark also adds, "A web of dependency is created." The band, along with two other artists, Giselle and Valeria, live just west of Chicago's downtown skyscrapers in a communal loft where they create their music and the various Coctails' merchandise (buttons, dolls, storybooks, calendars, and posters). We all know that far more money is made from merchandising than the actual act itself! Having listened to a copy of the Coctails' latest CD, Peel, I must conclude that their sound is unique at the very least. Their sound transcends any reference to a stereotypical '50's or '60's style: the style is unique unto itself. The term "lounge music" that has come to be identified with the Coctails should be extended to cover a new and hilariously outrageous genre of music, which I shall resist the urge to coin.

The Coctails will be performing locally at the Mad Monk on Friday, September 9. If you are at all interested in a new and refreshing style, do yourself and them a favor and go and experience it live.

Sex and Summer Reading

BY NICKI LEONE
Staff Writer

Executives in the movie business say that sex sells. Book publishers must be taking heed of this advice. How else are we to explain the sudden blossoming of the "erotic" anthology? These anthologies range from the very daring, like "Yellow Silk," a compilation of writings from the pages of Yellow Silk, which is a magazine devoted to erotic literature, or Body of Love by Tee Corinne to more mainstream collections such as Fiona Pitt-Kethley's The Literary Companion to Sex.

Don't let your unfamiliarity with these works daunt you from experiencing erotica. Yellow Silk is a publication with high literary standards which features works by well-known artists, such as Marilyn Hacker and Marge Piercy. Tee Corinne has long been recognized as a premier photographer of the erotic and she is the author of Dreams of a Woman Who Loved Sex, a collection of stories that will leave you panting. The Literary Companion to Sex is an ambitious project which spans written history and includes everything from Sappho to Lisa Alther. There may be a few works you have never heard of, such as Sujata Bhatt's Shirdi, but there are also many writings you might expect, like The Kama Sutra. Pitt-Kethley's strong point is ferreting out odd minor pieces written in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. These are works which you would not be likely to encounter without thorough research. However, The Literary Companion to Sex is less adventurous about the twentieth century, perhaps because there is much more current erotica to choose from.

Along the same lines as Pitt-Kethley's text is Erotic Literature: Twenty-Four Centuries of Sensual Writing, edited by Jane Mills. This is more of a reference book, which includes interesting discussions concerning the evolution of the erotic preceding each chapter. Like The Literary Companion to Sex, Erotic Literature is divided into time periods and, unfortunately, the twentieth century again suffers. Mills does include a passage by Monique Wittig, an almost exclusively erotic author, who is rarely mentioned in these anthologies.

Erotic Literature's twentieth century chapter also deserves recognition for singling out writers whose primary genre is the erotic, such as Genet, Henry Miller, Collette, Nin, Adrienne Rich, Burroughs, and Pat Califia. Perhaps the best collection of modern erotica is the American Erotica of 1993, edited by the indomitable Susie Bright. There are both familiar and obscure names in this text. After reading Bright's anthology, few followers of the genre would argue with her knowledge about sex and erotica. Not all erotic anthologies are comprised of works by numerous authors. A few daring souls have released collections of composed entirely of their own writings. For example, Pagan Kennedy's Stripping and Other Stories has just been released by High Risk Publications, which produced an excellent anthology of its own called, simply, High Risk.

Another writer, Dorothy Allison, who made waves with Bastard Out of Carolina, has written a wonderful collection of short stories titled Trash. I especially liked the last story, "A Lesbian Appetite," in which the female character recalls her various lovers by the foods she ate with each of them.

This review would not be complete without mentioning two large tomes, Esquires Lust, Violence, Sin, Magic, edited by Rust Hills and Playboy Stories, edited by Alice Turner. While these collections cannot be faulted for their quality, as big publications with fine reputations for printing excellent fiction, they are not erotic anthologies. The main attraction for readers of these texts is that many of the stories found in them will not have been printed elsewhere.

Volleyball

The UNC Wilmington volleyball squad will compete in a pair of matches this week, highlighted by the 1994 home opener Wednesday with East Carolina at Trash Coliseum. The Lady Seahawks then play at Charleston on Thursday, Sept. 8, at 7 p.m.

UNCW tipped off the new season with a trio of contests last weekend in the UNC Tournament in Asheville, NC. The Lady Seahawks opened the tournament with a win over the host Bulldogs, 8-15, 15-12, 15-13, 15-10 on Friday. On Saturday, UNC Charlotte downed the Lady Seahawks, 15-6, 14-16, 15-2, 15-6, and eventual tournament champion Appalachian State handed UNCW another loss, 15-5, 15-13, 15-6.

Junior outside hitter Joie Youngblood (West Henderson HS/Hendersonville, NC) was named to the all-tournament team after collecting 32 kills, 42 digs, and 12 blocks during the three matches.

Youngblood leads the Lady Seahawks in kills (32), total attempts (88) and blocks (12). She is tied with fellow junior Leslie Noulzeak (Walter Johnson HS/Bethesda, Md.) for the team lead with 42 digs each. Sophomore setter Ginger Moon (Quince Orchard HS/Gaithersburg, Md.) has amassed 84 assists thus far, and senior middle hitter Debby Taydus (Northwood HS/Pittsboro, NC) has a team-high four service aces.

Women's Soccer

The UNC Wilmington women's soccer team will host Radford on Friday, September 9 at 5 p.m. at Brooks Field. The Lady Seahawks were blanked, 2-0, at Towson State last Saturday, in UNCW's debut as an intercollegiate program. Freshman Jaime Betts (Millbrook HS/Raleigh, N.C.) and sophomore Missy Ronemus (Page HS/Greensboro, N.C.) led the UNCW attack with three shots apiece. Freshman Kelli Foreman (Providence HS/Charlotte, N.C.) and junior Meredith Lindsey (South Lakes HS/Reston, Va.) added one shot each. Freshman goal keeper, Isabel Bordo (New Hanover HS/Wilmington, N.C.) had a game-high 16 saves.

UNCW makes its conference debut on Wednesday, Sept. 14, against East Carolina at Brooks Field.

Cross Country

Cosch Jim Sprecher and the UNC Wilmington cross country teams, which took part in East Carolina's Hokum Karum race last weekend, host the 9th Annual Seahawk Invitational this weekend at Brooks Field.

Four teams will compete in the Seahawk Invitational, including the host Seahawks, South Carolina, Liberty and Duke. The Gamecocks are expected to be the favorites for both races.

UNCW swept the men's and women's races in the ECU Hokum Karum over the weekend. Thomas Coughlin and Frank Gagliano combined for a 38:37 time for first place in the men's race. Shannon Williamson and Heather Fenton collected a 33:49 to finish second in the women's division.

In last year's Seahawk Invitational, Virginia Tech, behind Mike Cox (24:58) won the men's race with 19 points. South Carolina took the women's side with 28 points, sparked by Sue McGhie (18:10), who returns to defend her title.

William and Mary's Brendan McCarthy hold the men's course record with a 24:48 time in 1986. Janet Smith and Mary Ann Caraher of N.C. State each clocked a 15:59 in 1988 for the women's course mark.

9th Annual Seahawk Invitational Schedule: College Men (8:00 AM), College Women (8:45 AM), High School Girls (9:30 AM), High School Boys (10:00 AM), and High School Junior Varsity (10:30 AM).

Men's Soccer

UNC Wilmington's men's soccer team is still looking for its first win of the new season after dropping a pair of contests in The University of Central Florida's UCF Soccer Classic last weekend in Orlando, Fla.

The Seahawks, beginning their second season under Coach Keith Cammidge, suffered a 5-0 loss to Stetson in a first-round game before, 2-0, to the host Knights on the second day.

UNCW returns to Brooks Field for a two-game home stand, beginning Thursday with a matchup against visiting Chowan. The Seahawks also host UNC Greensboro this Saturday a 1 p.m.

In the games over the weekend, the Seahawks sputtered offensively, failing to find the net in the first two games of the campaign. Stetson outshot the Seahawks, 13-9, and UCF owned a 13-8 advantage in shots.

Statistically, Nikko Schubert and Bucky Corban lead the team in shots with six and five respectively. Josh Hapner and Shawn McCallister have shared time in goal, but Hapner suffered a hand injury and is listed as questionable for this week's games.

Women's Soccer Gets First Win!

The UNC Wilmington women's soccer squad logged the first win of its inaugural season on Tuesday, shutting out Chowan College 3-0, on the road.

Freshman forward Margaret Merrill (East Mecklenburg H.S./Charlotte, N.C.) scored the first goal in Lady Seahawk history during the first half from an assist by junior forward Janna Walker (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.). Walker put UNCW ahead for good with her goal, also during the first half, taking a cross from freshman defender Jamie Betts (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.). Merrill then capped the victory with her second goal of the contest, the team's third in the first half, heading in a free kick served by junior forward Meredith Lindsey (South Lakes H.S./Reston, Va.).

The Lady Seahawks outshot Chowan 14-1, and freshman goalkeeper Isabel Bordo (New Hanover H.S./Wilmington, N.C.) picked up her first collegiate shutout. UNC Wilmington ties its record at 1-1 on the season.

Next up, in their home debut, the Lady Seahawks will host Radford on Friday, September 9.

NCAA May Allow Student Athletes To Work

CARLSBAD, Calif.- The NCAA Council recently voted to support a number of rules aimed at improving the welfare of student athletes, including a measure that would allow scholarship students to work part-time during the school year.

Although the new pieces of legislation must be voted on at the 1995 convention in January, rules that come out of the NCAA Council are usually approved.

At the Council's California meeting in early August, the following measures were approved:

- Student-athletes on scholarship would be able to earn up to $1,500 per year while working part-time during the school year. Current NCAA rules prohibit scholarship athletes from holding part-time jobs.

- Student-athletes would be able to keep the entire amount of their Pell Grant from the federal government. Currently, NCAA limits athletes' share of the grant to what it figures is the cost of attending that particular college. Regular students keep the entire amount, which is determined by their financial need.

- Each college campus would have its own student-advisory committee.

The Council also voted to reject a number of proposals as well, including a move by Pac-10 Conference officials to repeal a provision that allows basketball players to regain their college eligibility within 30 days of entering the professional basketball draft.

A proposal to ban spring football was rejected for Division I schools but was accepted for Division II schools as a way to help cut increasing costs.

Coach Wainwright Hopes To Bring B-Ball Team To New Levels

By Amanda Jesse

Staff Writer

Taking over for former UNCW basketball coach Kevin Eastman, Chicago native Jerry Wainwright is ready to take the Seahawk basketball team to new levels.

"I've had two dreams come true in life," said Coach Wainwright. "One is that my wife said yes when I asked her to marry me, and the second is that they asked me to coach here. When I walk into Trask everyday, I think to make sure it's not a dream."

Starting his own college playing career at Morton Junior College in Cicero, Illinois, Wainwright credits the beginning of his career to his first college coach Bill Gois who he claims, "kind of turned him around." After playing at Morton for awhile, Wainwright then finished his bachelor's degree at Colorado College in Colorado Springs and earned his Master's degree at the University of Denver. Since college, Wainwright has coached in three high schools, at Xavier University in Cincinnati, and then settled in at Wake Forest, coaching under Bob Stack. During his last four years as a coach at Wake Forest, his team made four NCAA appearances.

"[The appearances] obviously gave me an opportunity to be seen and evaluated," said Wainwright. After 15 years of coaching, he said that he is both privileged and blessed to have an opportunity to coach the Seahawks.

"I think we have an opportunity to be good," said Wainwright. "But those are just words. We have to translate them into actions. Our number one goal is that we have to be a tough team to beat. My foremost goal is to let every team we play know that we will not beat ourselves."

According to Wainwright, the basketball team has both experience and talent. With six players over six foot-six inches in height and 220-plus pounds, the coach is optimistic that the team has potential. "Every young man on our team is really a student-athlete," said Wainwright. "I think the people before me did a good job of recruiting people."

Coach Wainwright parallels the goal of the basketball team to Dr. Gerald Shinn's convocation quote from North Carolina's official song: "We were once weak, but now we are strong, working on being great."

"Kevin Eastman brought the basketball team from weak to strength. I've got to motivate these kids to take them to the next level," said Wainwright. "In order to do that, we have to be the best conditioned team in the school's history."

On the student body in general, Wainwright believes that the students are an important part of the basketball team's success. He said, "I think we could put Trask on the map with student involvement. We just have to give them a team. We have to make Trask a special place to play. One of the things I remember when I walked into Trask 10 years ago was a great atmosphere. I'm going to do everything I can to represent the school in the right way."

In general, Coach Wainwright appears to project a feeling of optimism about the Seahawk basketball team right down to a plaque that hangs his office that reads: "Don't ever give up. Don't ever give up." When asked whether he will be a successful coach this year, he said, "I do believe I've got what it takes."

Don't Forget..... Late Night at the Gazebo

The Office of Campus Recreation will be holding its first Late Night at the Gazebo on Friday, Sept. 9 from 9:00 p.m.-1:00 a.m.

This alcohol alternative program will feature a live band, food, doubles sand volleyball tournament, 3 on 3 basketball tournament, club sport demonstrations, 4 on 4 razzle-dazzle flag football tournament, "Games, Games, and more Games," and a home run derby.

There will be plenty to eat and drink, so come early and stay late. The first 150 students to arrive will receive a Late Night '94 t-shirt.

SGA Approves New Student Center

BY JUNE ORAVITS

Staff Writer

UNCW's student senate passed a resolution Monday night to back construction of a new recreational center estimated to cost up to $10 million.

Funding for the recreational center will come only from student fees and private donors, according to Richard Mullendore, associate vice chancellor for student affairs, in a report issued by the Morning Star on Tuesday.

State money will not go toward building the recreational facility; instead, state money goes toward academic classroom buildings.

Amid complaints that student fees are already too high, the new recreational center could add an additional $75 to student fees currently being assessed. This could show up on student bills as early as 1996.

According to Mullendore, official athletic programs will not fund recreational athletics. Operational expenses for the new sports center are estimated to be approximately $400,000 per year.

"We're way behind institutions of our size by not having a recreational facility open to our students all day long," Mullendore said. "I think this project is critical and very important."

Currently, $159 out of current student fees goes to physical facilities, athletics, and physical activities at UNCW. The problem, according to Mullendore, is that the facilities are in so much demand, recreational athletes are having difficulties finding available space.

The senate's 11-6 vote supports the notion of allowing recreational athletes access to facilities without competing with physical education classes, sports teams, and athletic clubs. Those wanting to use Trask Coliseum and Hanover Hall have had to compete for time and space with organized athletic functions.

The new recreational facility would allow open recreation for students, faculty, and staff at UNCW with scheduled events for intramural sports.

The Morning Star reported that Sonja Rowe, a senior senate, "opposes a second recreation center unless it's open to graduates who helped pay for it."

Dan Sullivan, vice president of the Student Government Association, said that the graduate students Rowe is talking about are those who matriculate from the university—not students in graduate programs.

Matriculating graduates will be allowed to use the new facilities as space is available.

Mullendore said the process of building the new recreational facility is not completely mapped out. The process will be done in three phases. First attention will be placed on the recreation center for multipurpose use. Second phase will consist of an aquatic facility, and finally, the third phase will be addressing future needs as they arise.

The plan has not yet been approved by the Board of Trustees and it is uncertain whether or not the state will be involved in the approval process. Along with Mullendore, Rex Pringle, director of campus recreation, is working with students, faculty, and staff to develop program needs.

More Grads Make Grade On Student Loan Payback

Washington DC - Defaults on students loans are declining as indebted graduates scramble to "do what's right" and the government uses new tools to dig into their wages and tax refunds in case they don't.

Taxpayers are expected to spend $2 billion this year paying off uncollected student loans, down from a peak of $3.6 billion in 1991, Education Secretary Richard Riley said Thursday.

"After years of rising defaults, its going the other way, he said.

The proportion of loans in default dropped to 15 percent in 1992 - the latest year for which figures are available - from a high of 22.4 percent two years ago.

"What it demonstrates is that the country is not made up of a bunch of people trying to con the federal government," said Leo Kornfeld, deputy assistant education secretary. "The large majority of people are trying to do what's right."

As usual, federally backed loans "or students of beauty, hair and cosmetology schools were among the hardest to recover."

The government took its biggest gamble in Nevada, where three gaming schools joined a long list of other institutions to drive up the state's default rate on student loans to 34 percent, by far the country's highest.

Louisiana (23.1 percent), Connecticut (22.3), Alaska (21.1), Florida (20.9) and California (20.1) were the other states where more than one in five student loans was in default.

North Carolina's default rate was 14.3 percent.

Borrowers in Montana, North Dakota and Vermont were the best at paying up. Fewer than 6 percent of ex-students in those states defaulted on loans - defined as going at least six months without payment.

The government has toughened student loan rules in the past few years, lowering the benchmark for penalizing schools with high default rates, garnishing the wages and income-tax refunds of delinquent borrowers and making it harder for them to get credit cards and other loans.

This year, 477 schools risk losing eligibility to participate in the main student loan package - the Federal Family Education Loan Programs - because their default rates have been at least 25 percent for three straight years.

UNCW Professor Testifies At Pennsylvania House

The Harmful Effects That Link Rap Music To Violent Behavior And Attitude

BY DONNA PASSMORE

Staff Writer

A University of North Carolina at Wilmington psychology professor who found a link between "gangster rap" videos and violent behavior and attitudes testified on Monday, September 12, before the Pennsylvania House of Representatives' Judiciary Committee in Harrisburg.

The committee is looking at legislation which would limit minor's access to music which contains explicit sexual and/or violent content. If passed, the measure would go beyond the warning labels that already appear on some CD's, to actually prohibiting teens from buying the products.

UNCW's psychology professor James Johnson's findings suggest that there might be some justification to this legislation.

"I am certainly concerned about the potential consequences of young people being able to purchase this type of music. They can't go out and purchase pornography, and some of this music certainly comes close to being verbal pornography. A lot of times, kids don't realize what's bad for them," he said.

Johnson's study is titled "Violent Attitudes and Deferred Academic Aspirations: Deleterious effects of Exposure to Rap Music" and will appear in an upcoming edition of Basic and Applied Social Psychology.

In it he studied the reactions of 45 African-American boys aged 11-16 from Wilmington's inner city. He randomly assigned them to three groups. One group viewed a half-hour of violent rap videos while another viewed a half-hour of nonviolent rap videos. The third group did not watch any videos. Johnson then asked the teenagers questions which looked at their attitudes towards academics and their propensity for violence.

Johnson learned that the boys who viewed the violent rap videos had a greater acceptance of the use of violence, had a higher self-reported probability of engaging in future violence and expressed greater acceptance of the use of violence toward women.

And unexpectedly, he found that those teenagers who viewed both violent and nonviolent rap videos indicated that if given a choice they preferred to be like a young man with fancy clothes and an expensive car rather than like one who was studying to be a lawyer, and, furthermore, they didn't think the student had a chance of meeting his goal.

Johnson's study of rap music and violence was the first of its kind, but like earlier studies that pointed out the deleterious effects of television violence, the researcher wonders if his work will make a difference.

Plus, it has not been without its critics. In an Associated Press story, New York veteran rap publicist Bill Adler said he'd never be convinced that watching rap videos increases violent behavior, and Jeff Chang, who edits a Los Angeles-based magazine which focuses on the hip-hop culture, said much of the controversy surrounding violent rap is racially based.

Johnson doesn't believe that, and he pointed out that some of the most vocal critics of rap music are members of the black community and civil rights groups including the NAACP and the National Black Women's Political Caucus.

"Given that homicide is a leading cause of death among young black males, I am certainly concerned about the potential effects of exposure to music which condones, and indeed, glorifies violence," he said. "There is certainly extensive empirical evidence that we are effected by what we're exposed to."

Districts And Voting Equality Conference At UNCW

The University Of North Carolina at Wilmington (UNCW) is sponsoring a conference on Districts and Voting Equality on September 24. The issue of congressional districting has been very controversial during the recent past and will peak as an issue during the next few months.

A diverse group of expert panelists will focus on this issue from its geographic, judicial and political perspectives. The conference will feature a free public lecture by nationally known scholar and educator on minority voting rights Professor Abigail Thernstrom and a luncheon address by NCCU Chancellor Julius Chambers.

The issue at stake is how to create a fair electoral system based on majority rule while respecting the rights of the minority. The proposed solutions are controversial. As background, in the 1960's congress began to forcibly address the issue of minority rights in the electoral political process with the major Civil Rights Act of 1965. In 1982, it added significant new protections to minority voting rights and in 1990, Congress and the Department Of Justice mandated minority congressional districts to be drawn. As a result, in 1992, minority-majority districts were created to redress past electoral discrimination against protected categories of citizens.

The issue of representation was the most divisive and controversial at the Constitutional Convention of 1787, and it has now returned to the forefront of political controversy and discourse. Representation of the people in their government, by what method, to what end and to whose benefit has again become a significant issue in the public dialogue.

Hosted by UNCW, this conference will give new insight concerning this continuous issue.

Black Umfolosi Brings Exciting Zulu Dance To Thalian Hall

THALIAN HALL PRESS

Black Umfolosi Performs Song and Dance From Zimbabwe at Thalian Hall

Direct from their appearance at the Kennedy Center, Black Umfolosi brings their exciting combination of centuries-old Zulu dance and haunting "imbube" style singing to the Main Stage of Thalian Hall for one performance only on Thursday, September 29, at 8:00 p.m.

Black Umfolosi, now on world tour from their home country of Zimbabwe, are considered to be one of the finest performers of South African music and dance today. This eight-man group performs in the capella singing style first popularized by Ladysmith Black Mambazo on Paul Simon's "Graceland."

Black Umfolosi is also involved with a large-scale education project on AIDS, carrying the message about care for AIDS suffers to factories, farms and villages through out Zimbabwe. While in Wilmington, the company will conduct workshop and AIDS education discussion with members of the Drum and Drill Team and History Club at Community Boys and Girls Club on Nixon Street.

Tickets are $10 in advance and $12 at the door; tickets for youths ages 16 and under and students with a valid UNCW ID are $6; This program is sponsored in part by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts through the Southern Arts Federation and by Grassroots Funds from the North Carolina Arts Council and administered by the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear. For tickets for this performance, call or visit the Center Box Office at Thalian Hall, 310 Chestnut Street, 343-3664 or toll free for long distance customers at 1-800-5233-2820.

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Fort Collins, CO - More than 250 students who planned to earn their MBA without leaving their living room have learned that the long-distance learning program in which they were enrolled has been unplugged.

Colorado State University and Mind Extension University have terminated an agreement to provide long-distance master of business administration courses to television viewers throughout the nation.

The decision to call it quits came after a disagreement arose between CSU and MEU as to how the classes were to be presented. In addition to billing problems and customer confusion, MEU officials, however, say that they were unwilling to sacrifice academic integrity and simplify content.

According to Jamie Switzer, director for distance education for the CSU college of business, MEU officials wanted only 10 hours of lecture time per course. CSU requires at least 45 hours of teaching time, and no compromise could be reached.

MEU, a cable network that offers classes to 36,000 students nationwide, will not be offering a master's in business administration this fall as a result of the decision. CSU, on the other hand, will continue its long-distance degree program, but the classes will be available on videotape not cable television.

Switzer says the change will help simplify the process for participating students. "We telephoned every student enrolled in the program and, across the board, responses to the changes were positive."

Almost 260 students were enrolled in CSU's MBA program through MEU. The educational network currently is carried on 985 cable systems and is available to 26 million viewers.

PYGMY MAMMOTH FOUND

Ventura, CA - When Dr. Thomas Rockwell took a graduate student out to Santa Rosa Island off the coast of Southern California to study rock formations, he figured they would be looking at fairly common minerals.

What the San Diego State geology professor did find, however, could be a once-in-a-lifetime discovery.

Rockwell and his student, Kevin Colson, discovered a pygmy mammoth skeleton while examining marine rock formations for the Channel Islands National Park earlier this summer. Rockwell estimates that the mammoth's remains are between 25,000 and 75,000 years old.

While looking for a rock sample, Rockwell and Colson stumbled across the skull and shoulder blades of the mammoth, which were sticking up out of the sand. In addition to the skull, the mammoth's vertebral column, shoulder blade and pelvis are exposed.

National Park Service officials and local geologists believe that the rest of the skeleton lies within the ground. If an excavation planned turns up an entire specimen, it would be the first complete pygmy mammoth skeleton ever assembled.

Pygmy mammoths resembled mainland mammoths but were usually half the size. They ranged from 4 to 8 feet in height compared to the 12 to 14 foot height of mainland mammoths.

Paleontologists agree that pygmy mammoths swam from mainland to islands all over the earth, including those off Southern California's coast. Once there, they evolved into miniature versions of their mainland ancestors, eventually splitting off into a variety of different species.

The pygmy mammoth's bones will be taken to Northern Arizona University where they will be preserved before being sent to a museum. The National Park Service has indicated that they will cast a model of the entire skeleton for display at the island.

TEXAS MBA's Pitch In

Austin, TX - Before first-year University of Texas MBA students could settle into their new classroom routines, the 500 students were asked to pick up paint brushes, garbage bags or work gloves and hit the streets of Austin.

As part of the school's week-long orientation program, students were required to participate in service projects throughout the Austin community.

"For years, MBA programs have been lecturing students about community responsibility," says Starr Lee, the Texas MBA Orientation chairperson and a second-year MBA student. "So this year, for the first time, we've made community service projects part of our orientation program."

Working in cooperation with the Mayor's office and other local organizations, Lee and her peers organized a variety of community service projects, including picking up trash in local parks and thoroughfares, lending a hand to local food banks and farms and painting a school for at-risk children.

A LANGUAGE BIAS

Gainesville, FL - The people responsible for carrying out programs to emphasize diversity on college and university campuses may themselves be prejudiced against groups other than whites, according to a new University of Florida study.

For the study, 157 Caucasian student affairs personnel from three state universities in Florida were interviewed. A majority were found to have negative reactions to Asian, Hispanic and African-American accents.

"There is an increased emphasis on diversity on campus," says UF doctoral student Sheri Dressler, who conducted the study and is director of a student affairs program at the University of Central Florida. "But no one has ever assessed the people who will be responsible for setting up these programs and how well they deal with diversity."

To test reactions, Dressler taped four students, each with a different accent. Each tape contained identical words, and the only difference was the accent. The accents used were Asian, Hispanic, African American and network English, defined as the type of English used by newscasters and considered for the study to be the standard.

The tapes were played for student affairs workers at the University of Florida, the University of Central Florida in Orlando and the University of South Florida in Tampa.

"The response was overwhelming," she says. "The subjects did respond prejudicially. And it didn't matter which accent it was. They treated those with the Asian, Hispanic and African-American accents equally differently from the English voice."

Center Alleviates Parents' Dilemma

Day care now available on Johnston County Community College

BY ANDREW D. SINSEL

News Editor

The pressures of college life are aggravated when worries about child care enter the picture. The Children's Center at Johnston County Community College can help alleviate some of those worries.

Open 15 hours a day, the center can accommodate any school schedule. "We're open from 6:30AM until 9:30PM and we provide all flexible scheduling, so that parents can schedule anything from two to 10 hours of care per day at least two days a week," said Sara McElbenny, Children's Center manager.

Flexible scheduling is what allows the center to take children for a minimum of two hours a day, something that would be difficult for other centers to do. "The art of flexible scheduling is probably the most unique aspect of our center over any center in the community," said McElbenny. "You just can't be a profit center and operate like that, so it's essential that we are not-for-profit."

The JCCC Board of Trustees has approved a $3.7 million expansion of the Children's Center. With the proposed expansion, the Children's Center will accommodate even more children and parents. The center currently has a licensed capacity of 80 children at any one time. With the expansion, the licensed capacity would increase to 137 children.

The expansion will also allow the center to accept infants. The center now takes children from 18 months to 10 years old. That age will be lowered to six weeks when the expansion is completed. "We get an average, I'd say of one to two calls a day asking about infant care," said McElbenny. An infant room, part of the expansion, will have a capacity of nine infants, but will actually serve more than that. "We'll likely serve 20-30 people who need infant care at different times," said McElbenny.

The Children's Center expansion is part of the 10 year master plan the Board is preparing for an April 1995 bond measure.

The center caters to both students and faculty, with 60 percent of spaces reserved for students. Students also get a lower rate than staff and faculty. "We try to charge the lowest rate we can for students, that's one set of rates; and we try to charge market rates for (school) employees," said McElbenny. The rate for employees is similar to what can be found in the community. "If anything, we are slightly higher than area centers to try not to undercut them or take any of their business," said McElbenny.

The Leadership Center Reaching For New Summits

BY THOMAS E. CHILDS JR.

Staff Writer

The Leadership Center is known for the various programs that it offers for students. One such program is the four-year-old "Global Volunteer," which offers students the chance to visit locales throughout the country and the world. It also gives them a chance to make a difference for someone in desperate need.

According to Cathy Birmingham, associate director of the University Union for Leadership development and Campus Activities, the organization serves two main purposes: to do a project and to experience a different culture at the same time.

"We get so used to seeing poverty where we live," says Birmingham. "when you see it in a different place, it helps you understand it better."

The student volunteers have been to the Appalachian Mountains working on a home that had no indoor plumbing and needed the roof repaired. They also went to Barbados where they fixed up an orphanage, and painted a YMCA building in Jamaica.

The organization will be having their first meeting on Wednesday, September 21 at 5:00 PM in University Union 103. If you would like more information, call 395-3827.

RAPE CRISIS CENTER

VOLUNTEER TRAINING PROGRAM

The Rape Crisis Center is Dedicated to providing crisis intervention services for sexual assault victims.

Volunteer training is scheduled for September 8 - October 4, 1994 on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, 5:30 - 8:00 pm at 3333 Wrightsville Avenue. The educational sessions will prepare volunteers to act as victim's advocates.

SCHEDULE

Thursday, September 8, 5:30 pmOrientation

Orientation will provide an opportunity for new volunteers to become acquainted with each other and the Rape Crisis Center. The educational focus will be: RCC, goals and objectives, Coastal Horizon's Center overview, confidentiality laws. Materials for the training will be distributed.

Tuesday, September 13, 6:30-9:00 pmCrime of Rape/Crisis Intervention

Educational session will focus on the criminal aspect of rape and crisis intervention counseling for victims. Crime of rape: profile of the rapist and effect of sexual assault on the victim. Counseling: Dynamics of a crisis, victim's advocate's role in crisis intervention including responsive listening and telephone counseling.

Thursday, September 15, 5:30 pmChild Sexual Abuse Victims

Participants will learn about possible indicators of sexual abuse, investigative procedure and Department of Social Services mandated reporting procedure. Laraine Cutrell, DSS Social Work Supervisor, will present "Child Sexual Abuse Victims."

Tuesday, September 20, 5:30 pmHospital Protocol

Volunteers will visit New Hanover Regional Medical Center Emergency Department where the medical staff will provide an informational program on the hospital procedure for sexual assault victims. The collection of evidence by medical personnel will be explained.

Thursday, September 22, 5:30 pmLaw Enforcement Investigation

Detective Mike Sorg from New Hanover County Sheriff's Department will be the guest speaker, offering information about the investigation process and his experiences in investigating rape/sexual assault cases. North Carolina sexual assault statutes will be discussed.

Tuesday, September 27, 5:30 pmLegal Procedure

Assistant District Attorney John Carrier will present "Sexual Assault: A Prosecutor's Viewpoint". The program includes information about legal process, NC laws and courtroom testimony.

Thursday, September 29, 5:30 pmAftereffect of Rape

Long-term effects of rape and Rape Trauma Syndrome will be presented and discussed by Hope B. Lanier, Psy.D.

Tuesday, October 4, 5:30 pmPolicies/Procedures Documentation

Rape Crisis Center policies and procedures will be explained and discussed. Volunteers will become familiar with documentation required and they will schedule individual interviews with staff. Certificates of Completion will be awarded and refreshments served.

Volunteers bring a variety of knowledge and skills to their role as victim's advocates. The experience can be rewarding. If you are interested in attending the training program, please call!

Rape Aggression Defense

BY JASON STRICKLAND

Staff Writer

Rape Aggression Defense, or RAD, is a program implemented by the university police department solely for women. It's purpose, to teach women how to fend off would-be attackers while building assertiveness, increasing self-concept and survival tactics.

The course length is twelve hours. There are six classes which run for two hours over a three week period. The final two hours of the course is entitled Simulation. Women can match up with a certified instructor dressed in black for a realistic confrontation to apply what they have learned in the course. Although this last segment of the course is voluntary, it is an excellent way to build assurance and self-esteem.

Students interested in joining the RAD program should sign up at the police station to get a book voucher. This voucher enables them to get a course manual from the bookstore. This manual can also be used as a continuous access key to any of the RAD programs being taught in 40 other states around the country.

If you have any questions about RAD, please call the University Police at 395-3184.

Student Soliloquies

I've put off writing this column because I was leery of frightening my most tender-hearted readers away. Now I realize I have no sensitive readers at UNCW and feel no journalistic obligation to continue operating under a pretense of kindness.

Today, my little darlings, we are going to learn about Death. Actually, I won't be teaching you how to die or even suggest that you do die. So this column will be more reader-friendly than usual.

But, we have connected—got you a bit closer and it's time you took a widow's walk with me.

If you've ever had anyone for whom you cared die, then you understand the term "funereal clichés." Even if you've never had the occasion to use these clichés, you've surely heard a good number of casket clingers abuse them. These people are usually fairly easy to spot since they always arrive early, hoping to catch family members when they first glimpse the corpse.

Well, I'm about to tell you how I dealt with such sickeningly sweet obituary bounds. Read over my list and practice, practice. One day, because of the universality of Death, you'll need to know how to employ just a touch of acid to scrape these full-bodied casketers off your back.

"Bartlett's Blow-Offs for the Bereaved" (the unedited version)

They: "I know how you feel."

You: "That's sweet. If you know how I feel, then you won't be hurt when I tell you to 'Piss off!'"

They: "I'm sorry."

You: "Not as sorry as he is."

They: "At least we went quietly."

You: "He only went quietly because I held that pillow over his face. Otherwise he'd have natively kicked and screamed as he died."

They: "You're lucky—you're still young and pretty and your children are so cute."

You: "What do you consider 'bad luck'?" An axe in the forehead?

They: "He's with God now."

You: "Well, then, he won't be gone long because God knows what he put me through and He won't be able to take it."

They: "You're handling it well and you look good."

You: "I'm sorry. I was trying to look sad. It's expected of me, you know."

They: "I think he knew how I felt about him, don't you?"

You: "You should have told him anyway. Just like I should have told him the kids weren't his. We all have our little secrets, don't we?"

They: "What are you thinking?"

You: "Whew! Glad that's over. Next?"

They: "I wish I could've said 'Goodbye.'"

You: "I wish you would right now."

They: "So did he, but he was so occupied with dying. Visit him now, he's in no hurry. You were smart to wait."

They: "How are you holding up?"

You: "Like a pile of warm shit."

They: "I wish there was something I could do to help."

You: "There is, you can dig him up and trade places with him."

They: "Are you going to be alright?"

You: "Yea, the gun jammed."

They: "Doesn't he look good?"

You: "No, he looks like a dead female impersonator."

They: "He looks like he's sleeping, doesn't he?"

You: "No, sleeping people's chests rise and fall."

They: "At least he's not in any pain."

You: "No, but I am and you're the cause."

They: "You're taking it so well."

You: "Do I have an option not to take it? If so, then why don't you take it for me, friend?"

They: "At least you still have your children"

You: "I wasn't aware death came in family value packages."

They: "Losing him must have been hard for you."

You: "He isn't lost, you idiot. He's the dead guy up front."

Okay, I've probably missed a few, but you get the idea. There are specialty lists, too.

Doctor: "We did all we could."

You: "Maybe you shouldn't try so hard with the next one."

Doctor: "If there is anything I can do..."

You: "Haven't you done enough? He is dead, after all."

Doctor: "Caring for him was a privilege."

You: "You and your staff were great, too. If I can ever send any more business your way, I will."

You must understand, of course, that these quips are to be used strictly as protective measures. As a mourner, you have the innate right to slap people who make you feel worse and you can't really be held accountable—because of your grief.

When you're in mourning you aren't those mangled version of Chaucer's Pardoner. You don't owe anyone anything. Every mind-bender I've ever had sessions with assures me that "anger is normal and healthy." So be angry and leave the martyring to someone less suitable for survival.

If you want to offend someone to a friend or family member who is grieving, come up with something indicative of your shared feelings—don't use moldy, dishonest, patronizing, and offensive clichés.

I remember a close friend simply saying to me, "Hey, it's a bitch." At least she was being honest.

Here's What I Have To Say About It...

Have you noticed lately the preponderance of women's groups being organized on this campus? There's the Feminist Colloquium, the Collective for Women, Sister-Sister, and who knows what else. But why are these groups being formed?

Could it be that women have issues that aren't being addressed at UNCW? And just what are these issues?

One is the lack of child care facilities on campus. Approximately 23 percent of UNCW's student body are non-traditional students. A good portion of that figure are single parents. As any student knows (regardless of age), money is tight when you're in college. The financial strain is even more marked when you have to pay someone to take care of your child so you can attend classes. But the problem of child care is not exclusive to non-traditional students. There are a number of "traditional" students with young children. And it's not just women, there are single men who have children who need child care.

And what about the faculty? Many have young families. In addition to teaching their classes, faculty members have advising hours, departmental meetings, serve as organizational advisors, attend committee meetings, perform administrative duties, etc. Wouldn't it make sense, even if just from a logistical point of view, to have child care facilities for faculty as well?

Maternity leave at UNCW is pretty much a strange and unusual creative exercise in finding someone to cover your classes—for which the faculty member either begs or trades hours with another instructor or has to pay for that coverage out of their salary. Even though most of us think professors make tons of money affording them luxuries we imagine them to enjoy—they don't, most beginning salaries are lower than that of teachers in the public school system. It seems ironic to me that a female professor hired to teach the so-called youth of America is penalized if she produces more members of America's youth.

And people wonder why so many people resist considering teaching as a viable career?

Sick leave for faculty is much like the available "maternity leave," slim to none. Sure, you're allowed to have a baby or develop pneumonia, but since your salary (with exceptions) is paid for a nine month academic year, it's up to you to find coverage when you're absent and it's up to you to pay for that coverage.

Is it any surprise that just when you hoped the professor who coughed and hacked through your last class session would stay home with those nasty germs, he or she shows up for class two days later—still coughing and hacking? This concerns all of us as students. Do we really want a professor who is running a high temperature to grade our work, give important advice about our education, be unable to answer our questions in class because concentration went out the window along with the brain cells burning with fever?

That's certainly not what I want. I pay to get a professor's best efforts. If the professor is sick, then allow some decent consideration for sick time and coverage during those times. Don't penalize all of us.

Another issue is the question of addressing women's health care needs on campus. It's not that women think they deserve something special, no, it's that we deserve what is necessary for our bodies to function properly. Women can easily obtain birth control pills and condoms on campus, but there we're talking about only one thing—sexual responsibility. Further, women are then seen as only sexual objects.

The female body has other functions in addition to sex and those functions require regular maintenance. Besides, doesn't it seem a tad one-sided that men are not also viewed as only sexual objects? They, too, participate in sex, that's something we all do as biological organisms—we procreate. But it's not our sole reason for living healthy productive lives.

Women need to be able to obtain necessary maintenance procedures to prevent or thwart diseases such as breast or uterine cancer at a reasonable cost. This entails availing ourselves of resources such as pap smears and mammograms. We aren't talking here about a night out at the movies. None of us enjoy these procedures—we actually hate them, but we do what we have to do in order to live. Our lives depend on it. It's as simple as that.

The availability or lack of opportunities to address medical needs, child care, maternity and sick leave are just a few of the many issues facing women today. There are many more—equitable pay, advancement opportunities, etc. It seems to me that when women are forming groups on campus to find ways to meet their needs, it's symptomatic of some failure on the part of this university to address women's issues.

Don't play women's groups off as being for some elitist feminist cause, the issues they are addressing are really about healthy and happy productive human life and coexistence for all—male and female.

"You have to admit that most women who have done something with their lives have been disliked by almost everyone"

Bob Haywood's Still Point Faithful Nobodies

So I am a Nobody.
Are you a Nobody too?
I spend too much time trying to be Somebody? When being Nobody will do.

One of the greatest curses foisted upon us through the general value system of our society is the inherent and subconscious belief that one of the important goals in our human development is to wind up being Somebody. Think about it. The ever-dominant media focuses ALL its attention on people who stand out in one way or another whether in criminal activities or their sports skills or their political position. Everywhere we turn, we are confronted with presentations of people who are "outstanding" in some way or other. So we grow up wanting to be "outstanding" in some fashion—getting the best grades in class, getting elected to an office, being given an important task to do that leads to admiration by our peers and on and on. When you think about it, it is an easy dynamic to identify. If we were all suddenly turned into bees, every one of us would be ticked off if we weren't the queen bee!

Being worker bees doesn't seem to hold much worth. Being Nobody doesn't have much merit in our value system.

This week I am writing to remind us all of the incredible value that lies in our embracing "Nobediness." Really, we are truly being sold a bill of goods about the importance of being Somebody. For the last couple of years I have had the opportunity to serve in several capacities that made me feel like I was a Somebody. Those activities have come to their natural end and all of a sudden I find myself in a blue funk, feeling depressed and unimportant. Fortunately, in recent times, with prayer and meditation which are a part of my faith journey, I've come to the realization about how ego centric being Somebody is and how freeing it is to be Nobody. I have re-discovered the fact that joy and life comes from discovering and fulfilling my own personal and God-given identity and living that out with integrity. Doing that will probably never lead me to a position of imporance, at least importance as defined by the values of my society.

Again, in my prayer and meditation I found myself reminded that the Jesus whom I follow had been a Somebody (God) but became a Nobody as he walked on the earth serving the poor, the Nobodies of his world.

At the university, think of the people outside of your immediate circle of friends whom you know or know about. Then realize that the identity and power of this university is grounded in the thousands of Nobodies who go to classes, who clean the residence halls, who teach day in and day out, who work in offices, who serve as administration. These are people who do their job and, hopefully, find in that doing some congruence with their sense of their own identity and purpose in life. Such congruence generates satisfaction and even joy.

One of the things I've liked about UNCW in past years is development of ideas such as "Employee Appreciation Week." Here is one simple way where regular, normal workers at UNCW are recognized and appreciated. This is very different from UNCW's Outstanding Employee awards.

The key to the joy of being a Nobody lies in discovering the source of our personal values inside ourselves. If we realize that the importance of being Somebody is an external value that is laid on us by our society, then, discovering our internal God designed identity, surfacing our personal gifts as well as our needs leads us to an internally based sense of satisfaction with who we are, even, with our Nobodiness. There is deep satisfaction to be found in discovering and living in congruence with our internal identity. It is solid and long lasting. Being Somebody is always too fleeting and fragile.

So I am a Nobody.
Are you a Nobody too?
Don't spend too much time trying to be Somebody.
When being a Nobody will do!

Frank's Place

Frank Tascone

Hello, and thank you for stopping once again at Frank's Place. I'm out on the balcony alone today, appreciating the "fall feel" in the air. Bob is out. For you newcomers, Bob is a cat, and should not be confused with a WEET news anchor, or with our Campus Minister. I just wanted to straighten that out before we started getting any nasty calls or mail here at "FP."

Anyway, Bob is out because he is somewhat angry with me. He had his annual visit to the veterinarian today. I'm not worried. This little misunderstanding always follows "the visit" and usually clears up, ironically, right around the time that Bob tires of stalking the pigeons in Mrs. Ferrante's bird bath, and returns for a "real" meal. I must admit, I do feel a little guilty; not so much because of Bob's pain (I know it's for his own good), but because I really enjoy taking him to the vet. It's a break in the routine—a mild escape from the priorities of daily living.

Each year is pretty much the same deal. I receive the reminder notice: "Bob is due for his rabies, distemper, and feline leukemia booster. An appointment should be made at your earliest convenience." I get a kick out of the fact that these notices are addressed to Bob. I almost feel like I'm given a carbon copy, just in case he doesn't remember to put the appointment on his calendar. I post the reminder on the refrigerator while Bob goes about his daily activities (nap—eat—nap—go outside—nap—come back inside—nap—eat—nap—chew on houseplants—nap).

Before leaving the apartment on BBV ("Bring Bob to Vet") day, I make sure Bob stays inside (Bob has a way of making himself "unavailable" when he's really needed). He does not like deviations in the daily order of things. When I refuse to acknowledge his longing stare out the sliding glass door, he begins to scratch, nonchalantly, at the base of the door as if to say, "Oh that's ok, I'll just let myself out..." then he looks up at me. "Oh darn, I think it's stuck. Do you think maybe you could...?" I'm impressed by the fact that he looks me in the eye when making such requests. I almost feel that, perhaps, he has some proto vestiges of conscious thought. Then he goes about changing his nail or something and the impact of my perceived discovery is somewhat lost.

At 11:15, I come home to get Bob prepared for his noon appointment. I have to catch him as he makes a break for it. My little league days as a shortstop come in handy as I glove his face and sweep him back inside. Bob knows something's up. He now begins to glare at the fire world outside. I quietly retrieve "the cage" from its hiding place behind continued on page 9

Letter To The Editor

To The Editor:

A response to the Student Soliloquy of S. Bartlett

"Hello Self."
 "Hello yourself. Are we speaking again?"
 "Must be. We're here aren't we?"
 "Hmm. We see. Say, about last night..."
 "Some fun huh. Was it good for both of us?"
 "I'm not sure, you brute. I was overpowered."
 "How? I used only words, and females do better..."
 "Maybe on SATs, but in real life..."
 "WAIT! Are we claiming theoretical equality only?"
 "Heavens, no. I claim superiority, in some areas."
 "I'll grant difference only. Look there."
 "What, your mustache?"
 "No. Look down a bit. I have these. I can't have..."
 "...a kid. But I can, making me superior!"
 "Whoa. Not without me you can't! Making us equal."
 "No dice, pal. She had a kid all by herself."
 "Who?"
 "That lady who was here two weeks ago."
 "Ah, I recall. But how? Perhaps her male half..."
 "Yes, strong enough to do it all from within."
 "I don't see how. I'm afraid to ask if we..."
 "Nope. I'm not so strong here, although we wish I were."
 "Yes, I wish. But she must have had a man's help somehow!"
 "An ugly truth, that men and women need each other."
 "Speaking of her, was she talking to herself too?"
 "Must have been. 'All of us ... some of us.' Sounds like us."
 "Hmm. She thinks she hates herself then. Too bad."
 "Yes, 'tis. We don't hate each other, do we?"
 "Ooo...Hate is an ugly word. Don't even joke about it."
 "But it is out there, isn't it? 'Hate'..."
 "Yes, but I don't want to invite it in."
 "OK. Oh look. We've got our heads in a manure pile."
 "Quick, grab an agenda! It's the only way out. Lean, lean!"
 "Right, we can't escape if we balance each other, with no leaning."

"You mean only the fringe truly breathes free."
 "Exactly, my analytical wonder. My tolerant side has been our undoing."
 "If only I could express my natural masculine aggressiveness"
 "No no no. 'Nothing to excess...'"
 "Not even moderation." Yes, he said that too."
 "Maybe she was just trying to make a point."
 "What - that no one likes a snot-nosed kid?"
 "No - that all gay females are feminists, but not vice versa."
 "Oh and are all gay males masculists?"
 "I hadn't heard so."
 "By the way, what exactly is a feminist?"
 "Someone advocating equal respect and dignity for women?"
 "I wouldn't have it any other way. But that respect goes for me, too."
 "Guess that makes us Even Steven."
 "I'm not gay, am I, being a male advocate?"
 "Mostly not. But I don't see you for days at a time."
 "Not to worry, oh female half of mine. Just bonding."
 "OK. I'd hate to lose you."
 "Likewise. We're all we've got. Why fight it?"
 "For the sake for argument?"
 "Want a fight? Talk to someone else."
 "Can't. I'm talking to myself."
 "Oh yeah? See those quotation marks?"
 "Yipes! We're in print?!"
 "Yes indeed my longer lived half. Thus inviting response."
 "But we've addressed no outsiders. We've not broken form."
 "Well, shall we?"
 "What do you think?"

Advice for UNCW's Weary

Hey Jane! Have you seen Ace Ventura yet? You kind of remind me of James Carrey when he says "Looser," especially when we're working on this column. Have you ever seen such a gaggle of no-direction, no-idea, no-life nobodys?

Emma, I think you're just a tad tough on our not-so-deserving fans. I mean, wasn't it a little cruel to send "Condomless on Campus" his letter back—after you corrected his grammar with a red marker? I don't think writing "Get a clue, pukeface!" across the front of Condom's letter helped his self-esteem any. We're supposed to be helping these unfortunate souls adjust to life as WE know it.

Little touchy, aren't we, Jane? Somebody steal your horde of Oatmeal Cream Pies or what? Let's just type the column, okay?

#1

Dear Emma and Jane:

Me and my roommate have decided you two are phonies. We don't think you have gotten a single letter. We think you sit around and think of crap to write, just so you can act nasty. Maybe if you were decent to people, you could get dates. That's our advice to you. We think you need to find men so you wouldn't be so grumpy all the time.

Signed: You're Pathetic

Dear Pathetic:

Don't hate us 'cause we're beautiful and wittier than your kernel-brain can begin to fathom. For future reference, Jane is married. And I have no shortage of companions—as your boyfriends could (reluctantly) tell you. But we are offended that you think we need men. Isn't that a rather outdated concept for young, educated women to adhere to? Of course, all people need each other, but to think we would be merely and miserably existing without a sexual partner is primeval. We aren't afraid to be alone. Actually, we enjoy spending time with ourselves—the conversations are undeniably more interesting and we don't have to put on make-up or teddy bear nighties to find ourselves attractive. And, because no one spends as much time with us as we do, we have come to sincerely and unconditionally love ourselves. Maybe if you had an identity, you'd understand why you feel you need someone to make you happy. Ever heard of the saying, "You're in for a rude awakening?" Get ready for the whistle of those sledgehammers, girlfriends.

Dear Emma and Jane:

I love your column! I've even sent copies of it to my friends back home, in New York. We think you're hilarious. I can't believe either of you are from this area since you seem so sophisticated. The great thing about your advice is that it's realistic. You're not afraid to tell it like it is. What I need to know is how can I meet one or both of you? I feel like we are soul-mates and think we'd have a lot of fun together.

Signed: SWM, 25, sports fanatic, music lover, sensitive, non-smoker, casual drinker, ex-Math geek.

Dear SWM:

Thanks for the offer, but we're unavailable for seekers of "meaningful relationships" (refer to above entry for Jane's marital status). And, I don't think you'd get anywhere with me. You must understand—the only reason I am a heterosexual is because I simply adore and respect other women too much to ever treat them as poorly as I do men. Besides, at 25 you're just a baby and I've already got two kids. We also despise organized sports, sensitivity (the 80's are dead, Big Guy, get over it), people without disgusting habits that could potentially harm the rest of the population, and Math geeks—the "cx" doesn't save you. Oh, yes, we have no souls. Maybe it's intestinal gas you're feeling? But thanks for your support and confidence in our journalistic integrity and abilities.

Dear Emma and Jane:

I'm not really looking for advice. I have a couple of questions that have been bothering me for years and no one has ever given me believable answers to them. I doubt you know either, but could you please try to find answers to the following: Who is Officer Burrell? Why don't we ever get to see him? Does he even exist or are Doug and Judge Wagner just making fools of millions of Americans, just like me, each day?

Signed: Perplexed about People's Court

Dear Perplexed:

Although we are going to provide you with answers to your questions, we truly believe you need professional help. We suggest you make an appointment with the mental health clinic on campus. They can help you overcome what is certain to be a lifelong struggle with reality. Okay, Officer Burrell does exist. Wagner couldn't lie about that, he's Judge, you know. Judges take oaths that forbid them to be dishonest, subjective, or amusing. They're like lawyers, only all grown up. Now, Doug is an accomplished artist of fabrication (and what's up with that hair of his? We'll bet a 747 could land on that slope he's got going. If there ever is an atomic war (not this year, there's a Democrat in office), future archeologists will discover Doug's perfect hair lying atop the World Trade Center.) and should never be trusted. The reason you never get to see Officer Burrell is because he's really Elvis. If you actually saw Burrell-Elvis, it'd blow his cover. Can you imagine how hard it was for him to get that job? Where do you go after Graceland? Bet he had a hell of a time filling out job applications: "List prior employment, most recent to least recent." (1) "Pharmacist's Assistant;" (2) "The King;" (3) "Monnie's Boy." Next time you're watching, listen carefully after Doug sends the participants off to see Burrell "who has a few papers waiting for [them] to sign." If we're right, which we cannot remember ever not being, you'll hear a familiar "Thank you, thank you very much" in the background. Rest easy.

Frank's Place

the vacuum cleaner. I keep both of Bob's phobic archetypes in one place so as not to unnecessarily restrict his domain. I open his carrying case and leave it in its hidden location, and retrieve the reluctant tenant.

It really is an evil game I play with him. I pick him up, scratch him around the collar, and even get him purring (he probably thinks I'm gonna let him out). As I round the corner into view of his destiny, this soft rag becomes a ball of pure muscle; legs lunging back and forth, every tendon tightening for advantage. I have no doubt that cats can change direction in mid air. His nails are out, but he has become too domestic to really use them on me. I almost lose him, but memories of crawling under beds and couches, and tossing paper wads to bring him out, give me the motivation to hang on. In one motion I "bowl" Bob into the cage, nails scraping on the bottom. With his momentum still moving inward I snap the door shut. Bob is pained.

Bob is not a big fan of riding in cars. I would think it would be a thrill for him—a sort of break from reality, but as I've stated, Bob's more into routine. When he was a kitten I used to let him out of the cage while he was in the car. Invariably he would crawl down around and under the brake and accelerator pedals. There are times I believe many Wilmington drivers have cats in and around their pedals, and within the wiring of their turn signals as well, but I'll save this topic for another time.

Bob is always a big hit at the vet.

"Look at the beautiful kitty." "You have a wonderful cat there; silver, grey, and black, with a such a darling white face!" Bob has suddenly become a little more festive. I check in at the desk.

"Bob's here for his shots," the receptionist yells back to the Doc. I do not think the receptionist even knows my name. I guess, to her, somehow Bob manages to make his appointments on his own. I don't mind though. I kinda like the diversion of attention from myself. The receptionist is pretty, though.

Inside room "101," Bob is set on the table. The vet comes out with open needle and calmly injects Bob, just behind the neck. Bob tenses and lets out a little squeak. "I know," the doc says. "I know," as he ruffles his fur around the point of injection. And that's it.

I love bringing Bob to the vet because for the short time I'm there, the priorities of project deadlines, electric bills, car maintenance, memos, and customer complaints are put to the background. This is Bob's time, and we both get to go to a place where someone says, "I know, I know."

Well folks, that's all for Frank's Place this week. As we've been talking, I noticed a mass exodus of pigeons flocking up from Mrs. Ferrante's back yard. Bob will be home soon. By the way, have you all gotten your measles shots? They'll cancel your classes if you don't get this taken care of! I know, I know.

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

- CREF Stock Account
- CREF Bond Market Account
- CREF Social Choice Account

ISN'T IT NICE WHEN THE EXPERTS DISCOVER SOMETHING YOU'VE KNOWN ALL ALONG.

Over 1.6 million people in education and research know that choosing TIAA-CREF was a smart move. And now everyone else does too. Because Morningstar—one of the nation's leading sources of variable annuity and mutual fund information—has some stellar things to say about our retirement investment accounts.

"This remarkable combination of skill and return has earned the CREF Stock Account a five-star rating."

After studying CREF's performance history, Morningstar gave five-stars—its highest rating—to both the CREF Stock and Bond Market Accounts, and an impressive four-stars to the CREF Social Choice Account. In fact, the CREF Stock Account was singled out as having "one of the best 10-year records among variable annuities." Of course, past performance is no guarantee of future results.

"...CREF is far and away the strongest variable annuity out there."

Morningstar also called attention to CREF's "...rock-bottom" fees—something that can really add to the size of your nest-egg down the road. What's more, TIAA's traditional annuity—which offers guaranteed principal and interest plus the opportunity for dividends—was cited as having the highest fixed account interest rate among all annuities in its class.

We're happy to accept Morningstar's glowing ratings. But nice as it is to focus on stars, we'll keep focusing on something more down-to-earth: building the financial future you want and deserve.

For more information about our Morningstar ratings or TIAA-CREF, just call 1 800 843-3776.

Buzzoven: Death, Carnage and Destruction

by J. TRENT LEONARD
A&E editor

Relatively few bands can claim to be the loudest on Earth. There are even fewer that can combine hatred, fear, anger, and the pain of the world and transfer it to an audio form. Violence reincarnate exists in a new form of brutality known as Buzzoven. (The name of the band has a dot between the v and the e in oven, although the campus computers wouldn't make that symbol!)

Buzzoven began their venture into ugliness about three and a half years ago from the ashes of a band called Sewer Puppet, in a state that has produced many bands in recent years, North Carolina. They played shows anywhere they could, and this eventually led them into the studio for their first demo tape, 1991's Buttrash. A friend of theirs was forming a small label at the time, and this led to Buzzoven's first vinyl appearance with a song ("Wound") from that demo. Eventually the music began spreading within underground circles and it ended up in the hands of John Yates, founder of the San Francisco-based Allied Recordings. Yates took interest and had them go into a studio to record some new material, the best of which became the "Wound 7" EP (which doesn't contain the song of the same name). By the time a second 7" rolled around, Buzzoven were already doing small tours on the East Coast and slowly gaining a cult of devoted fans.

They eventually made their first venture to the West Coast in late 1992 and proceeded to create damage in every city from Pasco to San Diego, and it was during this tour that they made their first visit to San Francisco, on business to record their first full length album. With their gigs serving as the only means of rehearsals, the band, with a lineup of Kirk Fisher, Brian Hill, and Ashley Williamson, entered the studio with Billy Anderson and ended up with the massive entity known as To A Frown. The sound heard on the album is an amazing force considering that it was created by only three individuals in three days. There are elements of punk, noise, and thrash placed into the mix and while there are hundreds of bands doing the exact same thing, not many can make their music a threat to the senses. Imagine being beaten up by a gang of hooligans, stomped on by angry kids, and then being thrown naked in a room full of broken glass.

During this time the band expanded their sound with a second guitarist, which helped out quite a bit before the group gave him the boot, returning them to the three-piece format. They eventually found a musician they could rely on and trust with Johnny Brito and Buzzoven returned as a quartet. With To A Frown out and a second guitarist, the shows began to increase. The band was and continues to tour intensively, 200+ tour dates a year. They will play anywhere for any amount of money and will sleep on the streets if they have to (you should be able to tell by looking at them).

A showcase at last year's CMJ Music Convention turned a lot of heads, leaving on critic to state that Buzzoven were as shocking and disgusting as G.G. Allin was live, with the crap of course. Roadrunner's A&R man Monte Conner witnessed the mayhem firsthand and became a firm believer immediately, proclaiming them as "one of the most intense live bands I've ever seen." Conner signed them up soon after and now the rage will begin all over again with Buzzoven's Roadrunner debut, Sore.

The Buzz boys worked again with Billy Anderson for an intense studio session that took a mere nine days to record and mix down. According to Kirk, "Billy and I would be mixing the album while the other guys were gone, and I stayed up for three days and solid struggling to get this thing done. Our first album took only three days to record and mix, but for the new one we wanted to work on it a little longer, trying to get things to sound good. I think the extra time paid off." It has definitely paid off, and Sore is the proof. "With this album, we're hoping to get our music to people outside of the cult following we currently have now. We still love those fans, but we'd like to see our music branch out a little more," says Kirk very proudly.

With that said, it still doesn't begin to explain the hostility one gets while listening to these guys. While listeners are able to enjoy a particular band for 45 minutes, turn it off and move on with their lives, with Buzzoven there is no escape. It's not hype, it's the truth, after one listen you're going to want to go back for more. And more. And more. Sore, in retrospect, couldn't be a more appropriate title.

Ladies and gentlemen, welcome to violence unleashed.

Ellen DeGeneres Hits the Big Time

by Ian Spelling
College Press Service

Talk about hitting it big, and you're talking about Ellen DeGeneres. The popular stand-up comic, known for her witty observational humor, ticked the collective funny bone of America's television viewers earlier this year when her ensemble sitcom, ABC's "These Friends of Mine," quickly and surprisingly swept into the ratings top 10.

Now, when the show—which focused on Ellen Morgan (DeGeneres) and her group of 30-something friends—returns this fall, it'll be revamped. Several characters will be gone and a couple of fresh ones added. Arye Oran will be back as Ellen's best friend and roommate, as will, of course, DeGeneres, though her character will now own "Buy the Book" bookstore instead of just managing it. Oh, and there's one other major change. The show will now be called just "Ellen."

"It won't be that different," promises the friendly DeGeneres during a telephone conversation from her Los Angeles home, adding that the stories will be stronger and more original and that the characters will be better developed. She's also thrilled that Gross is returning. "As soon as we met, we clicked. Arye and I crack each other up. I'm glad he's back. The other big differences are my owning the bookstore and the (show's) name change, which means they'll focus more on my character."

During its freshman year, "These Friends of Mine" was frequently compared to "Seinfeld," in part because the show starred a stand-up comedian and focused on the lead character and her pals. DeGeneres is hopeful the "female-'Seinfeld'" comparison will end in the coming months. "Neal Mariens and Carol Black created the show, and the left after six shows," says DeGeneres. "So, now we can go in a slightly different direction. Maybe (being a "female-'Seinfeld'") was the initial vision for the show. I don't think that was the right vision for it, and I don't think our producers now feel that way either. So, I think it will head away from that."

Born and raised in New Orleans, DeGeneres grew up as a shy child whose family, for reasons she still hasn't figured out, frequently relocated in and around New Orleans.

After attending the University of New Orleans for "almost an entire semester," DeGeneres decided to pursue the life of a stand-up comedian. "I started working at a few coffeehouses and at colleges around New Orleans," she remembers. "I played a lot of colleges but probably not as many as some other comedians. College audiences are great because they're hip to what's going on and hip to the subtlety of comedy."

"Then a comedy club opened up. There'd never been a comedy club in New Orleans, and I'd never set foot in a comedy club. This was around 1981, when the whole comedy club boom was just beginning. I walked in the club, which wasn't even finished yet, and I had an audiotape of my act, which I gave to the owner of the club. He didn't know what he was doing. He was some guy who was trying to make a buck. He said, 'Sure, you'll be the emcee six nights a week.' I was making $150, $200 a week, which was fine for me."

Over the next ten years, DeGeneres worked often, graduating from smoky clubs to larger, less rowdy theaters, and at the same time, made a more lucrative living. Then, realizing that her act, in which she played out little stories for her audiences, resembled acting, she decided to try her hand at, you guessed it, acting. Roles followed, on such series as "Open House" and "Laurie Hill." The came "These Friends of Mine."

Unlike some comedians who make the move into television and film and repeatedly get their stand-up fix by returning to the comedy club circuit at every opportunity, DeGeneres is taking a rest from live appearances. "I just needed a break," she says, "I'd been doing it non-stop for 13 years and I needed to stop. It's like when you break up with someone. There may have been nothing wrong with the relationship, but you were kind of bored and going through the motions. I just wanted a break."

"To keep busy during her periods of downtime from filming "Ellen," DeGeneres, who is single, spends time with her family, friends and her two dogs. She's also writing a book due out next fall that's a mélange of elements, ranging from bits of her act, dairy-like thoughts on her success and assorted observations. "I bit off more than I could chew," she reveals. "I love to give myself challenges and burdens, so it's fun to have a deadline. I haven't even sent my publisher anything yet. It's just stuff I've been writing through the years."

Looking down the road, DeGeneres would like to continue with "Ellen" for the next several years, then, like Tom Hanks, make her mark in films. Looking back at her slow, steady rise to stardom, DeGeneres explains that without the lows, the highs mean nothing.

"It's not one of those people who would ever go back and take something out of my life. I really believe we're a product of every day, of every experience we've lived. So," she concludes, "even if there were bad experiences, I think they're really important. It makes you appreciate the good times."

And the good times seem to just be starting for Ellen DeGeneres.

Forrest Gump

by SAM CUTHRELL
Staff Writer

"Forrest Gump" explores the life of a young boy, who is both physically and mentally disabled. Along with a below-average IQ, Gump has a curved spine which forces him to wear leg braces. His development is depicted through school, college, Vietnam, running a shrimp boat, and his resettlement in his original home.

The movie focuses on the character of Gump and how he is influenced and was influenced by the events in his environment. Gump is a simple rural-bred boy raised by his mother who stressed upon him his commonality with all people, instead of differences caused by physical and mental disabilities.

One prevalent theme in the movie is the notion that "good will prevail." Gump always persevered despite overwhelming obstacles, and in the end he prevailed.

An example of this determined perseverance is how Gump deals with Jenny's continual habit of popping into Forrest's life and then disappearing. Any normal person would have given up on her years before they finally got together. But Gump's one-track mind never lets him give up on Jenny. In the end, they are married.

Another underlying theme is the perceptions and misconceptions of Gump's actual intelligence. Gump knew he was not as smart as most other people he encountered; yet, he chose to live a regular and full life instead of staying at home with his mother. Many people faced with his situation, would not have made the same choice. Yet, once again, Gump prevails in the end and manages to take care of himself quite well.

Another example of a secondary motif is the idea that "great things happen to small people." Through a series of chance happenings, Gump manages to become a millionaire. His shrimp boat is the only one to survive a hurricane in Louisiana. The money which came from being the only operational shrimp boat just happened to be invested in Apple Computer Corporation and eventually, Gump becomes so rich he was featured on the front page of Fortune magazine. He also could be credited with the conception of "Have a nice Day" T-shirts and "Shit Happens" bumper stickers.

It could be said that Forrest Gump had an extremely full life, for a normal person. However, his life takes on an extraordinary light when considering his physical and mental handicaps.

The film is not quite as believable as it could be in developing these secondary themes. Incidents such as a T-shirt and bumper stickers are pretty hard to stomach. Also, the idea that one person could have so much good fortune, in spite of severe disabilities, is a little hard to believe. All in all, the movie is a relaxing, funny change of pace.

CROSS COUNTRY

In their final home appearances, Tim Cox and Heather Fenton captured individual titles, but the Seahawks were nosed out by South Carolina in the team competitions in the 9th Annual Seahawk Invitational race over the weekend at Brooks Field.

Cox and running mate Jeff Tiegs finished 1-2 in the men's race with solid performances in near-perfect weather conditions. Cox covered the 8K course in 25:19 and Tiegs followed in 25:33. The Gamecocks put together third, fifth, sixth, ninth and 10th place to win the men's team title with 33 points, just two points ahead of the Seahawks.

On the women's side, Heather Fenton glided around the 5K layout in 18:07, eight seconds in front of South Carolina's Tracey Capper (18:15). However, the Gamecocks won the team championship with a 2-3-4-6-20=35 score.

UNCW travels to Raleigh this weekend to compete in the N.C. State Invitational. Along with the Wolfpack, the Seahawks will be joined by South Florida, Navy, Brevard and St. Augustine's.

Final Seahawk Invitational Men's Team Results: South Carolina (3-5-6-9-10=33), UNC Wilmington (1-2-7-12-13=35), Liberty (4-8-11-15-17=55).

Final Seahawk Invitational Women's Team Results: South Carolina (2-3-4-6-20=35), UNC Wilmington (1-5-9-11-12=38), Duke (8-10-14-16-17=65), Liberty (7-19-22-25-26=99).

VOLLEYBALL

The highlight of the UNC Wilmington volleyball home schedule will be the Comfort Inn Classic, held this Friday and Saturday, Sept. 16-17, in Trask Coliseum. The Lady Seahawks host regional rivals Coastal Carolina, East Carolina and Appalachian State in the round-robin tournament.

The Lady Seahawks face Coastal Carolina in the opening round of the tournament at 6 p.m. on Friday. The evening's second match will feature East Carolina and Appalachian State at 8 p.m. East Carolina and Coastal Carolina will begin play on Saturday with their match at 10 a.m., followed by UNC Wilmington and Appalachian State at Noon. Coastal Carolina and Appalachian State will face off at 2 p.m. and East Carolina and UNC Wilmington wrap up the tournament at 4 p.m.

In the home opener last Wednesday, UNCW fought off a pesky East Carolina squad in five games, downing the Lady Pirates, 15-8, 6-15, 9-15, 15-7. Junior outside hitter Leslie Noukelak (Walter Johnson H.S./Bethesda, Md.) tallied a game-high 11 kills and added 14 digs, while sophomore Katy Kurt (Notre Dame Academy/Los Angeles, Calif.) racked up a team-high 16 digs to go with her 10 kills.

On the road last Thursday, the Lady Seahawks took Charleston to five games before falling to the Cougars, 15-8, 15-9, 9-15, 10-15, 11-15. Junior outside hitter Josie Youngblood (West Henderson H.S./Hendersonville, N.C.) collected team-highs of 20 kills and 22 digs. Kurt contributed 21 digs, and senior middle hitter Debby Taydus (Northwood H.S./Pittsboro, N.C.) added 17 kills.

Youngblood leads the Lady Seahawks in kills (61), total attempts (183), digs (78) and blocks (17). Noukelak is second in digs with 75. Taydus holds the team with eight service aces and has a second-best 46 kills. Sophomore setter Ginger Moon (Quince Orchard H.S./Gaithersburg, Md.) has amassed 177 assists thus far.

MEN'S SOCCER

After starting out the season with a pair of losses, UNC Wilmington rolled past Chowan, 6-0, and dropped a close 2-0 count to UNC Greensboro last week.

The Seahawks continue their ambitious schedule this week, going on the road to meet Atlantic Coast Conference foe N.C. State and visiting nationally-ranked James Madison. Coach Keith Cammidge's club then returns to Brooks Field for a four-game homestand.

UNCW cranked up its offense in the rout of Chowan as Joel Myers scored four goals and freshman striker Vaughn Reynolds added a pair of scores. However, the Seahawks were outshot, 11-4 by UNC Greensboro in the loss to the Spartans.

Through four games, opponents have outscored the Seahawks, 9-6, and UNCW owns a 46-37 advantage in shots. While Myers got untracked this week, pre-season All-CAA selection Bucky Corban continues to struggle, failing to get off any shots after four outings.

Myers paces the team statistically with eight points on four goals. Reynolds has four points on two goals and Steve Elliott has three points on three assists. Overall, the Seahawks have scored in just one of their four outings early in '94.

A highlight for the Seahawks has been the play of reserve goalkeeper Shawn McCallister, who was pressed into action with an injury to starter Josh Hopper. The New Jersey native recorded a shutout against Chowan and registered several fine saves in the loss to UNC Greensboro.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

The UNC Wilmington women's soccer docket this week features a pair of matches, including the Lady Seahawks' 1994 CAA opener. UNCW travels to East Carolina for the conference debut of both teams on Wednesday, Sept. 14, before returning home to entertain UNC Asheville on Sunday, Sept. 18. Kickoff time for both matches is 4 p.m.

The Lady Seahawks logged the first victory of their inaugural season last Tuesday, shutting out Chowan College, 3-0, in Murfreesboro, N.C. Freshman forward Margaret Merrill (East Mecklenburg H.S./Charlotte, N.C.) knocked in a pair of goals in the win, including the first-ever goal in UNCW women's soccer history. Junior forward Joanna Walker (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.) added one goal and one assist, and freshman defender Jaime Betts (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.) and junior forward Meredith Lindsey (South Lakes H.S./Reston, Va.) were each credited with an assist. Freshman goalkeeper Isabel Bordo (New Hanover H.S./Wilmington, N.C.) picked up her first collegiate shutout.

The squad also fell to Radford, 4-0, in its home opener last Friday, the inaugural women's soccer contest on campus. Junior midfielder Angie Gospodarek (Oakloch North H.S./Oakloch, Wisc.) launched four shots on goal for the Lady Seahawks, and freshman Stacey Kind (Roosevelt H.S./Greenbelt, Md.) had two.

Margaret Merrill holds the scoring lead for UNCW with two goals (four points), followed by Joanna Walker's one goal and one assist (three points). In the net, Isabel Bordo has racked up 22 saves this season and has a goals against average of 2.00.

UNCW Fall/Winter Athlete-of-the-Week

All three telecasts will be home games for the Seahawks, who went 18-10 one year ago and begin their first season under new skipper Jerry Wainwright this winter.

The televised games include: James Madison Vs. UNC Wilmington, Jan. 7, 1995, 4:00 p.m.; East Carolina Vs. UNC Wilmington, Jan. 28, 1995, 7:00 p.m.; Old Dominion Vs. UNC Wilmington, Feb. 18, 1995, 2:00 p.m.

Tales From The Dumpster

By Erik Totten

Sports Editor

Well here it is the inaugural edition of The Dumpster. I know all of you have been waiting and I'm sorry for keeping you in suspense but I had to wait until there was something worthy of The Dumpster.

Where should I start.....you know Nebraska is number one now.... it seems everybody that got a hold of last years football preview edition of The Seahawk realized my genius and now they are finally picking the boys in red number one, about time. I'm picking Nebraska number one again this year and my choice for the Heisman is Tommie Frazier, he was also my choice last year but this year EVERYBODY ELSE seems to have noticed him too, I guess all you have to do to get some respect is get cheated out of winning the National Championship. I want all of you out there to know that me picking Nebraska number one for 21 consecutive years has nothing at all to do with the fact that I am from Nebraska, they just happen to be better than everybody else every year. Hey just a little (very little) joke there, I truly do believe they are the best team out there....there defense is faster than it has ever been and the offense under Tommie Frazier should be more than adequate with their passing game gets on track. Nebraska is also very strong on special teams they have a great kicker they should keep other teams from even returning the ball that often and their punt coverage unit is pretty strong also.

This week the two big college games are Nebraska vs. UCLA and Florida vs. Tennessee. Lets see Steve Spurrier and his rag tag bunch of bullies run the score up this time. He'll still have his starters in during the fourth quarter but not because he wants to run up the score this time- he'll need them in there. I think Florida will probably win but it's not going to be a blow out. Nebraska will also have a good game but they should be able to handle J.J. Stokes as well as they did last year. I say Nebraska and Florida by about ten points.

Hey did you hear the Atlanta Braves won the world series.....of wait..... that's the Richmond Braves who won the Governor's Cup. Oh joy.....I can't wait until ESPN stops pretending there is a baseball season and shows us something that we actually give a damn about, like world cup bowling or something. Don't get me wrong, I love watching minor league baseball at least they don't strike because they want more money but I'm tired of hearing about the baseball talks that don't take place. Both the owners and the players are to rich to actually care about the SPORT of the GAME. I hope they just announce the end of the season so they can lose even more fans, then they won't even have to pretend they care about us.

That's about it for The Dumpster this week but I did want to mention that its about time Andre Agassi played tennis the way he always said he could. He looked a little better than 20th in the world at the US Open. My hats off to the women's soccer team for their first win and all of their hard work....keep it up. Well that's it for now...keep it off to The Dumpster and write and let me know any of your comments on anything in the sports arena, I just might print it.

Bike Larceny Statistics Down Burglery Statistics Up

BY AMANDA JESSE
Staff Writer

The good news: bike larceny decreased over the last year. The bad news: residential burglary is on the uprise.

As reported in the 1994 Crime Awareness And Campus Security Act Report, UNCW has managed to decrease the number of bicycles stolen on campus. According to Lieutenant Hunter Davis of Campus Police, this decrease can be credited to mandatory bike registration. He said, "In 1992 we instituted mandatory registration that helped significantly from 1992-1993. By instituting the program this early, we took care of most of the commuter population that lived on campus at the time. People are also utilizing U-bolt locks."

Pat Leonard agreed with Lt. Davis. "One reason for the decrease is that we made registration of bicycles mandatory," said Leonard. "Students are smarter and pay more attention to us when we tell them to get U-bolts and lock it to something."

"The fact that the statistics are low can be misleading."

However, as bike theft has decreased other crimes have increased. Burglary, for example, increased to a total of 29 in 1993, 16 of which were forcible residence burglaries. According to Lt. Davis, many of the burglary incidences that occurred were borderline between forcible and non-forcible entry. Davis said, "In the past we hadn't been able to distinguish between forcible and non-forcible burglaries. We are now getting better on that." Davis also said that the incidence of non-forcible burglary could be decreased if students would protect their property. "If someone leaves a door open and someone takes something, it is not breaking and entering or a forcible burglary."

Although there were no reported statistics that there were sexual assaults on campus, the university and campus police continue to place strong emphasis on sexual assault education programs like RAD. Dean Leonard said, "Acquaintance or date rape, which is the most prevalent form of rape on campuses, is also the most underreported crime. The fact that the numbers are low can be misleading."

In addition, sexual assault must be reported to the police before it will become a statistic on the crime report. According to Dean Leonard, if a student has been a victim of sexual assault and chooses to go to a counseling service on campus, it is still not a reported crime.

To help solve all these problems, Campus Police is utilizing their PAC'N program in which a designated officer is assigned to a specific residence hall area. This not only helps protect the outside of the dormitories, but it also helps prevent burglary and sexual assault. Through this program, the designated officer is responsible for getting to know the community, help students identify with officers, and obtain additional crime information from their patrol area. Lt. Davis said this helps prevent crime in the long run because people are more inclined to report crimes to their PAC'N officer than other officers on campus.

Room Inspections: The Warnings And Expectations

BY AMANDA JESSE
Staff Writer

Mandatory health and safety inspections of the residence halls were held September 6-20. Most residence areas had 48-hour notice that the inspections would be done, some did not.

According to many residents in the suite areas, their buildings were not in formed that the inspections were going to be taking place. This violates Sections VII Number 5G in the Student Handbook And Code Of Student Life which states: University officials may enter the room "for routine maintenance and cleaning. Whenever possible, 48-hour notice will be posted on the individual floors or wings in a designated area."

James Harris, the Assistant Director at The Office Of Housing And Residence Life, said that it was the job of the resident coordinators (RCs) to post the times of the inspections. He said, "Due to the fact that we have different RCs and a safety director to coordinate things, we put out a notice listing the times [of inspections] September 6 through September 20."

Kara Kreutner, the RC of the Suite area said that the RAs in the suites did receive a sign and it was their responsibility to post it.

When asked whether the 48-hour notice policy will be enforced in the future, Harris said, "It will never be a spur of the moment thing." He also said that he saw signs about room inspections posted in both Graham and Hewlett Halls. He was unsure about the other halls, apartments and suites.

"We're not trying to incriminate anyone, but what we are trying to do by giving you a 48-hour notice, is give people an opportunity to remove things that are unsafe," said Harris. However, Harris did express concern that people were removing items that were unsafe during the inspection time and then placing the very same hazardous items back in their rooms after the inspection.

Health and safety inspections are done by the campus safety director or his assistant, a representative from the Housing and Residence Life office and the RC that is responsible for the area. According to Harris, health and safety inspectors are looking for:

- electrical concerns (including extension cords)
- Multi-plugs (these items can melt and start a fire)
- unsafe lifts
- anything creating a false ceiling (this could be dangerous in a smoke-filled room)
- illegal pets
- cleanliness (old pizza boxes, empty food cans, bowls with dried food in them)
- bug infestation

"Cleanliness should be a concern of all students," said Harris. "People have allergies. We think that part of the purpose of doing these walk-throughs will encourage people to clean and take care of their environment."

Financial Aid Check Delays Can Be Avoided

BY AMANDA JESSE
Staff Writer

For the more than 60 percent of students who receive some sort of financial aid, scholarship, or grant, the delay on receiving your check can be avoided.

According to Financial Aid Director, Peter D'Annibale, the major reason for delayed issuing of financial aid checks is that students may have filled out the application late. "If they fill out the application on time, they will receive their check on time," said D'Annibale. "The people who had their applications in on time were all packaged on time and their refunds should be issued."

Pat Cochran, the Associate Director of Financial Aid agreed that it was important for students to get the application filled out by the due date. The reason for this is that the first day of financial aid certification is the last day of the Drop-Add period. If the application is delayed, the check will also be delayed.

D'Annibale said that many of the financial aid checks have already been issued to those students who had their applications in on time. The only exception to this is for first time borrowers who, by law, must wait 30 days from their first time in school to pick up their checks.

Another problem that could delay financial aid checks is the Drop-Add process. "The rule of thumb is," said D'Annibale, "always add a course before you drop a course." By dropping a course before adding a course, your financial aid could be canceled or delayed.

When asked what things students can do to make sure their financial aid process goes smoothly, D'Annibale and Cochran said: get your application in on time, always add a course before you drop a course, review your application thoroughly before sending it in, fill out your own application so that all personal information is correct and show up for your interview in the financial aid office.

To aid the students, the financial aid office is looking into using an electronic funds system to speed up the financial aid process. This system was piloted successfully in North Carolina at Appalachian State University this year. UNCW is still looking into this process and hopes to have it in the near future.

UNCW Ranks 14th In Best College Report

BY KRISTY SHUMAKER
News Editor

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington jumped dramatically in U.S. News & World Report's "America's Best Colleges." Up from 25th last year, UNCW ranks 14th among approximately 150 regional universities in the South.

UNCW hopes to become the best teaching university in the Southeast by the year 2000.

"It is always encouraging to do well in these national popularity contests. They may not mean any more than the sports rating polls, but I'll tell you this, I'd rather be in the top 15 than in the bottom 15. Furthermore, a jump of 11 places in the rankings is a lot better than a drop of 11 places," said UNCW Chancellor James Leutze.

Forty percent of this year's freshman class chose UNCW for its academic reputation. This is double the 1991 percentage. Eighty-four percent of the freshmen listed UNCW as their first choice, up from 69 percent in 1991. Currently ranked fifth in the UNC system for SAT averages of incoming freshmen, UNCW jumped from an average score of 935 in 1993 to 967 in 1994.

"UNCW's jump in the ratings indicates that the things being done under Chancellor Leutze's leadership are paying off," said Dr. Eugene Wright, Jr., chairman of UNCW's Board of Trustees. "We are attracting top-notch faculty and students, developing more and better programs, and gaining a national reputation."

To formulate the rankings, U.S. News conducted a survey of officials at some 1,400 accredited four-year colleges and universities. The resulting rankings were compiled with educational data provided by the institutions. These included statistics measuring student selectivity, faculty resources, financial resources, graduation rate and alumni satisfaction. The schools were divided into categories devised by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

Get Ready For An Earth Shaking Ground Breaking

BY AMANDA JESSE
Staff Writer

After a long wait on the Bond Issue decision, the ground breaking for the new science building at UNCW will be held Friday, September 30 during the 1994 UNCW Family Weekend Celebration.

According to Gina Roundtree, coordinator of the ground breaking celebration, the building is part of the of the bond issue that was approved last January by the state of North Carolina. The bond allotted $18,522,900 for a new science building and $992,050 for a new wing on Bear Hall.

When asked why it took so long for the building's groundbreaking and construction to begin, Roundtree said, "They had the funds in the beginning to design the building. Then they had to have the building designed."

The new science building will house both biological and chemical sciences. In addition, it will have special rooms to aid students in their science research. Some examples of this are: a clean room in which the room will be free of all contaminants, a vibration free room, and cold rooms which will have walk-in refrigerators and freezers. The blueprints show that the building will be about 100,000 square feet in size. This makes the building 30 percent bigger than Cameron Hall's 70,000 square foot layout.

Because the construction of the building will be occurring while school is in session, the theme "Progress and Process" has been created to explain the work that will be done. The building's construction should take about 24 months. The University hopes to begin using the building for academic use in 1996.

Cracking The Seams In The Citadel In S.C.

BY S. BARTLETT
Staff Writer

Why has The Citadel vehemently fought to retain the all-male integrity of its Corps of Cadets?

This month's New Yorker features an article entitled, "The Naked Citadel," by Backlash author Susan Faludi, which offers a unique perspective into the relentless battle between The Citadel and its first prospective female cadet, Shannon Faulkner.

Faludi visited The Citadel in Charleston, South Carolina, while she followed the hearings held by the United States District Court, which ruled on July 22, 1994 that The Citadel must admit Faulkner, and the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals, which subsequently granted a stay pending appeal by the institution.

During her stay in Charleston, Faludi was permitted to interview cadets, faculty, and administrators at The Citadel. Among those she spoke to was Colonel Harvey Dick, a member of The Citadel's governing body, the Board of Visitors, former assistant commandant, and an alumni of the class of '53.

Dick, who was careful to assert he is not a "male-chauvinist pig," told Faludi that "maybe we need a male movement, since evidently we're coming out second on everything." William H. Barnes, the senior platoon leader, supported Dick's comments to Faludi with, "I have the worst chance in history of getting a job, because I'm a white male..."

Other cadets cited a variety of reasons for not wanting Faulkner admitted to the Corps of Cadets, such as "not wanting to be embarrassed in front of a girl" and "males learn better when females aren't there." But one of most repeated sentiments expressed by numerous cadets, according to Faludi, was the possibility of losing "the all-male communal bathroom." Many cadets

Beach Sweep Sweeps Up Carolina Beach

UNCW Volunteers! Heads For The Beach Saturday For Beach Sweep 94

BY BILLY PERSON
Contributing Writer

The annual environment-saving event called Beach Sweep has come and gone, and UNCW had a number of students rally together to do their part in the national effort to preserve our beaches from litter.

The big clean-up took place on Saturday, September 17, at beaches, lakes, and rivers across the country. UNCW Volunteers, which participated in Beach Sweep for the first time this year, took a group of approximately 25 people to the beach at Fort Fisher. Those without transportation were taken from campus to the beach in a van driven by Volunteer Coordinator, James Buie.

Upon arriving at the beach, the proper equipment had to be acquired before the Volunteers could begin cleaning. This equipment consisted of a latex glove, a plastic trash bag, a paper to keep an account of the trash collected, and a pencil. Once these items were received, they broke off into groups of four and commenced cleaning, taking up positions up and down the beach. UNCW Beach Sweepers collected about six bags full of trash from the site.

"I feel Beach Sweep was a big success, and those who volunteered were great to work with," said Mr. Buie.

The Volunteers left for the beach around 9:30 a.m. and the group consisted of members of the Environmental Concerns Organization, UNCW students, and concerned members of the community. All came to gether willingly to pick up the innumerable amount of cigarette butts and battle the hot sun in order to better our beaches. Some Beach Sweepers were veterans of the event, having participated in the event in the past.

"ECO participated in Beach Sweep two years ago at Masonboro Island," said ECO member Heather Pettit. "We came to Ft. Fisher because there was more trash to clean up, and ECO goes where the trash goes."

Many students involved weren't there representing any club or organization. Concerned environmentalists in the community and of the university were also a large part of this year's sweep.

"Beach Sweep is a wonderful opportunity for us to take part in cleaning up our environment," said Elizabeth De La Cruz, a UNCW student.

UNCW's Biology Club also participated in the Beach Sweep activities at Masonboro Island.

Who Did That Disastrous Deed?

You will have your opportunity when award-winning mystery author Sharyn McCrumb reads from her latest novel She Walks These Hills, at the New Hanover County Main Library, on Tuesday, Oct. 4 at 7 p.m.

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS
Staff Writer

The mystery genre is new to many students, faculty, and staff at UNCW. Many a talented, well-loved misdeed of deadly deeds are exchanged regularly. But how often do you get a chance to talk to the person who "perpetuates" these thrills and chills?

You will have your opportunity when award-winning mystery author Sharyn McCrumb reads from her latest novel She Walks These Hills, at the New Hanover County Main Library, on Tuesday, Oct. 4 at 7 p.m.

If you wait around after her reading, before sneaking home to find out "whodunnit," you can attend the reception and autographing party sponsored by the Friends of the Library. Bristol Books will have copies of She Walks These Hills and other novels by McCrumb available at the Library during McCrumb's visit.

McCrumb is the author of twelve novels, including the highly acclaimed "Appalachian Ballad Books." She Walks These Hills is the third in this series. Its predecessors, If Ever I Return, Pretty Peggy-O, and The Hangman's Beautiful Daughter, were named New York Times Notable Books. These novels resulted in McCrumb receiving accolades in the form of Best Appalachian Novel, the Macavity Award, and nominations for the Weatherford, Nero, Anthony, and Agatha Awards—not bad rewards for creating fictional murder mysteries.

"My books are like Appalachian quilts. I take brightly colored scraps of legends, ballads, fragments of rural life, and local tragedy, and I piece them together into a complex whole that tells not only a story, but also, I hope, a higher truth about the culture of the mountain South."

In honor of McCrumb's interest in folk music, John Golden and Samantha Hunt will sing the ballads from which she takes the names for her novels during the program.

McCrumb lived in Wilmington until she was six. Her father, Frank Arwood, was a coach at Lake Forest School and later principal at Winter Park. McCrumb decided on writing as a vocation when she was age seven. After graduating from UNC-Chapel Hill with a communications degree, McCrumb earned her MA in English at Virginia Tech. Now a full-time novelist and lecturer living in the Virginia Blue Ridge, she has worked as a journalist and has taught journalism and Appalachian Studies.

The free program is open to the public and no prior "mystery detection experience" is required.

Rush Events In The University Union This Saturday -photo by Stuart Kasin

What's Your Reason For Going Greek?

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS
Staff Writer

With Panhellenic Rush in full swing, you'd better be careful when you're asked why you want to join. The College Press Service reports that a freshman woman at the University of Iowa lost a bid to join a sorority after she was quoted in her college newspaper as saying she wanted to go Greek to meet men.

Of 1 student Jennifer Drew was invited to join the Alpha Delta Pi sorority, but the group took back its bid after Drew was featured in a fall rush story by The Daily Iowan.

The story quoted Drew as saying that rush was "sheer and utter hell" but that guys were a big reason to stick with it. "It's just men, M-E-N," she was quoted as saying.

The article, which detailed Drew dressing for a rush party, came out the day after sorority bids did. It stated that Drew intended to accept Alpha Delta Pi's invitation to join its house.

"The story was intended to be a light feature story that was an insider's look at rush," said Daily Iowan editor Brad Hahn. "We didn't intend to generate this kind of controversy."

Neither members of the sorority nor Drew, who has become something of a campus celebrity and has since requested that her telephone number be unlisted, would comment on the withdrawal. "I just want it to die down," Drew told College Press.

Because UI policy dictates that prospective sorority members can receive only one bid a year, Drew will have to wait until next fall to rush again if she chooses to join a sorority.

About 400 of the 600 women involved in UI's sorority rush this year were freshmen.

The Seahawk staff thinks the rush story idea is a good one, why don't you share your reason for wanting to participate—enquiring minds want to know.

College Degrees Earned By Women Less Diversified

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS
Staff Writer

A recent study, undertaken by a University of Pennsylvania sociologist, finds the academic diversity that enabled women to close the ranks on their male co-workers has come to a halt, according to a College Press Service report issued Sept. 16.

During the past 10 years, female participation in bachelor's, master's, and professional degree programs has leveled off, which could create a roadblock to a desegregated workforce, said Jerry Jacobs, associate professor of sociology at Penn State.

In 1960, nearly half of the undergraduate degrees awarded to women were in the field of teaching, and more than 75 percent of women were crowded into only six fields: English, fine arts, history, home economics, nursing, and teaching. But, from 1964 to 1984, women widened their academic choices by nearly 40 percent.

It appears, however, that the era of academic desegregation by sex is over. Since 1984, female and male participation has virtually stayed the same at the bachelor's, master's, and professional degree levels, and segregation by sex has actually increased among Ph.D. recipients, according to Jacobs.

"Possibly, we've gotten all the 'easy programs' in the fields that are amenable to the movement of women into their ranks," said Jacobs. "In order to have substantial progress, men are going to have to go into previously female-dominated fields, such as nursing, elementary education, and foreign languages, while women need to make further inroads into physical sciences and engineering."

Jacobs points to an undergraduate environment that appears to be more conservative with regard to sex-role expectations. "This is particularly ironic," Jacobs said, "because there is an image of campuses as bastions of politically correct thinking enforced by radical feminist thought police."

Health Reform: How Does The Debate Affect College Students?

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS

Staff Writer

After tuition, textbooks, rent, utilities, parking stickers, school supplies, groceries, and gas for your car empties your wallet, what is left for health insurance?

In a report issued by Bruce Japsen, College Press Service, one in four "college-age" people in America do not have health insurance. Because odds are slim that any large, omnibus health care reform plan will pass Congress this fall, many college students and recent college graduates may be included in those who continue to count themselves among the uninsured.

Nearly 27 percent of men and women between the ages of 18 and 29 do not have health insurance, according to the Employee Benefit Research Institute. That compares with the nearly 16 percent, between the ages of 30 and 54, and 13 percent, aged 55 through 64, who are uninsured.

Analysts claim young people, college students included, do not obtain health insurance because they are not concerned about getting sick. With tuition and room and board to pay, they also may not be able to afford health insurance.

Donna Passmore, a senior secondary education major at UNCW, said she couldn't purchase UNCW's plan which covers basically emergency room visits because of its cost (approximately $600).

"I'd have to get a second job just to pay for health insurance," Passmore said. "I just recently began to be covered under my husband's policy, but he had to change jobs just so we could get insurance. I've had to spend the last two years at UNCW without any medical insurance. It's scary."

Most of the major health reform legislation introduced in Congress assumes that students are single and covered under their parents' health insurance plans.

But that's not the case—especially for graduate or professional students, according to the National Association of Graduate-Professional Students (NAGPS), which represents more than 400,000 students nationwide. With a mean age of 31 years, few graduate or professional students qualify for coverage under their parents' insurance plans and many often have families of their own in need of health care.

The special needs and concerns of the over 1.6 million full- and part-time graduate and professional degree students in the United States are being ignored in the current debate over health care reform," said Mimi Forbers, a doctorate student at the University of Arizona in Tucson.

According to Japsen's report, NAGPS estimates 22 percent of graduate and professional students are uninsured. One-third of these students have dependents and 75 percent of these dependents are uninsured.

Anything that falls short of universal coverage is likely to affect uninsured college students more than any other group, according to analysts of health care reform.

"They may have the most at stake in this health care debate," said Nicholas Butterworth, the 27-year old executive director of the Rock the Vote Education Fund, which introduced an educational effort for young people known as "Rock the System" this summer.

By taking advantage of MTV's glitzy hype and the star power of rock stars, the advocacy group that registered 350,000 voters during the past presidential election is among the groups working to educate young people about health care reform.

While surveys show the majority of young people favor a reform plan that will make health care available to everyone, they also worry about cost.

To help improve students' access to affordable health care, some universities have begun to examine their own universal coverage plans.

The University of Wisconsin-Madison now mandates all students have insurance after a report five years ago found between 12 and 15 percent of the student population was uninsured. No such mandate exists at UNCW.

UW-Madison estimated it was costing Wisconsin taxpayers some $200,000 to $300,000 annually, through general relief and other services, to pay for uninsured and underinsured UW-Madison students. In 1992, then University Chancellor Donna Shalala unveiled the Student Health Insurance Program.

Shalala was a leading policy advisor for the Clinton Administration's health care reform while serving as secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

Although President Clinton pledged earlier this year to veto any bill that did not guarantee health care for everyone, many members of Congress say any major reform bill that would include universal coverage will not pass both Houses this year.

At best, legislators predict the passage of only a modest health care reform proposal that would institute incremental reforms, if possible, and many lawmakers doubt if they can deliver even that to the President.

However, my major future reforms may come with an even higher price tag. If students are forced to buy insurance, NAGPS estimates their insurance costs could triple. A single student now pays an average premium of $650 a year (in line with UNCW), and under the Clinton Health Security Act, that would skyrocket to between $1,800 to $2,500 a year.

Cracking The Citadel's Seams

consider showering together "the heart of the Citadel experience." One cadet told Faludi, "I just can't explain it, but when they take this away, it's over. This place will be ruined."

Faludi also interviewed a number of male and female faculty members and discovered that battle lines had been drawn among The Citadel's instructors. Dr. Jane Bishop, who believes Faulkner should be admitted, encourages her students to speak openly about their feelings toward sexual segregation. Because of her outspoken support of Faulkner, Dr. Bishop has received messages on her office door like, "Dr. Bishop, you are a prime example of why women should not be allowed here" and "women will destroy the world."

Citadel English instructor Colonel James Rembert, an opponent to coeducation, told Faludi, "If Shannon were in my class, I'd be fired by March for sexual harassment." Rembert said, "I have the freedom to imply things I couldn't with women. 'I don't want to have to watch what I say.' Faludi also notes that Rembert corrects his students' mistakes by calling them degrading, female-oriented names like "pansy" and instructs cadets not to use the passive voice while writing because "it leads to effeminacy and homosexuality."

Administrators of The Citadel, like Dick, claim they simply wish to preserve the traditions set by John Peyre Thomas, commandant from 1882 to 1885. Thomas wrote that "African slavery, in many respects, affected injuriously the white youth of the South." He believed these young men had been softened by years of having been waited upon and The Citadel fulfilled a "need to teach spoiled plantation boys the rudiments of self-reliance." According to Faludi, The Citadel, which still employs the harsh four class system, defends its historical stand as a unified body, from the knobs, or freshmen, to the commandant.

While this may be the public stance taken by most of the involved parties, Faludi quotes one anxious cadet as saying, "The great majority of the guys here are very misogynistic," he said. "All they talk about is how girls are pigs and sluts." Former cadets also shared with Faludi vastly different reasons concerning The Citadel's accepted perspective on women and coeducation.

Student Beau Turner told Faludi about an incident in which "high-ranking cadets had trapped a raccoon in the barracks and began [stabbing] it with a knife." While the animal was being destroyed, "the cadets chanted, 'Kill the bitch! Kill the bitch!'"

Michael Lake, who was a knob in 1991 and later dropped out of the school, explained to Faludi, "According to the Citadel creed of the cadet, women are objects, they're things that you can do with whatever you want to." Faludi describes Lake's experiences in 1991 as a horrific struggle.

What he saw was a submerged gender battle, a bitter but definitely fixed contest between the sexes, concealed from view by the fact that men played both parts. The beaten knobs were the women, "stripped" and humiliated, and the predatory upperclassmen were the men, who bullied and pillaged.

Faludi relayed the comments of present and former cadets who said the practices of beating, harassing, and degrading women are not only acceptable, but are also respected marks of manhood. Ron Vergnolle, a 1991 Citadel graduate, said he saw cadets hit their dates or girlfriends and cited one "incident in which two cadets held down a young woman while a third drunken cadet leaned over and vomited on her." Vergnolle told Faludi a fellow cadet bragged to him "that he had tacked a live hamster to a young woman's door." He also noted an incident about a cadet "who boasted widely that, as vengeance against an uncooperative young woman, he smashed the head of her cat against a window as she watched in horror." According to Vergnolle, this story earned the acting cadet honor among the ranks of Citadel students.

Faulkner, whose family home has been repeatedly vandalized, has not been exempted from such frightening and degrading tactics. In the Brigadier's column Faulkner was called "the divine bovine." Graduate student Tom Lucas recalls a particular piece of graffiti he read in the men's room of the academic building:

"Let her in—then fuck her to death."

Still, Faludi contends that proponents of the Citadel's cause who claim the issues surrounding Faulkner's admittance are not based solely on her sex may be telling the truth.

While listening to Norman Doucet, the cadet regimental commander, offer testimony, Faludi noted his concern over "the humiliation that cadets would feel if women observed the cadet-on-campus interactions." Some of these shared experiences, in addition to being "one mass, naked together" in the showers, Faludi discussed what are termed as the "nudity rituals." As an example, she quoted a recent graduate who informed Faludi of a ritual called "Bananarama," and its final procedure "in which an unpeeled banana was produced—and shoved into a cadet's anus."

Faludi also explored the attitude of the community of Charleston and, specifically, of the patrons of a local "mixed" sexual orientation bar called the Treeshouse, which she said was frequented by cadets.

Chris, a customer Faludi talked with, told her the cadets "love faggots like me" and that they "go for the drag queens." Other homosexual customers and performers in the weekend drag shows affirmed Chris' statements to Faludi.

Meeting the men at the Treeshouse gave Faludi a previously not considered perception of cadet life at The Citadel. She wrote: "And suddenly it became obvious to me what was generating that void, that yearning, in the cadet's lives—and maybe in the lives of many American men. What was going on here was play—a kind of freedom and spontaneity that, in this culture, only women are permitted."

According to Faludi, The Citadel isn't fighting Shannon Faulkner or attempting to preserve its historical traditions, its trying to maintain the only atmosphere of equilibrium, acceptance, and freedom it has ever known. "And in that they may be right," wrote Faludi.

Discover Outdoor Programs: More Than A Physical Challenge

BY AMANDA JESSE

Staff Writer

Catering to UNCW, local organizations, and businesses, the Discover Outdoor Center, located in University City, gives students an opportunity to challenge themselves in numerous ways.

Through programs like the Discover Adventure Series (which include canoeing, kayaking, and hiking trips) and the Challenge Ropes Course, the Discover Outdoor Program strives to teach leadership skills as well as technical outdoor skills. Discover Outdoor Program Coordinator Brock Snyder said, "It's a lot of fun, but at the same time it is an opportunity to learn more and have a positive experience with your fellow students."

The Discover Outdoor Program, according to Program Assistant Gus Hemmer, has a variety of activities to offer. Currently, the program is offering a Freshman Adventure Series which includes a canoe trip and a day on the ropes course, a backpacking trip during fall break to Pisgah National Forest, a canoeing and camping trip in early November, weekend camping trips to Uwharrie National Forest, two afternoon canoe trips, a day canoeing trip, numerous UNCW Challenge Ropes Course days, and weekly climbing days on UNCW's own simulator rock face wall.

When asked to define the main purpose of the Discover Outdoor Program, Hemmer said, "To get people together and have fun. We always set goals for all the groups that come in." Some of the goals of the program are encouraging better communication, teamwork, and trust within groups. Snyder said, "We use outdoor adventure as a teaching tool of life skills."

In addition to the outdoor programs Discover offers, a full library of books and maps are available for student use and copying. A full array of camping equipment is also available for rental for those students who go off on their own adventures.

A fee, which cover the transportation to and from the outdoor destination, to pay for group leaders and facilitators, and equipment is charged for each program. Food and clothing are not provided, however, participants are told what will be necessary for their specific program.

Emergence Leadership Program

BY GREG JEFFREYS

The Leadership Center is hosting the "Emergence" Leadership program for freshmen students. "Emergence" is a weekly, semester-long program which develops leadership skills. Ethics of leadership, ways of accomplishing goals, and effective group membership are among the topics of focus. Each workshop will be headed by a person with leadership experience and will include members of the university faculty.

The "Emergence" program is the oldest program of the Leadership Center. Cathy Birmingham, of Campus Activities, is the program's coordinator.

"We want to get across the point, (that) not only are leaders ethical, they give back to the community," says Mrs. Birmingham "Giving to the community is an important part of leadership. We don't look at a leader as necessarily the president of an organization, but also as all kinds of volunteers behind the scenes. Leadership is the ability to work with other people and get something done.

The program will meet every Tuesday from 3:30-5:00 PM in the Leadership Center, located in room 212 of the University Union.

MTV Debuts "Smart Sex"

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS

Staff Writer

MTV will premiere "Smart Sex," a one-hour television special with straightforward talk about sexual choices on Tuesday, Sept. 27, from 10 to 11 p.m.

Hosted by Christian Slater, the program features eleven 18- to 25-year olds talking openly about their sexual experiences and attitudes in the age of HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases (STDs).

Profiled are young adults, straight and gay, in a variety of sexual relationships, single and safely playing the field; promiscuous and refusing to use condoms; HIV-positive and practicing safer sex; and those choosing abstinence for now.

"Many young people know the facts about HIV and other STDs. What they don't know is how to use that information to protect themselves," said Linda Ellerbe, producer of the show. "Smart Sex" provides a personal look at the sexual choices young people are making and how some of them are now living what they've learned about safer sex...and some are not. This is a story of truth and consequences."

MTV Networks reports that as the rates of sexual activity continue to rise, so do the rates of sexually transmitted diseases. By age 20, 86 percent of men and 77 percent of women have had sexual intercourse; however, only 17 percent of heterosexuals age 18 and older who have multiple sex partners always use condoms. In the past few years, the number of young people reported with AIDS has increased. AIDS is now the second leading cause of death among all 25- to 44-year-olds; many of whom were probably infected in their teens or early twenties.

"In presenting 'Smart Sex' on MTV, we hope to raise awareness among young adults about making safer sexual choices," said Judy McGrath, President of MTV. "By sharing some of these young adults' stories with our viewers, we hope to encourage them to take steps to protect themselves."

During "Smart Sex," viewers will be encouraged to call the toll-free Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) National AIDS Hotline number (1-800-342-2437) to ask questions and receive additional information about HIV prevention. For information in Spanish, viewers can call 1-800-344-7432; for deaf access to this information, viewers can call 1-800-243-7889.

UNCW students can also obtain more information about practicing safe sex by contacting the LivWell Center for Health Promotion located on the second floor of Westside Hall or by calling 350-4137.

Gay and Lesbian Association Report

There is lots of fun going on in UNCW's Gay and Lesbian Association. This month, the Association is planning a scavenger hunt, movie, cookout, fundraiser and discussions on homosexual issues. Organizational elections are also on the agenda.

Members include gay and straight faculty, staff and students. If you are interested in participating, call Diane Edwards at 395-3577 or 392-0399.

Atlantis Ready to Sail

BY AMIE CHILDERS
Atlantis Editor

The Atlantis will begin its fundraiser Monday, Sept. 26. It will be held throughout the upcoming week in front of the University Union from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m.

Raffle tickets will be sold for $2. The winner and five friends will receive free cabin lodging in the NC mountains for two nights and days. The cabin sleeps 6 comfortably. The award can be used anytime between the date awarded and spring exams, given advance booking. The drawing will be held Wednesday, Oct. 5. The winner will be notified by mail and telephone. The winner's name will also be advertised in The Seahawk.

Raffle proceeds will go toward funding a better student literary journal. The proceeds will help in upgrading artwork and paying printing costs. Atlantis is also now accepting submissions of art, poetry and short stories. Submission boxes are located in the English department office and in Kenan Hall, room 125.

Chancellor's Cabinet Discusses Results Of The UNCW Traffic Study

BY THOMAS E. CHILDS, JR.
Staff Writer

Last Thursday, the Chancellor's cabinet met to discuss the results of a traffic study undertaken to get a pulse on what was needed to be done about the growing traffic (and all the related problems) at UNCW.

According to Richard Scott, Assistant Vice-Chancellor for Business, the study grew following several years of requests for new roads, bike paths and the like.

"The university decided to do an update of the traffic study (the last study was done in 1988)," says Scott, "to look at what was happening traffic-wise at UNCW instead of doing a quick fix of the problem."

The study, done by the Florida-based firm of Letwith Consulting Engineers, gathered its results by doing the following:

*traffic counts at key intersections at UNCW over several days.

*800 questionnaires were given to faculty, staff and students.

*Interviews were done with key UNCW administrators, city and county officials, and the N.C. Department of Transportation to get an overview of the traffic situation.

*Reviewing master plans and off-campus road plans.

A number of recommendations listed in the study are already underway, which include:

*pursuing more time at the stop light to turn at Hurd/College Road exit by Trask Coliseum. (Although Scott says this particular matter has been brought to the county's attention, there has been no response yet).

*closing off access to Lots "C" (by Kenan Auditorium) and "G" (by Morton Drive) from Randall Drive and opening access to Lot "G" from Crews Drive (by Friday Hall) to alleviate traffic problems.

Future considerations include building a bikepath/sidewalk on Waggon Drive and considering a shuttle service to outlying parking lots. There are also plans to begin working with other groups on campus to review the recommendations in the study and to get input from these groups, as well.

In spite of this, a decision awaits the University that may or may not make the traffic situation worse. For the past several months, the state DOT has proposed an extension of Randall Parkway through the campus, a proposal the university has opposed in the past.

"We have major concerns with traffic that uses UNCW as a cut-through," says Scott, "because it causes problems for students, faculty and staff," citing safety concerns. "The university has not identified a feasible way for the Parkway extension and doesn't understand how it can be done."

To that end, university officials have been asked by the DOT to preview a model they feel will suit UNCW. On Nov. 1 and 2, the DOT will present a revised model of the proposed Randall Parkway extension to the Board of Trustees.

Nonetheless, Scott feels the traffic study will go a long way toward solving problems plaguing both motorists and pedestrians alike: making the traffic and parking situations easier for all concerned.

Panhellenic Rush--What's It All About?

BY LAURA CORSO
Staff Writer

When it comes to the Pan Hellenic rush, you may think to yourself, "It's all Greek to me," and understandably so. It is a long complex process that is all part of Greek life.

Greek life here at UNCW is a relatively young system, but a thriving one. This year's rush is the biggest in at least five years. One hundred sixty girls are rushing the eight sororities and one hundred men are rushing the ten fraternities here on campus.

"Basically, it is a rush to make a lot of decisions in a short amount of time," explains Amy Long, a Rho Chi during this year's rush. It is a period when students decide whether or not Greek life is for them and, if so, whose brother or sister they would like to be.

Formal rush for sororities is six days long, running Tuesday through Sunday. There are three rounds of parties enabling potential member to understand sorority life.

Each woman rushing receives a counselor, a Rho Chi, who gives them information and advice during rush week. A Rho Chi is an upper class sorority member who keeps her sorority unknown.

The first night of Pan Hellenic rush is orientation where financial information is disclosed and insight into each sororities' charitable work is given. It is an opportunity to discover different personalities of each sorority, as well as get information about them.

The fifth rush night is called "Preference Night" which gives women a better idea about sisterhood by participating in longer parties. This is followed the next day by the important Bid Day. Rushes receive bids from the sororities and hopefully match their choices. If bids match them, a woman becomes a new member.

Fraternity rush is much more informal. Pre-initiates attend parties at their frat of choice and meet the other men. Special activities like cockroaches and trips to Hooters are planned by the different fraternities mainly to get to know each other. These events also serve as question and answer sessions.

Interviews are held at the end of the week and decisions made. On Friday, a pinning ceremony is held and the men become associate member of the fraternity. They remain associate members for about one semester and then possibly become brothers.

During Rush Week, no alcohol is permitted and the Anti-Hazing Policy is strictly adhered to. It is a very social and nerve-racking week for Rushes, but most Greeks agree its worth it.

David Loy, a Lambda Chi brother admits that the best part of Greek life is "The social aspect."

Greek life provides students with academic support, social opportunities, leadership experienced and lasting friendships. It is a very structured system requiring quality from their sisters and brothers. Involvement in campus activities is highly encouraged and decent grades are required.

When asked about competition among Greeks, Pan Hellenic President, Amanda Langdon said, "There really isn't much because it's all about Greek unity. We are all for the system, so if one of us fails, we all fail."

According to Lienre Federico, UNCW's Greek advisor, rock life offers students a great deal. "It's a great start. It's forty people you can count on to call and turn to. They will listen and be your friend. It offers stability."

Translated in English, it all makes much more sense now. So, if Greek life sounds good to you and you are sorry you missed the formal rush, an informal rush will be held during the spring semester. Maybe I'll try Russian.

"CREF Stock Account ★★★★★"
"CREF Bond Market Account ★★★★★"
"CREF Social Choice Account ★★★★★"

—Morningstar

ISN'T IT NICE WHEN THE EXPERTS DISCOVER SOMETHING YOU'VE KNOWN ALL ALONG.

Over 1.6 million people in education and research know that choosing TIAA-CREF was a smart move. And now everyone else does too. Because Morningstar—one of the nation's leading sources of variable annuity and mutual fund information—has some stellar things to say about our retirement investment accounts.

"This comfortable combination of risk and return has earned the CREF Stock Account a five-star rating."

After studying CREF's performance history, Morningstar gave five-stars—its highest rating—to both the CREF Stock and Bond Market Accounts, and an impressive four-stars to the CREF Social Choice Account. In fact, the CREF Stock Account was singled out as having "...one of the best 10-year records among variable annuities." Of course, past performance is no guarantee of future results.

"...CREF is far and away the cheapest variable annuity out there."

Morningstar also called attention to CREF's "...rock-bottom" fees—something that can really add to the size of your nest-egg down the road. What's more, TIAA's traditional annuity—which offers guaranteed principal and interest plus the opportunity for dividends—was cited as having the highest fixed account interest rate among all annuities in its class.

We're happy to accept Morningstar's glowing ratings. But nice as it is to focus on stars, we'll keep focusing on something more down-to-earth: building the financial future you want and deserve.

For more information about our Morningstar ratings or TIAA-CREF, just call 1 800 842-2776.

Professor Profile: DR. MAHNAZ MOALLEM

BY S. BARTLETT
Staff Writer

Although Dr. Moallem earned her Ph.D. only a little over a year ago, her quiet confidence and sincere professionalism are her most easily characterized attributes. However, a brief discussion with Moallem also provides her audience with a respectful insight to her tenacity and willingness to persevere for the benefit of all learners.

Moallem, who immigrated to the United States from Iran in 1987, received her Teaching Certification, in Special Education, B.A., in English Translation, and M.S., in Educational Technology, in her homeland. While completing her Master's thesis, titled "Relationship between Self-Esteem and Academic Achievement," at the College of Television and Cinema, in Tehran, Moallem taught at the Teacher Training College and began working as an observer, evaluator, and consultant for the Ministry of Education.

Shortly after finishing her dissertation, "An experienced Teacher's Model of Thinking and Teaching: An Ethnographic Study on Teacher's Cognition," Moallem received her Ph.D. from Florida State University, in Tallahassee, and began her instructional career at UNCW. Although she experienced minimum difficulty fulfilling the academic requirements at Florida State, Moallem said adjusting to the American culture was, especially during her first two semesters, very trying.

Moallem, who is multi-lingual, found communicating with her fellow academics less troublesome than learning to become "competitive" in the guarded world of intellectual achievement. But as an admired educator, both in Iran and here, Moallem's determination to succeed has resulted in a variety of awards, such as Iran's Ministry of Education's Outstanding Teacher honor, in 1972 and 1986, and, more recently, the Association for Educational Communication and Technology, Research and Theory Division's Special Research Award in the United States, for 1994. With such a powerful history following her, what can Moallem possibly hope to do to outshine herself?

Moallem, whose attitude is to

Dr. Mahnaz Moallem photo by Sam Cuthrell

"always try new things," takes pride in her enthusiasm for "always [being] updated." She constantly strives to incorporate her ongoing research interests, such as the application of "theory and research on reflective thinking and teaching," into her Education 301, 302, and 520 courses. Currently, she is continuing her dissertation research, with the assistance of a number of her Education 301 students, from the perspective of novice teachers.

By modeling her concept of the ultimate instructor, one who combines theory and practice, Moallem fulfills her desire to be a "student-oriented, student-centered" teacher. Students of Moallem can expect "application, problem-solving, and task-oriented activities" to be the foci of their classroom experience. Moallem says she wants students to "realize they are active agents, true participants, in the process of learning." Because she desires that students "self-regulate themselves," Moallem contends, "I [only] there to create an environment for them" to learn.

As a progressive, caring instructor, Moallem "likes the change part of it a lot," and says, "seeing you've been influencing people's lives is very rewarding." While her personal concerns lie with her tendency to be "so much worried about what they learn and whether they will apply it," she is disturbed by "students who don't take things seriously." For this reason, among others, she would like to see UNCW offer "reflective practicum" courses centering around the concept that "active teachers are researchers," because students need to understand the vital roles they will play in the lives of their students.

Since she began teaching at UNCW, Moallem has helped to design two new Master's Programs: Instructional Technology, which is now under review, and Educational Leadership, which has recently been approved by the state of North Carolina and is ready to be implemented. In addition to her work here, Moallem is the editor of an educational journal based in France, the Syndicate National Des Associations Dde Parents D'Enfants in Adopters (SNAPEI), a committee member on the North Carolina Information Highway Task Force, which operates in conjunction with Cape Fear Regional Partnership Network in the employment of Distance Education through the use of a multimedia highway, and is waiting to hear about a grant for which she has applied to the National Science Foundation for her research on "Educating Reflective Practitioners for Multicultural Settings."

Moallem, whose research-based writings can be found in League Journal, the Journal of North Carolina League of Middle level schools, and the American Educational Research Journal, says she enjoys writing and would like to "do more writing and publishing." But, her most sought after goal is "being a good theorist and practitioner, integrating the two."

She adds, without necessity, that "it's hard to balance" her concern for students and her dedication to the progression of the educational field.

Considering the obstacles she has encountered and overcome to date, finding a solution to this one glitch shouldn't require much use of her delicately tuned problem-solving skills.

Wellness Promotion Center Kicks Off Semester With Expo

BY LISA MAY
Staff Writer

Trying to quit smoking? Want to figure out your body fat percentage? Are you interested in some ideas for a more healthy lifestyle? If you answered "yes" to any of the above questions, you'll want to check out the 1994 Healthy Living Expo on Wednesday, September 28th. The Expo, dubbed "Your Passport to Wellness," will be held from 10:00 am to 2:00 pm, inside and on the lawn of the University Center. This event, known in the past as the "LivWELL Health Fair," has combined with the "Arts and Recreation Expo", both successful events once held separately on campus. Deborah Haywood and Diane Edwards, directors of the events and directors of the Wellness Promotion Center, say the goal of this event is to familiarize students with the health, leisure, recreation and cultural services available to them on and off campus.

The Wellness Promotion Center is coordinating this event. Formally called the LiWELL Center and located in Westside Hall (second floor), the Wellness Promotion Center's mission on campus is to "promote, support and affirm healthy living behaviors." It also works in cooperation with Alternatives, the UNCW substance abuse program. "We are a health education program, encouraging and challenging students to take a look at their lifestyles," says Haywood, one of the directors of the center. "We provide services in stress management, exercise, healthy sexuality and other aspects of a total well-being." The Center has 13 peer educators, which are paid, trained UNCW students who work with the Center. These students are recruited every spring and assist in the promotion of wellness in the campus community.

"The Expo," says Haywood, "will kick off the year and acquaint the campus with what resources and facilities are available to them." Some of the exhibitors you will be able to find at the Healthy Living Expo include Cape Fear Hospital, who will be doing body fat percent measuring and giving coupons for free cholesterol screenings, the American Cancer Society and the Health Department. There will also be health screenings done by UNCW nursing students, as well as brochures and freebies from many other exhibitors. "The local businesses that assert health and recreation really love to come on campus and meet the students," commented Haywood. "We also get a lot of support from the faculty and the students." Presently, the Wellness Promotion Center is recruiting volunteers to work the Expo next Wednesday. Students who attend the Expo will receive a "passport", in which they can fill with stamps from each exhibitor. When you have completed their book, it is turned in for a chance to win bicycles, helmets, dinners and other healthy prizes awarded in the Expo drawing. These passports also allow students to receive credit if it is required for any classes.

Facts About Young Adults, Sexual Behavior, and Sexually Transmitted Diseases

The AIDS epidemic continues to grow rapidly

The World Health Organization estimates that more than 3 million people worldwide have developed AIDS and that more than 14 million people have been infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

As of December 1993, there were 361,164 cases of AIDS reported in the United States. Of those, 220,736 have died.

It is estimated that nearly one million Americans are currently infected with HIV.

From 1985 through 1993, the proportion of people with AIDS acquired through heterosexual transmission increased from 2 percent to 9 percent.

Young adults, in particular, are at risk for HIV and other STDs

Many young adults in this country practice sexual behaviors that increase their risk for HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases (STDs). By age 20, 86 percent of men and 77 percent of women have had sexual intercourse, and 19 percent of all high school students have had four or more sex partners. Median age of reported first intercourse is 16.1 years for males and 16.9 years for females.

Among high school students who are currently sexually active, only 46 percent reported that they or their partner had used a condom during last intercourse. Nationally, only 17 percent of heterosexuals 18 and older who have multiple sex partners use condoms all the time. (Catania et al. Science Magazine, Nov. 13, 1992)

In 1992, AIDS became the second leading cause of death among persons ages 25-44. Moreover, AIDS became the leading cause of death for men ages 25-44 and the fourth leading cause of death for women in this age group. Due to the long incubation period between HIV infection and the onset of AIDS, many of these people were probably infected in their teens and early twenties.

Every year, 3 million American teenagers contract an STD. That means that one in five sexually active teenagers becomes infected by the time he or she reaches 21. Some STDs might increase the risk of contracting HIV by creating skin lesions that make it easier to acquire the virus and by weakening a person's immune system, among other factors.

Women, especially women of color, are one of the fastest growing groups of people with HIV and AIDS

The increase in reported AIDS cases in 1993 was greater among women than among men; women accounted for 12 percent of the cumulative number of cases reported among adults and adolescents.

Heterosexual transmission was attributed to 35 percent of the cases reported among women; however, among young women ages 13-24, 49 percent of reported AIDS cases was due to heterosexual transmission.

Although African Americans and Hispanics account for only 17 percent of all American women, they represent 74 percent of the reported AIDS cases among women.

Latex condoms are highly effective in preventing HIV

According to a 1991 study by the National Center for Health Statistics, only 28 percent of individuals polled believe that latex condoms are very effective as a means of preventing sexual transmission of HIV.

However, rigorous non-scientific studies of high-risk couples—in which one partner was HIV-infected and the other partner was not infected—prove that correct and consistent use of latex condoms can dramatically reduce the risk of HIV infection during vaginal, anal, or oral sex.

In a European study of 123 such couples who used latex condoms correctly and consistently, none of the uninfected partners contracted HIV over a 2-year period. In an Italian study of 171 such couples, 2 percent of the uninfected partners contracted HIV over a 2-year period. Simply put, those who failed to use condoms consistently increased their risk of HIV infection by 900 percent compared with those who used condoms consistently and correctly (DeVincenti, et al., Seracocci et al.)

Studies by the FDA Center for Devices and Radiological Health confirm that latex condoms are a highly effective barrier to HIV-sized particles. Furthermore, latex condoms are the only contraceptive labeled by the FDA to be effective in preventing the sexual transmission of HIV.

WRITERS NEEDED AND NEEDED AND NEEDED!

The Seahawk is desperately in need of writers who will actually write news stories and turn them in by 5 p.m. each Friday. Turn your stories in on disks, turn them in on clay tablets, turn them in on toilet paper, but, please, turn them in. If you'll just let us know you're interested in being writers, we'll discuss story ideas with you, assign them to you, or make the news so you can have something to write about (not really—we frown on fairy-tale news). Please contact Kristy Shumaker at 395-3789 or 350-4610, leave a note on The Seahawk door, or throw letters tied to bricks over the bathroom stall doors where we go to cry and rid ourselves of undue stress because we are so desperate for real, live WRITERS (the ones we have are near clinical death).

S. Bartlett Student Soliloquies

I've been catching a lot of flak lately. Student and faculty Seahawk faithfuls have told me this column is caustic, sarcastic, uncompromising, hardcore, and frightening.

Although I'm used to the opinions of my readers, those of you who feel the need to express your thoughts to me are missing the central point here: I sincerely don't care! Get your own column and get off my back. Or get me fired from this job. I could use the extra study time.

Now that I've gotten that off my chest (which was the only thing holding it up), let's get on with it.

A few weeks ago, after having dinner with some of my people, I was struck by the concept of "family values"—as it applies to my life and the lives of the many single-parent households in the U.S. Single parents get knocked around for deliberately bringing about the destruction of American morality (as if there ever was such a thing) and ruining the economy by eating up social program funding.

Single mothers are especially hit hard by conservatives as willful conspirators attempting to flood our streets with father-less, bloodthirsty criminals. Oh, yeah. I lie in the back seat of my Escort every night, on which I haven't made a payment in two years, counting my free money from the government and comproving my "things to do cause the further breakdown of family values" lists. (see sidebar)

Okay. So that's our day, according to my agenda. But back to my recent family get-together. What an interesting mix of bodies.

Included in our little party was my constant companion (Steven, I need your help on this one—at our ages, 30 and 43, is he too old to be my boyfriend, too cliché to be my lover, what about significant other? No that's too clinical—"S. Bartlett, you've gotten Herpes Complex from your Significant Other"), my late husband's parents, my best friend since the age of 12 and his Danish wife of 24-hours, my 18-year-old nephew, my companion's 21-year-old daughter and her fiancé, and my late husband's brother. What a group, huh?

Not your traditional family, I suppose, but it works for me. In that same group, my kids get exposed to an electrical engineer, a mechanic, a high-ranking government employee, a former collections agent, a nanny, a trades student, a University of Maryland graduate student of English, a car-prep man for a auto dealer, a home security systems salesman, and an honors student and pseudojournalist from UNCW.

Of course, I doubt my sons will learn anything useful from this diverse group, so I'll keep pushing my agendas, as described to you on my daily planner. As a single mother, I realize I am obligated to work towards the demise of morality in this very moral country of ours.

Don't fear, though, because as a woman, I probably don't have the courage or stamina to fight the system for long.

A typical set of entries in my daily planner might read:

Monday, September 19, 1994

- 1) Buy toy guns and GI. Joes—after all, "guns don't kill people, people kill people."
- 2) Visit a local homeless shelter to ridicule the inhabitants—everyone knows the homeless want to be on the streets. They're not mentally ill or destitute, they're just lazy.
- 3) Stop by the battered women's shelter and take turns banging on the door with a baseball bat and then hiding—if these girls can't make their husbands stop smacking them around, what can we do about it? They must deserve it.
- 4) Sit in the Health Department, waiting to tease people coming in for HIV testing—yelling stuff like, "See that guy, yeah him, the one that looks like a 'homosexual,' he's here for AIDS."
- 5) Stand in front of the Social Security office in New Bern holding up signs that read "You're not disabled, you're a bum!" and "Get a job, freeloader!"
- 6) Hide in the bushes beside the Crist Clinic, in Jacksonville, and jump out at people as they try to enter—shoving color 8 x 10 photos of aborted fetuses and adoption agency pamphlets in their faces.
- 7) Go to the city library and only check out books written by white, middle-class moles. Spend a few minutes drawing crude pictures of female genitalia on the covers of books, like Little Women and Wuthering Heights.
- 8) Finish off our "family values" extravaganza by hanging outside the local gay bar—yelling homophobic slurs, such as "Hey, aren't you the queer we saw at the AIDS clinic today? Everyone knows God is punishing you people for being unnatural."
- 9) Stop by Burger King for a couple of force-fed chicken chunks and kangaroo burgers—the only right animals have is feeding people. Dinner discussion question: "How can an animal have rights when so many people agree that women don't deserve any?"
- 10) Now, home and a Steven Seagal movie—watching bloodsport media encourages masculinity. Forget that "maternalization of the American male" crap.

Here's What I Have To Say About It...

I'm pretty sure Jimmy (as in the Leutze man) is considering naming all the sidewalks on campus after me. I can see it now—June's Walk of Shame, June's Tiny Trail of Travail (don't you just love the alliteration?), and so on. I just told old Jimmy I'll admit it, but I'm sure he's eyed ye olde concrete and thought of good olde me.

Why am I sure Jimmy is thinking of me? Because I am one worn-out woman traipsing around this campus.

I spend more hours than you can possibly believe chasing all over this bloody campus running to my graduate mentor's meetings, running from Parking Lot ZZZZ down in Leland to make it to class on time, running to get this or that interview for The Seahawk, from this organization meeting to that organization meeting, to the library to actually get research time in, and, at least, 500,000 trips to my newspaper office to regroup and replan my next run around campus.

And why, I ask you, do I have to do all this and more? That I won't bore you with by explaining. But, why are there definite grooves in the concrete winding its snaky way throughout our campus?

Because, you dolts, I don't have enough writing left for your student newspaper, The Seahawk. What do you think I do all day, just dream up stories and they magically get researched, written, and laid out nice and neat for you to read each Thursday?

We're busting our butts (and wearing out our sneaker treads) trying to cover everything on campus. Well, we can't do it alone. We have repeatedly put up flyers, as well as notices in the newspaper, asking for people to write. What's wrong with you people? A campus this large surely has to have at least a few hardy souls who are capable of putting pen to paper. We're under the assumption Jimmy actually lets only people with brains attend school here.

I have literally begged people on hands and knees to just write one teeny-weeny story for us. Anyone who is in conversation with me more than one minute gets a story assignment—trust me, I always have story ideas. But, for some reason, as soon as people see me coming, they start mumbling some dumb excuse about having to attend a class—right that minute!

Now, what kind of silly excuse is this, I ask you? I mean, what a novel concept, actually attending a class (oh yeah, I forgot, that's why we're here, isn't it?)

To top off the indignities of begging for writers, some fool actually showed up in my office at the paper this week and complained because I never put any stories in the paper about minority or foreign students at UNCW. I mean to tell you, I could have popped out my eyeballs and shoved them up his nose—I was so mad.

When I turned an extremely dangerous shade of red and my eyes looked like they wanted to carry out my thoughts, he backed off and said, "Well...HE said you didn't."

"Okay, who's HE?" I asked (damn, but I'm a fine journalist, at least I ask the right questions).

"Oh, uh, well..."

"Yeah, right, I get it—He, yes, I see who you mean. So, did HE read the paper this week? Did HE read the paper last week? Does HE ever read the paper? And does this HE person bother to come in here and write the stories HE so desperately wants to see? If HE wants to pass judgment, HE needs to read The Seahawk."

I then informed this messenger from HE that if he would kindly ask HE to come see me, I would very much like to punch HE in the nose.

See what happens when I get mad? You don't mess with Mother Newspaper.

Then, just to make my point, I assigned this poor fellow a story and gave him our Friday deadline. I don't really expect to see him anywhere near the newspaper office again. I have a feeling I scared the shit out of him.

But that's what happens to all editors of The Seahawk. We become overworked, overstressed, and overly impatient because we are trying to speed up this paper good, but all we get are complaints and whines about how we don't cover you; organizational meetings and then you have some whiney excuse why you don't want to get involved, that we just plain explode. And I really don't think that the vision of the soon-to-be-named June Sidewalks covered in splatters of blood are really in Jimmy's plan of action for UNCW.

Baby, it sure ain't in mine!

So, again, I ask you—if you want to help, we have a place for you. We are not looking for editorials or columnists, we have enough opinionated hot air up here already. What we need are people looking for a way to get their writing published, to tell some great story they've discovered, and to have opportunities to learn all kinds of weird, wacky, and wonderful things about this university.

Those of us working at The Seahawk slave at this because (although we, too, bitch and complain) we love what we do and we're proud of having the opportunity to represent the students on campus in our (as in yours and mine and ours as students) newspaper. But you need to remember, it is your student newspaper, get your organization's publicity committee to give us regular reports about what you do so we can let others know. Get your interests addressed and, most of all, get involved in your own lives here on campus.

Oh yeah, Jimmy, a note in closing—there's a rough spot in one of my (excuse me, almost my) sidewalks between Morton and the Union. I think you've been riding your bike over that area too much. I'd like a story on sidewalk repair—don't forget deadline is 5 p.m. Friday. See about it, will ya?

Bob Haywood's Still Point "The Home Planet"

Last night I was looking through a coffee table book at home, "The Home Planet." In it astronaut James Irwin states, "The earth reminded us of a Christmas tree ornament hanging in the blackness of space. As we got farther and farther away it diminished in size. Finally it shrank to the size of a marble, the most beautiful marble you can imagine. That beautiful, warm, living object looked so fragile, so delicate that if you touched it with a finger it would crumble a fall apart. Seeing this has to change a (person) it has to make a (person) appreciate the creation of God and the love of God."

In the tension of the daily focus on the details of life and work, I have found it healing to sit back, consider that wonderful picture of the earth taken from the moon that we all know, and appreciate Creation in it's wholeness. From space you can't see us inner-city ghettos, the tension of Haiti, Cuban refugee camps, Bosnia, or even the mass pollution of Eastern Europe. You see the whole, the wondrous, unique spaceship earth on which humankind was placed to tend as a garden and live a life of abundance and fulfillment. This picture of earth in its wholeness serves to remind us, as long as we keep it in our consciousness, of our true human vocation: to live as caretakers of the earth and its peoples.

A fundamental shift in human consciousness, a conversion, as it were, needs to happen in each one of us so that we give up living our lives only for the sake of "me and mine" and live intentionally in the awareness of everything as "ours." Humankind is one big interdependent family and any barriers that exist to separate us are of our own creation and are so often destructive.

Last week was Beach Sweep, carried out in the conviction that all these beaches and lake fronts are "ours." This is our university and whatever happens here that is negative should concern us all. This is our community, our nation, and ultimately our planet.

In all the decisions that we have to make about the details of our days or the course of our life, one of the decisions that we will make, either by choice or by default, is whether we are going to be a force for healing on this planet or a force that continues the destruction by living self-centered lives. To drop a piece of trash on the beach or in the ocean, too be critical of someone who is different, to not care about the quality of life in your residence halls, to seek only pleasure for yourself: all these are little tiny individual acts that add up to massive problems of pollution, violence, and the worsening human condition.

John - David Bartoe, another astronaut, commented, "As I looked down I saw a large river meandering slowly along for miles, passing from one country to another without stopping. I also saw huge forests, extending across several borders. And I watched the extent of one ocean touch the shores of separate continents. Two words leaped to mind as I looked down on all this: commonality and interdependence. We are one world." We live on a fragile beautiful planet. Let yourself consider the sight of earth as a whole hanging in the blackness of space. We are its caretakers. How you live today makes a difference in its future. What kind of caretaker are you?

Frank's Place Frank Tascone

Hello and welcome back to Frank's Place. Bob and I were just visiting with our friend, Angela, who lives a couple of buildings down. Angela's having guy problems. She always comes by to see us when these troubles build to a stage where she feels a need to reach out. I guess she comes to see me because I'm thoughtful, understanding, withhold judgment, make her laugh, give advice only when asked, and have a BA in psychology. She comes to see Bob cuz he's cuddly and cute (Bob is a cat for you new-comers). I don't dare speculate as to which of us she is most attracted, or most helpful by.

The irony of the situation is that Angela is one of a long and growing line of women whom I have dated, and that have now become "friends." I suppose I should consider it an honor that these one-time dates have now become pals, but after seeing, and feeling, this trend continue, I've become just a little concerned. I wonder if, perhaps, there's some code that I'm not aware of; the way I dress, the way I smile, perhaps the way I lace my shoes, gives off a subliminal, but irrefutable signal—"nice guy—he'd make a great friend."

Today, Angela is upset because Clint, her most recent dude, "totally" forgot that her sister and boyfriend were coming into town this weekend, and that they were all supposed to hangout and have cookouts and go downtown and stuff. Clint made plans to go with Harold to see BCU play Syracuse.

"That is a pretty big game," I say without thinking.

"You guys are all the same," she shakes her head. "Besides, he knew they were coming—we had plans. He just conveniently forgot." I just nod and smile. I've learned not to take a position here. I just let her direct the session. I am a bit put off by her lumping me in with the likes of Clint, though. The guy's a lunatic. The kind of guy who hangs a Chevy engine from a tree by a rusty chain, and leaves it there all summer to serve as a conversation piece for quaffing beers in the early evening hours. In the fall the engine is replaced by a deer.

Angela goes on to gripe about how Clint is always in his own world of sports, beer, and beer. She wishes that of jorts, he could tell him about my class, or a good book I read, or a conversation I had with a friend, and have him respond in a way that says, "yep, I know just what you're saying." In the mean time, Angela tells me about the class, the book, and the conversation. I say to myself, "you know Angi, I'm free this weekend (my favorite football team are all up north) and would love to meet your sister..." I don't bother because I know it's a lost cause.

In desperate and unpredictable circumstances, men develop theories. My theory is that our romantic attraction to others, and others attraction to us, and others attraction to others, is based on some primordial power over which we have no control. Oh sure, we talk about the kind of significant other we'd like to have; "someone to talk to, someone with a sense of humor, someone who is warm." When it really comes down to it, however, we are often attracted to people having few or none of these traits. We can intellectualize our way into friendships, but, in regards to romance, we're relegated to obeying the laws of "the force." Actually, I fear that these laws are the same ones Bob obeys (I really should get him fixed, huh).

I read a study once where they found Eskimo tribes who perceived that they had little control over their environment due to harsh weather and inconsistent caribou migrations, were more likely to believe in superstition. I think I'll ask Elena out for this weekend. She reads tarot cards. I figure she'll be a good resource once we become friends.

To Glow Or Not To Glow

BYANNE MINARD

Staff Writer

A popular bumper sticker reads, "Better active today than radioactive tomorrow."

Is tomorrow today? Ron Shackelford of the Coastal Alliance for a Safer Environment (CASE) spoke at UNCW, on September 13th, about the dangers of current nuclear policies. His visit was prompted by the expected delivery of 150 "spent" nuclear fuel rods to Sunny Point Ocean Terminal in Southport, en route to the Savannah River Nuclear Waste Site in South Carolina.

"Spent" is a very misleading term. These rods are far from harmless. The nuclear "assemblies," as they are called, become extremely reactive during the fuel-making process. So much so, in fact, that their radioactivity can no longer be controlled. That, according to Shackelford, is why the rods are no longer useful to nuclear power plants.

Oh, but relax, right? After all, the government and our local media have assured us that the shipments are "...just another risk."

A recent article in The Morning Star estimated the planned train route to be 370 miles long. Shackelford asserts that each nuclear fuel rod has the potential to destroy 40-square miles of land if an accident occurs. Simple multiplication shows that 30,000 square miles of land are at risk—depending on wind direction.

Could an accident happen? Who expected Three Mile Island—or Chernobyl—the Exxon Valdez—or the cracks in our very own Brunswick Nuclear Facility?

The destination of the fuel rods raises questions about the long term risks of nuclear waste storage. Barring accidents, rods will arrive safely at a site that has already stored nuclear material for up to 35 years—in cases designed to last seven. Some of the older crates are so corroded that officials don't know how to move or repack them. The Savannah Site has already had to install pumps to keep escaped Tritium from entering water sources. The pumps, according to Shackelford, will need to be run for 50,000 years to outlast the supply of Tritium.

So why does our government welcome the risk? Shackelford uses the term "Plutonium Economy" to describe US policy on shipments of nuclear waste. The original assemblies were made in this country; when we sold them to Europe, we promised to take back the garbage. To refuse to do so would jeopardize future nuclear customers. CASE assures that nuclear power has become the mainstay of super-companies such as GE and Westinghouse. In short, the southern states get the honor of becoming a poisoned nuclear dumping ground—to ensure these companies' financial success.

What can we do? Many of us have already filled out almost 500 postcards to be mailed to Governor Hunt. He can also be reached at 1-800-662-7952.

South Carolina has a court case pending to deny entry to this latest shipment and the 15,000 assemblies expected over the next 15 years. We can urge our governor to take the same action.

THE PARKING PLAN

IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE PLAN, AND THEN CAME THE ASSUMPTIONS; AND MANY OF THE ASSUMPTIONS WERE WITHOUT FORM, AND THE PLAN WAS COMPLETELY WITHOUT SUBSTANCE; AND DARKNESS WAS UPON THE FACES OF THE STUDENTS; AND THEY SPOKE UNTO THEIR INSTRUCTORS, SAYING; "THE PLAN IS A CROCK OF SHIT AND IT STINKS."

AND THE INSTRUCTORS WENT UNTO THEIR ASSISTANT DEPARTMENT CHAIRS AND SAID: "IT IS A PAIL OF DUNG AND NONE CAN ABIDE THE ODOR THEREOF." AND THE ASSISTANT DEPARTMENT CHAIRS WENT UNTO THEIR DEPARTMENT CHAIRS AND SAID: "IT IS A CONTAINER OF EXCREMENT AND IT IS VERY STRONG, SUCH THAT NON HERE MAY ABIDE IT."

AND THE DEPARTMENT CHAIRS WENT UNTO THE DEAN OF THE COLLEGE AND SAID UNTO HER; "IT IS A VESSEL OF FERTILIZER AND NONE MAY ABIDE ITS STRENGTH." AND THE DEAN OF THE COLLEGE WENT UNTO THE ASSISTANT CHANCELLOR AND SAID: "IT CONTAINS THAT WHICH AIDS PLANT GROWTH AND IT IS VERY STRONG." AND THE ASSISTANT CHANCELLOR WENT UNTO THE CHANCELLOR AND SAID: "IT PROMOTES GROWTH AND IS VERY POWERFUL." AND SAID UNTO HIM: "THIS POWERFUL NEW PLAN WILL ACTIVELY PROMOTE THE GROWTH AND EFFICIENCY OF THE UNIVERSITY THIS AREA IN PARTICULAR," AND THE CHANCELLOR LOOKED UPON THE PLAN AND SAW THAT IT WAS GOOD AND THE PLAN BECAME POLICY.

Advice for UNCW 's Weary

"Emma, do I have to help you write the column for this week? I have got tests coming up and I need to study. I mean, insulting these people may be fun and all, but I want to get into graduate school. I could be wrong, but I don't think that I'll be able to gain entrance simply on the merit of the combined wisdom that we dispense."

"Jane, get a grip and stop your whinning. Do you honestly think that you're the only one who goes to the gym to do? You're starting to sound more like the losers who write to us, instead of my caustic consultant."

"I do not. Besides, the people who read this column aren't worried about studying for a test. Some think the plural of test is 'testes.' When an instructor says the word 'exam,' a few will immediately turn their heads and cough."

"Before this goes any further—let's just write the column."

Dear Emma and Jane,

I am a 22 year old non-traditional, male, freshman. I love to cross dress. However, I am definitely a closet case and do not want my roommate to find out, because he might "hang me up" in the closet. Over the Labor Day week-end, my roommate invited me to go home with him to Greensboro to meet his mother. I could not stop looking at his mother's pretty clothes. Sunday morning, as she left the house to go to church, she was wearing a pale green suit with one of those beautiful, white, ruffled blouses. Oh, how I wanted to try on that white, ruffled blouse. Now, I am so confused. Do you think I have a problem or do I just love pretty clothes?

Signed: JB

Dear JB,

What's wrong with a man who appreciates beautiful clothes? Men buy silky, ruffled things for women all the time, why shouldn't they be allowed to enjoy the feeling of donning a pair of lacy thong underwear as well? We don't think that you have the problem, everyone else does. We didn't intend to get on our soap box this issue, but... if men and women's roles weren't so rigidly defined you wouldn't think you have a problem and strong women like us wouldn't be considered overly masculine. We would avoid crossing in front of your roommate. If his mother wears such feminine, frilly clothes, he probably has a very strict concept of the limitations our society's imposes on acceptable sex roles. And your uninhibited behavior might awaken the macho pig in him, which could result in major difficulties for you. Still, it couldn't hurt to ask his mother where she got that beautiful, white, ruffled blouse—'cause we want to know, too. Jane goes to Greensboro all of the time and would like to purchase one for her husband. Why don't you write us back with your size and we'll see if we pick one up for you, too.

Dear Emma and Jane,

I have a very serious concern. I have often found myself wanting to identify myself as a feminist but I am scared to. Last week, in my literature class, Dr. Newlin asked how many of us were feminists and no one raised their hand, except one man. I want to make my opinions known, but like many of the other women I have talked to, I am concerned about being stereotyped. I am afraid that men will automatically think that I am a male-basher with penis envy and castration anxiety and no one will ask me out on dates. Are my fears rational or do you think I am being unfair and that most men can accept my feminist tendencies?

Signed: Oppressed

Dear Oppressed,

We understand your concerns, but by remaining silent you are only perpetuating the myths that surround feminism. Being a feminist doesn't mean you despise males. We understand the concept of feminism as the demand that everyone be treated with equal fairness. Feminism isn't about segregating humans more than they already are, it's about women enjoying the empowerment that is often allowed only to males, without destroying masculinity. It's about men breaking down the stereotypes that have repressed their abilities to nurture and respond emotionally to their fellow people. The only negative aspect of feminism is knowing that you won't always receive support from the majority. But, as we seem to discuss every week—most of the population is comprised of weenies and sheep, whose opinions don't really count. We do have one concern—if you truly are a feminist, what do you care about filling your dance card? There is no Mr. Right, there is only Mr. Right This Second. Just get on with your life and start worrying about things that matter, like Third-World ethnic cleansing.

Dear Emma and Jane,

What's wrong with women? I'm a Southern gentleman. By this I mean my mother taught me to respect women and to not try to have sex with every woman that I go out with. My last girlfriend broke up with me because I demanded we practice safe sex. She said that my wanting to wear a condom made her feel sleazy and dirty. If that wasn't bad enough, last weekend the girl that I have been dating for two months called it off because we hadn't had sex yet. Now she's going around telling everyone that she thinks that I'm gay. Women are always talking about how men are only out for one thing, but guys like me are treated badly for wanting to show them respect. What do women want?

Signed: Rhett

Dear Rhett,

Where have you been all of our lives and do you want to meet Emma's young niece? Most of the men we've dated (before meeting our current Love Gods) thought we should have sex with them before dinner, to insure that they weren't going to waste their money. We think many of the common misconceptions about women, like they are void of sexual desires and the sole bearers of the moral flame of this nation, are encouraged by staunch conservatives who are married to obsessive-compulsive types with big-hair and a fetish for anything from Bloomingdales. You should spend time getting to know a prospective lover, before having sex. The way we see it there's nothing more comical than sexual intercourse and you have to feel able to laugh at your naked partner, without the fear of offending him/her. There's nothing like a good guffaw, in the midst of passion, to make you both realize that sex is natural not mystical. Don't worry about what your last girlfriend says about you, most people will know that she's just throwing sucker punches at you. And is this something to brag about—that you broke up with a great guy simply because he wouldn't "put out?" As for the first woman you mentioned, common sense and the Surgeon General will assure you that a condom isn't considered optional attire anymore.

Politics Of Haiti Proves Full Of Absurdity

BY MARK HOSSFELD

Staff Writer

On the recent non-invasion of Haiti, I have a few comments. The gaunt priest Aristide — he allegedly advocates "necklacing" — has not killed anybody. Our erstwhile Republican peaceniks impugn him with impunity — he's unstable, he's a communist, he's anti-American — conveniently ignoring the massacres ordered by their political soulmates, Cedras and company.

Aside from the hilarious improbability of right-wing Christians swarming into the streets to protest "Clinton's War" in some bizarre reenactment of the 250,000 in the streets of San Francisco against the Gulf War, the other interesting aspect of a full-fledged invasion of Haiti that I regret missing is the transformation of captured U.S. soldiers into zombies la Haitienne (or is it au Haitien?). I'm not saying that your typical U.S. soldier is not a zombie already, but rather that his zombification by Haitian means would have been more interesting as a manifestation of Clausewitz's "War is the continuation of Politics by other means" — transposed to "War is the continuation of Religion by other means."

Haitians could never have competed against the U.S. technologically. It would have had to be a war engaged loa to loa, which is the voodoo term for spirit, I think. A true competition on the astral plane would have provided an interesting reflection on the state of U.S. spiritual affairs.

Again, Aristide hasn't killed anybody. Cedras has killed thousands. Who gets the golden parachute from the United States? One guess.

Weezer: Finally, Something New

by J. TRENT LEONARD
A&E editor

First, a bit of background. Weezer was conceived on February 14, 1992 in Los Angeles, California (which makes them fairly new to the music scene), and was later signed to the David Geffen Company label in June of 1993. They had a meager start in the L.A. club scene and emerged to the public nearly 17 months after their signing.

They were searching for a producer for their new album that was to be recorded within the next few months; someone who wouldn't try to change everything about the band so that it would sell faster. Due to a strong admiration to the sound of the Cars, Rivers Cuomo (lead vocals and guitar) sent a demo tape to Ric Ocasek (one of the more prolific singer/songwriters of modern rock and former Cars' lead singer). The band hardly expected Ocasek to reply, but much to their astonishment and gratification he did and took them to New York for two months of recording.

And nearly three months later, Weezer's first album release appeared in stores under the same name. One song from the CD, "Undone—The Sweater Song," was the first song to be released and is enjoying immense popularity in the large markets of L.A., Chicago, and New York. This song was the subject for Weezer's first video and it was subsequently named an MTV "Buzz Clip" a few weeks ago. The song now is enjoying an impressive rise in sales over the past month.

The band is composed of Rivers Cuomo, Brian Bell (guitar, vocals), Matt Sharp (bass, vocals), and Patrick Wilson (drums).

Weezer is a brilliant combination of some of the most satisfying guitar sounds that I have heard in recent months. Having seen the video to "Undone," I believe that these guys need a little more work on their video originality, but the CD is simply excellent. I haven't checked on the recent availability in the local stores, but if you have some extra change lying around (in your couch or in those pants you haven't worn since the first day of classes) go and pick up a copy. You'll be glad you did.

I am sorry that I had to miss them when they were at The Mad Monk on September 17, but I am going to catch them when they come back through early next year (sorry, no date available).

On the CD star rating scale, Weezer receives three and one-half stars on the four star scale.

Clear and Present Danger: Harrison Ford's Last Hoorah

by J. TRENT LEONARD
A&E editor

Erik Totten and I screened this movie together (no references to Siskel & Ebert please). He is a Tom Clancy fan and viewed the movie from the aspect of the book. I, however, am not a Clancy fan and viewed the movie from the Harrison Ford point of view (I simply enjoy movies with Ford and for that matter, James Earl Jones, in them). Special thanks go to College Road Cinemas for allowing us to screen the movie in their theatre. Thanks for the courtesy we received! Erik's review will appear in the September 29 edition of A&E.

Jack Ryan is Deputy Director (intelligence) of the CIA and a drug cartel in Colombia, lead by a man named Escobedo, is stepping up the offensive on people that steal from them.

Escobedo decides that a particular man (forgotten his name) and his family must die on their boat for his attempt at stealing from them (he was laundering their money for them and decided that he would take some of the dough for himself).

Thus, the foundation for the movie is laid. It just so happens that the man who was killed was a very good friend of the President of the United States (not a very good idea to kill this guy, right?). Through a rather liberal-minded and innovative Chief of National Security, the military begins to become involved in destroying the cartel.

After a particularly nasty incident involving several rockets being fired at Ryan and his companions while in Colombia (which resulted in all dying except for Ryan) on a mission to discuss the seizure of $650 million and change, the President remarks to his Chief of National Security that the Colombian cartel must be crazy asking, "Who do these people think they are?" This remark is taken to mean by the Chief that the President wants immediate action in Colombia.

Meanwhile, Ryan is compromised because of an earlier promise he made to a Senate committee. He stated that no troops would enter Colombia to begin policing the jungles of South America. But he has no idea of the Chief's intentions or does he know that the plan has already come to fruition. That is until a missile of cosmic proportions is dropped on one of the house's of one of the cartels leaders where a summit of sorts was taking place. But, of course, Escobedo is late and does not die, but does witness the destruction of his competition.

I am afraid anymore information will spoil the ending of the movie, and since I have only covered the movie to around the midpoint, I feel that the above information is sufficient for the sake of plot.

Let me make this clear to all of my readers, I have not, nor will I read the book by Tom Clancy of the same name. This sort of subject matter is boring when put down in script and is best left for the silver screen—which this movie presents brilliantly and succinctly.

It does not involve the viewer in endless technical jargon the way The Hunt for Red October did. Although no Academy Awards should be handed out for performances here, it presents a conflict and a daring resolution to that conflict, while providing endless action and enjoyment along the way. I understand the viewpoint of those that enjoy reading these types of books—most of those that I have talked with do not like this movie on the premise that it destroys the book and Clancy's idea of what the plot should contain. What Hollywood movie based on a book does not change the plot to fit its agenda? I have failed to hear of one, but if one exists, please feel free to enlighten me as to its title.

I also must remark as to the relative stupidity and ignorance exhibited by Clancy when he publicly stated that he no longer desired Harrison Ford to play the role of Jack Ryan in anymore of his movies. Ford is a brilliant, Academy Award winning actor that has, in the past and now, played the role of Ryan to almost sheer perfection. What is Clancy thinking? I will be very interested to see whom else he chooses during the screening of the next movie.

Overall, on the movie scale, I give Clear and Present Danger three stars. It is clearly an enjoyable and technically involving (although not endlessly) thriller. I believe it worth the money at the box office to go and see.

Deep Thoughts

by JACK HANDREY

I remember that fateful day when Coach took me aside. I knew what was coming. "You don't have to tell me," I said. "I'm off the team, aren't I?"

"Well," said the Coach, "you never were really ON the team. You made that uniform you're wearing out of rags and towels, and your helmet is of a toy space helmet. You show up at practice and then either steal the ball and make us chase you to get it back, or you try to tackle people at inappropriate times."

It was all true what he was saying. And yet I thought, something is brewing inside the head of this Coach. He sees something in me, some kind of raw talent that he can mold. But that's when I felt the handcuffs go on.

Aerosmith Wins at Music Awards

Long-lived rock group Aerosmith proved at the MTV Music Awards that they can still be great after all their years in the music business. Opening the show with their classic hit "Walk This Way," Aerosmith went on to win awards in Best Video, Best Group, and Viewers' Choice. Trailing in their glory was R.E.M., which took four awards including Breakthrough Video of the Year. Another long-lived band (almost too much so!), the Rolling Stone, were also specially recognized at the music awards for their contributions and breakthroughs to the rock-and-roll industry.

Nicole The Book

Adding to America's fascination with the O.J. Simpson case, socialite divorcee friend of Nicole Simpson Faye Peasnick will have a book published about the private life of Nicole Simpson. Titled Nicole Brown Simpson: The Private Diary of a Life Interrupted, the book will have an initial printing of 250,000 hard cover copies.

Not So Smooth

Jazz sensation Harry Connick Jr. did not please a Washington, D.C. crowd with his soft swoons that made him famous. The crowd did not like the New Orleans Style tunes which appear on his new album and in his concert tour. Many disgruntled fans filled out refund forms in Vienna, Virginia's Wolf Trap Amphitheater after the show.

UNCW Folk Festival This Weekend

by NIKKI LEONE
Staff Writer

Everyone was thrilled when Wilmington was actually mentioned as an up-and-coming music town by none other than Rolling Stone magazine last month—it seems like such a long way from Mayberry.

But local musician Laura McLean isn't surprised at all. "We have a great music scene in this town," she said. "We could blow Seattle off the map."

In fact, the only thing McLean didn't like about the Rolling Stone article was that it missed many of the best people. That is why she put together the Cape Fear Folk Festival meant to feature local artists. The Folk Festival has become so popular that it is now a twice-yearly event.

This year's festival starts at 5:00 p.m. on Friday, Sept. 23rd at the Ice House and continues through Sunday, Sept. 25th. It features a different act every hour on the Ice House outdoor stage Friday and Saturday, as well as a musician's bazaar, a children's show, workshops, and roving musicians playing at various Front Street venues. The festival culminates on Sunday with a folk music contest, also at the Ice House, from 12-6 p.m.

On Saturday the 24th, the Folk Festival hosts the first ever musician's bazaar from 10:00 a.m. until 2:00 p.m. at the Ice House. This means you can gather up all the extraneous junk you can bring yourself to part with, take it downtown, dump it on a table and trade it for someone else's really cool stuff.

The bazaar is for anything with a musical nature: instruments, parts, sound equipment, tapes, records (remember those?), magazines, vintage posters, even concert t-shirts are fair game. There is no fee for a table, it is done on a first-come first-served basis. Lest you are imagining tables full of someone's disco rejects—one item definitely up for sale is a classic guild acoustic guitar (which is no longer made).

Some of the highlights of this fall's festival include:

WOODWORK—a much loved local 5-piece band known for their outstanding harmonies on Friday Sept. 23, 9:00 p.m., Ice House.

KATY BASS—"The Sweetheart of Oak Island" with a voice that Nanci Griffith would die for Friday Sept. 23, 5:00 p.m., Ice House.

THAD BEACH—in the tradition of North Carolina mountain music (although he is also known locally as one of the un-mountainlike Clamtones), Saturday 11:00 a.m. and 7:00 p.m. at the Ice House.

NEIL MORRIS—another mountain man and frequent player at the Douglas Corner Cafe in Nashville. He is a hero in Black Mountain, where he is legendary for other reasons. Backing Neil will be Charles Petree of the world travelled Shady Grove Band and John Donnelly, who has played with Cassandra Wilson, among others. Saturday 9:30 p.m. at the Ice House.

FENDAL—the acoustic guitar-driven band of Jason Marks. The progressive side of folk music, Friday and Saturday, 10:00 p.m.—both days at the WaveHog.

Soprano Joins UNCW as Voice Professor

by JAN KELLER
Public Relations Intern

Soprano Joan Heller has joined the Fine Arts Department of UNCW as a visiting associate professor of voice beginning with the fall semester of 1994.

During this year with the university, Heller plans to challenge the technical and artistic capabilities of her students and of herself as instructor. Heller's primary goal is to introduce vocal students to musical artistry.

"Joan Heller is one of America's leading singers of contemporary music," said Dr. Joe Hickman, associate professor of music. "She is in demand as a clinician and performer, and we are pleased to have her attention focused on our students."

From 1983 to 1994, Heller was associate professor of voice with Boston University School of Music. She was an assistant professor in the voice department of Yale University School of Music from 1974 to 1984. In addition, she served as the director of the Young Artists Vocal Program from 1986 to 1992 at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony's summer home.

Heller holds a master's degree in vocal performance from the New England Conservatory of Music and a bachelor's degree in music education from Oberlin College.

Heller has numerous recordings of 20th century vocal music to her credit. Her first solo compact disc, entitled "To The Verge," will be released this fall on Neuma Records.

As a solo performer, Heller has entertained audiences from Winston-Salem, NC, to Moscow, Russia. At Chicago's annual concert of the Contemporary Chamber Players in April 1994, she sang the world premiere of Ralph Shapey's composition, "Lullaby," dedicated to his two grandchildren. A music critic there described her performance of the experimental music piece, "Polyutterances," as "A tour de force, both amusing and amazing." This piece was written by Robert Cogan especially for Heller's performance.

Heller, together with colleagues from the music faculty, will present a recital during the spring semester of 1995.

Are You Interested In Studying Japanese Language And Culture?

BY JOHN FORD
Contributing Writer

Japanese language instruction is not offered at UNCW. But next spring this unfortunate situation could be rectified. A small group of students, now lobbying university officials, hopes to offer an alternative to those old-fashioned European languages and, specifically, hopes to add a Japanese language course to the lean arsenal of language electives. In addition to other Asian languages, several institutions of higher education and a number of North Carolina high schools currently offer courses in Japanese. UNCW has noticeably lagged behind the times. Next semester this trend could change.

UNCW intellectuals are on the verge of a unique opportunity. If all goes as planned, students will have the opportunity to engage in a Japanese language class as soon as the Spring 1995 semester. No basic knowledge of Japanese is necessary, however, what is required is an eagerness to expand one's horizons and the discipline to endure the difficulties of learning a complex foreign language.

How has this opportunity come about? Still in its formation stage, the loosely established University of North Carolina Japan Center has expressed its purpose as the promotion and encouragement of exchanges with all things Japanese, such as Japanese language, culture, business, commerce, art, literature, cuisine, and a whole host of others. The target market includes the local Wilmington community, North Carolina, and regional businesses (both native and Japanese owned).

The UNCW Japan Center will further a better understanding of Japan by offering access to specific resources. The center plans on establishing itself as a gathering place for Japanese materials, including journals, books, magazines, tapes, videos, news bulletins, and other information. Plans also include seminar programs to advance business interaction. The first topic discussed will be: "How to Conduct Business with the Japanese." Look for this and other seminars over the next few months.

The UNCW Japan Center is housed in room 223 of Cameron Hall. Nestled away in the Department of Economics and Finance, the Japan Center is situated next to the office of the center's chief architect, Dr. Ronald Copley, an Associate Professor of Finance.

The UNCW Japan Center holds a satellite charter from the larger North Carolina State Japan Center in Raleigh. Through the state wide network of chartered Japan Centers, several opportunities will exist for students, faculty, area businesses, and residents to interact with other parties interested in Japanese study and relations. Subscriptions and memberships will also be made available.

The newly formed UNCW Japan Center will hold its initial meeting on Tuesday, September 27, from 5:00 to 5:30 pm, in Cameron Hall, room 132. All interested people should attend.

For further information please contact John R. Ford, Graduate Assistant, at 350-3903 or VAX/NET: JRF5485.

This Week In SGA

BY ANDREW FARMER
SGA

Student Body Vice President Dan Sullivan called the Sept. 19 meeting to order at 6:07 p.m. It adjourned at 6:25 p.m. All officers and senators were in attendance except Sens. Bean and Stanley.

Several new appointments were made. They are as follows: Josh Harper to Spring Representative-at-Large, Bruce Hunter to Special Student Senator, Mandy Hartman and Daisaku Tajima to the University Union board, Sam Cuthrell to the Media Evaluation Committee, Carrie Ingall and Heather League to the Bookstore Committee and David Stickle to the Budget and Planning Committee.

The Budget and Planning Committee motioned for the SGA to purchase a Quick Probuzz system. The system will cost $489. All organizations on campus would have access to this system through the Campus Activities office. This motion was passed by the Senate.

Two new senators were sworn in at this meeting. Sonja Rowe is the new Senior Class Vice President. Heather League is a Spring Representative-at-Large. There are still a few vacancies in SGA for the current academic year. Anyone interested should see the SGA office staff in UU 200.

Students will soon find SGA discount cards in their mailboxes. The cards entitle students to discounts at 22 local businesses. Attached to the cards are flyers telling about SGA. Students can bring the card and flyer to the SGA office to register for a $150 gift certificate from the bookstore.

The Ecology Club

BY ANNE MINARD
Staff Writer

The Ecology Club (ECO) has gotten off to a strong start this year with enthusiastic new members and plenty of exciting activities.

Joelle Ephraim has been reelected as the organization's president and has presented a new energy-filled agenda. Plans include plenty of committees to pursue a variety of environmental interests. Among these interests is a committee to work with Coastal Alliance for a Safer Environment and a recycling committee.

ECO will participate in numerous projects to promote ecological awareness and maintain an environmentally sound UNCW campus. Among these projects are Beech Sweep '94, painting of storm drains which drain into the Cape Fear River, and trash raids—we'll supply the gloves!

New members are always welcome, so come on out to a meeting, every Tuesday at 6:00 PM in Friday Hall, room 151.

Tapestry Theatre Company

presents

"Here We Are" and "Labor Pains"

September 26, 1994 11:30am

"Here We Are"

The bride and groom bring post-wedding jitters to their first hours alone en route to their honeymoon spot. The faltering small talk degenerates into near quarrels as she imagines an insult in everything he says. This marriage gets off to a rocky but hilarious start.

"Labor Pains"

A young couple expecting their first child is caught off guard by early onset of labor. She demonstrates all the quirky symptoms of expectant mothers; he flutters and bumbles trying to please her. They are not quite ready to take on the dubious honor of being parents, which results in a delightfully funny "battle of the sexes."

Please reserve your seats at x3827

Center Stage Cafe

All programs are free and open to the public

Monday Matinee is part of Arts in Action, a program of the Campus Activities Office, University Union, Division of Student Affairs.

Please RSVP by September 24 by calling 395-3827

UNCW Sports Shorts

MEN'S SOCCER

The Seahawks and second-year coach Keith Camridge return home for a four-game homestand after battling injuries and inexperience in a pair of tough losses last week.

The Seahawks entertain The Citadel (Noon) and Maryland-Eastern Shore (1 p.m.) in back-to-back matchups this Saturday and Sunday. UNCW wraps up the homestand with games against William and Mary and Coastal Carolina next week.

UNCW dropped to 1-5-0 on the season with a pair of losses at N.C. State (7-4, OT) and James Madison (12-0). In the N.C. State contest, UNCW fell behind at halftime, 3-1, before rallying to send the game into overtime.

In the Colonial Athletic Association opener over the weekend, the Seahawks suffered the worst defeat in the history of the program at ninth-ranked James Madison. It was also the largest winning margin in JMU history.

UNCW continues to struggle offensively, scoring just twice in six outings. Joel Myers (E.A. Laney HS/Wilmington, N.C.) leads the team with five goals and 10 points. Nildo Schubert (Pernambuco H.S./Recife, Brazil) ranks second in scoring with five points on two goals and one assist.

The Seahawks will use the time off to heal a rash of injuries, including obstacles for goalkeepers Josh Hopper (Swanboro H.S./Hubert, N.C.) and Shawn McCallister (St. Rose H.S./Spring Lake, N.J.) and starting midfielders Allan Fraaselle (Jacksonville H.S./Jacksonville, N.C.) and Greg LaMendola (MacLay H.S./Tallahassee, Fla.).

VOLLEYBALL

The UNC Wilmington volleyball team participates in its third tournament of the season this weekend when it travels to the Queen City for the UNC Charlotte Invitational. On Friday, the Lady Seahawks face North Carolina A&T at 2 p.m. and Coastal Carolina at 5 p.m. In Saturday's action, UNCW plays East Carolina at 2:30 p.m. and meets host UNC Charlotte at 5 p.m.

In action last Tuesday, the Lady Seahawks picked up a win over Atlantic Coast Conference foe North Carolina State, 17-15, 5-15, 15-7, 15-9. Senior middle hitter Debby Taydus (Northwood H.S./Pittsboro, N.C.) had 14 kills, and junior outside hitter Leslie Noukelak (Walter Johnson H.S./Bethesda, Md.) collected 22 digs.

UNCW went 2-1 in its own Comfort Inn Classic last weekend to finish second to Appalachian State. The Lady Seahawks downed Coastal Carolina (15-7, 15-11, 15-6) and East Carolina (15-6, 16-14, 15-13), and fell to Appalachian State (13-15, 9-15, 13-15).

Against Coastal Carolina, Taydus led the way for UNCW with a game-high 13 kills and .292 hitting percentage. Sophomore setter Ginger Moon (Quince Orchard H.S./Gaithersburg, Md.) had a game-high 27 assists and three service aces.

Junior outside hitter Josie Youngblood (West Henderson H.S./Hendersonville, N.C.) spearheaded the attack for UNCW in the win over East Carolina with a game-high 26 kills and remarkable .535 hitting percentage. Moon collected a game-high 39 assists, and Noukelak had a team-high 16 digs.

In the loss to Appalachian State, freshman middle hitter Sarah DeLair (Lincoln-Way H.S./Mokena, Ill.) tallied nine digs and four service aces, both game-highs, as well as a team-high nine kills. Both Youngblood and Moon were named to the All-Tournament Team.

Youngblood leads the Lady Seahawks in kills (107), total attempts (311) and blocks (22), and Noukelak is tops in digs with 126. Taydus holds the team lead with 15 service aces and has a second-best 82 kills. Moon (Quince Orchard H.S./Gaithersburg, Md.) has amassed 307 assists thus far.

CROSS COUNTRY

Heather Fenton captured individual honors for the second consecutive week and Tim Cox came in second in the Wolfpack Invitational over the weekend in Raleigh, N.C.

In team competition, the Seahawk men lost to N.C. State (19-39) and South Florida (20-34), and defeated St. Augustine's (19-43). UNCW's women lost to South Florida (24-35) and Navy (25-34), and knocked off N.C. State (28-29) and St. Augustine's (15-50). N.C. State's women's team finished last season ranked ninth in the country.

Fenton (New Hartford H.S./New Hartford, N.Y.) outran Navy's Kim McGreevy with a time of 17:33, earning a 14-second victory. Shannon Williamson (East H.S./West Chester, Pa.) was UNCW's next highest finisher at ninth place (18:21).

Cox (Suffern H.S./Monroe, N.Y.), meanwhile, just missed giving the Seahawks a sweep of first place, losing to N.C. State's Jose Gonzalez by four seconds. Cox clocked a 23:48 to 23:44 for Gonzalez.

The Seahawks compete against a strong field this weekend in the George Mason Invitational, which will feature nationally ranked teams Georgetown, Penn State and Villanova.

Wolfpack Invitational Men's Individual Results (Top Five): 1. Jose Gonzalez (N.C. State), 23:44; 2. Tim Cox (UNCW), 23:48; 3. Joseph King (St. Augustine's), 23:49; 4. Grey Maviera (South Florida), 24:00; 5. Robert Malsaeed (South Florida), 24:05.

UNCW Individual Men's Results: Tim Cox, 2nd, 23:48; Jeff Tiegs, 9th, 24:24; Thomas Coughlin, 14th, 25:20; Scott Hove, 18th, 25:46; Doug Liming, 19th, 25:48; Frank Ingrassia, 20th, 25:55; Paul Wiesner, 22nd, 26:13; Stephen Sinko, 23rd, 26:15; Andrew Devine, 26th, 27:09; Frank Gagliano, 27th, 27:22; Shane Hull, 28th, 27:30; Sal Ingrassia, 30th, 27:52; Vince Hovis, 31st, 28:01; Chris Hillis, 34th, 28:30.

Wolfpack Invitational Women's Individual Results (Top Five): 1. Heather Fenton (UNCW), 17:33; 2. Kim McGreevy (Navy), 17:47; 3. Aimee Lund (South Florida), 17:51; 4. Heather Hollis (N.C. State), 17:53; 5. Kathy Knubb (N.C. State), 18:03.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

The UNC Wilmington women's soccer squad also has a light schedule on tap this week, traveling to Washington, D.C., to face conference rival American this Saturday, Sept. 24, at 1 p.m.

Last week saw UNCW drop a pair of contests, including a 3-2 loss at East Carolina in the inaugural CAA game for the Lady Seahawks. In the ECU defeat, freshman forward Margaret Merrill (East Mecklenburg H.S./Charlotte, N.C.) scored UNCW's first goal off an assist by freshman midfielder Kelli Foreman (Providence H.S./Charlotte, N.C.). Freshman midfielder Ashley Neighbors (North Forsyth H.S./Winston-Salem, N.C.) came off the bench to log the second goal, with fellow freshman Jaime Betts (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.) assisting.

In a driving rain Sunday, the Lady Seahawks were blanked, 6-0, by UNC Asheville. Junior midfielder Angie Gospodarek (Oaklawn North H.S./Oaklawn, Wis.) launched UNCW's only two shots on goal in the contest.

Margaret Merrill continues to lead the team in scoring with three goals (six points), followed by freshman forward Joanne Walker's (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.) one goal and one assist (three points). In the net, freshman goalkeeper Isabel Bordo (New Hanover H.S./Wilmington, N.C.) has racked up 37 saves this season and has a goals against average of 3.00.

Living With the Tennis Team

BY JOSH HOPPER

Sports Writer

I have recently had the privilege of living with three members of the Men's Tennis Team during the first three weeks of my tour of duty at UNC-Wilmington. My roommates, Jason Mathena, John Styles and Attila Madarasz, are certainly three of the most "unique" people that I have ever been around. In this short time, I have gotten to know the three of them quite well and have also met most of the other players at one time or another. I have been able to witness, first hand, the bond that exists between the players and the desire they have to make this a great year for Seahawk Tennis.

Madarasz, a returning Sophomore from Burlington, NC, said, "Last year we were generally a young and inexperienced team and the bond that should have been between us wasn't quite there because of barriers that were set up due to our former assistant coach... This year we're coming out with a positive outlook and the bond seems to be growing between us as a team, and therefore, mentally we will be tough as a unit."

Head Coach Larry Honeycutt is going into his 23rd season with a talented group of tennis players. The top players this year are expected to be: Dave Acevedo, Bill Anderson, Martin Green, Brian Jackson, Madarasz, Mathena, Gareth Montague-Smith, Chad Oxendine, and Styles.

Styles, a native of London, England, was Honeycutt's top recruit for this season. He is a Junior transfer student from Charleston Southern University where last season he compiled a record of 11-11. Styles will probably be the top seed for the team this year. Coach Honeycutt said, "With the help of transfers and new freshmen, it looks like we have a good chance to win the conference this year."

The Seahawks will get their first real test on September 17 when the team travels to Methodist College in Fayetteville, NC, for the Methodist Doubles Invitational. They finish off September with the UNC-Chapel Hill Invitational on the 22nd. The first home match is on October 7th when they host the UNCW Fall Invitational.

Seeing first hand the way this team is behaving, I think we should definitely keep an eye on Seahawk Tennis this year. They look able to swipe another conference title for UNCW.

Drug Arrests Drop In '93, Report Says

BY BILLY PERSON
Staff Writer

According to UNCW's annual crime report, there were 18 drug related arrests for 1993, a significant drop from the 30 arrests reported in 1992.

Students found in violation of the North Carolina drug policy are placed on automatic probation and referred through the UNCW judicial system or to the city police. The decision on the referral is left up to the university policeman on the scene. The crime report indicates a total of 27 students referred to the UNCW judicial system on drug charges for 1993. The report includes a disclaimer that the arrest include non-students also.

"All violations which occur on campus are reported whether involving students or not, but only students can be referred to our judicial system," said LT. Willis of University Police.

"All violations which occur on campus are reported whether involving students or not, but only students can be referred to our judicial system."

-Lt. Willis,
University Police

Drug-related crime is only a partial account of the crime report. All criminal activity is recorded of the knowledge of students and their parents. The report was started in 1990, four years after the campus rape and murder of Leigh University student Geane Cleary. Geane's parents lobbied in the state of Pennsylvania to pass a law requiring colleges to give information on campus safety with regards to crime. National exposure led to the Students Right to Know and Campus Security Act. Every campus across the nation has annually provided information to determine our level of safety and security ever since.

Centura Pledges $50,000 To Capital Campaign

BY VICKIE YEABBY
Public Relations Intern

Chairman of the Board and CEO of Centura Bank Robert R. Mauldin today announced a corporate gift of $50,000 to establish the Centura Bank Faculty Development Endowment Fund at UNCW. The $50,000 will be paid equally over a five-year term.

This contribution to UNCW's five-year, $15 million Capital Campaign brings the total pledged and contributed-to-date to $14.8 million.

In response to the announcement made by Robert R. Mauldin, Chancellor James R. Leutze said, "Support by North Carolina's banking community has been critical to the success of our capital campaign. We are very pleased that Centura Bank has added UNC Wilmington and its faculty to those they actively support."

Mauldin presented Provost and Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Marvin Moss with the gift at the fall faculty meeting at 4:00 p.m., on Sept. 22, 1994 in Cameron Auditorium on the campus of UNCW. "This is the first such gift of this magnitude strictly for faculty development. We are most grateful for the generosity of Centura Bank," said Provost Moss.

Other representatives from Centura Bank who attended were Senior Vice President Vinton Fountain, Regional Executive Scott Custer and Chairman of Centura's Wilmington Board Harold Wells. Fountain said Centura Bank is pleased to make this commitment to the University.

"We firmly support UNCW's contribution to the local community as well as the citizens of North Carolina," said Fountain. Centura Bank is also interested in cooperating with UNCW for future efforts in the development of the university.

With assets of $4.1 billion, Centura offers a full line of financial services to business and retail customers across North Carolina.

Domestic Peace Corps Comes to Nation And North Carolina

BY AMANDA JESSE
Staff Writer

As part of President Clinton's plan to solve domestic problems, Americorp, a domestic Peace Corp-like group, has been developed.

Primarily designed to help America's poor and needy, about 20,000 volunteers were sworn into the volunteer program on September 12. More than 300 of these volunteers were sworn in on the front porch of the White House in Washington, D.C. Other volunteers were sworn in at 14 other locations across the country including one site in North Carolina.

North Carolina Governor Jim Hunt showed his support of the program on September 12 when he visited a day care center which provided service to the needy. The day care Hunt visited is one of many places North Carolina Americorp volunteers will be working throughout their volunteer duty.

As an incentive, the over 200 North Carolina Americorp volunteers will receive $7,500.00 a year, plus an additional $4,725.00 a year to help finance their education.

About the program, President Clinton said, "We stand at the start of America's new season of service. It's all about you and me and all of us working together. We will act as a spark, a kindling to others around you."

Governor Hunt, after he visited the North Carolina daycare, said that the program will help North Carolina residents pay off college loans and pay college tuitions. Hunt also said that the program will help workers who want to get more education. "Here at this daycare center, Americorp volunteers will serve as substitute teachers so that daycare workers can get the training and education they need to provide even higher quality care for our children."

From a college student's perspective, Arizona State University student David Rivera said, "I hear people in school complain about how tough they have it because they have to get financial aid or work part-time. But if you think about it, we have it pretty easy compared to some people. I'm not trying to be a saint or anything, but I just think we have a responsibility to help out other people who need it."

University of Texas Geology major Dana Ferguson said, "I remembered the national service proposal from when Clinton was running for president and was really happy when I found out that environmental projects were going to be part of it. I figured it was a great chance to put some of knowledge to use."

President Clinton has received bipartisan support and for his Americorp program. In the upcoming years, Americorp will expend to about 100,000 volunteers.

SGA Elections Elect Freshmen Officers

BY GREG JEFFREYS
Staff Writer

Freshman students elected Greg Plow to Freshman Class President last week during the SGA elections. David Guida won Freshman Class Vice President, and Dave Jansen won Freshman Class Senator. The seven Representative-at-Large positions were filled by Roger Jackson, Brian Bullard, Jeff Berry, Lara James, Brian Teo, Casey Hogan, and Amanda Kornegay. Roger "Tiro" Hyman won Attorney General.

The election had a very low turnout, only 301 voted, compared to 613 last year. The low turnout was due to several reasons, according to Dan Sullivan, Vice President of Student Body.

"We got a late start on elections - we didn't have an Election Board Chairman until just a couple of weeks ago," says Sullivan.

Rain on the second day of elections may have reduced turnout also. The Schwartz Residence Hall polling site, one of two new polling sites, was closed because of the rain.

"Only Freshman President was contested; there wasn't a big interest in it," says Sullivan. "Spring is when the executive offices are open. That's our really big election."

Several other positions are open for appointment, including a Junior Class Senator seat, Junior Class President, a "Special Student Senator" seat, and a Freshman Class Senator seat. Interested students should see Dan Sullivan in the SGA office, University Union.

Older Grads Earning More After College

BY JUNE ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Putting off college for a few years after high school may not be such a bad idea after all.

According to the College Press Service, Sept. 22, the American Council on Education (ACE) reports that adults who earn their college degrees after the age of 30 enjoy higher salaries than younger graduates.

ACE's study, "Labor Force Participation of Older Graduates," states that graduates older than 30 were making $28,961 one year after graduation, while the younger graduates were only pulling in $21,905.

Male graduates over 30 earned $32,170 annually after graduation, and younger male graduates took home $23,962. Older female graduates earned $26,441, compared to a salary of $20,535 earned by their younger counterparts.

In 1991, about one-sixth of the nation's college graduates were 30 years old or older. Of these, 60 percent were women.

While the rate of employment for graduates was nearly the same—71 percent for younger graduates and 73 percent for older graduates, some of the disparity in salaries comes from the type of employment in which the grads were engaged one year after graduation.

Thirteen percent of younger graduates indicated on the ACE survey that a college degree was not a requirement for their current job. Only 4 percent of graduates over the age of 30 fell into this category.

Among all men graduates, one in six was working in a business/management position. Six percent of the older graduates worked in sales, while 16 percent of the younger graduates did.

The report found that older women graduates were more likely to teach. Twenty-five percent of them entered the field of education compared to 18 percent of younger female graduates.

Nineteen percent of the older female graduates entered the health professions, while only 7 percent of younger graduates surveyed did.

Discovery Place Offers a "Whale" of a Workshop

Charlotte - Discovery Place will offer a "first-of-its-kind" workshop vacation, a Caribbean Humpback Whale Adventure, January 21-28, 1995. This trip will allow travelers to observe closely or swim with one of nature's most awe-inspiring creatures. Participants will explore the water of the Silver Bank, between Grand Turk and the Dominican Republic.

The Coral Star, a 155' luxurious motor yacht, will transport 18 guests through the Windward Passage. According to enthusiasts, 3,000 to 6,000 whales are known to pass through this area each year. Much of the whale watching is done from the ship, its smaller launch or an inflatable raft. The professional crew will be supplemented by museum professionals and naturalists who will be able to answer questions and direct observations.

Participants will view hundreds of whales as they migrate through the North Atlantic. Encounters may last anywhere from several minutes to several hours. In the evenings, slide shows and information sessions will be offered on topics such as whales, dolphins and coral reefs. Scuba tanks will be available for occasional reef diving (for divers with current certification) when itinerary and other circumstances permit.

For more information on the Caribbean Humpback Whale Adventure contact Roy Alexander at (704) 337-2621 or 1-800-935-0553. Discovery Place, one of the top hands-on science museums in the country, is conveniently located at 301 North Tryon Street in uptown Charlotte.

Students Join Industry in Environmental Challenge: Plastics Recycling Competition Seeks Solutions

Cash, recognition and a chance to be published are just a few of the opportunities available to undergraduate students across North America in the 1994-1995 Plastics Recycling Competition.

Students are asked to write a comprehensive technical report that outlines a process for recycling mixed plastics that have been separated from municipal solid waste. The system must convert the post-line plastics into marketable petrochemical products through advanced recycling technologies (ART).

The Competition is co-sponsored by the American Plastics Council (APC) and the American Institute of Chemical Engineers (AIChE). All submitted papers will be reviewed by leaders from both organizations in academia, industry, and government.

ART has gained in popularity as a means of complementing conventional plastics recycling and recovering greater volumes of post-consumer plastics through integrated resource management. In addition, conventional recycling is not always economically viable for some streams of post-use plastics.

Students wishing to submit reports must first complete an application verifying their eligibility. Participants must be full-time undergraduates currently attending a four-year accredited college or university in North America and have the permission of their faculty advisors. Students may work individually or in teams of up to three undergraduates from any discipline. Once an application is received and verified, a comprehensive technical packet that outlines basic Competition ground rules and current technological research will be mailed to each participant.

Three finalists and their faculty advisors will be flown, expenses paid, to Miami Beach, FL, where students will present their papers at the AIChE Annual Meeting. The First Place winner will receive $1,500 and publication of their paper in AIChE magazine.

Keep Your Weapons Off UNCW Territory

BY SOFIA HEINE
Staff Writer

The Crime Report for last year, January 1 to December 31, 1993, included a number of incidents involving weapons. There were a total of 11 arrests made.

Assistant Police Chief Robert L. Riley and Lieutenant Hunter Davis were helpful in deciphering the cases behind these arrests.

A 30-30 Winchester rifle containing 6 rounds of ammunition was taken away from a non-student on Crews Drive in January. There were three arrests made in residential areas: one in Galloway involving a UNCW student with a large knife, another in Hewlett Hall where two non-students got arrested for carrying a gun (unspecified kind) and an arrest in Suite S involving a non-student with a .380 Caliber handgun. Another arrest of a UNCW student carrying a sword was also made. A man with a machete was arrested in the EE parking lot for several charges, among those drunk driving and resisting arrest.

The other arrests involved non-students, with weapons such as: knives, a 12 gauge shotgun, a BB gun, and a .357 handgun. Two of these arrests were referrals (referred to Residence Life or Dean of Students), but the law has been changed since 1993. Now every person arrested on UNCW ground (even if it's because they are carrying a rifle for hunting) will be sent to the Police station down town, and the decision is left to the Officer to make an arrest or not.

WRITERS NEEDED AND NEEDED AND NEEDED!

The Seahawk is desperately in need of writers who will actually write news stories and turn them in by 5 p.m. each Friday. Turn your stories in on disks, turn them in on clay tablets, turn them in on toilet paper, but, please, turn them in.

If you'll just let us know you're interested in being writers, we'll discuss story ideas with you, assign them to you, or make the news so you can have something to write about (not really—we frown on fairy-tale news). Please contact Kristy Shumaker at 395-3789 or 350-4610, leave a note on The Seahawk door, or throw letters tied to bricks over the bathroom stall doors where we go to cry and rid ourselves of undue stress because we are so desperate for real, live WRITERS (the ones we have are near clinical death).

UNCW Profs. Win Grant for Rainwater Acidity Study

BY JAN KELLER
Staff Writer

Drs. Joan D. Willey and Robert J. Kieber in the department of chemistry and marine science program at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington were awarded $134,650 to study the hydrogen peroxide content variability in coastal rainwater over a three-year period.

This award, which includes funds to support both under-graduate and graduate students' research projects, comes from the National Science Foundation's Atmospheric Chemistry Division.

"Hydrogen peroxide in rainwater affects how acidic the rain becomes. It converts sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides which are smokestack gases to acids," said Dr. Kieber.

He noted that the study will focus on rainfall along the coast from polluted continental storms and will contrast those to cleaner maritime rain from storms forming at sea.

Rainwater acidity can cause corrosion of metals, in cars for instance, and the erosion of structures made of limestone, such as buildings and gravestones. It can also affect plant life both on land and in water.

UNCW Exhibits The Work of Artist Susan Baehmann

An exhibit featuring the art work of Wilmington resident Susan Baehmann will be on display in the UNCW University Center from October 1 through November 11. The exhibit is titled "Prints and Pastels: Land Seascapes from the South and North." An opening reception will be held on Sunday, October 2nd, from 4:00-5:30 PM.

Baehmann, who received her B.F.A. from the University of Wisconsin, has exhibited her work in numerous shows throughout the United States and Japan. Her work is included in private collections across the US, Japan, Canada, Sweden, England, France, and Germany. Baehmann's etchings, monoprints and pastels are represented in over 50 corporate collections.

When asked about her work, Baehmann explains, "Visually, I am interested in expressing the interaction of form, design, color and light that I find in nature. There is a never ending variance of moods and visions in nature which I correlate with personal significance when I transpose my life experiences and emotions into visual symbols."

The exhibit is open to the public. The University Center is open Monday through Friday, 7:00 AM - 11:00 PM, Saturday and Sunday 2:00 PM - 11:00 PM.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

- CREF Stock Account •••
- CREF Bond Market Account •••
- CREF Social Choice Account •••

ISN'T IT NICE WHEN THE EXPERTS DISCOVER SOMETHING YOU'VE KNOWN ALL ALONG.

Over 1.6 million people in education and research know that choosing TIAA-CREF was a smart move. And now everyone else does too. Because Morningstar—one of the nation's leading sources of variable annuity and mutual fund information—has some stellar things to say about our retirement investment accounts.

"This comfortable combination of risk and return has earned the CREF Stock Account a five-star rating."

After studying CREF's performance history, Morningstar gave five stars—the highest rating—to both the CREF Stock and Bond Market Accounts, and an impressive four stars to the CREF Social Choice Account. In fact, the CREF Stock Account was singled out as having "one of the best 10-year records among variable annuities." Of course, past performance is no guarantee of future results.

"...CREF is far and away the cheapest variable annuity out there."

Morningstar also called attention to CREF's "rock bottom" fees—something that can really add to the size of your nest egg down the road. What's more, TIAA's traditional annuity—which offers guaranteed principal and interest plus the opportunity for dividends—was cited as having the highest fixed account interest rate among all annuities in its class.

We're happy to accept Morningstar's glowing ratings. But nice as it is to focus on stars, we'll keep focusing on something more down-to-earth: building the financial future you want and deserve.

Student Profile: HARRY VAN ESSENDELFT

BY JUNE RAFF ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Harry Van Essendelft, a senior secondary English education major, is proof that UNCW students are uniquely situated to do more than just attend classes—they get involved in life.

Van Essendelft will be a guest speaker at Cape Fear Museum Oct. 2 at 2 p.m. as part of the celebration activities for Wilmington's annual Riverfest. He will answer questions and share his experiences as a 4th generation shellfisherman with visitors to the free exhibition "A Boat For All Seasons: The Simmons Sea Skiff."

Van Essendelft was asked by the Museum to participate in the exhibition following his donation of a Simmons Sea Skiff for the upcoming festivities. The Simmons Sea Skiff plays an important role in North Carolina's shellfishing history. Also on display will be photographs of his family's shellfishing heritage and tools of his trade.

Originally from West Sayville, New York, Van Essendelft learned to shellfish from his father, who learned from his father. His maternal grandfather was once featured in a photo essay in Life Magazine.

Van Essendelft spent four years in the Air Force: 18 months in Syracuse, NY and 6 months in Texas in radio school; then, two years in Alaska as an electronic intercept specialist ("spy," according to him).

In addition to his language and shellfishing expertise, Van Essendelft has worked as a painter, carpenter (he built the house he now lives in and his neighbor's house), and was once self-employed as a horologist—a clock maker, he explains.

While a student at UNCW, he continues his family's heritage of working at commercial shellfishing and focuses his efforts from Fort Fisher south to Bald Head Island. Van Essendelft said you can easily spot him on the water because his is the only boat without a name.

Van Essendelft transferred to UNCW from Syracuse University where he majored in the Russian language. His plan now is to teach secondary English in the New Hanover County area. When asked whether he is considering graduate school following his May, 1995 graduation, Van Essendelft said, "My wife said I'm going to go to work."

Although having enjoyed most professors at UNCW, Van Essendelft said the two who have been especially helpful to him are Dr. Michael Wentworth for guidance and Ms. Nan Graham for writing encouragement.

Van Essendelft said his experience at UNCW has been positive overall, but in considering his education courses he'd like to see "considerably less theory and more practical experience—earlier, so the theory makes more sense." He adds that a better blend of theory and practical application simultaneously would be advantageous for the prospective teacher.

In addition to his studies, Van Essendelft is an active member of the English Club, Sigma Tau Delta International English Honor Society, and SNEA (Student National Education Association). He is a member of Myrtle Grove Presbyterian Church. He once served as a director on the Board of North Carolina Fishermen's Association and was nominated for commission member for the North Carolina Marine Fisheries Commission.

Van Essendelft enjoys "hanging out with my wife, sitting, talking, thinking, gardening and landscaping, fishing and boating."

"I like reading on my boat at Masonboro Island where it's quiet and there are no phones," he added.

This Van Essendelft isn't the only Van Essendelft on campus. Kara and Jana, his twin daughters, also attend UNCW. Kara is a junior majoring in communication and will graduate in December 1995. Jana, a therapeutic recreation major, will graduate this December.

This enterprising senior lives in Carolina Beach with his wife, Sherrie, a real estate agent with Coastal Condo-Let. Their son, David, is a self-employed painter and carpenter in Wilmington.

Rubbing his neatly-trimmed beard, Van Essendelft leaves us with one of his favorite quotes, "Sometimes I sits and thinks, other times I just sits."

Student Soliloquies

Ever wondered what it would be like to go sleazing around in the mind of a near-human life form, like say... Rush Limbaugh? Over the summer, one of UNCW's finest presented me with this opportunity to experience my personal version of a liberal's hell.

(Dear Editor: I'm not being lazy! Just thought this would work well with last week's family values column—after all, who knows more about the subject than Rush? [Isn't "rush" a chemical that the potheads in high school used to snort the fumes of during English class? Ever wondered what they're doing now? Ever wondered if they've lost that "I'm Jesus and Richard Dreyfuss in that movie when he builds a mountain out of mashed potatoes" all rolled into one look? Naw, they're probably lobbyists now and that's the look in Washington.] Rush practically wrote the laws for [im]morality over the airwaves. Cut me a break J.B., will you?)

A Real Rush

What the hell is wrong with this lamp? I'd better try the pink one on the left side of the bed. Every time I turn around something around here has stopped working. Now let me look at this damn thing. Figures. Made in the U.S.A. Well, at least the left light works. I've got to get out of these clothes. Some days I just want to chuck the whole gig. I mean, the money's not worth having to wear these red silk boxers day after day. The more I sweat, the further up they ride, and the redder my rash gets. I don't talk fast to beat up my opponents. I do it so I can come here, dig the silk out, and slip into my ragged kimono. That's better. Maybe I should shower before I eat? This Vo5 is making my scalp itch. I've gotta eat or I'll pass out. What's that song? It's been on my tongue all day. Oh, yea. "I wanna be like you/I wanna walk like you/Talk like you, too/You'll see it's true/Ape like me/Can learn to be human, too." What's this? No patchouly incense left? Where did I find that last time I ran out? Shit, I knew I should have written that store's name down somewhere. I guess musk will have to do. A few candles, a Dylan cd, and a nice fat doobie ought to get my appetite in gear. I'd better make a note to check the closet. Little Mary Jane was looking a little peaked last time I watered her. Can't lose my recreation to faulty grow lights. What to eat. First a swig of honey to tone down my burning throat. When it's good, it always burns. I should've taken the day off today. Most tune-ins are too lame to know a rerun from my mother's butt. Well, they are both pretty scary and they go on forever—I just getting scarier as they go. I wish I had gotten that new tat on a weekend. Damn boxers stuck to it and nearly ripped the scab off when I tried to take a leak. Tomorrow, it's thoughts or freestyle for me. It's a cool tat, though. A hot pink lambda. Hope Mom doesn't see it. Funny how she's always catching me naked. I'm beginning to wonder if she been reading Freud's Quick-Fix Manual For Good Family Values. After she was here the other day, I could've sworn a batch of my free condoms from the Health Department were missing. You go, old girl! Yea, you go, too, Bob. "They stone you when you're riding in your car... hummm... everybody must get stoned." I'm with you, man. Alright! Lefover tofu burgers. A little kelp, a splash of Mrs. Dash, and a slice of sweet vidalia and I'm glowing. Forget the Snapple tonight, Bertha. I've been dreaming of Lemon Drops all damn day. A hearty sprinkle of sugar on that Bad Boy and a shot of Absolut, liberally poured, of course. One, two, three! Now I'm starting to feel hu-mane. Wonder what's on the tube. God! Am I fat. What was that word that little boy in Jacksonville called me at my book signing? Flatterer? Nope. Philanderer? Naw, but closer, I think. Oh, yea. A flautler. Not sure what it means, but hey, I use big words all the time and never know what any of 'em mean. Who cares. John Q. buys it and that's what pays the bills. Where's that remote? Must be on the left end table. I leave everything important on the far left table. HBO.

June Oravits

Here's What I Have To Say About It...

Where have all the wildflowers gone?

They're not in the Wildflower Preserve outside Morton Hall, that's for damn sure.

I have been watching for this floral phenomena for the last couple of years, but the only flower buds I've seen are weed pods or whatever they are sowing at me from the top of overgrown grass.

Maybe it's just me. Maybe I missed out somewhere in my education and just don't get the concept of grass that looks like alien stick-insects with fat heads being a wildflower. Maybe grass goes to seed in actually grass going wild by doing IT. Now that old grass is "flowering" with little baby grass as a result of such unfortunate, misguided conduct (well, fortunate for those sexy grass folk, it depends on one's view of these things).

I don't know, maybe there should be some sort of condom developed for wild and willful grass "wildflowers."

Whatever the problem may be, WEAIN'T GOT WILDFLOWERS, PEOPLE!

I feel pretty comfortable denouncing this grass as acceptable representatives of wildflowers. My allergies tell me quite loudly that I'm probably going to die if something isn't done my pronto to remedy this problem.

I've been informed by one of my trustworthy "compatriots in knowing other peoples' business" that one of the English Department's professors opted to have this untouched corner of our campus environment designated as said "Wildflower Preserve."

Alas, we (as well as the Doc) have yet to see any evidence these elusive flowers exist. Why? Well, because one of those grademachine contraptions scraped away all the good stuff—you know, soil and seeds and whatnot. It is a tad bit awkward to complain about this construction technique. After all, a temple to enconce those of us who are avid readers and aspiring literary critics was built.

I think it would have been a dandy thing to build tree-houses instead of pouring cement and playing Legos with bricks.

Anyway, Dr. Nature's dream that something "natural" would survive besides chunks of brick and cement appears to be for naught. Belligerent grass nods haughtily at us day after day. I'm itching to get out my lawn mower and take care of those arrogant sprouts.

I understand this same Doc has surreptitiously planted a tree (a baby tree at that—even the trees are doing IT). He was encouraging some kind of reason for maintaining—or not maintaining as is practiced at present—a preserve for wildly flowering plants.

I maintain an office on the steps adjacent to this eyesore. It's becoming an embarrassment. How can I hold office hours on these steps and have my guests seeing this ugly sight? I'm just going to have to move Dickie Veit over to another corner so I can have some decent office space. It's just so hard to get anything accomplished on Morton's steps these days, the atmosphere is so tainted with impregnated grass.

Even though it's not technically a wildflower, I do have some gardenia plants I've been rooting. I even have some roses propagated from cuttings—there is no end to my talents, is there? I think I will sneak out to Morton's poor old "Wildflower Preserve" and contribute these floral offerings to the Big Effort To Allow Nature To Go Her Own Way. It sure beats watching the boring old grass doing the Wild Thing for years on end.

Maybe we can replace the Wildflower Preserve sign with a "Caution... Area signs." Only in this case, in the meantime, y'all remember to tiptoe next time you use the steps by the Preserve at Morton Hall, ya hear? Do not disturb our "wildflowers." "Caution, Grass Enclosed in Willful Acts We Won't Mention Area" would seem an appropriate sign.

Bob Haywood's Still Point

Friendship: Take Off Your Mask

"I'm tired of being around so many insincere people." "So many of my friends seem shallow." "I wish people would stop playing so many games; they say they feel one way and behave another." Over and over again I hear statements like these spoken out of the frustration of not finding the kind of relationships they are seeking.

All of us yearn to find other people who will become significant in our lives. We both want and are afraid to share the inner thoughts and feelings that we carry tenderly in our heart. We often see ourselves as fragile, perhaps unlikeable and, consequently, we are sensitive to any sign that we can interpret as rejection as we reach out to meet new people and form new friendships.

One of the ways we and others protect ourselves is to develop a mask that we present to the public so as to hide our real thoughts and feelings. Sometimes the mask is a role we hide behind — we are student or fraternity man, or Christian, or what ever. And we decide how that person is supposed to behave and try to act out that image with others. Sometimes the mask we wear is an attitude we put on. Common attitudes we use as masks are, "If I tell you what you want to hear, maybe you'll like me" or "I don't need you or anybody". With the first attitude we tell people what we think they want to hear or do things we don't really want to do in order to please them. With the second attitude we keep ourselves kind of aloof and send out all kinds of verbal and behavioral messages about having everything under control. I believe masks are counter productive and are the reasons that we or others come across as insincere or shallow.

Real friendships can only emerge when a relationship becomes characterized by genuineness. Significant relationships demand that we let ourselves be known, our hopes and dreams, our fears and inadequacies. Such relationships also demand that we seek the deeper dimensions of other folks and take some risks to get behind the masks we meet.

If "shallowness" and "insincerity" in others bothers you, the place to begin is with yourself. Seek to become aware of the masks that you wear, where you wear them and why. Perhaps you might decide that, out of your need for deeper and more fulfilling friendships, you might choose to embark on a quest for more genuine and open expression of yourself with those whom you know or meet.

Frank's Place

Frank Tascone

Welcome once again to Frank's Place. We're inside today, as it's raining out. I just finished paying bills. Bob's still chiding down waded up envelopes and such. He seems especially taken by a colorful ad that came with one of my credit card accounts: "Act now to receive this one in a lifetime offer. Delicately hand-crafted and hand-tooled commemorative chess pieces featuring your favorite Looney Tunes characters. Your first $25 will get you Porky Pig and Elmer Fudd facing off as opposing knights! If dissatisfied just return figures for full refund." The "if dissatisfied" part always gets my attention on these things. I wonder what kind of expectations one could have of such an item to be dissatisfied. "Like, I want to return these pieces cuz my Elmer Fudd just isn't 'waaaally' enough!"

The audacity of these people.

After months of riddling me with nasty letters illustrating how my credit record would be forever flushed down the commode of irresponsible citizenship; after phone messages left at home, at work, and at restaurants informing me of impending peril; after hours spent on the phone dialing 1-800 numbers which lead to endless scavenger hunt type clues provided by automated answering services; after being turned down by service stations while miles from home, out of gas and in the rain; after all this, I finally get the damn thing paid off and they turn around and offer me, whom they must already suspect of being a poor risk; they offer me an opportunity to purchase, via credit, Elmer Fudd and Porky Pig! Now that's a loony tune.

I remember my first credit card. It was a gasoline card sent to my mailbox while I was in college—one of those "If you're not satisfied you can send it back" deals. But how could I send it back? It was shiny and metallic blue, with my full name in gold trimmed letters. I was a somebody now—a man on the way. Besides, "I need gas anyway—right?" When I started purchasing gas I noticed I had a lot more cash during the month for "other" things. Then my clutch needed to be replaced. From that point on I was behind. My bill paying days became more complicated; with fancy windowed envelopes, complex interest figures, and confidential letters. When I graduated, my student loans became due. By the way, if you have taken out student loans, please be aware that they really do want their money back—with interest!

Now, almost ten years later, I've got my soul back. I'm all paid up and my loans are on deferment (another term you may become familiar with once you "get out." It's a big reason why so many of us return to school). I have only four items on my lodger of things to pay for every month. I can pay my bills in less than half an hour. I've paid my penitence and can now enjoy the freedom I didn't appreciate before.

Now they've left me, sort of speak, and are coming after you. The other day I saw them. They were right here on campus, sitting at long wooden solicitation tables, giving gifts and collecting souls—I mean signatures. They want to get you now, before you've even stepped up to the starting line. As the gun goes off and your career begins, they grasp you by the shorts and jerk them down to your ankles. While others, unbridled by past debt, are taking off in front; you are yards behind, tripping in discomfort and embarrassment.

When you see those pretty cards and tables bearing gifts, I refer you to those profounding and practical words delivered by Monty Python's King Arthur—"Run Away!"

S. Bartlett Sacrificial Sisters

Can you imagine having no rights to property, including your own body? How about giving your nine-year-old daughter or sister up for marriage to a forty-year-old man? If these were commonplace traditions in your society, ruled by religious laws, would you adhere to such laws?

Of course, most of us would. Although the majority of Americans would like to believe we are, somehow, morally above these practices, most of us think little about the people who do not willingly participate in them, such as the revolutionary factions who are fighting against the unbelievably harsh treatment of women in foreign countries, like Iran.

Mahin Hassibi, a psychiatrist and native of Iran, who has lived in the U.S. for a quarter of a century, claims "the repression of women is the only visible 'accomplishment' of the fundamentalist regime" in Iran. In her article "Sexual Apartheid in Iran," Hassibi addresses a variety of the horrors Iranian women have been forced to accept as part of their daily lives.

According to Hassibi, since Ayatollah Khomeini and his troops led the revolution in Iran sixteen years ago, the only laws adopted by the new leader that were completely retained were his "pronouncements restricting women's activities and appearance." Women were no longer allowed to hold professional positions, the necessary female work force, such as teachers and doctors, were required to dress in "the Islamic uniform, which allowed only their faces and hands to be uncovered," and the legal age for females was dropped from thirteen to nine-years-old. Iranian females can consent or be forced to marry and are tried in courts of law as adults at the age of nine. Citing Khomeini, Hassibi writes:

Whoever marries a girl younger than nine years of age must not have intercourse with that girl, whether the marriage is permanent or temporary. On the other hand, the husband can still enjoy himself with foreplay even if the bride is a baby being breast-fed. Foreplay means loving, caressing, rubbing, kissing, and sodomy. Any man who has intercourse with a girl younger than nine years of age has committed an infraction even if the girl's vagina and rectum are not ripped. But if a man has intercourse with a girl nine years or older and he tears the tissues, combining the vagina with the rectum, he has committed a crime and does not have to be responsible for the girl. However it is better if he takes care of the girl as long as she is alive.

Hassibi also notes that boys are not treated as adults until the age of fifteen, but, as "an outgrowth of the adult status necessary to make a nine-year-old girl's agreement in marriage legally binding," girls are recognized as adults a full six years earlier than are the Iranian males. But, Hassibi says, a woman's worth is not legally equal to a man's. In an Iranian court of law, much like the American courts' treatment of African-Americans and females in this country less than 100 years ago, the value of a woman's testimony is less than that of a male. A woman's testimony is "accepted only as the corroboration of a male witness' account" and the "testimony of two women is counted as [the] equivalent of one male witness." And, this is not the only contradiction of the fundamentalist's decrees, says Hassibi.

For example, nine-year-old females are considered mature enough to marry, but "women of any age are viewed as 'too impulsive' or 'too emotional' to be given the right to initiate a divorce proceeding." She quotes Ayatollah Mubtahi with

The specific task of women in this society is to marry and bear children. They will be discouraged from entering legislative, judicial, or other careers which may require decision making, as women lack the intellectual ability and discerning judgment required for these careers.

Hassibi questions the validity of a law that empowers a child to marry, engage in sexual intercourse, and bear children at the age of nine, if that same child cannot make proper judgments or solid decisions. But, in a society where "the law's practical effect is to define the woman's contribution to the marriage as her female body," prospective husband's are, generally, not as demanding that their wives' intellect be developed. And, if a husband should no longer desire his wife sexually, it "is adequate cause for divorce at a man's total discretion." Again, Hassibi quotes Ayatollah Khomeini:

A woman who has contracted a permanent marriage does not have the right to go out of the house without her husband's permission; she must remain at his disposal for the fulfillment of any one of his desires, and may not refuse herself to him except for a religiously valid reason. If she is totally submissive to him, the husband must provide her with food, clothing, and lodging, whether or not he has the means to do so. A woman who refuses herself to her husband is guilty, and may not demand from him food, clothing, lodging, or any later sexual relations.

Many men, says Hassibi, cannot afford to bring child-brides into their homes, because they are required by law to shelter, feed, and clothe all of their wives. A male alternative, to permanent marriage, is to take a woman under a "provisional marriage" or "time limited sexual contract." Provisional or temporary marriages can occur between a single woman and a man, married or single, and "are acceptable because they provide a religiously sanctioned outlet for male sexual appetite." And, according to Iranian laws, the man who enters a provisional marriage bears no further responsibility to his temporary wife once the union is dissolved at his request.

When divorce of a permanent marriage or dissolution of a provisional contract is desired by a husband of his wife, Hassibi reports what becomes of the children who have been produced during these unions. Although motherhood is a sanctified role for women in Iran's society, when a divorce or dissolution is granted to a male, "the law gives the man custody of every boy above two and every girl above seven years of age." Furthermore, says Hassibi, the custodial male can arbitrarily deny the mother visitation of her children. Divorced wives can even be forbidden by their former spouses to work, which delegates many of these women to lives of poverty. A result, as Hassibi notes, is the divorced woman's total loss of ability to survive alone in Iran's strict patriarchal society.

Because women living under the fundamentalist regime endure "constricted and constrained lives without the certainty [of] home, children, social standing, and family approval," Hassibi says, the incidence of suicide and, especially, "public suicide by women has become all too frequent." The minority of Iranian women who are attempting to fight the fundamentalist system, such as the socialist-Islamic group of Mujahideen Khatol and other activists who have begun speaking out against the cruelties imposed on their Islamic sisters, are trying to "identify and advocate changes in those areas where new laws can be introduced." But, as Hassibi sadly notes, many Iranian women are illiterate and this factor severely hinders the attempts of pro-female activist groups to educate and empower women.

Perhaps the most debilitating result of the fundamentalist regime on females in Iran, according to Hassibi, is that "they are denied the right and ability to describe their own realities, and there is an absence of women's voices from social discourse of all kinds." This factor, more than the physical abuses that batter not only Iranian women, but also women worldwide, may be patriarchy's ultimate weapon against the hope for equality.

The next meeting is Tuesday, September 27, from 12:15 to 1:15 in the Faculty Common of Morion Hall. Sara White Who Are You Really?

"When a man and a woman are seated next to each other on an airplane, the odds are 5 to 1 that he will take over the armrest." A trivial bit of humor? Maybe—but gender codes do tend to dictate roles in our society. You don't have to be a feminist to understand how your identity is constructed and influenced by gender.

The Feminist Colloquium revolves around discussions of readings and issues which concern matters of gender—both femininity and masculinity. Especially concerned with a controversial material, i.e. the educated, empowered woman vs. the traditional role of femininity, the colloquium welcomes everyone's opinions to be aired and discussed.

Growing from three original members to twenty-five—both men and women, faculty and students—in just four years, the group hopes to continue its expansion. New members, specifically students, are encouraged to attend this informal, thought-provoking exploration of our society's values and roles.

Meetings occur monthly on alternating Tuesdays and Wednesdays over lunch. The next meeting is Tuesday, September 27, from 12:15 to 1:15 in the Faculty Common of Morion Hall. Readings to be discussed (SISTER OUTSIDER and "Spiraling into the Nineties") are available on reserve under the name of Janet Ellery in Randall Library.

Advice for UNCW's Weary

Up 'till now, we've tried to be nice. We just can't continue dealing out our weekly supply of sickeningly sweet platitudes to a bunch of ingrates who really don't want their lives to get better anyway. What a bunch of whiners! This one wants a new car, another wants a higher VISA limit, and another thinks grades are an unfair practice based solely on teacher subjectivity (probably because the instructors see you for the lazy loser you are).

Well, we're not answering any of those letters this week. As always, choosing who to set afloat was difficult. We do wish that "Badda-bing" would quit writing to us. We're not heeding the call, fella, so give it a rest. We don't know who your real mother is, we don't know how to track down your cat, and we don't care. Take a course in grammar and try Ann Landers. She'll give you the addresses of some helpful agencies that you're too wimpy to write to for help. We're not into that kind of advice.

How many times do we have to spell it out for you people? If you have an enormous and sensitive problem, one that you're obviously ill-equipped to deal with, write to us at: UNCW PO Box 24095. If it's something you simply want to slobber about, call your ancient childless widowed aunt who lives for that stuff.

Now, for this week's parade of weenies.

Dear Emma and Jane:

I'm a non-trad and I've been married for two years. My husband is a real nice guy and I know that he loves me and wants what's best for me. He encourages me to get good grades and even helps me study. I guess the problem belongs to both of us. He really wants a child right now and I want to wait until after I've finished my degree. Actually, I want to graduate next spring and apply for the Master's program here at UNCW, before I get pregnant. I'm worried because he can't seem to hold a job for long and I support us and go to school. How will I do that if I have a baby now? What should I do? I don't want to ruin my marriage, but I'm afraid we'll never be able to afford a child if I don't keep going to school.

Signed: Bon

Dear Bon:

Your in a touchy, although not uncommon, situation. It's so delicate, we're not going to rag on you—real hard. Point is: you've got to do what will bring you the most peace and happiness for the longest period of time. We'd never tell you to walk away from your marriage or that you must be a submissive little woman and have a baby now. We've had kids and it's tough, especially if you're trying to attend classes and work, too. Why make your life harder than it has to be? No one can do it all and, unless, he starts doing more than he is now, you're going to be pulling most of the family weight by yourself. It's difficult for us to believe that anyone would demand that someone else get pregnant. We're sure he's a "real nice guy," as you say, but you aren't the bad guy in this scenario either. You have a right to pursue your personal goals and, statistically speaking, your odds of completing a Master's degree—while birthing and raising a new family, are lessened greatly. We think you're right about wanting to wait, but we can't help you convince him of that. If he's ready to have sex with you, which we are assuming he is, than he should also be willing to talk to and listen to you. After all, sex is a bit more intimate than conversation (with everyone except Emma). For the record, you could get your Ph.D and you still won't be able to "afford" a child. Just keeping them fed, clean, and clothed will financially destroy you and that's the first year. Face it, having a baby means the end of just about anything you now enjoy doing. Reality check, Bon.

Dear Emma and Jane:

What's the big deal about turning Greek? I didn't go to a big school 'cause I didn't want to deal with these moronic campus clicks, but UNCW isn't any better than the rest of the colleges I've checked into. The other night I saw a bunch of girls [sic] dressed alike and carrying balloons and stuff to some party deal. I've also met guys who are "rushing" and they act like it's the biggest deal in their lives. I made a joke to one rusher about going Greek and sex and he got pissed. What's the big deal?

Signed: Plato

Dear Plato:

(Cool name, guy.) We don't know what is so vital about "turning Greek." Before our penetration of UNCW, we never really thought about and, now, we find we think about it even less. We see people with Greek letters emblazoned across their chests and we don't seem to feel much one way or the other about it. We can't read the letters anyway. If it's so great to be in one of these things, why don't they identify themselves in a language the average person can comprehend? ("Because, Jane, it's more of that academic/intellectual elitism." "But we're intellectuals and we're elitists, Emma." "Yea, but we really are smarter and we don't have to dress like twenty other women to prove it.") Okay, so maybe it's nice to have brothers and sisters you can truly count on, but, hey, why go to such extremes? Can't we all just support and love one another, without Classical segregation? ("Now that is moronic.") In case you haven't figured life out Plato, no matter where you go you'll always find cliques. Life is all about differentiating yourself from the masses, even if that means you simply forgo individuality and assume the collective persona of a smaller mass. By the way, we'd be interested in hearing your joke about Greek sex—write back and give us a glimpse of life in your Republic.

Dear Emma and Jane:

I went home last weekend and got into a terrible fight with my Dad. He says I'm turning liberal from being around all the loose college intellectuals. Just because I told him we shouldn't invade Haiti. He also said if I didn't start shaving my legs again, he wouldn't send me the extra money I asked for. I thought they sent me here to develop an identity of my own. Now they're still trying to set all the rules. How can I make my parents let go of me and stop trying to run my life from three counties away?

Signed: G.U.

Dear G.U.:

("Emma, this one is all yours.") First, let me assure you this is a father-daughter phenomenon that can't be escaped. Dads love their little girls and they know what other men want from them. He's just trying to protect you because he's afraid you'll never find a husband if you have unconventional political views. Of course, he's also being slightly selfish, because if you don't find a mate he'll have to continue supporting you. My dad thinks I'm warped, but amusing, and we have some colorful, lively conversations about my politics. We've spent years developing a mutual respect towards subjects we'll never agree on—like extramarital sex. Try explaining to your pop that the college atmosphere is more liberal-minded and it's natural for your views to alter while you are surrounded by a more liberal population. Chances are, according to society's typical opinion of politically active females, you'll graduate, get married, and outgrow your liberal tendencies. So, don't fret Daddy. We're not sure what difference it should make to your dad if you shave your legs or not. That's the kind of a strange phobia for him to have about you, your mom, yea—but why should he be care about his child's hairy legs? Ever read any of Freud's theories, G.U.? If he won't send the cash you requested, get a job. Is that going to kill you? What an amazing concept, earning what you want through your labor.

Wilmington's Sixteenth Annual Riverfest

BY J. TRENT LEONARD

Arts And Entertainment Editor

Wilmington's Sixteenth Annual Riverfest begins this Friday night with several performances. The main portion of Riverfest is free, so if you have nothing to do, or would rather do something other than study, go downtown and walk around. You are bound to find something interesting to entertain yourself with.

John Mayall and the Bluesbreakers make their first appearance in Wilmington on Saturday night in an 8 p.m. performance on the Main Stage of historic Thalian Hall. This concert promises to be one of the highlights of Riverfest '94. Tickets are $16 and $10 and are available at Thalian Hall. Call 343-3664 for more information.

"Riverfest Rock Under the Big Top," a weekend of classic, progressive, and beach rock, will make its Riverfest debut on September 30 thru October 2 in the south parking lot of the Wilmington Hilton at 301 North Water Street (by the Cape Fear Memorial Bridge). Drivin'-n-Cryin, a national recording act, will be the headliner on Sunday.

Continuous live entertainment will rock under the big top on Friday from 5:00 p.m. until 1:00 a.m., on Saturday from noon until 1:00 a.m., and on Sunday from noon until 8:00 p.m.

Friday's entertainment begins with the Usuals, playing classic Rock-n-Roll. The Usuals are a popular band from the Triangle area. More classic rock y Mike Edwards and The Banned follows. This popular Mid-Atlantic touring band starts with acoustic songs and dance tunes to get the audience pumped and war its way to a hard rock finale. Its material ranges from the Moody Blues and Pink Floyd to David Bowie and Bruce Springstein.

The Castaways, on the top Beach/Top Four groups in the Southeast, kick off Saturday's entertainment. They are followed by the classic and progressive rock sounds of Wildmen From Borneo. The Wildmen have run the Southern college circuit in the Carolinas and Georgia, drawing large crowds by their name alone.

Sunday concludes Riverfest '94 with progressive rock by Fendal, one of the area's newest and hottest acts. They will be followed by our weekend headliner, Drivin'-n-Cryin, a national act from Atlanta. After six years on Island Records, the band has a new home on the Geffen label.

Riverfest '94 promises to be a fun-filled weekend with five continuous live entertainment stages. River events include the raft regatta, collegiate crew races, dramatic U.S. Coast Guard air/sea rescue demonstrations, and river excursions aboard the Captain J.N. Maffitt and the sternwheel riverboat Henrietta II.

Screwball olympics, historical re-enactments, educational exhibits, hand-made arts and crafts, hobby shows, classic cars, and lots of children's events will delight crowds all over the downtown area.

Later, on Saturday night, a fireworks show will fill the night sky above the mighty Cape Fear River, so go out and have some fun!

Concert Beneath the Pines

BY VICKIE YEABRY

Staff Writer

"A Concert Beneath the Pines," a free outdoor family concert featuring the Wilmington Symphony Orchestra, will be held at 4 p.m. on Saturday, October 1, beneath the pines between Kenan Auditorium and Kenan Hall. Sponsoring the event are the Cape Fear Memorial Hospital and UNCW. Bring your blankets and enjoy the music which will include selections from the Lion King, Phantom of the Opera, Broadway show tunes, and popular classics.

In the event of rain, the performance will be held in Kenan Auditorium. For more information about this and other Family Weekend events, call UNCW Alumni Relations at 251-2681.

Lir: The Irish Magic Music

BY J. TRENT LEONARD

Arts And Entertainment Editor

Lir, the five piece band from Dublin, Ireland will be supporting the September 20 national release of their debut album, Magic 1. This album, which was released regionally in May, has already received rave reviews from papers such as the Boston Globe and Alternative Press.

Developing a strong national following in this country is a long and hard process, but having been headlining stars in their home country, the members of Lir are eager to immerse themselves in the U.S. environment. "We've so much to look forward to; we want to build on what we've already accomplished," says bassist Robert Malone, "things were really taking off by the end of the first tour (in the Northeastern U.S.)." "We've played some really big theater size venues," adds David McGuinness. "It's unbelievable when the crowd knows our stuff from local (radio) airplay. It makes it all worthwhile."

Lir has been together as a group since they were about 15 years old (they are all around 23 now). Their first U.S. tour was as well planned as a military campaign. Malone states, "We rented a house in western Massachusetts so we were never more than a few hours away from a gig. On days off, we rehearsed in the basement." For this tour, the band will trade the house for a Winnebago due to their already crowded tour schedule.

The band consists of Ronan Byrne (lead guitarist), David Hopkins (keyboards), Craig Hutchinson (drums and percussion), Robert Malone (bass guitar), and David McGuinness (vocals). Now, having dispensed with the introductory material, on to the CD review.

The title of the first song from Magic 1, is "Traveller." I first heard this song about two weeks ago on a Tuesday morning. My clock-radio turns on and the haunting beginning to "Traveller" quietly drifts into my ears. I must have been having a dream at the time, because, for the rest of the day, everything I did reminded me of that song and I could not place it until I received a promotional copy of the CD from the record company. This song has been playing on Surf 107, so you may recognize the name.

"Some Folks Are Truly Evil" is a soon-to-be classic in my mind. The chorus "Yes some folks are truly evil/the bastards want to see you cry/and if it's all the same to you I'd rather be left alone to live my life the way I choose" reminds me so much of those people who would try to censor what you and I can listen too for fear of a destructive message in the song or album. It opens with a delightfully stunning piano and keyboard solo, followed by the mysterious and whispering sound of McGuinness singing an all to short song (about 2 minutes in length).

"Good Cake Bad Cake" (track 9) is a wonderful "throwback" for me. I can just hear the Beatles quietly humming along to this sonorous beat in the background. This is a definite drinking song!

"Two Worlds" (track 10) is the best exposition of McGuinness's unique sound. He entices you along with winding passages and quick, succinct tones. The accompaniment to McGuinness's sound is amazing as well. The keyboards, but most importantly the guitar, provide the resolution to the voice. One without the other would make for no song at all. But together they make a truly delightful, exhilarating sound that is unmatched by any recent band I have heard, indeed, by any band I have heard.

When Lir comes to play at the Mad Monk on October 6, I will be there to hear this remarkably fresh sound live. If you look carefully, you may see me quietly enjoying a beer while singing along to "Good Cake Bad Cake." It would definitely be worth your time if you are any kind of music fan at all to go and see this show! October 6 is one night that I will not be studying.

"I Wanna Be Like Gump!"

BY LOUIS WOLF

Staff Writer

I don't need to get into who this Forrest Gump guy is—we all happily imbibe massive advertising camp-pains, don't we? Director Robert Zemeckis (author of "Back to the Future I-VII," and "Who Framed Roger Rabbit?") has pulled off what our national cinema needs more of. He gave the cinematically-unconscionable business suits at the studio a sure-fire hit full of sweet, tear-jerking sentimentality, softened by laughs, with lovable Tom Hanks for the girls and lovely but lost Robin Wright for the boys. And, how about the commercial tie-in? What a blockbuster soundtrack, and vacuous tie-in novel, and the criminally shallow book of "Gumpisms"—with "Gump fries" coming soon at McDonalds (Hollywood studio mantra: "ancillaries, ancillaries!") But, Mr. Zemeckis gave America an entertaining and challenging film, too. Don't be embarrassed by the rapid, "Aw shucks" shenanigans, go see it—because, and you know you know it, most movies out there suck very convincingly.

Tom Hanks is maturing into a very impressive film actor (the physicality of his performance, alone, is bravura). Robin Wright, who plays Gump's object of passion, delivers more substance from her role than the script provides for, as her character resists that very objectification and its allied adoration, which is so prevalent in her life that she sees Forrest's innocent affection as corrupted and untrustworthy. The talk talked about computer image-splicing does not distract the viewer from the story, because almost every scene intentionally disorients conventional narrative ways. Top-notch staging and cinematography makes the most out of the locations.

We listen to Gump narrate his irreverent story from a bus stop bench; and watch him rub noses, ping-pong paddles, and a Congressional Medal of Honor, with Elvis, a few US Presidents, John Lennon, and a shrimp fisherman named Bubba. What are you doing with your life?

Besides every unashamedly commercial element of the film there lurks a darker, more enthralling subtext; if one cares to look. Forrest Gump is no eternally optimistic dupe in whose lap falls just recompense for stolid goodness (although the sleep may only feast on this delusory reduction). Gump suffers the agony of persecution and exploitation from his gut-wrenching childhood, through the turbulent 1960's, and into the AIDS era (the disease that stalks someone in the film, it seems, if only the word could be spoken in a family-friendly movie).

The film makes you feel all warm and gushy inside (go ahead, boys and girls, let your date see you cry, they wanna know you're not totally desensitized), but it also subversively injects a haunting litany of tragic moments—assassinations, Vietnam carnage, narcotic stupors—life and death in all its cyclical Zen-like fun. Stupid Hollywood, high concept films don't ordinarily do this.

The news-journalistic pacing and structure of the film narrative is an unwieldy risk by the director. But the poignant humor, and on-target cleverness of the visual and situational gags compensates well: such as Gump, given a free room in the Watergate Hotel by President Nixon, calling the police about a burglary he spies inside a facing room—then, cut to: actual news footage of Nixon resigning. The film is a replete with these justifications historically-embedded vignettes, placing Gump as the author of, and witness to, chorused and notorious popular culture events. The shotgun approach does not often miss, with the long section on Gump's transcontinental running odyssey one of the notable exceptions.

The value of "Forrest Gump" dwells in what it resists, given the obligations involved in a many multi-million dollar film. The filmmakers make sure there is not simply feel-good, cathartic resonance to Gump's experience. And (Rush Limbaugh, smooch my Gump!)

there's no opportune theme extolling the mythologically cohesive power of the American nuclear family. No, no—the opposite, my fine, fellow film fit-goers, the many faces of historical oppression blast Jenny and our awkward protagonist Gump. So much so that, in the end, there is only the plaintive hope that the next generation (us?) can somehow offer resistance in a form not given over to fashionable cynicism. Look beyond this film's cast moments, and contemplate the crushing expressiveness in the many pauses of seemingly blank solitude, as our Byronically Bart Simpsonesque hero feels the weight of gravity's pull (as Stipe would put it).

UNCW and Cape Fear Memorial Hospital are sponsoring "Family Weekend" on September 30 and October 1.

"It's an opportunity for parents to see how their students are adjusting, how they're involved, and gives parents a chance to get back on campus," said Pat Corcoran, Director of Alumni Affairs.

The event begins with registration in the University Union Lobby from 8:00 A.M. to 9:30 A.M. A continental breakfast will be served for families in the Hawk's Nest from 8:15 to 9:30. Student Government Association President Ziggy Nix will introduce speaker William G. Anylan Jr., the Vice Chancellor for University Advancement. Following this, Donna Keller, Chairman of the Parents Advisory Council, will introduce the Dean of the Cameron School of Business, the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, and the Dean of the School of Education.

At 12:00, families will observe the "Earth Shaking Groundbreaking" of the new science building near Cameron Hall. A golf tournament for parents, family, and alumni will be sponsored at 1:00 P.M. by Cape Fear Alumni of the UNCW Alumni association. From 6:00 P.M. to 8:00 P.M. participants will enjoy a live band and refreshments back at the groundbreaking site.

On Saturday, the men's soccer team will play William and Mary at 1:00 P.M., and the Wilmington Symphony Orchestra will present a free "Concert Beneath the Pines."

Students are encouraged "to get parents out," said Corcoran. "It's going to be a lot of fun."

All events are free except for the soccer match, which will cost $2.

Movie Review

Trial By Jury: A Trial Just To Watch

BY LISA MAY

Staff Writer

One would have to be pretty leery of any lawyer/court movie after flicks like The Firm and A Few Good Men. You can't deny the goosebumps you got from the Tom Cruise screaming at Jack Nicholson for "the truth." The movie I saw this weekend, Trial by Jury, left me screaming for a plot!

Of course, you start off with the murder of a big, fat Italian guy who was to testify for the government against Rusty Perone, a Mafia crime boss. So with one key witness dead, the government goes about grunting everyone but Jeffrey Dahmer things from parole to lookers if they'll help bring down Perone.

Now it's time they assemble the jury for the case. Divert your attention for a second to Valerie Olsen: this beautiful and innocent single parent gets called up for jury duty. Being cast in the divorced-single-parent-struggling-widow-woman-role, she accepts jury duty by commenting that it is her "civic duty." If she only knew then what she knows at the end of the movie.

Perone obviously doesn't want to go to jail, so he calls one of his monkey-boys to scare one of the jurors into hanging the jury. It just so happens that good "ole Val is the lucky witness. Monkey-boy (a.k.a. William Hurt, the only real notable in the movie) Johnny V.C. snags Val on her way to pick up her young son and threatens her life. She has to agree because at this point of the movie, she's still a wimp. The Mob harasses her more, she hangs the jury, letting Perone off while also managing to convince a few other jurors that the evidence wasn't strong enough.

So life should be grand now, right? Wrong. Val opens her trap to the District Attorney and tells him what happened when Perone threatened her. He offers her protection but we know how well that would work. She gets thrown into the trunk of a car and had it not been for V.C. following her to the scene and taking more than a few bullets, she would've bought the farm, like he ends up doing. Right before he dies he says, "Look, babe. If you want to live, you're going to have to kill Perone yourself."

So our little Val goes over to Perone's, dressed provocatively in the 1940's garb he finds so sexy, does the seduction bit, and then stabs him with what could be an icepick. But we wouldn't want to step on her toes or anything, so it must've been just an ordinary knife. Val now has shed her poor little woman act and is now a bona fide bad as chick. I'll be damned if the Mafia messes with her again! She even has begun to wear tighter clothes!

Altogether, I would give this flick about two stars. One star is for a time somewhere in the middle when one mob guy asked another if he should shoot Valerie and his mob answers, "I don't care if you do it by monofu&ingusness!" The other star is for the writers, as I am sure they meant well when they wrote this script (just like I did when I wrote this review and probably ended up making Trent edit the whole damn thing!).

A Clear and Present Danger: Revisited (unfortunately)

BY ERIK TOTTEN

Sports Editor

Two weeks ago I went to College Road Cinemas and watched Clear and Present Danger with the intentions of reviewing it for the paper. About half-way through the movie I lost sight of wanting to review the movie and was just looking forward to the movie ending.

I read the book Clear and Present Danger and was really looking forward to watching the movie. I know that movies are never as good as their corresponding books, but I still expected a fairly good representation of Clancy's novel. I had both read and seen The Hunt for the Red October and Patriot Games and, although the books were definitely better I still enjoyed the movies. Not this time, home slice.

In a phrase, I was disgusted with this movie. Not only did the directors do the things they always do, like...add more action, kill more people, etc...they also changed the plot and story-line. Things happened for completely different reasons and, in so doing, changed the movie's direction. The one place in the book where I thought there was potential for action, death, and destruction scenes (in the Colombian jungle) was cut back a lot in the movie. Instead, they made the scene where the Deputy Director gets killed into World War III. Give me a rocket launcher and I could have killed them all a hell of a lot faster than that. In short I think the movie sucked and if I had not gone for free I would have been very upset.

Although my esteemed colleague, Trent Leonard, makes a point of stating he has not, nor will he ever read Clancy's book of the same name (in last week The Seahawk), reading the book is the best thing I could recommend. The last thing this movie does is portray anything brilliantly or succinctly. Those types of terms are usually reserved for movies up for an on Mr. Leonard's opinion that Tom Clancy is an idiot because he doesn't want Harrison Ford to play Jack Ryan any longer. I agree that Harrison Ford is a brilliant actor and I can't think of any movie that I thought he was terrible in. But Harrison is no Jack Ryan...if Mr. Leonard had bothered to actually look at the plot of the movie and noticed the lives of the characters in the movie, he would have noticed that Jack Ryan is in his early to mid-thirties. Harrison Ford is 47. Tom Clancy makes Jack Ryan young for a reason. Ryan's age provides the basis for some of his motivations and his views on life. It also makes Ryan more an achiever when you realize he is the youngest Deputy Director ever. I love Harrison Ford and thought he did a good job in the movie, but he is just not right for the part...he's too damn old. Alec Baldwin, although I really don't like him, was much better for the part.

On the good old movie scale, I give Clear and Present Danger one star and that star stands for Harrison Ford. Without Harrison, the movie would have been unbearable. If you have read the book go see the movie when it's out on video...it really makes you see how good a writer Clancy is. If you haven't read the book—read it. You're missing out if you just see the movie.

Movie Review

By: Erik Totten

Academy Award or something and this movie is a far cry from that.

I would also have to disagree with Mr. Leonard on another point when he states that this subject matter is boring in script form and is best left for the silver screen. First off, this subject matter is far from boring, that's why it was made into a movie in the first place. The book held my attention for about a week—the movie couldn't do it for 45 minutes. Secondly, if this is the best our silver screen has to offer I would rather stay home and watch the incandescent tube.

I also have to take one final jab at the previous review by commenting

What Exactly is InterVarsity?

BY APRIL SMITH

Having been a member of InterVarsity Christian Fellowship (IVCF) for three years I have asked many questions concerning our purpose. One common question is "What sport do you play?" In fact, we are not a sports team nor are we the same thing as intramurals. InterVarsity is good people—students and staff members whom God has called to a ministry in higher education and has placed on campuses across the country.

While InterVarsity's name may be misleading, its origin began in 1877 with students at the University of Cambridge, England. Some students began to meet together to pray, study the Bible, and witness to fellow students. Students at other English universities ("varsities") began to hold similar meetings as they were encouraged by the Fellowship at Cambridge. We get our name "InterVarsity" from this first alliance of different campuses.

In 1941 IVCF-USA was born and in 1946 InterVarsity became one of nine founding student movements of the International Fellowship of Evangelical Students (IFES). Today over 90 active national student movements are affiliated with IFES to reach the future leaders of their countries and the world with the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

InterVarsity has about 250,000 students involved in over 450 campuses across the US.

THIS WEEK IN SGA

The September 26 meeting of the Student Government Association was called to order at 6:06p.m. and adjourned at 6:47p.m. All officers and senators were in attendance except Sens. Ingalls, Stanley, Sink and Hopper.

During the executive reports, President Nix announced that the League of Women Voters will be registering students to vote in the University Center on October 10th and 11th from 11a.m. to 3p.m., the student discount cards that the SGA has been working on will be going into the students mail boxes this coming week and there will be a ground breaking ceremony for the new Physical Sciences Building on Friday the 30th at 5p.m. beside Cameron Hall. He urged all senators and executive officers to attend.

The results of the SGA election were announced at the meeting. They are as follows: SGA's new Attorney General is Roger Hyman. Greg Plow is the new Freshman Class President. David Guida is the Freshman Class Vice President. Dave Jansen is the Freshman Class Senator. Roger Jackson, Brian Bullard, Jeff Berry, Lara James, Brian Teo, Casey Hogan and Amanda Kornegay were elected as the 7 Representatives-at-Large. All new senators will be inaugurated at the upcoming SGA retreat. Roger Hyman was inaugurated at the meeting.

Several appointments were made during new business. Teresa Krebs was appointed to the Bookstore Committee. Dessirae Bennett, Amy Hoover and Daisaku Tajima were appointed to the Judiciary Committee and Tom Gale was appointed to a Freshman Class Senator position.

MEN'S SOCCER

The Seahawks improved their record to 3-5 on the season with a pair of victories in back-to-back games over the weekend at Brooks Field. UNCW topped The Citadel, 3-2, and then breezed past Maryland-Eastern Shore, 7-1, for its second consecutive win.

Coech Keith Cammidge's team returns to conference play this weekend when nationally ranked William and Mary visits Brooks Field Saturday, Oct. 2, at 1 p.m. The Seahawks are also at home the following Wednesday (Oct. 5) for a matchup against Coastal Carolina.

In the weekend sweep, senior striker Joel Myers was the standout. The former E.A. Laney High School star scored four goals and added three assists as the Seahawks snapped a three-game losing streak.

Myers, sixth on the all-time goal list with 23 goals, leads the team in scoring with 21 points on nine goals and three assists, including three goals and an assist in the win over Maryland-Eastern Shore. Newcomers Nildo Schubert and Vaughn Reynolds are tied for second in scoring with nine points apiece.

UNCW's goalkeeping duties are being shared by Josh Hopper and Shawn McCallister. Hopper has made 13 saves and allowed 17 goals, while McCallister has 18 saves and allowed nine goals.

The Seahawks will have their hands full with William and Mary, which owns a 14-1 lifetime advantage over UNCW. The Tribe has reeled off 10 straight victories over the Seahawks, including the last.

VOLLEYBALL

The UNC Wilmington volleyball team plays a trio of matches this week, appearing in its fourth tournament of the season. The Lady Seahawks entertain Campbell on Tuesday, Sept. 27, at 7 p.m., and then heads for Davidson, N.C., to participate in the Davidson Invitational on Friday, Sept. 30. The Lady Seahawks face Tennessee-Chattanooga at 6 p.m. and host Davidson at 8 p.m.

Last weekend, UNC Wilmington garnered a runner-up finish in the UNC Charlotte Invitational. The Lady Seahawks recorded wins over Coastal Carolina (15-13, 15-12, 16-14), North Carolina A&T (15-13, 15-10, 15-2) and host UNC Charlotte (15-10, 8-15, 0-15, 17-15, 15-12). Their only loss was to East Carolina, 8-15, 16-14, 15-17, 8-15.

In the victory over Coastal Carolina, junior outside hitter Leslie Noukelak (Walter Johnson H.S./Bethesda, Md.) had game-highs of 14 kills and four service aces and tied sophomore setter Ginger Moon (Quince Orchard H.S./Gaithersburg, Md.) for the team lead with nine digs. Moon also racked up a game-high 47 assists. Junior outside hitter Josie Youngblood (West Henderson H.S./Hendersonville, N.C.) contributed 13 kills, seven digs and two solo blocks.

Against North Carolina A&T, Youngblood gathered a game-high 11 kills, followed by senior middle hitter Debby Taydas (Northwood H.S./Pittsboro, N.C.) with seven. Moon had a game-high 23 assists, and freshman middle hitter Sarah DeLair (Lincoln-Way H.S./Mokena, Ill.) posted seven digs, also a game-high.

Youngblood again headed up the attack in the five-game win over UNC Charlotte with her 13 kills, while Noukelak collected a team-high 22 digs. Sophomore Katy Kurt (Notre Dame A.C./Los Angeles, Calif.) notched a game-high four service aces, and Moon had 32 assists. The victory over UNC Charlotte was the first for the Lady Seahawks since 1991, breaking streak of five consecutive losses to the 49ers.

During the loss to East Carolina, Youngblood tallied 22 kills, 18 digs and one solo block. Taydas and Noukelak added 12 and 10 kills, respectively, while Noukelak tied Youngblood with 18 digs. Moon was credited with 56 assists. Both Youngblood and Moon were named to the All-Tournament Team for the second straight tournament.

Youngblood led the Lady Seahawks in kills (166), total attempts (471) and solo blocks (14), and Noukelak is tops in digs with 179. Taydas holds the team lead with 25 block assists and 33 total blocks. Moon has amassed 465 assists and a team-high 21 service aces.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

The UNC Wilmington women's soccer squad has a pair of contests on this week's docket. The Lady Seahawks host Campbell on Monday, Sept. 26, at 4 p.m. UNCW then opens a two-game road swing on Saturday, Oct. 1, at 10th-ranked George Mason in a 1 p.m. Colonial Athletic Association battle.

The Lady Seahawks saw their losing skid extend to four games last week as they dropped a 3-1 conference decision at American in overtime last Saturday. Freshman midfielder Angie Gospodarek (Oshkosh North H.S./Oshkosh, Wis.) logged UNCW's lone goal in the contest, with freshman defender forward Margaret Merrill (East Mecklenburg H.S./Charlotte, N.C.) assisting. The goal was Gospodarek's first as a collegiate player.

Freshman Jaime Betts (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.) started in the goal for the Lady Seahawks, tallying seven saves.

Margaret Merrill continues to lead the team in scoring with three goals and one assist (seven points), followed by freshman forward Joanna Walker (The Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.) one goal and one assist (three points).

home and five away. The slate features matchups with ranked teams George Mason, William and Mary, James Madison and Alabama.

CROSS COUNTRY

Heather Fenton continued a string of impressive early-season runs as UNCW's women placed third out of 13 teams in George Mason's Morven Park Cross Country Invitational last weekend in Leesburg, Va. UNCW ended up ninth out of 15 entries in the men's competition.

Fenton (New Hartford H.S./New Hartford, N.Y.) took second place individually behind William and Mary's Marcie Homan in the 5,000-meter race. Homan paced the 109-person field with a time of 17:33.9, and Fenton came across the line at 18:22.5. UNCW's Shannon Williamson was sixth with a time of 18:38.9.

For the men, the top finisher was Jeff Tiegs, who was 26th out of 122 runners with a time of 27:36 over the 8,200-meter course at Morven Park.

MEN'S GOLF

After opening the new season with a second place finish in the Tom O'Brian Memorial Golf Tournament two weeks ago, the Seahawks travel to Buies Creek for an appearance in the Hargrove Davis Memorial early next week.

Coech Calvin Lane's squad was in the hunt for the title of the Tom O'Brian event, but was noosed out by Virginia Commonwealth. The team consists of two seniors (Gregg Cuthill, Brian Spencer), three sophomores (Mike Cato, Steve Doucet, David Copley) and one freshman (John Gaddy).

Cato (Kinston H.S./Kinston, N.C.) and Gaddy (Hoggard H.S./Wilmington, N.C.) led the Seahawks in the first tournament by finishing third and fourth respectively at The Cardinal Golf Club in Greensboro.

Athlete Of The Week

Joel Myers

Senior Striker

E.A. Laney H.S./Wilmington, N.C.

Myers, a local product out of E.A. Laney High School, erupted for four goals and two assists over the weekend in powering the Seahawk soccer team to a pair of home victories over The Citadel (3-2) and Maryland-Eastern Shore (7-1).

In the win over The Citadel, Myers scored the tying goal in the second period and assisted on the winning goal with just over five minutes remaining. He then dumped in a hat trick with UNCW's first three goals in the easy victory over Maryland-Eastern Shore on Sunday.

Myers pushed his career totals to 23 goals, ranking him sixth on the all-time list behind Nino Fieri, Gil Castilla, Chi Chi Mercado, Dennis Davis and Chris George.

'Tales From... The Dumpster

Welcome back to the Dumpster. This is a very bad time in my life right now, I can't seem to get above .500 in my picks of the week. Not only does that make me look bad, but it makes this Brian Cooper guy look like he knows sports or something. Trust me, he doesn't, the way he gets his picks of the week is by picking his favorite colors and animals from the two teams playing. It's only pure luck that he is doing better than me right now, I'll change though, his system can't last for long. To make matters worse Nebraska's starting quarterback is out for the season... I almost had to cancel the paper so I could mourn... but then I thought hey, maybe we won't win the Heisman but we still have got the national championship. That's more than any other place can say right now except for maybe Kansas... oh wait, that's Never Never Land. Sorry back to reality.

Have you heard... the NHL is going to go on strike too. My prediction is that NBA and NFL will suddenly cancel their seasons because the players and owners can't reach a collective bargaining agreement. After a few seasons of replacement players all of the teams will declare themselves bankrupt and have to shut down. College sports will also be declared illegal after the great "players should get paid strike" of '97. NASCAR will hold the sports spot light for a while but eventually it will get banned by Congress after new mile per gallon limits are set by the automotive industry. Finally, everybody will complain about the unused stadiums and coliseums and instead of giving them to the Homeless Players Association they are filled with water and turned into water arenas for the latest craze to sweep the nation... water bungee jumping. Was that really... don't bet on it but it could happen.

Well college basketball is getting ready to start... at least they are not on strike... yet. My early pick is going to be the University of North Carolina but I am reserving the right to edit that opinion later. I also look for our fighting Seahawks to be in the NCAA Tournament this year after winning the CAA. That's the men's team anyway. The women's team is considering offering our editor June "sham dunk" Orvitt a scholarship but they still need three more players after that, maybe if I grow my hair a little longer I can... oh forget it... I'm not tall enough anyway.

Finally be sure and check out all the intramural happenings even though Brian Cooper is not the greatest at his pretensions he does pretty well with the intramural program. There is a lot of fun stuff going on so check out the schedule here in the Seahawk and if you have any questions call them up, they're pretty friendly.

One Up On Schindlers List

BY COLIN D. HEATON

Contributing Writer

On Wednesday September 28, the University Center Ballroom was filled to capacity, for an event very unique and of historic significance. For those who may have seen the movie "Schindler's List" by Steven Spielberg, the event was extra special.

Zev Kedem, who as a small child was on the list along with his family gave a synopsis, detailing his account of life during the German occupation of Poland and the impact the war had on him personally. Kedem expressed himself wonderfully, his mastery of English (among several other languages) and his clear recollection of the period were hypnotic. Even for those not familiar with the film, or the Holocaust in general left with an imposing memory.

Kedem recounted how as a child his family hid in the upstairs attic, formerly his uncle's pigeon coop, as the Germans rounded up all of the Jews in the ghetto of Krakow, Poland.

"I was caught once by this Army cook stealing chocolate, and he told me how wrong it was to steal. I left, and later when I returned to my room, guess what! There was a great deal of chocolate waiting there for me!"

-Zev Kedem

"After several hours there was only silence, until we heard a lone German soldier walking through the apartments, searching for anyone hiding. Anyone found was summarily executed." At the age of nine, Kedem was not old enough to qualify for an "Arbeitkarte", or Work Card.

All children under the age of thirteen were executed, as they were of no profit to the German war machine.

Kedem's stepfather was a doctor, so this made it possible for the family to make the list. He still had to hide, however.

Discovery could have meant death. His mother hid him in a cart being pulled to the concentration camp, a cart which carried valuables. In this way he was able to avoid detection and enter the camp. Being with his family was comforting, but it was not life insurance.

However a couple of times, according to Kedem, he was discovered. His quick thinking and wit saved him time after time, while working in the shop manufacturing paint brushes. Oscar Schindler, in creating the "factory" in Czechoslovakia near his hometown enabled the bulk of the Jews under his care to escape the gas chamber as well as the war. However Kedem related a story which is gripping.

He and his mother were inadvertently taken on the wrong trains, both were separated from the rest of the family and each other. Kedem was stripping along with others in preparation for the "shower", which had claimed over three million victims by that time in 1944, according to Kedem. He was stopped and placed on a work detail, which was to aid the labor force in dismantling the crematoria. By this time the Russians were within artillery range, and the Germans at Auschwitz did not want to leave any evidence of their "Final Solution."

Kedem saw his mother, as she was being loaded onto the same train which had brought her to Auschwitz. Schindler had discovered the error and had called the necessary persons. They were reunited and returned to the protective umbrella of Oscar Schindler.

Kedem explained how he was liberated at Mauthausen concentration camp by Americans. He stated, "I was not so sure that these were not Germans, in disguise trying to make do something for which we would be punished. I was very wary, until I saw a black soldier. Then I knew that it was not a German trick. No black soldier would have been in the German Army."

The psychological aftermath of his years of living on borrowed time left scars. Zev Kedem related how he was so used to smelling death, it came naturally to him while in the care of the Americans.

"I was caught once by this Army cook stealing chocolate, and he told me how wrong it was to steal. I left, and later when I returned to my room, guess what! There was a great deal of chocolate waiting there for me!" Kedem had experienced the unusual acts of compassion and generosity.

The force of Kedem's narrative is not so much the content of what he had to relate, but more in the delivery. His piercing eyes betrayed a superior intelligence, yet the pain was still evident and not totally concealed. Zev Kedem was well received and deservedly so. After the lecture, he entertained several questions from the floor, and with his usual graceful style managed to explain in resounding detail his personal views on the movie "Schindler's List", as well as voicing his opinion on other related subjects.

Kedem later went to England, graduating from Oxford University as an Agricultural Engineer. This experience proved valuable when he emigrated to Israel, where he worked in Jerusalem, Mount Sinai and Galilee. Kedem stated that he met Schindler a few times during his many visits to Israel before his death. In fact, Schindler is buried in the Catholic cemetery a mere five hundred yards from the four hundred year old home which Zev Kedem restored for his family.

The standing ovation which Zev Kedem received was well deserved. The evening was his, and afterward he entertained the public in the lobby, answering questions and signing autographs.

Several people present had similar stories concerning relatives during the Holocaust, and many UNCW students were present, taking notes and learning much about the turbulent history of this century. Mr. Kedem will be in Phoenix, Arizona and then he is on to Sacramento, California.

Ground Broken For New UNCW Science Building

BY AMANDA JESSE

Staff Writer

Decorated with yellow caution tapes, building blueprints and plastic hardhats, the groundbreaking of the new science building took place on Friday at noon.

The ceremony began with a short speech by UNCW Chancellor Jim Leutze who talked about the need for a new science building on campus. Dressed in construction clothes for the event, Leutze said, "This has been a dream in the minds of our administration, faculty and staff. This is the realization of a dream."

According to Leutze, the new science building will house both biological and chemical sciences. With its 100,000 square foot dimensions, the building will be the largest building on campus.

Dr. Marvin K. Moss, UNCW Provo and Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, cited the fact that UNCW has operated for many years with space constraints and said that the new building was needed. Moss also said that along with UNCW's rank as 14 among all other universities in the southern region, UNCW also ranked fourth as the most efficient university category.

"Completion of this building in 1996 will allow us room for growth," said Moss.

Following the speeches, Leutze, Moss, Former Chairman Of The Board Of Trustees Bob Warwick and SGA President Ziggy Nix officially christened the site by exploding confetti over part of the building's future plot.

After the groundbreaking festivities, Chancellor Leutze told The Seahawk that the idea of a new science building had been conceived in 1987. However, due to the state of the economy, it could not become a reality until the bond referendum gave the university $21 million dollars to start construction.

"We are very excited about this," said Leutze. "This is something everyone on campus needed. This is the culmination of a lot of hard work."

Career Day 1994: A Chance To Meet Potential Employers

It is that time again...time for the annual get together in Trask Coliseum known as Career Day on October 19, 10-2. It has only been a few years since the career day could be held comfortably in room 100 of the university union. Now the Career Day competes with basketball in filling Trask Coliseum to bursting. There is one small difference, career day fills the basketball court and other floor areas and not the seat deck.

WHY DO EMPLOYERS, GRADUATE AND PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL RECRUITERS COME TO CAREER DAY?

Each year the list of employers, and graduate and professional school representatives in attendance seems to grow. In this period of down-sizing, right-sizing and other euphemisms for lay-offs, many employers view the career day as an integral part of their recruiting program. Accordingly, they reduce their participation in more traditional recruiting programs and increase their attendance at college career days. Some employers even combine career day attendance with on-campus recruiting by interviewing only those students with whom they have conversed at the career day. Others collect resumes for review back at their organizations. Still others, make a group presentation to those students in whom they have developed some interest during career day, following up with those students in whom they still have interest.

There is no question of the value placed on the career day format by the employment community. They attend many of this type of event each year, juggling around elaborate displays, computers and handouts; and what is more, they pay for the privilege!

FOOD AND DRINK TOO!

Career Day will feature a reception for campus representatives and visitors the evening before, a breakfast on the morning of, and coffee, danish, soft drinks and cash door prizes throughout the festivities.

The organizations listed on this page have already agreed to be with us for Career Day 1994. We expect the list to grow by October 19, and we hope to see you there!

River Fest '94 Heads Back Up The Cape Fear For Another Year

This past weekend at River Fest the Wilmington chapter of the Society for Creative Anachronism re-enactment group gave a demonstration, opening the minds and exposing to the public, if just a little while, what it may have been like to live in Europe during 700-1600 A.D. Being a writer of history and specializing in military warfare, I naturally took time to speak with the persons involved. They are a cross section of professions, yet each one has at least an above average to expert knowledge of the history he is depicting. They call themselves the Society for Creative Anachronism, and their are chapters all over the world.

They represent a group, imitating the lifestyles of the landed gentry and commoners, which has past into history, but whose legacy lives on. Modern law, the juris process is directly descended from the common law of chivalry, stating that "...an accused man may be presumed innocent until proven guilty before God." The accused had the right of being "championed" by a knight if he could not afford the arm and armor to defend himself.

The rule was that "God would defend the right by trial of arms." Well, we still have persons accused of crimes represented by "champions", who challenge the system and "fight" for us, regardless of our ability to "pay for our own defense." Today we call them public defenders. Another legacy which carried over from the Romans and reestablished during the Middle Ages was the standing army, with a structured chain of command.

This gave a monarch "men at arms" without waiting to call up draftees from lower nobles and their serfs. I asked a few questions, and genealogy came up. No, these are not modern day landed nobles and their indentured servants. In fact most of them admit they cannot trace their ancestry beyond the last century, however this does not diminish these creative individuals from recapturing an era gone by. I was invited to join, and I have considered returning to fencing, a sport I enjoyed in the past.

They found it interesting that my lineage dates back to the twelfth century, when my ancestor Arvhergald von Mauterfel, nicknamed "The Ax Breaker" was granted forty hectares of land and titled Baron von Mauterfel by Frederick Barbarossa, Emperor of Prussia.

Arvhergald died at the siege of Acre in 1189, and his second son Ludwig became a Knight Templar (his mother Juliana was Flemish), while his youngest son Thorvald was a founding member of the Order of Teutonic Knights, and later made a Knight of Malta. All three participated in the Crusades during their lifetimes.

All three died before age fifty, not uncommon in an age where thirty five was considered "long in the tooth." Upon interviewing some of the members, I discovered that the "mundane" lives and professions vary, with men and women members adhering to the "Code of Chivalry." See Lisak enlightened me greatly with the ambitions of the SCA. "We are not out to actively recruit," she explained, "should someone learn of us and decide to see for themselves how the SCA is, fine. We love to have new members, but we really like those dedicated to learning and passing that knowledge on. We do many exhibitions for schools, and we like to entertain as well as teach the young people about life in the Middle Ages." Sherree M. Hutson, alias Lady Alyan Navarre and her husband Gary Hutson are prime examples of longevity in the SCA. Gary is a heavy weapons fighter, and pretty good. I watched as our fearless editor June shot the photos.

Mr. Hutson has been a member about four years, and joined after watching a demonstration similar to the one he was giving. "I have always been interested in the period, especially the warfare of the period. Although there were many things about the Middle Ages which were horrible, our society tries to bring forth all the things which made it unique. Things like chivalry, respect, courtesy and honor. I am a heavy fighter and we reenact tournaments, melees and actual wars to some degree. We actually have large wars with other groups where battle commanders plan strategy and deployment. It's really a lot of fun and we enjoy it."

It's easy to read about it, but to actually wear armor and try it is a whole different picture. You learn to appreciate what they went through, the lifestyle to some degree, even though we remove our armor at the end of the day. You see the movies, and these guys are really doing some amazing things in armor, it's not easy. Our fights are not choreographed, you win or lose based upon your own skill and strength. My character is circa Henry V at Agincourt, towards the end of the Hundred Years War (ca. 1419). There are various levels of training and rank. You start with basic sword and shield, then progress upward to two handed bastard sword, broad ax, etc. We also have archers and crossbowmen for the reality. No compound bows, nothing more advanced than the English long bow, which by the dominated the field of battle from the 14th century onward. Places like Crecy, Poitiers and Agincourt, all were English victories were due in large to the long bow." According to Mr. Hutson, such candidate must pass a test for acceptance and competence with the primary weapons, and then test for each upgrade to maintain proficiency, and get promoted. "We also have spear and pole arms," states Mr. Hutson, "which also require the same standard. Some people specialize in a certain category. This is mostly to promote safety." Mr. Alex Stahl, alias Meurich Xavier, is the Columbus County Director of Prison Education at Whiteville. "The name dates back to about 1156 or so," he explained. He also discussed the rules for warriors. "These tests are to ensure you do not get hurt, and you don't hurt anyone else."

There are certain rules to fighting, such as no blows to the neck, groin or the knee and below. There is an honor system. We have marshals who watch the competition to make calls, but it comes down to the individual and his honor code to determine if it was a telling blow.

Also the "Known World" is broken up into Kingdoms, and each King must win his title by trial of combat, there is no hereditary crown. After he has been de-throned he reverts back to his standing of Duke or Earl. In November we have the crown tournament, where the best fighter is crowned, but the contestants must be belted squires or knights. "We also have jesters, bards (musicians and singers), wizards and physicians. Anything incorporating arts and sciences in relation to the Middle Ages. We also have professionals such as scholars, merchants and armorers, who make the mail and plate. Some buy their own if they can afford it. Just like in the Middle Ages. Now as far as the armor, the minimum requirement is fourteen gauge steel for a helmet. The clothing and accessories must fall within the definition of the medieval period, otherwise it must be covered by something respective of the period. I made my own leg and elbow protective armor, at least two hundred man hours. The armorers who make it use patterns, and fit to size." Mr. Hutson also stated that, "The rule is not based on what you wear, it is determined by a set standard, whether you wear chainmail, ringmail or armor plate protection. It all comes down to integrity. If you get struck you can call 'light', acknowledging you were hit but that the blow was not severe, such as the difference between a glance blow or a hard hit. If you are fighting a knight and he notices you, he can take you on as his squire, enabling you to gain knighthood under his instruction. There is a great ceremony involved, and you are entitled to wear the chain, belt and spurs. It is a high honor, and we have our own coats of arms granted from the court which have to be approved. For instance your family coat of arms, Collin (I wear a small family crest around my neck which dates back to 1189) would not be used. We try and create individual personas. It also avoids problems with traditional coats as far as infringement." Alex Stahl's wife Catherine is a non-natal intensive care nurse at New Hanover Regional hospital, and her entire family are members, her two children were dressed for the occasion looking splendid. "I have been a member for about seven months," states Mrs. Stahl, "and we all really enjoy it." Ken Holland is a nuclear engineer, specializing in the late renaissance.

His character is a Hungarian noble born in 1594. "I'm what's called a light weapons specialist, or duelist, using rapier and foil. We recreate the 'Three Musketeers' style of fighting, the fighting done in the 16th and 17th centuries." He and his fencing partner (Gary Hutson's sister) performed their art over the two day festival as well, and they were marvelous. Dana Floyd (Brenna Cara of Brunswick) is a dental assistant. "I enjoyed reading about and recreating the Middle Ages, although I have not been in it that long. We try to be a family, we are close. We socialize and have feasts together, even outside of the SCA. I am from Leland, and I really enjoy it." Gary Hutson's sister Gayle (Gwen of Eldergast) is a program consultant for the state of North Carolina. "I need to teach world history and U.S. history, and in the SCA I am a duelist." The Society for Creative Anachronism is always looking for people to join its ranks, whether as a full fledged member of the warrior class, or just someone who wants to learn more about the history of western civilization from the people who strive to keep the past alive. I think I'll give it a try. The worst that can happen is you learn about one of the most influential periods of world history. My brother and I are joining up, why don't you give the SCA a call? Gary and Sherree Hutson are the point of contact, and they may be reached at (910) 969-1695 after 6:00 p.m. The SCA would love to hear from you.

Potter Sidney Luck Named 1994 North Carolina Living Treasure

BY JAN KELLER

Pr Intern

Sidney G. Luck, nationally known traditional potter of Seagrove, has been chosen as the 1994 Living Treasure of North Carolina by the Institute for Human Potential at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Owner of a pottery shop, Luck's Ware, Luck is following a family tradition of turning pottery in Seagrove. In 1955 when Luck was 10 years old, his father re-opened his grandfather's pottery shop, built an electric wheel, and became his teacher. Thirty-two years and many pieces of pottery later, Luck built his own shop where he worked part-time. In 1990, he left his high school teaching job to fulfill his dream of devoting full-time to turning pottery. Presently, his artwork is in private collections and shows throughout the United States.

"The purpose of the Living Treasure award is to recognize talent and master craftsmanship in North Carolina," said Dr. Gerald Shinn, professor of philosophy and religion at UNCW and director of the UNCW Institute for Human Potential. This is the eighth year the award has been presented.

Why I Went Greek...

Answers from Our Students

There was an excellent response to the Greek article.

Here are a few of the letters we have received. The rest will follow next issue.

To The Editor:

Why I went Greek and the reasons why I should have changed since my initiation three years ago. Like anything the anticipation and expectation are different from the actual experience. I, originally, went for the social advantages, a way to participate within the university, and for a hoped leadership position. With the importance in that order has changed. The leadership potential is large and having exercised that potential found that much of my Greek life has prompted. The University involvement can only be my constant interaction has opened avenues that otherwise might have not surfaced. Socially, I have grown to find an equilibrium within its intensity that, fortunately, is a freedom of choice that is not an imperative. Going Greek is a choice that I made for myself and for reasons that were obvious and for some that were not. It is a decision I feel has made the difference in what I was and what I have become.

Eddie Sags
Sigma Phi Epsilon

Why did I go Greek? I could give the traditional textbook answer: to gain leadership skills, to meet people, to make life-long friends, to get more involved in the university as well as the community, etc. The truth is in all these and more! I mostly wanted to meet new people and get involved on campus, so I went through rush my very first semester here (Fall 1991). Never dreaming I would actually pledge at that time, I accepted a bid from Sigma Phi Epsilon and was initiated 12 weeks later. During my pledge period, I became acutely aware that Greek life was much more than anyone could ever put into words. It was like a light bulb came on, a clue of passage so to speak. I think of my fraternity brothers as my family away from family. I am very proud to be a part of UNC Wilmington's Greek community. David A. Fano

Sigma Phi Epsilon

I joined a fraternity because my father was Greek. He told me about Greek life and his experiences as a brother. My father did not make me join a fraternity, but he did influence my decisions. Andrew Prace
Kappa Sigma

I went Greek because of tradition. Family, friends, and co-workers were all Greek and it was almost expected. But once the door was open during rush, many reasons began to take shape. Meeting people from different walks of life, scholastic opportunities, and ability to make a difference on campus. Being Greek means being a leader and that's the number one reason for me. Jason Thompson
Kappa Sigma

I went Greek because I wanted to utilize my leadership qualities. I was very involved in high school and when I came to college I had a hard time finding my niche. The Greek community was the only organization involved in bringing people in. The Greeks are very active on campus and try to do things for the betterment of our school. I wanted to be a part of that and now that I am I feel proud. Holly McDuffie

FEDERAL DIRECT LENDING WILL GET YOUR FINANCIAL AID CHECK IN 3 DAYS!

In two years UNCW's Financial Aid Office may be able to send off your application for financial aid and credit your account within 3 days!

This will all be possible through a brand new (1994-95) loan process called Federal Direct Lending. Students will not have to go through banks anymore to get their student loans' checks. Instead, universities and trade schools will be receiving money directly from the government. Each school will then distribute the checks to the students who are eligible for financial aid. The time from a university to get a financial aid request processed until the student's account is credited will decrease from 4-6 weeks to 3 days!! Once a University has decided to go through Federal Direct Lending, that loan program will be the only choice for students with Financial Aid.

I talked to Peter D'Annunzio, the Director of Financial Aid (since August 15), to find out when UNCW is going to apply for the Federal Direct Lending program.

My main goal is to improve the image of the Financial Aid Office [we all know the reputation...Author's comment], and I have many immediate things on my list, therefore I plan to apply for Federal Direct Lending no earlier than 1996-97, also because three matters have to be fulfilled before we can apply for direct lending. First our system has to be able to handle it, I then need the appropriate personnel, and of course the administration has to support it."

This program will be totally beneficial for the students and will not increase tuition in any way."

Mr D'Annunzio also said: "The last university I was employed at, had the Federal Direct Lending system. It took a while to get used to, but it worked very well and the students were extremely pleased with it."

When UNCW gets on the Government's program of Federal Direct Lending, 2-3 more people have to be hired for the Financial Aid Office and the Business Administration, since their responsibilities will increase drastically.

Right now 104 schools are trying this program, 1995-96 about 200 more will join it, 1996-97 even more, and by 1999 the government has planned that direct lending will make up 60% of its total student loan budget.

Banks will be the only ones not benefitting from this type of loan process; they will lose any customer who decides to take a loan or get financial aid during their college education.

Travelogue Film Series at UNCW: Exciting Journeys, Began Monday, October 3

BY KELLY BERDINE

UNCW is presenting its 1994-95 season of the Travelogue film series began Monday, October 3, in Kenan Auditorium, to raise money for the Adopt-A-Seat Campaign.

The films are lively, documentary-type features of fascinating places around the world. They will be presented by their makers, who are travelers and cinematographers, highlighting the culture, art, and history of the respective lands they visited.

Bermuda was the first stop on this series of six destinations, in "Cruising to Bermuda." Next will be "Indonesia - Java to Bali Overland", Monday, October 31; "Ireland," Monday, December 12; "The Two Worlds of Peru" Monday January 9, 1995; "North to the Top of the World" (Canada's High Arctic Islands), Monday, February 6, 1995; and "Calm Water Cruising" (cruising the St. Lawrence River), Monday, March 13, 1995. All films begin at 7:30 PM.

Tickets are $7 per film, or $25 for the whole season. To purchase tickets, or for more information, call the Kenan Auditorium Box Office at 791-9695, Or 800-732-3643.

This Week in SGA

by A. Farmer, SGA

The October 3rd meeting was called to order by Vice President Sullivan at 6:03 P.M. Senators Maxwell, Hopper, Ramirez and Attorney General Hyman were not in attendance at this meeting.

President Nix reported on the status of the SGA student discount cards. The post office will be placing them in the boxes as soon as possible. President Nix also started a petition for Lead or Leave on our campus. This petition is for Register Once Legislation that would require colleges and universities to distribute voter registration materials to students, allow students to request, receive, and deposit absentee ballots on campus, put a polling place on every college campus in America, and allow any student registered in the county to vote at the campus polling place. President Nix would like as many students as possible to sign the petition.

Vice President Sullivan, during his report to the student senate, started a new award for senators. The award will be called the Pigsty award and will be going to senators who fail to clean out their boxes in the SGA office. The first winners of this award are Senators Stansfield, League, Kershner, Bennett and Hoover. Students who might be interested in a SGA position may petition for a Spring Rep at Large position which Will Stanley recently resigned from. The seat will be open for petition for the next 10 class days.

Heather Woodson, who is the SGA Treasurer, during her report said that the following clubs and organizations had failed to attend the mandatory Budget Policy workshop: Starving Artist, Recreation Majors, Global Volunteers, Biology Graduate Students, NAACP, Ad Federation and Women's Soccer. The Budget and Planning Committee made a motion to the senate that would withdraw the funds of all clubs that have not gone through the workshop by October 17th. This motion was passed by the senate.

The Budget and Planning Committee also made three other motions at this meeting. The first was to fund Pi Sigma Epsilon $520.00 for their October 21-23 Regional Convention. This would cover $280.00 for the Registration fee and $240.00 for hotel cost. The second motion was to allocate $30.00 for the taxes that were for the new Quick Pro Buzzer system that the senate already approved the purchase of. The third motion was to approve the BPC Philanthropy Guidelines. All motions passed with the senate's approval. The BPC Philanthropy Guidelines passed with unanimous consent.

The new appointments for this week are: Nick Allen to Special Student Senator, Carrie Finch to Freshman Class Senator, Sonja Rowe to Student Bookstore Committee Chair, and Scott Ensign and Matt McLaughlin to the Student Organizations Committee.

The SGA's guest speaker for this week was Jim Brace from Career Services. He thanked the senate for the new computer system put in this year and gave a report on its operation.

President Nix and Vice President Sullivan gave ending one minute speeches and the meeting was adjourned at 6:39P.M.

President Clinton's Speechwriter to Speak at UNCW

BY JAN KELLER
PR Intern

Speechwriter Eric Liu, who at 25 is a leader in his generation, will speak at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington at 7:00 PM on Thursday, October 20, in the Ballroom of the University Center.

Like the political generation of the 1960's, Liu expresses his generation's growing frustration with the status quo: "Only an independent movement, stocked with young reformist zealots can kick aside the bones of decrepit party politics... We are holding the ideals of the 60s and combining them with the practical savvy of the '80s. We are practical, non-ideological. We take what really works. ...My generation stands at an incredible point in American history... We have both the opportunity and I think the responsibility to understand our politics, to reform our politics, and to shape our future."

Liu works at the White House where he writes speeches for President Clinton and others. A graduate of Yale University, he is founder and editor of The Next Progressive, a political journal written by people in their twenties.

The lecture is free and open to the public. Free tickets (limit two per person) are available beginning Oct. 3 at the University Union Information Center.

This is the first of a series titled, "Leadership for the 21st Century." It is sponsored by the Chancellor's office and the UNCW Leadership Center. For more information call the UNCW Leadership Center at 910-395-3877.

Museum Curator Joins UNCW as Art Professor

BY JAN KELLER
PR Intern

Dr. Anthony F. Janson joined the fine arts department faculty at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington beginning with the fall semester 1994.

Janson, formerly chief curator of the North Carolina Museum of Art in Raleigh, NC, is teaching art history this fall and will teach Baroque art next spring. He will also assist in the university's fundraising for fine arts. Janson holds a Ph.D. from Harvard University and a master's degree from New York University's Institute of Fine Arts. Before joining the museum, he taught at the State University of New York at Buffalo and the College of Charleston.

Janson's essay on Giovanni Bellini's "Ecstasy of St. Francis" in the Frick Collection will be published this fall by the Viennese journal, Artibus et Historiae. A recognized expert on American painting, he has published extensively on European art as well.

Janson is currently planning with the American Federation of Arts in New York for a traveling exhibit of work by outstanding African American sculptors.

Curriculum Integration: Stock Market Theme

A teacher training course entitled, "Curriculum Integration: Stock Market Theme," will be taught at the YWCA, 2815 South College Road. This 10-hour class will meet Thursday, October 13, from 6 - 10:00 PM and Saturday, October 15, from 9:00 AM to 12:00 noon and from 1:00 - 4:00 PM.

Teachers of grades 4 and up will receive information on how to create a theme-based classroom which offers students hands-on investigative learning opportunities using the stock market. Through this multi-disciplinary approach, participants will learn how to design a curriculum with global and real world applications, incorporating such things as geography, letter writing, fractions, abbreviations, graphing and lots more.

Instructors are Barbara Downing and Mike Kopenhagen. Ms. Downing has her Masters in Education and is Director of the Tot Spot Preschool. Kopenhagen is a Senior Investment

Broker with A.G. Edwards & Sons and a certified financial planner. He is host on "Money Talks," a radio show on WAAV.

This course offers 1.0 unit of certificate renewal credits of NC certified teachers. Cost of $40.00 plus a yearly YWCA membership of $15. For more information or to pre-register, call the YWCA at 799-6820 or come by the office at 2815 South College Road.

Poetry Reading By UNCW Professor

BY JAN KELLER
Pr Intern

Poet Kathleen S. Halme will read from her recently published chapbook, The Everlasting Universe of Things, at St. Johns Museum of Art at 4:00 PM on Sunday, October 9. Halme's book won the 1994 Harperprints Chapbook Competition.

As assistant professor of English at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, Halme has taught poetry writing for three years. She holds a master of fine arts degree from the University of Michigan.

The poetry reading, sponsored by the North Carolina Writers Network is free and open to the public. A reception will follow.

Physical Plant Director Rehired, Then Retired

Roger Fry, who was discharged from his position as director of the Physical Plant with the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, and the university have reached an agreement with respect to the resolution of proceeding instituted by Mr. Fry, contesting his dismissal. Under that agreement, Mr. Fry will be reinstated to his position, with full back pay and benefits, as of September 30, 1994. However, Mr. Fry has informed the university that he intends to retire from employment with the university, effective October 1, 1994.

Mr. Fry was discharged from the university after it was discovered that approximately $40,000 worth of paint and paint supplies had been embezzled from the university by another employee. However, absolutely no evidence of criminal wrongdoing on the part of Mr. Fry was discovered.

ISN'T IT NICE WHEN THE EXPERTS DISCOVER SOMETHING YOU'VE KNOWN ALL ALONG.

Over 1.6 million people in education and research know that choosing TIAA CREF was a smart move. And now everyone else does too. Because Morningstar—one of the nation's leading sources of variable annuity and mutual fund information—has some stellar things to say about our retirement investment accounts.

“This comfortable combination of risk and return has earned the CREF Stock Account a five-star rating.”

After studying CREF's performance history, Morningstar gave five stars—its highest rating—to both the CREF Stock and Bond Market Accounts, and an impressive four stars to the CREF Social Choice Account. In fact, the CREF Stock Account was singled out as having “one of the best 10-year records among variable annuities.” Of course, past performance is no guarantee of future results.

“...CREF is far and away the cheapest variable annuity out there.”

Morningstar also called attention to CREF's “rock-bottom” fees—something that can really add to the size of your nest-egg down the road. What's more, TIAA's traditional annuity—which offers guaranteed principal and interest—plus the opportunity for dividends—was cited as having the highest fixed account interest rate among all annuities in its class.

We're happy to accept Morningstar's glowing ratings. But nice as it is to focus on stars, we'll keep focusing on something more down-to-earth: building the financial future you want and deserve.

Student Soliloquies

You know, I'm not usually a nasty person. But, driving an hour on highway 17 three days a week to get to UNCW was enough to make me a tad edgy. Today, as I was conscientiously tooling along, at the precise speed limit allowed by the law, I felt certain I was about to enjoy a small nap. I'm not sure when this realization hit me—but it was probably about the same time that huge Pizza Hut truck whizzed within three inches of my driver's side door.

The thought of Melissa Etheridge crawling "into my window," a cup of hot coffee splashed on my crotch, and a face full of chilly air aided in my revival some, but the car in front of me was what finally sparked my limp, pale grey cells into action.

Your typical generic coupe was riding along (at 10 mph lower than acceptable by anyone with a life) in a red truck that was adorned with a bumper sticker that read: "I will forgive Jane Fonda when the Jews forgive Hitler." I couldn't help but think what one had to do with the other. I mean, how can you equate the two? And if I had been born Jewish, would I have introduced myself to the driver with a single-finger wave as I passed him?

As I continued my drive, seething over what I considered this man's inconsideration at making a deep ethic wound appear trite, I began to search for other offensive bumper-bearing vehicles. Next, I was accosted by a young man in a red truck (is that a male thing? Power-red trucks?) and his rear window screamed out: "Happiness is a warm machine gun" and "My idea of gun control is shooting all the liberals." Well, I suppose he knew the guy I had passed the day before whose burgundy (that's in the red family) truck bore: "Keep the USMC flag free." I wasn't even half-way to school, but I felt as frustrated as if I had sat through 12 hours of Physics.

Suddenly, I noticed a banged-up stalled car that had pulled to the side of the road and it's sticker appropriately read: "Shit Happens!" Feeling a little lighter, I waved to the 100-year-old man, who was sitting in the middle turning lane in a gas-guzzling Lincoln Town Car, whose bumper hopefully proclaimed: "I'm in the Mood to be Nude." Maybe my day could be saved after all? I even laughed at the guy in a faded RED truck with a window sticker that read: "Male Chauvinist Pig on Board." He was riding solo, of course.

I pitied the woman whose lifeless car bragged: "This car brakes for all yard sales," and blew kisses at the heavy smoker who a beehive driving the raggedy station wagon full of rollicking rugrats who had plastered the heap with anti-Clinton propaganda, like: "Clinton/Gore Out in Four," "Don't Blame me, I Voted for Bush," and "First Hillary, then Gennifer, now Us." Do you think she was still making payments on her car, since the don't wait, finance now at 18 percent Reagan/Bush '80's? Think she would have had all those kids if she knew those interest rates and the economy would start to falter? Wonder, wonder.

Reluctantly, I gave up my sequester to stop at McDonald's for a cup of fresh coffee. The woman in front of me at the drive through, who had ordered 2 bacon-egg-cheese biscuits and a large Coke, drove away in a Mitsubishi that revealed: "Meat Sinks!" and she had a "Terrific Kid." Apparently bacon doesn't sink. And, just once, I'd like to see a harried parent toting a car-full of kids in a car with a sticker that says: "We've got rotten kids who will never be Star Students, unless they learn to cheat better."

As I was pondering over this delusion of overt honesty, I cut off a guy in a Ford Taurus, who flipped me the bird as he passed me.

His set of perfectly-laden stickers read: "Jesus Lives" and "Jesus is Lord." I rode his tail until I turned into UNCW's entrance and, thinking I had seen all I needed to reflect on for one day, began my day.

But, the drive home brought more free-speech surprises and contradictory messages. Like the carparked at the Golden Star Chinese restaurant which destroyed my appetite with: "I Brake for Animals." I wanted to find the owner, first to make sure they didn't work in the kitchen and second to ask if the animals they braked for were road-kill. Rather than take a chance at learning the truth, I pulled out of the parking lot and got behind a guy in a RED truck that had this slogan painted on the back window:

"We're Looking for a Few Bad Girls." What a clever play on the Marine Corps motto—"We're Looking for a Few Good Men." And what a funny guy, huh?

Luckily, he turned right at a light on Western Boulevard and I could stop shielding the eyes of my 5-year-old, who is beginning to read. I blew past two "O.J., We Love You" vehicles and screeched "Hell, no!" at a woman whose mini-van wanted to know if "[I] Had Hugged [My] Kid Today?"

The kids were laughing hysterically by the time we reached our driveway and yelling my series of profane remarks back and forth at each other. What a model human being I am.

Bob Haywood's Still Point

At a retreat this past weekend, I had several conversations with student friends of mine which reminded me how important it is that we find a significant other with which to share our lives. An innate hunger that resides deep within the core of each of us, is a hunger for a significant connection with another person which we hope will endure over all the years of our lives.

At the same time, many young adults are afraid of just such connection because they have been exposed personally or socially to the divorce of parents, to lousy relationships within the family even when there is no divorce, and sometimes even the trauma of physical or emotional abuse. It makes me so sad to hear what has happened to many young people about whom I care very deeply.

Still, the hunger for relationship remains strong enough in most so that people, however damaged or insecure, still seek to find that ONE.

The question that keeps coming my way is "How do you make it work?" Many are determined to have a relationship that will allow them to stay married and not experience divorce, but they are not at all sure what it takes for a relationship to be successful and long-lasting.

Let me share a couple of ideas of mine. First, if there is one single agreement that stands out above the others, it is that both partners have a healthy sense of self-worth. Most arguments, most jealousies, and most power issues in relationships are rooted in low self-esteem on the part of one partner or the other or sometimes both. A good relationship enables each partner to become the best possible person they can be.

Secondly, good relationships exist and grow when both partners are self-aware. To know our strengths, to articulate our needs, and to be able to take responsibility for our weaknesses is an essential dimension of effective partnering in a relationship. If only one partner is self-aware, the stage is set for almost certain conflict due to resistance and the avoidance of dealing with issues on the part of the non-self-aware partner.

Thirdly, there must be genuine deep caring for the well-being of our partner, a caring that is centered on enhancing and enriching our partners' lives for their own sake rather than always calculating what we can do for them in order to get back from them what we need. Such caring is love and it is the only kind of love that could bare the long-term stresses and strain that life brings to any couple.

Fourth, it is critical to know how to deal effectively with con-FLICT, to "fight fairly." Change in persons, change fostered by altering outside circumstances (a new job), stress related to children, or financial stress, all this demands that individuals in relationships learn how to deal with tough feelings. It is amazing to me how many people fall in love, get married and don't expect things to change at all. "Living happily ever after" is simply not possible!

Other issues are, of course, important as well. Things like common spiritual values, learning how our parents continue to live in us even if we don't want to be "like them" in some ways, still existing sex role scripts; all these are important. But if the first four core elements are in place, they will provide the foundation to enable us to deal with the many other issues that come our way.

I will conclude by mentioning one other element that is critical for me but may not be important to everyone. It is romance. Everyone enjoys the romance inherent in a beginning relationship. Many people lose the romance in the face of the realities of life together. I want you to know that I am absolutely convinced that romance can be maintained throughout a whole relationship. It is a choice that a couple well on the way to a relationship for a lifetime.

Excuse Me, But What's the Message Here?

By Carolyn S. Pittman

I don't get it. I don't want to pretend that I get it. And I won't apologize for not getting it. In this case, being why Seahawk editorialist(s) feel the need for employing such a caustic tone in order to make a point. I don't need to "get over it." I do think, however, that it's time the staff gets beyond it.

A recent editorial designated the students of this campus who have supposedly voiced their dissatisfaction with what seems to be a feminist, non-trad oriented program of topics. Basically, the position of the editor was sound (if I might paraphrase); if you don't like what you're reading then come and write for us. What I feel has been over looked, however, is why students would not want to contribute their articles and opinions. If you're interested, here are my reasons.

It has been acknowledged that some students and faculty are uncomfortable with the current "feminist" articles being published. I don't particularly wish to add to this discussion—at least not from a for or against perspective. Nor do I wish to get into the "freedom of speech" issue; I know it allows me to write this now. My position is only that I don't understand nor appreciate them. I find these "texts" disconcerting for various reasons—the most obvious being that I'm a forty-one year old woman who should be interested in issues and ideas that promote female equality or, at least, expose the fact that such a thing doesn't exist. Yet these texts appear structured in such a manner that it has become extremely difficult for me to identify with them in the context they implore—woman to woman (notice the a's). Moreover, I resent the intricate ploy of the language obviously designed to invite engagement yet craftily structured to repel and silence the same. Perhaps such well developed language games are a call for kudos to some (if there are any such undergraduates or graduates left unimpressed), but I see them as a direct affront to those of us with enough intelligence to interpret them as the author(s) "intended."

But feminism is certainly not the only deterrent to new, would be writers. How about all those sexual innuendoes that appear over and over again? Are they really relevant? It seems to me that it's only when we start finding condoms in the Wildflower Preserve that they'll be an issue worth writing about. If you don't believe me, perhaps you could ask "the Leutze man," or "Dickie" Veit, or.... Goeh, I never thought I'd regret not keeping the past issues of the Seahawk instead of trashing them upon reading the latest of these sexual and lexical innovations, but, if anyone else's memory runs similar to mine, perhaps I've made my point. Just in case I haven't though, let me close specifically.

What this letter actually boils down to is a simple matter of taste.

Mine isn't yours. Yours isn't anyone else's.

Maybe the staff will think about this when sending out the next call for writers. And maybe you "would-be" writers will do the same.

Frank's Place

Frank Tascone

Welcome to Frank's Place. We're inside today, even though it's nice out, because I have a cold. It's the same old I get every October—I call it my World Series cold because I usually have it for the fall classic. I thought maybe this year I wouldn't get it with the strike and all.

I also thought I wouldn't get sick because I took precautions. For instance, even though I took in all the fun at River Fest last weekend, I made a point of taking care of myself. I didn't drink much. Of course it may be that the sight of two Marines slamming their heads against giant speakers, while a large bearded shirtless man gyrated to the drum/hum line of "You shook me all Night Long," served as a bit of a deterrent. I believe a video of such behavior should be part of any alcohol education program.

As long as I'm on the subject of Riverfest, I'd like to propose that people who have a propensity for stopping often and unexpectedly, without regard for who may be walking behind them, should be either banned from the crowded, walking around portion of the festival, or should be provided with little personal brake lights and turn signals to be displayed on their backs. Perhaps, such amenities would have saved me the time and expense of replacing two lemonsades, a pizza slice, and a shish kabob. The shish kabob incident, I'll have to admit, paid for itself more than twice over in terms of entertainment value, as I'm sure you can imagine.

Getting back to taking care of myself. I made sure I got lots of sleep, I took vitamins, backed off my workout plan when I felt I was overdoing it, drank lots of orange juice (By the way, I saw a sign on the side of the road that was advertising a restaurant promotion—It read "Free OJ!" Like the pesky virid creatures that cause the common cold, the American free enterprise system will always find opportunity). I washed my hands thoroughly and often, as I've read that it is through hand to hand contact, that most cold viruses are spread.

Despite all of these precautions, the miserable thing came anyway. I'm tired, irritable, achy, stuffed up and coughing. The only regret I now have, besides getting it in the first place, is that I didn't get something worse. Something that causes fever and marked dizziness—something that truly inspires sympathetic responses from teachers, friends and bosses. If I'm going to be sick, I'd like to at least be able to escape from the world a bit. Perhaps that's the thing that is most distressing about colds. For some of us, they bring on great pain and discomfort, yet we don't feel comfortable missing class or work because "we have a cold."

No, we cold sufferers don't get the sympathetic respect of those harboring more important diseases such as the flu and mononucleosis, or something cool like that. Instead we get advice. "If you would take 8 million megamilligrams of vitamin C everyday you wouldn't get colds." "You know I take an aspirin everyday, and I haven't gotten a cold in a decade." "Lisizine, that's the answer. Gargle everyday and it kills everything!"

I have a cold and I feel like a failure. If I'd have just soaked in a tub of scalding hot water for 25 minutes for the entire month of September, I would be spared this social malady, and would be a happier, healthier being today.

Oh well. I'm feeling tired and, as you can probably tell, my thoughts are wandering, and I really need to blow my nose. Hey wait. I think I feel it. Yes! My cold is making its normal trek down into my chest. Bronchitis, now there's an ailment that may get some respect.

Open Courts? Not on This Campus

BY LESLIE LAMBETH
Contributing Writer

We are living in a world of numbers but on campus the most important one seems to be your student ID. You need that number for just about everything: to write a check, borrow a book, buy a Coke with the ID. Plus system, and now even to play basketball.

It has always been policy that UNCW courts are reserved for students, however, before last February it was never strictly enforced. It all changed when in the wake of growing student disputes over crowded courts, a basketball game ended in gunfire. Apparently, no one was hit, but it was enough to scare the campus police to start enforcing the policy.

"No one was hit. No one was hurt," said Billy Dawson, Chief of the University Police Department, "but the fact that it did happen...we felt like we needed to make some changes."

Each enrolling student does pay on activity fee of $12 at the beginning of each semester for maintenance and upkeep of the courts. Therefore, it only stands to reason that courts would be reserved for our students. However, there are those who disagree. George Irving, a student who has been accepted to UNCW for the spring semester, had this to say, "I come to the back courts at the University because I know I can play a safe game of ball. The community courts in Wilmington nowadays just aren't like that. I also find it challenging to play against the students and members of the Seahawk's team. They are good and the games are fun."

It seems a shame to me that people like George would be asked to leave the courts. We need to ask ourselves, "Are we just trying to keep the courts safe or do we just want to save it for an elite group who has paid their twelve dollars?" What if the Library started a policy like this? It seems that there should be some way for non-students and members of the Wilmington community to get a temporary pass to play. This would allow non-students to get into the games and at the same time still give the university control over who plays and when.

Letter to Editor

To the Editor,

The other day I arrived to class five minutes late. I really thought nothing of it because it couldn't have helped. I mean, I try to keep meaningful events of day to day life from interfering with my formal education, but sometimes they overlap. I always put practical experiences ahead of class time and that is my flaw.

I just can't imagine anybody saying at the end of their life, "If only I had ditched my family and health more often to make it to class on time, my life would have been more enriched." The again, on the day of tardiness I hadn't imagined that I would have points deducted from the assignment due at the end of class simply because I missed roll call. I even got all of the answers correct before we went over them in class! What the hell is up?

Well, I spent the next several class periods considering the whole attendance policy thing. I have concluded that whoever made it up is on drugs. TRUE, students who attend class regularly generally earn, or at least receive better grades than students' whose attendance is irregular. This was proven even before the attendance policy was enacted. And I can see how an administration would want 'their' school to look good in comparison to other schools in terms of grades, sports, alumni, sports and sports. It means higher accreditation, more applications turned in, higher enrollment (maybe) and consequently more money to the school.

But, what about my brain? I'm not an average schmuck. I'm the kind of person that is going to make this school look good BECAUSE I can skip lectures, pay rent, cook beef stroganoff keep from getting AIDS, hold down a job (and be outstanding at it), leave the seat down AND get decent grades.

But hey, the concept of intellectual discrimination will never fly in college because we only go to school to get jobs, right? We're all striving for mediocrity. I someday I want to take over Daddy's payments on my BMW - then I'll be successful. It's the German Equivalent of a Ford Escort, dumbass!

For a minute, lets expand on the attendance policy philosophy. Let it be given that two points will be deducted from your final grade every time you miss a class after the first two absences. You have to retake a class if you score below 70. In-state tuition for one class, per semester for a full time student costs about $63.75. Assuming that a three credit hour class meets about 25 times during a semester, but if you miss more than 17 you will have to retake it regardless of how you perform on the tests. This makes the classes worth about $4.25 per meeting, buy fifteen, get ten free and each point for missed attendance worth $2.13 a piece.

If I am paying UNCW to attend classes and read grades of credit to ward a degree, I want $2.13 for every point I am not allowed to have due to my having a life outside the university supporting the faculty and staff.

Hey, it's my life, my money and my responsibility to make the grades. You don't have to stop class while I look for a seat, and if you think that making the grade does not reflect the sort of students you want, drop grading all together and give diplomas to anyone who attends all the required lectures.

One thing I have learned while skipping classes to spend time in the real world is that solutions like this don't get taken seriously. For good reason though - they're not realistic. The other thing I have learned to that Americans don't like solutions proposed by people who are supposed to be below them. People like college students and the Surgeon General. Well, I don't care, I'm going to screw up all and propose a reasonable solution and, in doing so, insure that it will not be heeded by the proper authorities.

Here goes: Do not take off points for missing class unless the student gets less than a B at the end of the semester. What are we supposed to become by being forced to go to class anyway? Responsible? Self-disciplined? I want to be graded on my knowledge, not my presence. Some teachers go as far as to deduct points by percentage - i.e. the better you do, the more you're penalized. Who is being helped by this system and do you want them to be your representatives?

Test the tardy. Every day before class, write a question on the board that is relevant to the previous class. It will be a beacon for all the students as to how they are keeping up with the class, and if the people who are tardy give the wrong answer, then deduct a half-point. If the teacher keeps up with all of the attendance and tardy points it shouldn't take any longer than it already does, and maybe more people will show up on time.

It's not like I won't go to class if I don't have to, I just want the option to be well rounded.

What About Rods?

BY RIO MIHAL
Contributing Writer

If talk of nuclear fuel rods traveling through North Carolina or large shipments of coal being brought into the Wilmington port has you worried about yourself, your family, or the place you live and work, then take these things as a sign that you should get involved. The act of seeking out information on these subjects from the media, local groups, or organizations, such as the UNCW Environmental Concerns Organization, may cause your worries to be laid to rest or may compel you to speak out on a specific issue. If you don't speak out on an issue, while it is an issue, you won't have room to criticize the direction others took after it is resolved.

The fuel rod issue, as I see it, is not being properly addressed by those who are attacking it. "We don't want it here" seems to be popular theme, which is based on fear of the environment becoming contaminated and people "glowing in the dark." I suggest we attempt to see the situation from a non-biased point of view, for the sake of clarity.

The first fact that presents itself is that the spent fuel rods are made of nuclear weapons grade, radioactive material. Coupled with the fact that the rods were produced in the US, it is evident that it is in our best interest to take the rods back to avoid supplying other governments with the stuff that makes a nuclear bomb tick.

Secondly, the fact of the matter is, we are capable of handling, transporting, and storing spent nuclear fuel rods safely. The trick is ensuring that all these things are done according to standard regulations, and keeping in mind the ecological impact of an accident if operations were allowed to go slack.

Finally, the destination of the rods in South Carolina, at a facility that already handles nuclear waste effectively. The rods are only being carried through North Carolina. If the Department of Transportation and the Environmental Protection Agency do their jobs in ensuring safety, we have nothing to worry about.

Regardless of what happens to these rods specifically, this issue should be convincing all of us that the problem of nuclear by-products needs to be resolved: research needs to go towards decreasing the production of spent fuel rods by increasing plant efficiency, utilizing the rods for other purposes, or transferring energy production from fission to fusion (or some other method which produces little or no hazardous by-products). Energy production is a must for society, but the careless continuation of the production of hazardous waste is not.

Advice to UNCW's Weary

You may notice, dear readers, we have only one letter and response for this week's edition. We'd planned to answer more of your questions, but this writer addressed a variety of problems regularly pondered over by a number of you—so we figured we'd make our job easier and answer all of you at once. After we're finished with "Frustrated," we may feel able (or compelled) to retire from the advice-giving, question-answering business. We also realize that some of you may smile at this notion and we appreciate your patience.

One note of interest: For those of you who have asked our alter-egos, these are real letters—for the most part. Some of them have been altered for grammar, but the context is never tampered with. If you don't believe us, send a letter of your own to UNCW PO Box 24095 and watch the Seahawk for it's printing.

Dear Emma and Jane:

I want to bitch and I don't know who to bitch at, so I thought I'd write you a letter. Seems to me if you can bitch every week, it's only fair that someone else gets a turn.

The first issue is the vending machines on campus. I have one of those nifty little FLEX cards and I'm sick and tired of getting charged fifty cents for a forty/fifty-five cent item. When I stick my card into the snack machine it automatically deducts fifty cents then gives the card back before I've made a selection. I rarely get candy, which are the only items that cost fifty cents. Who gets that extra ten cents? If I buy something everyday for a week that's a whole candy bar worth of money. Excuse me, but this really gets to me.

Something else that gets under my collar is the woman's bathroom, on the first floor of Morton Hall. I've been going to this school for more years than I care to reveal and the first stall (lovely word, huh?) has always been missing the partition that allows you to shut and lock the door. Thus, the whole world or, at least, those who come into the bathroom, get to watch you pee as they stand in line waiting for another stall to open. Honestly, how much money would it take to bring in a 2' x 4' and nail it to the wall so that the door can stay shut?

Another thing that gets to me is that women's sport always seem to get the short end of the stick. This weekend, Family Weekend, at UNCW they have a soccer match, Men's Soccer. Where are the women? I'd rather watch the women play and so would my parents. Excuse me, but what's the message this is sending me and my family? Women are second (if that) around this campus.

One more thing. There was a picture of the Cross-Country Team in the September 22nd issue of the Seahawk. What the hell are the women wearing? The men have on these nice comfy baggy middle of the thigh shorts and the women have on these things that look like the bottom of a bikini or those silly little pairs of underwear women cheerleaders wear under their skirts. I think this is pure unadulterated SEXISM!!

One last thing. I went to the Health Expo today. Yeah, it pissed me off too. What is this with passing out condoms? What about Dental Dams, Finger Cots, Gloves, etc. Come on folks, they aren't passing out condoms just for birth control. Why are they forgetting about protecting women? And don't even try to give me that shit about you can cut the side of a condom and make a dam out of that. I know that and I know they're bigger and less bulky than dams, but what about finger cots and gloves? Do they not know or just don't care about women's health?

Yes, I know all but one of my gripes had to do with women's issues, but guess what? I AM A WOMYN!

Okay, I feel a little better. But I still want to know what, if anything, I can do about these things. I would also love to know if anyone else out there gets as ticked off about stuff like this. If there is anyone else out there, please write to Emma and Jane so I'll know I'm not alone.

Signed: Frustrated with this White Male Campus!

Dear Frustrated:

We don't quite know where to begin, so we'll proceed on a point-by-point format, addressing your questions as you wrote them to us. First, we're glad you turned to us and that you consider us sensitive to your problems (try convincing others of that). I don't use the FLEX system, but Jane does and she also rents the extra money deducted from her account for cheaper items. We've discussed this and don't know why the machines do it. Obviously, it's easier for those who program the machines to have them take out the same amount for all the items, but it's also apparent that someone is stealing cash from thousands of students everyday. Maybe the extra money goes to the college as a way of paying off the installation of the FLEX system? Who knows? And, the point isn't where or who anyway—it's why? If the machines are going to take the extra nickel or dime, they should bear disclaimer stickers telling students they are about to get ripped off. We think you should boycott the vending machines, write a Chancellor's suggestion slip out, and plan ahead for your junk-food cravings by buying somewhere else. Did you know the same pack of chewing gum costs 15 cents (25 on FLEX) less at the Hawk's Nest? Take the walk until this is resolved.

Next, we've used the bathroom you speak so fondly of and it's bothered us too. The stall's missing piece allows for about 3-4 inches of viewing capability and, as a result, we simply refuse to occupy that stall. Problem is, during change of class rush, you have the options to use it, wait and be late, or hold it for another hour. None of these choices are particularly pleasant, especially the latter, which can result in urinary tract and bladder discomforts and infections. Considering how long the stall has been like this, we've arrived at the conclusion that no one really cares. If they did, the tampon and sanitary napkin dispensers would be kept full and in working condition—which they never are. We know women who've had to leave campus to buy tampons/pads at the nearby gas station and that's entirely unacceptable at a university of this size with such a high female population.

We can't address your women's sports issue very well because we don't keep up on UNCW's organized sports programs. We do think women's sports should receive equal importance, not just during special events weekends, but also throughout the year. We agree with your thoughts concerning the negative messages this inattention of women's sports sends to the players, as well as family members and community observers, and we think it's typically unfair. Again, the Chancellor's Suggestion Box in a good place to start and you may wish to talk to the sports department, too. Perhaps you'd like to compose and distribute a survey or petition to get more supporters? Again, for your following question about the difference in men and women's athletic attire, contact the sports program on campus or find someone who is involved and ask them. There may be a practical reason for this, such as the difference in male and female physiques, which may deem shorter shorts for women necessary. We don't necessarily buy that one, but it's something to consider.

Finally, other students have wondered why Dental Dams, finger cots, and gloves are not given away at the campus Health clinic or events like the Health Expo, as are condoms. Anyone can walk into one of the bathrooms in the clinic and snatch as many condoms as they'd like. The message here seems to be that the University Power People are concerned with keeping the heterosexual population free from STD's, but not those of us who are homosexual or bisexual. (There's another vending machine dilemma for you, when you push the button for a tampon you get a condom—pretty useless for menstruation purposes.) This may be an issue the GLA or Alternatives organizations can help you answer and they may be pushing similar issues right now toward change. Contact these people to find out what you can do or who you can confront with your concerns.

You've enlightened us and we're encouraged by your willingness to not only bitch, but to also get involved to institute changes in a flawed system. We can assure you, from reading our mail and talking with students, you are not alone in your complaints. We welcome anyone with the same concerns to contact "Frustrated" at our address and advise you to get organized and be heard.

Frederick Moyer To Be Featured In Paul Green Centennial Concert

Pianist Frederick Moyer

BY J. TRENT LEONARD
Arts And Entertainment Editor

The Paul Green Centennial Concert featuring Frederick Moyer, in a solo piano recital, will be presented on October 7, 1994, at 8 p.m., in Thalian Hall. Tickets are now on sale at the Box Office by calling 343-3664. Individual tickets are $8, $10, $12, or by season subscription.

The concert celebrates the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Paul Green, Dramatist Laureate of the State of North Carolina, author of The Lost Colony, and Pulitzer Prize winner. Frederick Moyer, internationally renowned artist and grandchild of Paul Green, is touring with this special commemorative concert. (Due to an illness, cellist Nancy Green will be unable to perform in this concert as previously scheduled.)

Moyer is well known in the Wilmington area because of his outstanding performances and awards during the Albert Schweitzer Medals for Artistry Concerts. Prior to his 1982 debut at Carnegie Hall, he studied at the Curtis Institute and Indiana University. He has won acclaim for his solo recitals and performances with such major orchestras as the Cleveland, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, Singapore, and Dallas Symphony Orchestras.

The solo piano concert at Thalian Hall will include works by Bach, Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Chopin, and will end with Gershwin's masterpiece, Rhapsody in Blue.

The Thalian Hall Concert Series is supported in part by grants from the Paul Green Foundation and the A.J. Fletcher Foundation.

"Spotlight On" at Cape Fear Museum

BY J. TRENT LEONARD
Arts And Entertainment Editor

"Spotlight On," an exhibition case highlighting a seldom seen artifact or a new acquisition from the museum's collection, now graces the lobby of Cape Fear Museum. The "Spotlight On" exhibit debuts with a presentation sword from the German Volunteers, a mid-19th century Wilmington militia company. The grandchildren of the original owner, Jacob Wessel, donated the sword to the museum. The German Volunteers, organized in 1852 by German immigrants in Wilmington, made Wessel their first captain. Born in Achim, Kingdom of Hannover, Germany in 1814, Wessel arrived in Charleston, South Carolina in 1840. By the end of that year he had made his way to Wilmington and had become an American citizen by 1844.

The highly decorated sword and scabbard was made by the Ames Manufacturing Company of Chicopee, Massachusetts in 1852. Its workmanship, in excellent condition, features elaborate relief designs and fine engraving.

In a sense, the sword has returned home, as the museum is located on part of the original city parade grounds. As an item in the museum's permanent collection, the sword will rest where it hung, when on parade, at the side of its owner in the 1850's.

Showboat Serenade On Battleship

BY J. TRENT LEONARD

Friends of the Battleship North Carolina invite you to join them Friday, October 14, at 6:30 p.m. on the ship's fantail for Dixieland jazz and a shrimparoo to kick off "Celebrate Wilmington," a month long celebration of the performing arts in our area. Providing the evening's entertainment is Dr. Harry van Velsor's seven-piece Dixieland Jazz Society of the Lower Cape Fear, a well-known group with a wide following. Hieronymous Seafood will be serving the classic shrimparoo with keg beer included in the ticket price. Various raffles will add to the evening's merriment. Tickets are $25 each and checks are payable to Friends of the Battleship. Proceeds will go towards funding of the exhibits and educational programs on the Battleship.

Friends of the Battleship form a non-profit group open to the public and you are invited to join. The Friends fund new exhibits, updated tour route interpretation, educational programs, and the annual Museum Department summer intern. Membership includes such benefits as guest tickets, invitations to exhibit openings, viewing the Fourth of July fireworks from the ship's fantail, a subscription to the quarterly newsletter The Annunciator, a ten percent discount in the Gift Shop, and free or reduced admission to special events. There are various memberships with additional benefits. For more information, please contact Susan Pope at the Battleship at 251-5797.

Trent Asks Fellow Students...

Yo! What's It To You?

BY J. TRENT LEONARD
Arts And Entertainment Editor

Lately in my comings and goings around campus, I have overheard several conversations dealing with my fellow Seahawk colleagues and myself. The conversations are, I think, not a personal attack of our character, but are meant rather to express disinterest or dislike for something that they have found in these hallowed pages.

So, I decided to confront some of these people, some my friends and others not, and ask why they were disgruntled. It was then that I realized that most of the people who were taking part in these conversations had no idea what is contained in the material they were discussing!

I specifically confronted two of my friends in one of my English literature classes to ask them what they thought of the improvements that the Seahawk had undergone this year. One of them said, "What improvements?" and the other said, "I don't read the paper anymore."

What's wrong with this picture? Focus, focus please.

First of all, the Seahawk is FREE! There is no subscription rate, no campaigning for contributions, or anything at all asking for your money. We all pay quite enough to go to this university as it is. I think even I would be angry, or at least a bit peeved, if someone was charging a subscription rate to a paper that comes out weekly. Why then do you think it is that people do not read their student newspaper, indeed, YOUR student newspaper?

You have no excuse, barring blindness at which point you should ask someone standing nearby to pick one up for you. If you have ever stepped foot inside the Randall library, University Union, University Center, S&B building, Morton Hall, Friday Hall, or Wagoner Hall without noticing the big paper dispensing machine with large, bold print labeled THE SEAHAWK and picking up a copy.

I bitterly complained to these two friends (term used very loosely now) that they should at least attempt to read the Seahawk, if only occasionally. One of them remarked that he had so much work to do, and on top of that, had a job in the afternoon as well.

"Boo-boo, cry me a river," (as the famous quote goes) I said. It really made me quite angry that I sit up here in the Union every Tuesday morning and put these A&E pages together if no one ever reads them. I assure you that my motivation lies not in the money that I am paid, as it is not adequate enough to even pay my rent each month.

We have worked very hard this year to make this paper better! Any suggestions, gripes, complaints, reassurances, comments, or any other form of criticism/praise are by all means welcome. But that would mean that you actually might have to write something down and deliver it to my box on the door labeled ENTERTAINMENT at 214-E in the Union, God forbid! If you failed to read it above).

I am trying my hardest to bring the A&E pages back from the doldrums that they have suffered from in the past by including articles that interest more than just two or three people on campus. I even tried to appeal to more than one kind of taste last week by covering Riverfest, which was quite fun, an alternative CD review, and Eric Totten's movie review, which I could have chosen to edit for my own sake had I not the integrity not to do so for personal gain!

But does anyone really care? I doubt it. I don't even know why I bothered to blith at all. No one will read it anyway.

Records: Overall (3-6-0), Colonial Athletic Association (0-2-0)

The midway point of the season has UNC Wilmington's men's soccer team scrambling for the right combination in a difficult stretch of the schedule looms ahead.

The Seahawks fell to 0-2 in the Colonial Athletic Association following Saturday's 7-1 loss to eighth-ranked William and Mary at Brooks Field. The Seahawks are now 3-6 overall, but have been outscored by CAA opponents, 19-1, this season.

Senior forward Joel Myers (R.A. Hume, H.S./Wilmington, N.C.) scored UNCW's lone goal against William and Mary to push his team-high total to 10 goals and three assists in his career and needs just four goals to move past Chris George into No. 5 on the all-time list.

Sophomore Shawn McCullister and senior Josh Hopfer continue to share goalkeeping duties. McCullister has started seven games and allowed 12 goals for a 2.58 goals against average. Hopfer has opened six contests, allowing 21 goals for a 3.52 goals against average.

The Seahawks, who enter 3-3 at Brooks Field this season, conclude a four-game homestand this week when Coastal Carolina visits Brooks Field Wednesday for a 4 p.m. matchup.

Coastal leads the seven-game series by a 4-3 edge, and has won four of the last five matchups, including a 2-1 victory in 1990.

WOMEN'S GOLF

Next Event: Beacon Woods Invitational, Oct. 14-16, Bayonet Point, Fla.

The Lady Seahawks are idle for two weeks before competing in their third tournament of the season, the Beacon Woods Invitational, hosted by South Florida on Oct. 14-16, in Bayonet Point, Fla.

Fourteen teams will vie for the championship of the Beacon Woods tourney. The three-day journey will take place at the Par-72, 6,050-yard Beacon Woods Golf Club course. In action last weekend, the Lady Seahawks garnered a 14th-place finish out of 15 teams at the Lady Tar Heel Invitational in Chapel Hill, N.C., with a three-round total of 1016. Freshman Nicole Flood (Mayfield H.S./Gloversville, N.Y.) shot a team season-low round of 79 on the final day of competition and led the Lady Seahawks in the overall standings, tying for 57th with a three-round total of 249. Fellow freshman Tara Adams (Lansburg H.S./Lansburg, Pa.) followed in a tie for 59th with a score of 250.

Lady Tar Heel Invitational Results: Wake Forest (296-295-298-889), Furman (304-307-309-920), North Carolina (307-306-313-926), South Carolina (312-311-304-927), Kentucky (306-314-311-931), Methodist (317-310-305-932), Longwood (318-314-308-940), Auburn (312-321-309-941), Duke (320-315-308-943), UNC - Greensboro (317-320-316-953), Tulane (334-335-316-963), James Madison (338-335-330-965), Coastal Carolina (339-331-327-996), UNC Wilmington (343-338-335-1016), William and Mary (349-365-342-1056).

MEN'S GOLF

Next Event: Hargrove Davis Memorial Tournament, Oct. 3-4, Bales Creek, N.C.

After opening the new season with a second place finish in the Tom O'Brian Memorial Golf Tournament two weeks ago, the Seahawks travel to Bales Creek for an appearance in the Hargrove Davis Memorial this week.

Coach Calvin Lano's squad was in the hunt for the title of the Tom O'Brian event, but was nosed out by Virginia Commonwealth. The team consists of two seniors (Gregg Cuthill, Brian Spencer), three sophomores (Mike Cato, Steve Doucet, David Copley) and one freshman (John Gaddy).

Cato (Kinston H.S./Kinston, N.C.) and Gaddy (Hogard H.S./Wilmington, N.C.) led the Seahawks in the first tournament by finishing third and fourth respectively at The Cardinal Golf Club in Greenville.

Tom O'Brian Memorial Team Results: Virginia Commonwealth (219-211-367-797), UNC Wilmington (223-207-376-806), Pfeiffer (225-214-379-818), Elon (229-213-377-819), High Point (222-212-389-823), Grossmont (227-218-396-841), Christopher Newport (242-213-388-843), Appalachian State (226-225-393-844), Emory (235-217-401-853), Radford (236-220-397-853), Guilford (236-224-398-858), Ferrum (233-218-410-861).

UNCW Individual Results: Mike Cato (72-68-74-214), John Gaddy (77-69-69-215), Gregg Cuthill (74-68-76-219), Brian Spencer (77-70-74-221), David Copley (72-69-80-223), Steve Doucet (74-70-82-226).

CROSS COUNTRY

Next Event: North Carolina Intercollegiate, Oct. 15, Charlotte, N.C. Heather Fenton won for the third time in four trips out and Frank Ingrassia posted UNCW's top time in the men's bracket as the Seahawks competed in the East Carolina Invitational last weekend in Greenville, N.C.

Fenton, off to a torrid start with titles in the Seahawk Invitational and Wolfpack Invitational earlier this season, covered the 5,000 Meters in 18:25.76 to capture individual honors once again. Fenton propelled UNCW's women to first place over Virginia Tech, East Carolina and Radford in the race.

Ingrassia, meanwhile, clocked a 28:19 in the five-mile men's race for second place individually behind East Carolina's Sean Connolly (26:41). ECU own the men's race over UNCW, 23-37.

ECU Invitational Men's Team Results: East Carolina (23), UNC Wilmington (37).

ECU Invitational Men's Individual Results (Top Five): 1. Sean Connolly (ECU), 26:41; 2. Frank Ingrassia (UNCW), 28:19; 3. Shane Hall (UNCW), 28:28; 4. Michael Marini (ECU), 28:32; 5. Larry Lewis (ECU), 28:42.

UNCW Individual Men's Results: Frank Ingrassia, 2nd, 28:19;

Shane Hall, 3rd, 28:28; Christian Montez, 9th, 29:28; Vince Hovis, 11th, 29:47; Chris Hillis, 12th, 30:25.

ECU Invitational Women's Team Results: UNC Wilmington (36), Virginia Tech (45), East Carolina (45), Radford (108).

ECU Invitational Women's Individual Results (Top Five): 1. Heather Fenton (UNCW), 18:25.76; 2. Dava Rhodes (ECU), 18:39.32; 3. Shannon Williamson (UNCW), 18:53.02; 4. Stacy Green (ECU), 19:04.38; 5. Melissa Ward (Va. Tech), 19:06.77. UNCW Individual Women's Results: Heather Fenton, 1st, 18:25.76; Shannon Williamson, 3rd, 18:53.02; Tricia Callison, 7th, 19:17.30; Sara Rhoads, 12th, 19:50.69; Laura Rhoads, 13th, 19:54.69; Amy Davis, 17th, 20:15.03; Wendy Garria, 20th, 20:23.48; Brennan Fish, 21st, 20:23.24; Rebekah Frick, 23rd, 20:33.25; Megan Page, 28th, 21:07.12; Sara White, 34th, 22:50.42.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Next Event: Francis Marion, Oct. 13, 2:00 p.m.

Senior Les Worrell (Goldboro H.S./Goldboro, N.C.) captured her second straight singles championship in the Lady Seahawk Autumn Classic over the weekend at the UNCW courts.

Worrell rolled over Coastal Carolina's Melissa Mason, 6-0, 6-3, in the final of the No. 1 singles competition. In other UNCW highlights, freshman Katie Brinkman (Maury H.S./Norfolk, Va.) won the fourth flight consolation crown by stopping Presbyterian's Christie Bok, 6-3, 6-4, and junior Becky Baker (Governor Dummer Academy/Newburyport, Mass.) crushed Presbyterian's Jessica Clark, 6-2, 6-0, in the sixth flight championship.

VOLLEYBALL

Records: Overall (11-5), Colonial Athletic Association (0-0)

Riding a four-match winning streak, the UNC Wilmington volleyball squad looks to continue its winning ways this week with four contests. On Tuesday, Oct. 4, the Lady Seahawks play host to the College of Charleston before going on the road at UNC Greensboro on Thursday, Oct. 6. Both matches begin at 7 p.m.

Later in the week, the Lady Seahawks play Navy in Conway, S.C., on Saturday, Oct. 8 at 10 a.m., and meet Coastal Carolina at 1 p.m.

Coach Kathy McDaniel's team has won seven of its last eight matches and is off to its best start since 1988 when the squad bolted out to a 15-1 record over its first 16 contests.

The Lady Seahawks defeated Campbell, 15-5, 15-12, 12-15, 8-15, 15-11, in Trask Coliseum last Tuesday. Junior outside hitter Josie Youngblood (West Henderson H.S./Hendersonville, N.C.) led the UNCW attack with 13 kills and had a game-high 19 digs. Fellow junior Leslie Nouzelek (Walter Johnson H.S./Bethesda, Md.) contributed 12 kills and 13 digs, while senior middle hitter Debby Taydas (Northwood H.S./Pittsboro, N.C.) added nine kills and a game-high seven blocks. Sophomore setter Ginger Moon (Quince Orchard H.S./Gaithersburg, Md.) logged 42 assists and 13 digs.

Over the weekend, UNC Wilmington captured its first tournament title of the season by winning a pair of matches at the Davidson Invitational. The Lady Seahawks pounded Tennessee-Chattanooga, 15-5, 15-4, 15-4, and downed host Davidson, 15-11, 15-2, 15-13, in back-to-back contests Friday night.

In the victory over Tennessee-Chattanooga, Youngblood had game-highs of 14 kills and 26 attempts and a remarkable .462 on the attack. Taydas notched 10 kills, while freshman middle hitter Sarah DeLair (Lincoln-Way H.S./Mokena, Ill.) posted eight digs and a game-high six blocks. Moon tallied 25 assists and eight digs.

Against Davidson, Taydas gathered a game-high nine kills, followed by DeLair with eight. Moon racked up a game-high five service aces to go with her 27 assists, also a game-high. Sophomore Katy Kurt (Notre Dame Acad./Los Angeles, Calif.) posted a game-high of 14 digs, with Nouzelek adding 12.

Youngblood leads the Lady Seahawks in kills (200), total attempts (570) and solo blocks (15), and Nouzelek is tops in digs with 209. Taydas holds the team lead with 33 block assists and 45 total blocks. Moon has amassed 559 assists and a team-high 79 service aces.

Youngblood has moved into sixth place on the UNCW career list with 712 kills and 2006 total attempts. She is seventh all-time with 80 career service aces and eighth with 759 career digs. Moon stands third all-time with 1849 career assists, only two away from second place, and her total of 104 service aces is sixth.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

Records: Overall (1-7-0), Colonial Athletic Association (0-3-0)

The first season of competition remains a challenge for the UNC Wilmington women's soccer squad as it fell to 1-7 overall and 0-3 in the Colonial Athletic Association last week. The Lady Seahawks will try to end a six-game losing streak this week with a pair of contests. UNCW plays on the road at Charleston Southern this Thursday, Oct. 6, at 3 p.m., then returns home to entertain conference foe Old Dominion on Saturday, Oct. 8, at 1 p.m.

The Lady Seahawks, struggling offensively, were shutout twice last week. On Monday, Campbell defeated UNC Wilmington at Brooks Field, 9-0. Five Lady Seahawks launched one shot on goal each - junior midfielder Angie Gopodarek (Oakshott North H.S./Oakshott, Wisc.), junior forward Joanna Walker (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.), junior forward Melaney Marshall (North Brunswick H.S./Long Beach, N.C.), junior forward Meredith Lindsey (South Lakes H.S./Reston, Va.) and freshman midfielder Jaime Betts (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.).

Last Saturday, 11th-ranked George Mason blasted the visiting Lady Seahawks, 12-0. Angie Gopodarek, Jaime Betts and Joanna Walker each recorded one shot on goal, and Bordo had 14 saves in goal.

Freshman forward Margaret Merrill (East Mockenburgh H.S./Charlotte, N.C.) continues to lead the team in scoring with three goals and one assist (seven points), followed by Joanna Walker's one goal and one assist (three points). Angie Gopodarek and freshman midfielder Ashley Neighbors (North Forsyth H.S./Winston-Salem, N.C.) have one goal (two points) apiece. The Lady Seahawks have eight contests left on the slate.

Seahawk Athlete Of The Week

UNCW Fall/Winter Athlete-of-the-Week

Jodie Youngblood
5-11, Junior Outside Hitter
West Henderson High School
Hendersonville, N.C.

Youngblood takes the weekly honors for the second time this season after powering UNC Wilmington's volleyball team to three victories and the championship of the Davidson Invitational last weekend.

The junior outside hitter had 34 kills, 33 digs, four aces and two blocks as the Lady Seahawks claimed wins over Campbell, Tennessee-Chattanooga and Davidson last week. With an 11-5 overall record, the Lady Seahawks are off to their best start since 1988.

Youngblood has moved into sixth place on the all-time list with 712 kills and 2,006 total attempts. She is also seventh on the list with 80 career aces and 759 career digs.

UNCW To Participate In Sixth Annual Timex Fitness Week

In an effort to improve the exercise habits of college students, UNCW will be among 300 colleges and universities across America participating in the sixth annual Timex Fitness Week presented by Ocean Spray. The event, held during the week of October 17-23, is sponsored by Timex and Ocean Spray, with support sponsorship from Concept II and is endorsed by the National Intramural-Recreational Sports Association (NIRSA). During the week of fitness, each school's recreational sports department will showcase a variety of running, rowing, swimming, cycling and aerobics activities running from introductory clinics to triathlons. Two noteworthy events headlining Timex Fitness Week are: "Timex Condition Competition," "World's Largest Aerobics Class." The "Timex Condition Competition" measures students' fitness against national standards and reinforces the value of wearing a specialized timepiece during exercise or athletic competition. The week's largest participatory event, Ocean Spray's "World's Largest Aerobics Class," will be held on Thursday, October 20 at all 300 schools. Last year an estimated 25,000 students sweated it out in the aerobics marathon. Timex's best-selling sport watches and t-shirts will be awarded as prizes and free samples of Ocean Spray will be distributed at selected events. "With all the diversions available in college, many students do not develop a regular fitness program," explains Gregor McCausley, Manager of Sports Marketing and Sales for Timex. "We believe that by sponsoring Timex Fitness Week on 300 campuses, we can show students how to integrate exercise in their busy class schedules and beyond."

Contact the Office of Campus Recreation for more details at 395-3361.

Salary Review For New Grads Shows Slight Increase

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS
Staff Writer

In a report issued by the College Press Service, Oct. 3, new college graduates had more job opportunities than last year, but their starting salaries rose only slightly, according to the Sept. 1994 issue of the College Placement Council Salary Survey.

While an improving economy was credited for the increase in hiring, low inflation rates continue to keep most increases in starting salaries at a minimum, said Dawn Oberman, director of employment for CPC.

So what majors fared the best? Job candidates in most business disciplines posted respectable gains in their starting salary offers. Accounting graduates earned a 3.2 percent increase and now average $28,372, while business administration graduates saw their average offer rise 2.2 percent to $25,102.

Engineering graduates continue to face stiff competition for jobs in the manufacturing sector, which translates into starting salaries that remained at last year's level. Civil engineers received 2 percent higher salary offers, averaging $29,809, and industrial engineers average offer rose 1 percent for an average of $33,267. Mechanical engineering graduates saw offers rise 1.7 percent to $35,051.

Computer science graduates ended the year with a 1.4 percent increase in their starting salary offers for an average of $31,783.

For humanities and social science graduates, most salary increases were slight. For example, starting salary offers increased less than 1 percent for foreign language graduates and English graduates, and were down by less than 1 percent for political science and psychology graduates. Starting salary offers averaged $24,369 for political science graduates and $20,488 for psychology graduates.

Starting salaries for graduates in most healthcare fields rose significantly. The exception was for nursing graduates, who saw their average starting salary offer fall for the second consecutive year. Starting salary offers to nursing graduates dropped 7.9 percent this year for an average of $28,594.

At the master's degree level, MBA graduates enjoyed higher starting salaries. MBA graduates with non technical undergraduate degrees and no previous work experience received 6.2 percent higher starting salary offers for an average of $38,792. Their inexperienced technical counterparts received 8.6 percent higher starting salary offers averaging $44,527. The largest increase was garnered by MBA graduates with non technical undergraduate degrees and two to four years of work experience. Their average starting salary offer jumped 10.6 percent this year to $54,255.

While hiring increased this year, fewer employers are coming to campus to recruit for available positions, said Oberman. Instead, most career service offices receive job notices through fax, phone and mailings.

The September 1994 CPC Salary Survey contains information received from 378 career services offices during the period of Sept. 1, 1993, to Aug. 11, 1994, for 1993-94 new college graduates.

of doors," added Carr.

The various graduate and law schools that participate allow students to explore the different programs and opportunities they offer. Students get an idea about the academic requirements and activities.

Each year the list of possible participants grows as the University grows. It is a cooperative event in which companies and schools contact UNCW and UNCW sends out invitations to those that have been suggested and requested.

An evaluation sheet was distributed upon entering for students to rate and comment on the event. This allows students the chance to make suggestions as to what they would like to see in the future as far as companies and career areas.

The following areas of career opportunities participated: healthcare, state and local government, retail, sales, financial, military and graduate and professional programs.

Career Day is a wonderful chance for students to broaden their future horizons. Next year promises to be more enlightening for students as the University grows and becomes more of a target for large businesses and organizations.

UNCW Campus Population Increasing

BY LISA MAY
Staff Writer

Not many students finish their college career in the school where they first began as freshmen. Statistics prove that UNCW freshmen are more likely to complete requirements for their degrees at UNCW than ever before.

In Fall 1993, UNCW registered 1,400 incoming freshmen. This year, freshman enrollment is only about 1,340; yet, UNCW's student body has increased from 8,195 to 8,400 students.

Dr. David Miller, Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, said the growing number of students on campus is mostly due to retention indicating that students attending UNCW as freshmen also graduate from UNCW. This was not always true in the past.

"We'd like to continue growing by keeping the students here. We have a commitment to continue this growth in small numbers by helping people succeed and eventually graduate," said Miller. "We recognize that students have difficulty getting the classes they want. We are trying to accommodate them in every way we can."

Suggested solutions to the problem of overcrowding in classrooms include scheduling more class hours in the day and increasing sections of certain classes offered. Currently, classes run from 8 AM until after 9 PM. Another suggestion is to set a maximum class size to maintain the high quality of UNCW's courses.

The new science building, which won't be completed for two more years, will also deflect overcrowding in classrooms. The availability of classes also depends on the popularity of the major and even the professor.

With the increasing population at UNCW, Bob Fry, Assistant to the Chancellor, offered the following advice to students when they schedule for their classes: head into your advising appointment preparing for problems in your schedule. Fry also said that talking to the department chair or the actual faculty member that teaches the course may also help when trying to enter a "closed" class.

"It's important to establish a good student-faculty relationship," said Fry. "Getting to know the faculty and getting contacts can help in course loading."

Fry also said that the new SEALine computerized registration process will also reduce scheduling conflicts among the growing campus population.

UNCW Career Day '94 Successful

BY LAURA CORSO
Staff Writer

UNCW held its largest Career Day ever last week in Trask Coliseum to give students the chance to explore different career opportunities.

Over 70 representatives from a variety of companies, organizations, and schools were on hand to answer questions and offer information about their job opportunities and educational programs.

According to Frances Carr, Office Manager of Career Services, "Career Day is an excellent information session for Freshmen through Seniors. It is an opportunity for students to see what types of careers are out there and get first hand knowledge about acquiring them."

By talking with various companies and organizations, students get a better idea about the various opportunities within a company for all the different majors and types of people. Students gain a broader view of the various career possibilities after receiving their degree.

"It is an opportunity for students to get internships and co-ops, as well as to meet with recruiters and interviewers that will be recruiting for jobs in the Spring. It opens a lot

Congress Holds The Line on Financial Aid Programs

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Congressional negotiators approved a first-ever cap Sept. 20 on the number of students who can receive Pell Grants, according to a report issued by Charles Derravics of the College Press Service. The decision is part of a larger bill that also freezes funding for many student financial aid programs.

The House/Senate education spending bill for 1995 provides a $40 increase in the maximum Pell Grant, to $2,340 next year. However, total spending for new grants would drop by $60 million, and Congress would limit to 3.9 million the number of students receiving aid.

"It means students who apply near the end of the line may not get any money at all," said Laura McClintock, legislative director of the United States Student Association (USSA).

Supporters of the cap say it is a one-time-only ceiling that students are unlikely to reach. But McClintock said 3.8 million students received Pell Grants last year, and the usage rates are on the rise.

USSA also criticized the small $40 increase in the maximum Pell Grant. The White House recommended a $100 increase to $2,400 to restore cuts enacted two years ago in tight budget times.

"We're very disappointed," McClintock said. The maximum grant "is not even back to the $2,400 level it was under the Bush administration."

Congressional aides say lawmakers still support Pell and other financial aid programs. Yet they note Congress faces budget pressures from a 1990 agreement that imposes tight spending caps within specific categories of programs, including most domestic spending.

"Unfortunately, there's a lot of competition out there for limited dollars," McClintock said.

Spending restrictions also were evident in Congress recommendations for other financial aid programs, most of which received cuts or freezes. Work/study funds would remain unchanged at $616 million, despite a $100 million increase proposed by the White House for next year.

Congress also would maintain Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants at the present $583 million.

The largest cut came in State Student Incentive Grants, another program used primarily by low-income students. Congress reduced funding by 12 percent to $63 million, a figure that itself was a compromise. The House offered $54 million and the Senate sought a freeze at $72 million.

Congress did manage to preserve the Perkins Loan program at $176 million, $3 million more than current funding. The White House had proposed cutting all new funding—about $158 million.

Other higher education programs garnered only mixed successes as well. Federal support for graduate fellowships declined $6 million under the compromise agreement, mostly through elimination of a small program aimed at helping women and minorities pursue graduate education.

Advocates of the move said the program duplicated other federal education efforts. Congress also earmarked no money at all toward the Pell Grant shortfall, which was caused by heavier than expected use of the program during the last recession.

A few programs managed small-to-moderate increases. Aid for black colleges increased $12 million, or about 9 percent. Colleges serving a large proportion of Hispanic students also received first-ever funding of $12 million through a new line item in the education budget.

The government's new fiscal year began Oct. 1. With Congress set for final action, USSA said it hopes to make limited support of financial aid a major issue for college students in the Congressional mid-term elections this November. The group is sponsoring a Students Are Voting Everywhere (SAVE) campaign on many campuses to drum up support for financial aid programs.

For more information about the SAVE campaign, contact USSA at (202) 347-8772.

A Halloween Carnival

A Halloween Carnival for 100 children will be held on Monday, October 31 from 7-9 PM in the University Ballroom. This event will be sponsored by the UNCW Volunteers! and ACE Cultural Arts. The carnival will be a chance for children from the community centers, various housing projects, and the Community Boys and Girls Club to have some fun on Halloween and interact with college students on the UNCW campus. Games, haunted house, and treats will be part of the program.

Studying Smarter

Tom MacLennan, Director
The UNCW Learning Center

The central purpose of the UNCW Learning Center is to help students become more confident and motivated learners. Our immediate goal is to draw your attention to systematic planning, flexible thinking, analytical reading, and academic writing. Essentially, we want to demonstrate to you how to study smarter.

The Learning Center provides four services:

1. The Writing Place provides assistance for all courses, instruction in word processing, and development of study skills that will help you in note-taking, test preparation, and essay questions.
2. The Reading Lab provides small and large group workshops designed to develop reading skills for general university-wide levels materials, as well as scheduling individual tutorials targeting reading materials in specific courses.
3. Tutorial Assistance and Help sessions for students enrolled in Basic Studies courses is also available. One-to-one tutoring may also be arranged upon request. All of the above services are located in the Learning Center, on the second floor of Westside Hall. Appointments may be arranged by telephoning 395-3754.
4. Finally, The Math Lab, located in 101 Bear Hall, provides learning assistance for 100-level courses on a drop-in basis. Students can make appointments for more individual attention. The Math Lab also has tutorial and instructional software and video tapes available for individual use.

UNCW Auctions Unclaimed Items

BY JAN KELLER
PR Intern

Unclaimed items from across the UNCW campus will be auctioned behind the Police Building on Price Drive beginning at 9 a.m., Saturday, Oct. 29, by the UNCW Police Department.

This is your chance to bid for the bicycle of your choice and get to your destinations aerobically. Approximately 100 bicycles, bookbags and other items can be viewed beginning at 7 a.m. prior to the auction.

The bicycle, bookbag, or other items that you thought were lost forever may be there awaiting your claim. These items have been held for 180 days by the UNCW Police Department and will be sold unless a person who has interest in any item makes an official claim. Claims may be made by calling the department at 910-395-3184, 8 a.m. until 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

For further information, contact Lt. C. E. Willis, University Police Department, 910-395-3186.

UNCW Professor Maps Raleigh Area

BY JAN KELLER
PR Intern

Detailed geological mapping of the Raleigh area now enters its fourth year with funding from a $6000 grant from the NC Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources to Dr. David E. Blake, assistant professor, earth sciences department of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

"By using these geological maps, the public will be able to pinpoint potential areas for mineral exploration and construction activities," said Blake. "More specifically, an environmental company could use our ground water assessment information and rock characteristics if clean-up of an area becomes necessary."

UNCW is working on this project jointly with North Carolina State University, University of North Carolina - Chapel Hill, and the State of North Carolina Geological Survey Team.

Peoples Savings Bank Establishes $25,000 Scholarship of UNCW's Cameron School of Business

BY VICKIE YEARBY
PR Intern

Peoples Savings Bank has established a $25,000 permanent endowment fund at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington earmarked for undergraduate academic scholarships in the Cameron School of Business.

Donald F. Pelling, president of Peoples Savings Bank, said, "We are delighted to be able to establish a scholarship for business majors. We feel this is an excellent way of investing in the youth of the community we serve."

Recipients of the Peoples Scholarship will be chosen by the dean of the Cameron School of Business Administration. Preference will be given to students majoring in economics or finance from New Hanover or Pender County. The scholarship will be awarded annually and is renewable contingent on continued satisfactory academic progress.

Dr. Marvin K. Moss, provost and vice chancellor of Academic Affairs said, "UNCW is very pleased to receive this gift on behalf of its undergraduate business majors. Such endowments are crucial to the university's attracting and retaining excellent students, and we are grateful for People's investment in this effort."

Peoples Savings Bank is one of the oldest financial institutions in the United States. Established in 1906, Peoples is headquartered in Wilmington with three locations in the Wilmington area and on in Hampstead.

This Week In SGA

BY ANDREW FARMER
Contributing Writer

This week's student government meeting was called to order at 6:00 P.M. by Vice President Sullivan. Members absent include Senators Cuthrell, Hopper and James.

President Nix's report included a summary of events that occurred at a "Lead or Leave" conference that he had attended in Washington, D.C. this past week. On October 12th, President Nix met with Bob Walton to discuss the pending water fountain and free speech monument that he is working on. The free speech monument is on hold until a suitable site is found to place it at. The fountain, that would be placed outside of the bookstore, is still being worked on. They are waiting to get the figure on the cost of the fountain.

Treasurer Woodson reported that the following organizations still have not attended the SGA funding policy and procedure workshop. They are Ad Federation, Starving Artist, and Phi Beta Lambda. The money allocated to these groups for this year was placed back into the SGA unbudgeted revenue account during new business.

Student Services Coordinator Farmer announced to the senate that there would be an "SGA Afternoon at the Basketball Game" on November 5th at the first home game. There will be food provided for the students prior to the game and activities are being planned for the times in between the games. All senators were encouraged to help out with the planning and the activities.

New appointments at this meeting are Senator Jonathan Rowell to the Chancellor's Media Advisory Committee, Carla Barbour to the Election Board, Tom Gale to the Judiciary Committee, Shawn Williams to the Election Board Committee, Joy Robey to the Election Board Committee as the Senior Class nominee for 1994-95, Jennifer Rolf and Dan Sullivan to the Total Quality Management University Union Board, and Kim Daughtery to the Election Board Committee.

One minute speeches were given by Senators Person, Rowell, Ramirez, Stansfield, Jackson, Kreshner, Hyman, and Student Services Coordinator Farmer. The meeting was adjourned at 6:40 P.M.

To Be or Not To Be Revisiting Generation X

BY MELISSA SHAW
Staff Writer

Does the twenty-something generation deserve to be called "Generation X"? Are we really a group of uninspired, uncaring slackers? Not according to Eric Liu.

"The Generation X label is absolutely wrong," said Liu, 25, a former speech writer for President Clinton and the founder of the "Next Progressive".

Liu spoke at UNCW on October 20, as part of lecture series entitled "Leadership in the 21st century."

Liu said, "this generation is so diverse, so full of contradictions...to slap any label on it would be ridiculous."

He said that the Generation X label sends out the message that this is a slack generation.

And according to Liu, that is the wrong message to be sending to the generation that is about to take over the leadership of this country. Liu said that media and society are telling this generation that it has completely lost its passions about social issues, and that compared to 25 years ago this generation has no idealism.

Liu said that he thinks in 50 years when history looks back in the 1990's, they will be looked upon as an "amazing pivot point...stakes were high and the challenges were great and something needed to be done."

"What's most depressing and most damaging is that the media is telling us that this generation (generation X) is not up to the challenge," said Liu.

"I don't buy into any negative stereotypes about Generation X" he said.

Liu sees the people in this generation who have energy and idealism. He said this generation is much more alive than how the stereotypes portray us.

Liu said that we (generation X) are "pragmatic idealists".

He said that the generation holds "idealistic notions from the 1960's about social changes and progress" but we meld them with the 1980's ideals that we grew up with. Liu said this generation is the "follow through generation".

He said that so much has happened and changed in the previous "break through generations", that we are left to "clean up the mess." He said in the 1990's the issues are "more subtle, much murkier." The barriers are not as clear as they were.

Liu said that this generation rejects "the old notion of politics as usual." He said a lot of young people are saying "we've got to come up with a third way." We need an approach to politics where the parts that work from each political party are melded together. Liu said that fundamental change is happening everywhere.

"It is only in the United States that the elders tell the younger people they aren't up to the job and younger people doubt their ability to do anything."

Liu said our generation has to show the media and society that the generation X label is wrong. He said we have to take action, we cannot just use words.

Liu said "I encourage everybody to take the route where you'll see change." He said that be stopped speech writing for President Clinton because he wanted to personally see more change in people's lives. He said that it is crucial for this generation to get its word out without tearing down other generations.

"The way you build up young people isn't to tear down old people."

"There is no way we can solve problems on our own," said Liu, "we need other generations' expertise and knowledge."

Everything we do has to be inter-generational." He said that we have to get our voices out. One way to do that is through voting. "By not voting, we deprive ourselves of a voice." Liu said that Generation X has to "get on the ball" and think about where we can make a difference.

UNCW Professor Maps Raleigh Area

BY JAN KELLER
Pr Intern

Detailed geological mapping of the Raleigh area now enters its fourth year with funding from a $6000 grant from the NC Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources to Dr. David E. Blake, assistant professor, earth sciences department of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

"By using these geological maps, the public will be able to pinpoint potential areas for mineral exploration and construction activities," said Blake. "More specifically, an environmental company could use our ground water assessment information and rock characteristics if clean-up of an area becomes necessary."

UNCW is working on this project jointly with North Carolina State University, University of North Carolina - Chapel Hill, and the State of North Carolina Geologic Survey Team.

Why Is History So Important?

BY COLIN D. HEATON
Staff Writer

Having enrolled at UNC-Wilmington after nearly twelve years of active military duty, I felt a little out of place. I finished high school in 1979, and outside of the military had never sat one minute in a class room. I saw all of these young students, and wondered if I would have been mentally ready to accept the challenges of college at 18 years of age. Math has always been my weak subject, so I enlisted the aid of a classmate of mine, Kim Sprague to help. This girl is sharp, and I saw that if the youth of America are represented by this fine young woman, then I will grow old in the knowledge that the future is not as dismal as some project. One student asked me (whom I tutor), "Why is history so important? When am I ever going to use it with a business degree?" That was a fair question, so I thought careful before answering. Then it hit me. After years of writing history and interviewing some of the most historically famous people of this century, I reflected upon a very simple equation. "Well, where do you think business degrees, or business in general originated?" I was answered by a blank stare. "The history of the world is broken up into three categories, political, military and economic history. Politics govern an economy, and economies are the major influence on war. If a political system is autocratic, then the economy is internally based. If it is a democracy with capitalism, then it is a free trade exporting society, with imports rounding off the equation. Now, the people who handle commerce are businessmen. The people who place rules and regulations on trade are politicians, and the people who enforce those freedoms are the military. Eliminate either one from the stage of history, and you would need no need for a business degree." I think I got through.

What Will Happen Next?

BY COLIND D. HEATON
Staff Writer

As everyone knows, Saddam Hussein has once again flexed his military muscle on the Kuwaiti border. Many people in the Pentagon are probably spinning sleepless nights considering their options should be once again desire acquisition of his "19 Province", which was what Kuwait was under Iraqi rule before the 1919 Treaty of Versailles, ending World War One. The average layman probably wonders what was the reason coalition forces did not just drive on into Baghdad and remove him from power in 1991. There are several excuses for this, some of the most popular are: 1. Removing Saddam would allow various tribal factions to ignite civil war over control of the country. 2. It would weaken Iraq and top the balance of power to Iran, their mortal enemy in Islam. 3. It would give Israel the undisputed position of re-negotiating any peace accord in the Middle East once the Iraqi threat were neutralized. All are good arguments, if you are a idiot. As a decade long member of the U.S.

Army Airborne and Special Operations Command, and as an intelligence/scout-sniper in the U.S.M.C. (I served in both branches) with my last three years at the Pentagon, I know why and what they are thinking. The failure of the Bush administration to complete the mission and move into Baghdad was political. They did not want the U.S. coming across as the heavy, the bully who had a point to make. Unfortunately, history shows that unless you meet aggression with more violent action, the problem not only resurfaces, but does so with renewed vigor. Sound familiar? After World War One, there was no full occupation and exploitation of Germany and Austria, no de facto political arm governed by the League of Nations. This allowed the rise of totalitarianism which went unchecked, until the entire world was once again at war. Let us place the Saddam situation in more liberal context. If a surgeon finds gangrene in his finger, he removes the afflicted member, not trim the finger nail. Saddam was a finger, and we should have taken the entire hand. That is something Muslims would understand. I respect the Islamic faith, it is one of the few religions where, despite ideological differences between various factions, remained undiluted through the centuries. If only Christianity could say the same. Saddam IS Islam in his country, he is the "Divine Messenger," and through his reign of terror remained in power largely in part to the ineptitude of the western leaders who had the opportunity to remove the malignancy, yet failed in their objective. I would hate to think that the men and women killed during the Gulf War died as a dress rehearsal. As someone who has seen the ugly side of a fire fight, I can tell you that George Patton's philosophy rings true, "Never pay for the same real estate twice, it becomes more expensive each time. Plus it's bad for morale." Right on George. Let's see what Bill Clinton decides to do. Having never been a military man, perhaps he will let those who have served in the line of fire make the appropriate decisions. Even better, I hope he has the common sense to finish it once and for all.

Profile In History

BY COLIN D. HEATON
Staff Writer

This is a series of personality profiles, concerning people who influenced history to some degree, or were simply an important factor in the history of this century. Most are personal acquaintances, and some are very good friends who I have interviewed previously over the last several years. I hope they are interesting and informative.

Lieutenant General Gunther Rall - Germany

Born: March 10, 1918 in Gaggenu, Baden, Germany

Gunther Rall enlisted in the Luftwaffe in 1939 after three years in the infantry. He scored his first aerial victory over France in 1940, and fought during the Battle of Britain. He was transferred to Russia where he was critically wounded on November 21, 1941. He returned to combat six months later, after marrying his physician, the late Dr. Hertha Rall. He was awarded his Knights Cross on in September, 1942 after shooting down 65 aircraft. On October 26 he went to Hitler's East Prussian Headquarters to receive his Oak Leaves for 100 kills. April 1943 saw his promotion to Captain, and on September 12, 1943 Rall once again stood before Hitler for investiture of the Swords to the Knight's Cross for 200 victories. He was the third German pilot to reach 250 kills after an October streak netting 40 more confirmed and 18 unconfirmed aircraft. Rall was promoted to Major and sent to the Fighter Pilots School as an instructor, and in November was posted to II/JG-11 on the Western Front, where he was wounded again after running into the "Wolfpack," the 56th Fighter Group commanded by U.S. Colonel Hub Zemke. Rall had his aircraft damaged after making a run on a flight of B-17s, and he bailed out of his burning plane. His thumb had been severed by the .50 caliber fire from Captain Joe Powers' P-47 Thunderbolt. After recuperating he was made Kommodore of JG-300 flying Messerschmitt 109's, and later Focke-Wulf 190D's. He ended the war wounded five times, flying 621 missions, and 275 victories. Gunther Rall is the third highest ranking fighter ace in history, and one of only 158 Germans to be so decorated. In 1956 he was again a Major in the West German Bundesluftwaffe, and helped develop combat tactics for the Lockheed F-104 Starfighter. He was promoted quickly, and in 1966 was a Brigadier General. In 1969 he was Air Force Chief of Staff, and in 1971 was promoted to Lt. General. He retired as Inspector der Luftwaffe. Today he lives in his chateau, and entertains his friends and guests at the estate in Bad Reichenhall. He travels extensively throughout the world, and frequents the U.S. doing print signing and seminars.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor,

I am disturbed that evolution is taught as a fact in our public school systems. This seems to indicate a lack of educational integrity due to the fact that evolution is only one theory concerning the origin of the universe and man. The magnitude of the issue (creation vs. evolution) cannot be properly addressed in a letter, due to lack of space. Therefore, I issue a challenge to any evolutionist (Ph.D., MA preferred) in the area to participate in a formal debate on the topic "Creation vs. Evolution."

Why This Environmentalist Isn't Afraid of Rush

BY ANNE MINARD
Staff Writer

An article by Rush Limbaugh was published in The Morning Star on October 19 entitled "Why Liberals Are Afraid of Talk Radio." Among several other self important pronouncements, Rush makes an assertion which reads something like this, "The environmentalists claim the world will end if the government doesn't support them; it won't." He goes on to say that liberals don't like him because they "suspect he's right."

Not only do I suspect that Rush Limbaugh is wrong, I suspect he is ignorant, and that he promotes ignorance among his subscribers. The "Era of Rush," as he has so boldly labeled this decade, is nothing of the sort. More appropriately, we live in the "Era of questioning a cynicism," Rush Limbaugh has done nothing except to exploit an intellectual trend.

I'll admit it, he puts on an entertaining program. He's witty, and has a catchy way with words. It seems that maybe, way back in the planning stages of his brainchild, he proposed to expose an audience to little known truths of our times. I have watched several episodes of his morning talk show, and I've seen traces of an attempt to expose various aspects of government workings. It seems that Rush has gotten so caught up in sensationalism, though, that any such goals have been obscured.

One presentation I saw was so cloaked in sardonic witticisms that it denied any information that might have been available.

This particular instance was aired the day after a press conference. Did Rush find some documented white lies in the address? Did he go to congressional files and research a few ambiguous statements? No such luck. In a perfectly timed photograph, he captured our President an awkward facial expression. With that photograph in the background (much to the delight of his audience), he rated the President's speech against the "Rush Limbaugh Truthmeter." No science. No substance. Just openly biased, sensationalist sarcasm.

With this spirit, Rush Limbaugh attacks environmentalists.

When the "Limbaugh Letter" first came out, he boasted that it was printed on 100% non recycled paper and geared his comment to "all those environmental whackos." And that's where I come in.

As my goals and interests continue to solidify, I do find myself concerned about the environment. I am not, to my knowledge, a whacko. If you'll remember the statement made in Rush's newspaper article, he said that environmentalists claim the world will end. I have yet to encounter anyone in the field, either personally or through published works, with such pessimistic predictions.

Most environmentalists see a need for an increased respect for our physical world and its limitations. The truth is that there are some fundamental problems with the way we've managed to date. Current food shortages in parts of the world and predicted space limits can be attributed to an expanding population. Other problems, though, such as most forms of pollution and dwindling resources, can be blamed largely on ignorance.

Ignorance will be promoted by trusted figures who deny there is need for change...unless we think for ourselves. In his quest for laughs, Rush Limbaugh has attacked values of a culture that is increasingly aware of its environment. If we have our own "Truthmeters" in check, his open disdain for proponents of change will only serve to mock him.

The All Male Cereal Aisle

BY JOHN SKOGLUND

"Show 'em you're a tiger, show 'em what you can do; the taste of Tony's Frosted Flakes brings out the tiger in you." So goes one of the more popular breakfast cereal jingles in America today. Just in case you hadn't noticed, Tony the Tiger, as well as an assortment of other breakfast cereal mascots, share one common bond; they're all men. Think about it. Male and/or male-sounding characters have been gracing the breakfast table for generations. There has been a lack of females in this area of advertising since the inception of breakfast cereal. In order for equal gender representation, there needs to be more women in cereal, whether targeted for adults or children.

Children's cereal is probably the worst when it comes to having a woman related to their product. You've got Rice Crispies, a bland yet noisy part of this complete breakfast. I have yet to see a woman going "Snap, Crackle, and Pop." It's a trio of boring elves! I personally would rather see three cute, vibrant female elves going crazy for some Cripes! Then we have Fruity Pebbles. Pebbles (a little girl) is part of the name, but you never see her. All you ever get is Fred Flintstone chasing Barney after he goes for a little bowl of Fred's breakfast. What really troubles me is Cocoa Puffs. It seems to me this cereal manufacturer would rather promote its product using the image of a psychotic bird with a terminal addiction to breakfast cereal rather than have any woman at all. Now that's scary.

Have you noticed you never see African Americans depicted in cereal ads (with the exception of Michael Jordan, but more on that later)? A good choice might be an African American female going a little "ooo-ooo" for Coca Puffs. Not that they are "ooo-ooo," I just think it would be kind of funny!

The movie "Batman" and "Batman Returns" were both box office hits. A direct result was the emergence of a Batman cereal. One of the biggest assets of the sequel was the presence of Michelle Pfeiffer as Catwoman. Yet, there is not Catwoman cereal. Somehow, I doubt the ingredients in "Batman" are any more masculine than a Catwoman product would be.

Even the most basic, adult-minded cereals choose to be depicted as male-oriented products. Healthy cereals (ones that don't list sugar as a primary ingredient) seem to follow the same stereotypical guideline—having as many men as possible on the box or in their television ads. Wheaties is probably the most popular cereal when it comes to putting celebrities on the box. Famous names like Michael Jordan, Reggie Jackson, and Bruce Jenner have all been in the spotlight. Out of all the world famous athletes decorating the Wheaties container, I can only recall three women on the box. Mary Lou Retton, Florence Griffith Joyner, and Jackie Joyner Kersey were the only female athletes important enough to be included in the Wheaties campaign; at least, according to the manufacturer. It's certainly not a lack of female participation in athletics; it most likely goes back to the notion that female athletes aren't popular enough from the standpoint of a typical sportsfan—generally male. I may be wrong, but somehow I doubt it.

Cornflakes could have put anything in the world on the cover of its box. I mean, with a name like "Cornflakes," I believe you get a pretty accurate image as to what's in every box. There won't be any magic ingredients or free temporary tattoos here; just flakes made out of corn. So, what do they do to make this product seem more appealing? Is there a famous model or fancy sports car on the cover? Nope! Just one large rooster! Yummy! Cornflakes aren't going to sell out any faster, so why not put a chicken, or a famous model, or dare I say it—a woman! Sorry, it was just a thought.

Recently, I checked out the cereal department to see if I unknowingly forgot to mention any female characters. And yes, the all-American girl, Barbie has her own sugar-filled cereal. Now, if I were a woman and had to pick one female to represent me, it would not be Barbie. I can't relate to her. She gets on my nerves immensely. I bet it would be funny if Barbie accidentally got set on fire—by me.

I'll leave you with this thought. Breakfast cereals are hardly considered focal points of sexism in advertising. But something as universal as cereal should not be a male-dominated product. Is it that all the top business people from Post or Kellogg are of the male gender; or, is it that there aren't enough popular female media figures? In order to promote equality for women, they need to be represented in all parts of the media spectrum. Then it won't be as hard to imagine a Peppermint Patty or a Roseanne cereal being stocked on your nearest supermarket aisle. Just picture it, Roseanne's own cereal. I don't know if looking at the box would make me hungry, but I'm sure it wouldn't have any trouble filling me up!

Advice for UNCW's Weary

We owe "Frustrated" from the Oct. 6th edition of the Seahawk an apology. Our response to your question concerning the lack of information on or availability of dental dams, finger cots, and gloves on campus lacked considerable insight. We did not intend to respond to this query as a purely homosexual or bisexual issue and we certainly agree with your thoughts concerning the protection of all people from the transmittal of STDs. Look "Frustrated," you're the only writer we didn't slam—couldn't you give us a little slack? You're more than frustrated, you're retentive. But, hey, thanks for joining in the friendly fire fight.

Also, thanks for last week's letter to the editor from Nancy Spirakis, Card System Coordinator. We appreciate the information, but we feel compelled to ask: Couldn't you folks simply program the system to reflect the actual prices? We mean, why make life at UNCW more confusing for these low-lives than it has to be?

And...you'll all be happy to hear that Amy says the toilet (get it? toilet) stall in Morton has been fixed. We haven't seen this miracle of miracles ourselves, but we're awfully grateful to the Powers on High for their willingness to assist students. Now how about those tampon machines, people?

Dear Emma & Jane:

Northerners in my classes are always hitting on us Southerners and it's really starting to piss me off. If it's not our food, it's our accents, clothes, cars, or a lot of other things. They say we lack "culture" and joke around about us being inbreeds. I'm sorry, but I don't see any humor in incest. I think these people are snobs and what's really annoying is that they came here because the tuition is cheaper and they like the warm weather. Why should the native Southerners have to listen to crap about us being racists and stupid? Northerners are just visiting here, I hope, and they could try to understand us before they cut us down.

Signed: Wayne H.

Dear Wayne H.:

We feel your humiliating pain and, although we are not North Carolina natives, share your anger at the superior attitudes reflected by many Northerners. Southerners certainly don't hold the patents on racism, ignorance, and gross foods. We also don't believe incest is, primarily, a Southern phenomenon. Emma was once married to a pure-bred Northerner and she could tell you a few perverted details about her former husband's sexual habits. But, why get into a mud-slinging spat with your Yankee classmates? So what if they won the War, you've still got your 4-wheel drives and plenty of swamp land to sport them around in. No one's saying you have to cancel your pig-pickin'—just neglect to invite those who would come only to point and laugh as you peel the delectable strips of roasted skin off from the sacrificial sow and stuff them into your mouth with greasy glee. We've seen Northerners spread the yellow gunk from steamed crabs on Hi-Ho's and suck it down without chewing. And what the hell is "head-cheese" anyway? We don't necessarily buy that line about the Dixie flag not being a racist remnant—but that's not really your point, is it? Visitors from other cultures should, at least, try to understand the dominant culture they are living in. Bottom line is if you don't like the South, stay up North and pay the same for one year of college that it would cost you to attend UNCW for a full 4 years. By the way, how could anyone say the South lacks culture? What do you think pig-pickin's are?

Dear Emma & Jane:

I've gotta know one thing. Why do residents in the UNCW suites and apartments, which have kitchens, have to pay for a meal plan with Wagoner Hall. The food is nasty and most of us never use the plans—unless we're totally broke or they're serving macaroni and cheese. It seems unfair to make us pay hundreds of dollars for something we don't even want. I mean, how much macaroni and cheese do you think I can eat in four years?

Signed: LGA

Dear LGA:

Not only do we not live on campus, but we also can't comprehend why anyone would want to. The idea of rooming with people who may be odder than us is scary and absurd. Jane and I lived together for a while and, although we are exceptionally diplomatic, it was less than heavenly. We can't imagine having to share a bathroom—much less taking turns wiping away foreign public hairs from a variety of sources from the toilet bowl once a month. But, back to your question, we aren't familiar with the food at Wagoner. Some perky female in a sorority sweater directed us there for lunch after orientation and we have never ventured back. Jane ate something that looked like a burrito and smelled like nuclear waste—one of those wayward rods, perhaps? We think it sucks that you are forced to buy a meal plan and groceries, if you want to eat foods you can compartmentalize to fit into your precise little pyramid. Our experiences with industrialized foods have always been bad, but what do you expect—prime rib and crab quiche for 8500 people every day? Grow up. Eat your mac and cheese and be happy there's one thing you can recognize on the menu at Wagoner. This isn't mommy's kitchen, you know. How much do you think the cooks on this campus are paid anyway? Would you bother to pull every hair out of 1000 pounds of cole slaw a day for less than $10 an hour?

Minority and Women Recruitment Ranks High at UNCW

BY DONNA PASSMORE
Staff Writer

The 1994 recruitment year represented substantial progress for both minorities and women at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington and puts UNCW among the forefront of the University of North Carolina's 16-campus system in this area.

"As an educational institution, UNCW must recruit the best minds available to teach our students. If we want to attract the best talent, we must learn to recognize that talent is truly diverse community in order to do so," announced Chancellor James R. Leutze.

The university annually analyzes its recruitment and employment patterns to monitor the progress of women and minorities in compliance with state and federal guidelines for public employers.

"Our objective is for our employee population to look like the appropriate labor market," said Sam Connolly, assistant to the chancellor for equal employment opportunity and affirmative action. "Whenever our work force includes fewer women or minorities than the labor market where we recruit, we establish good faith objectives to increase their representation at UNCW, then monitor our progress from year to year."

Reports are filed yearly with the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs, the federal agency with oversight responsibility for affirmative action programs. These reports disclose that the representation of women at UNCW increased from 1993 to 1994 in 11 out of 17 job groups by an average of 19.3 percent. Prior under-utilization of women was eliminated in computing and information systems and skilled crafts job groups. During the same period, representation of minorities increased in 10 out of 17 job groups by an average of 33.9 percent. Prior under-utilization of minorities was eliminated in the professional/non-faculty job group.

From January to June, 1994, when most new faculty are recruited for the year, the university filled 33 assistant professor and lecturer positions. Of these, 13 were filled by women and eight by minorities.

"Based on their availability in the faculty labor market, we would have expected to recruit 12 women and six minorities—so, we were ahead in both categories," commented Connolly.

During the same period, the university also recruited three senior academic administrators including two women and one minority—again exceeding the number of representative women and minorities in the executive labor market. Dr. Virginia Adams, the new dean of the School of Nursing, represents the first African-American to serve as an academic dean at UNCW. Three of five academic deans are presently female, including Dr. Carolyn Simmons, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, and Dr. Joan Willey, interim dean of the Graduate School.

In the staff support area, the university recruited 43 new employees in technical, office support, skilled crafts, and service/maintenance positions. Of these, 27 were female and 17 were minorities. Based on labor market availability, the university expected to recruit 25 women and 12 minorities.

"The remarkable feature of our current recruiting cycle is that the university posted net gains in the representation of both minorities and women in all job groups concurrently," commented Connolly. "This is a significant breakthrough for the university in promoting diversity on campus."

ISN'T IT NICE WHEN THE EXPERTS DISCOVER SOMETHING YOU'VE KNOWN ALL ALONG.

Over 1.6 million people in education and research know that choosing TIAA CREF was a smart move. And now everyone else does too. Because Morningstar—one of the nation's leading sources of variable annuity and mutual fund information—has some stellar things to say about our retirement investment accounts.

"This comfortable combination of risk and return has earned the CREF Stock Account a five-star rating."

After studying CREF's performance history, Morningstar gave five stars—the highest rating—to both the CREF Stock and Bond Market Accounts, and an impressive four stars to the CREF Social Choice Account. In fact, the CREF Stock Account was singled out as having "one of the best 10 year records among variable annuities." Of course, past performance is no guarantee of future results.

"...CREF is far and away the cheapest variable annuity out there."

Morningstar also called attention to CREF's "rock bottom" fees—something that can really add to the size of your nest egg down the road.

What's more, TIAA's traditional annuity—which offers guaranteed principal and interest plus the opportunity for dividends—was cited as having the highest fixed account interest rate among all annuities in its class.

We're happy to accept Morningstar's glowing ratings. But nice as it is to focus on stars, we'll keep focusing on something more down-to-earth: building the financial future you want and deserve.

THE STATE—Innovative Sketch Comedy

BY J. TRENT LEONARD
Arts And Entertainment Editor

THE STATE is a group of eleven performers who have been creating sketch comedy together since their formation in October 1988. They met while attending New York University, and are the only American comedy series that features a troupe not assembled by a producer, casting director or corporation. The members (whose mean age is 24) create the show as well as write, direct, edit, and perform the material.

In 1992, THE STATE was hired to contribute segments to MTV's pilot "You Wrote It, You Watch It," hosted by Jon Stewart. The network brass was extremely impressed by their work and as a result negotiations began in the Spring of 1993 for their own sketch comedy show.

The show, which premiered in January of 1994, received some extremely bad reviews. THE STATE proudly displayed those reviews in their highly talked about "more miserable crap" promo on MTV. Since then, the series has been renewed twice, garnering increasingly good ratings, reviews, and feedback from critics and audiences. The Wall Street Journal declares, "THE STATE has the pure manic energy of early Belushi, and while occasionally dopey, it's never dull." USA Today claims, "this comedy series is 'State' of the art," and Entertainment Weekly included THE STATE in their annual Television "Ten Best List."

THE STATE is known for their unified sensibility, chemistry, high energy, absurdity, quirkiness, distinct visual style, and especially their avoidance of formulas, and attention to current event humor. The members of THE STATE grew up all over the United States and have been living and working together in New York for six years.

Finally, THE STATE is a sketch comedy show that succeeds in combining unique elements that stand out with its creativity and cutting edge approach. In a world that often lacks a sense of humor, THE STATE comes to the rescue.

Trent Leonard's Trivial Pursuits

Well, another week has passed us by and I have a question. Is it just me or does this semester seem to be going WAY TOO FAST? I have so much work to do that by the time I think I am caught up it is really time to begin an entire new set of projects. I really wish whomever was messing with the time control switch would set it back the way it was before they screwed it up.

I guess I do will have to stay here and go to classes for five consecutive days now that my two back-to-back three day work weeks are gone. I had Fall Break which was nice and then this past Thursday I competed in a golf tournament, which I won! It was kind of gratifying not to have to travel four hours to go and play in a tournament that large and then do badly in the process. I only won a $100 gift certificate to the pro shop, so it really isn't that big of a payoff. It is certainly nothing like what the pros enjoy for winning a tournament—what did Ernie Els win when he won the U.S. Open; about $250,000! Now that is something that I wouldn't mind winning!

I really must congratulate Erik Totten on his new polling system! What better way to pick the nation's best then by selecting them by their school colors, but I must say that since the Alabama

Crimson Tide is 8-0, then they can call their team whatever they want! And since we did win the national title in January of '93 and are so far undefeated this year, shouldn't we be allowed to chant, "Roll Tide, roll!" whenever we want? (I really am sorry about getting carried away, but after all, Alabama is my home state.)

Before I leave you for another week, I must forewarn you now so that you will have adequate time to prepare for the following news flash. If you have nothing to do on the weekend of November 26-27 (even if you do have plans, cancel them!), mark your calendars now because performing at the Mad Monk will be HOOOTIE AND THE BLOWFISH!!!!!! If you miss this one, then you will be S.O.L. then wouldn't you?

Well, that's all for this week. In parting consider the following deep thought from our good friend Jack Handey. "If I ever opened a trampoline store, I don't think I'd call it Trampo-Land, because you might think it was a store for tramps, which is not the impression we are trying to convey with our store. On the other hand, we would not prohibit tramps from browsing, or testing the trampolines, unless a tramp's gyrations seemed to be getting out of control."

Ceramic Artist Toshiko Takaoku Named National Living Treasure

BY JAN KELLER

PR Itoh

Toshiko Takaoku, internationally esteemed contemporary ceramic artist of Quakertown, New Jersey, has been named the 1995 National Living Treasure by the University of North Carolina at Wilmington's Institute for Human Potential.

UNCW Chancellor James R. Leutze will present the National Living Treasure Award to Takaoku at a banquet 7 p.m., Tuesday, November 1, in the University Center Ballroom on the UNCW campus. Takaoku was nominated for the award by the New Jersey Governor Christine Whitman.

UNCW's Institute for Human Potential designed this award to celebrate artists in traditional handicrafts using wood, glass, ceramics, metal, and textiles. To select this year's recipient, North Carolina Governor Jim Hunt solicited nominations from each state and territorial governor. A committee of 42 individuals from eight states and three countries chose the winner.

As National Living Treasure, Takaoku will receive a bronze medal designed by Stephan D. LeQuire, associate professor of fine arts at UNCW.

An innovator in the ceramic closed form, Takaoku's artwork moved from small utilitarian forms to larger, monumental forms as she explored the creative possibilities of clay. In 1957, she began molding a teapot which evolved into an abstract two-spouted museum piece. Later, working with a three-spouted teapot, she saw the suggestion of a mask with two eyes and a nose and developed that idea. In subsequent artwork, the spouts became smaller and smaller until there was just one air hole at the top, thus, a closed form.

An oversized kiln built into her home studio allowed Takaoku to expand the dimensions of her artwork. Trunks of the "Tree-Man Forest" stand as high as 70 inches. These abstract "trees" with no branches resulted from her visits to the Devastation Forest in her native Hawaii.

Inspired by the moon landings in mid-1960's, Takaoku's "Gaia" pieces lounge in Mexican hammocks on display. The unique hammock idea came about when Takaoku used a hammock for drying one of her creations.

Takaoku began her ceramic career with her job at Hawaii Potter's Guild in Honolulu. She studied at the Honolulu Academy of Arts at the University of Hawaii. She completed her education at Michigan's Cranbrook Academy of Art and later taught there.

Takaoku was on the faculty of Princeton University from 1966 to 1992, when she retired to work in her home in Quakertown.

From California to Czechoslovakia, Takaoku's work has been featured in more than 35 one person and over 30 group exhibits. Public collections which include her work are the Smithsonian Institution, Metropolitan Museum of Art, and Bangkok Museum.

Among her many awards, Takaoku was elected a fellow of the American Craft Council in 1975 and received the Potter Mellon Award in 1958, and the first New Jersey Governor's Award in 1986.

Takaoku's work is currently on display in the Night Gallery of Spirit Square in Charlotte, NC, and in the Perimeter Gallery in Chicago, IL.

In North Carolina, where the heritage of functional art is still strong, UNCW honors a State of Living Treasure in a ceremony each fall. The National Living Treasure biennial award is an outgrowth of the NC project. Dr. Gerald Shinn, professor of philosophy at UNCW and director of the Institute for Human Potential, founded the award. "It is time that we sought excellence in our country, and this is one small attempt to prize it," Shinn said.

UNCW, one of the 16 constituent institutions of the multi-campus UNC system, has an enrollment of 8,400 and is recognized as having the seventh top ranked marine biology program in the nation.

After the entertaining but decidedly tongue-in-cheek Kiss tribute last spring and coinciding with the release of a Carpenters tribute album, Backyard Records has released "You Got Lucky," an homage to a songwriter that legitimately deserves it—Tom Petty.

You Got Lucky: A Tribute to Tom Petty is a terrific idea. What better way to create a buzz for a brand-new label full of underground bands than to latch on to an artist as well known as Petty?

Just looking at the band roster and the songs represented is a good start, as it includes some of Petty's more under-appreciated material (there's only a couple of Petty's bigger hit singles) covered by bands from some of the country's noted musical breeding grounds (Seattle, Chicago, San Diego, Minneapolis, Cincinnati, and Washington).

And by the time the Portland, Oregon, band Everclear wails "Make it last all night/Samm night" on "American Girl," the rousing opening track, it's hard not to be having fun.

"You Got Lucky" is at all points solid, seemingly playing with the idea of how Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers might sound if they were coming up today. The answer: he'd largely forsake his homegrown acoustic-electric guitar mix for some good old amplified noise.

He'd largely forsake his homegrown acoustic-electric guitar mix for some good old amplified noise.

But at its best, "You Got Lucky" does everything that a tribute album should—it highlights the strengths of the original while sounding new.

Most of the best tracks—such as "American Girl" and "Free Bird"—become simple by adding a little amplified punch to an otherwise faithful cover. But others—Nectarine's "Even the Losers" and Silkstorm's "Insider"—neither bring the noise nor sound like the original.

The most notable exception to the reliable guitar noise formula is that stunning cover of "Insider." Laid over a hauntingly spare piano-percussion-bass arrangement and produced by mastermind Steve Albini (Nirvana, PJ Harvey), "Insider" appears completely naked, a perfect forum for one of Petty's darkest, saddest songs.

Of course, "You Got Lucky" probably won't attract any Petty converts. While the feedback-infused sound that dominates the album doesn't sound much like Petty and the Heartbreakers (not to mention that no one else on earth has Petty's love-it-or-hate-it nasal whine), the contributing artists remain respectful to Petty's music. So respectful, in fact, that if you're annoyed by Petty's voice, you'll still be annoyed by other bands singing his stuff.

But it could draw over some fence-sitters. While tributes to the likes of Kiss and the Carpenters are great novelties in themselves, it's nice to see a little credit being handed out where credit is due.

What do you think?

Wilmington Symphony Orchestra Features Clarinetist Todd Palmer

The Wilmington Symphony Orchestra will perform Saturday, November 5 at 8:00 PM in Kenan Auditorium on the campus of UNC-Wilmington. Featured artist will be clarinetist Todd Palmer performing Copland's Clarinet concerto. Also on the program will be Symphony No. 4 by Mendelssohn and Variations on a Theme of Haydn by Brahms.

Mr. Palmer earned both his bachelor's and Master's degrees from the Mannes College of Music and in 1990 won the Young Concert Artists International Auditions. He has performed with numerous orchestras and chamber groups, and in April 1993, he played the Copland Clarinet Concerto with the New York Chamber Symphony and Gerald Schwarz at the 92nd Street Y. Mr. Palmer's appearance with the Wilmington Symphony Orchestra is the culmination of a five-day residency in Wilmington during which he will offer lectures and demonstrations for several school and civic groups. This project is supported by the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear with funds from the Grassroots Program of the North Carolina Arts Council, a state agency. A total of 75 complimentary tickets for UNCW students will be available at the door on the night of the concert until 7:45 PM. Students arriving after that time can purchase a student ticket for $3.00. Season tickets ($48.00, $40.00, $60.00) and single tickets ($12.00, $10.00, $3.00) are available in advance through Kenan Box Office (791-9694 or 1-800-732-3643) or at the door.

The Hanover Band to Perform At Thalian Hall

BY J. TRENT LEONARD
Arts and Entertainment Editor

The Hanover Band was formed in 1980 by its Artistic Director, Caroline Brown. It uses authentic period instruments and principles of performance, and its members are some of the finest players in Europe. "Hanover" signifies the Hanoverian period of 1714-1830 and the word "Band" is the 18th-century term for "orchestra".

In order to create a classical orchestra which could revitalize and expand the listener's musical awareness of the rich repertoire of the period, research has been made into playing techniques, tempo, pitch deployment of the instruments on stage, and the use of original or exact replicas of the instruments of the period. Original manuscripts and first editions are consulted in order to perform the music as the composers would have conceived and heard it.

The Band performs regularly in London and throughout the British Isles and has toured to great critical acclaim in France, Belgium, Germany, Norway, and the United States. Its principal conductor is Roy Goodman.

The Band brings together some of Europe's finest period instrument specialists committed to playing the music of the 18th and early 19th centuries with freshness, vitality, and strength. Historical techniques and research combine to recreate the distinctive clarity, sonority, and expressive style of the time. The Band is now considered to be one of Britain's leading period-instrument orchestras.

Highlights of the 1994/1995 season include tours of the UK, France, Germany, Holland, Spain, Canada, Mexico, Puerto Rico, and the Band's ninth tour of the USA, which will culminate on 1 November 1994, with a Royal Gala Concert for Conservation at Carnegie Hall in New York City. The Band will also be appearing at the Royal Festival Hall, Blackheath Concert Halls, and the Wigmore Hall in London, where, on 22 November 1994 (St. Cecilia's Day), it is participating in the Musicians' Benevolent Fund nationwide "Mega" concert directed by Nicholas McGegan.

In May 1993, the Band recorded for BMG Classics/Hellthaler music from the Court of Frederick the Great on location at the Palace of Sanssouci at Potsdam for video and TV transmission. The Band's extensive list of recordings include a Fono Forum award winning Beethoven and Mozart Violin Concertos (Cala) directed by Roy Goodman and Bach's Brandenburg Concertos and Vivaldi Concertos directed by Anthony Halstead (EMI Eminence). Since 1993, the Band has recorded regularly on the RCA Victor Red Seal label: already realized are Handel opera arias, Bach Cantatas (Nathalie Stutzmann), Mendelssohn String Symphonies, Schumann Symphonies and works by Cherubini. The Band is also engaged in a long-term project with Classic Produktion Osnabruck to record works by J.C. Bach (Anthony Halstead).

On November 1st a historic concert will be given when the Band makes its Carnegie Hall debut. This event will be notable and even unique in a number of ways. Normally we associate the work of period-instrument orchestras with the gentle works of classical masters such as Haydn or Mozart. Not so with this orchestra on this occasion. The program for the November 1st concert will feature two massive romantic works: Beethoven's 3rd Symphony (the Eroica), and the 1841 version of Schumann's 4th Symphony. Also: Weber's Clarinet Concerto No. 2. For this enormous undertaking, the Band will be 76 pieces strong, the largest period-instrument orchestra ever assembled in Carnegie Hall. Since both Beethoven and Schumann predate the Hall, this will be the first time the Grand Old Lady will have been treated to the sounds of these two great works as they were heard by the men who wrote them. The Band—the most extensively recorded period-instrument orchestra in the world, with over seventy CD's to its credit—will be conducted by Roy Goodman, who has been the orchestra's Music Director almost since its founding. And also attending this concert will be His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent, the orchestra's patron.

Isn't it nice for New Yorkers to have such wondrous things happening in their town?

Well, that's the point! Two days before the denizens of Seventh Avenue get to add this momentous notch to their cultural gun belts, the Hanover Band will assemble on a specially expanded stage in Thalian Hall and present the North American premiere of this extraordinary concert. For us. Right here in the land of Wilmington.

The concert is being planned for Sunday, October 30th, and details of ticket availability and such will be announced on the local classical music station, WHQR91.3FM. This performance promises to be memorable at the very least, so missing it would be quite unfortunate if you are any fan at all of classical music. Thalian Hall will surely remember this one for a long time to come.

Fenton Leads Cross Country Effort

The cross country team will compete in the CAA championships this weekend.

UNCW's cross country teams compete in the CAA Championships this weekend after several outstanding finishes during the regular season.

The Seahawks placed fifth out of 12 teams in the men's competition and third out of 12 entries on the women's side two weeks ago in the North Carolina Collegiate Championships in Charlotte.

In the Charlotte race at McAlpine Park, Senior harrier Heather Fenton, who has already won three races this fall, smashed Amy Jackson's school record in the 5,000 meters by finishing third with a time of 17:34.2. Fenton finished behind All-Americans Karen Godlock and Susanna Matson of UNC Chapel Hill, which is ranked 13th in the country.

Freshman Laura Rhoads, meanwhile, snapped Jackson's freshman record with a time of 18:25.1, good enough for 14th place. Cameron King placed 19th (18:45.8) in the race.

For the men's team, Jeff Tiegns ran well, finishing fourth in 25:22.0. Tiegns, Fenton, Rhoads and King all garnered All-State honors for their efforts.

North Carolina Collegiate Men's Team Results: North Carolina State (31), UNC Chapel Hill (56), Western Carolina (108), Duke (129), UNC Wilmington (136), UNC Asheville (179), Campbell (193).

UNC Charlotte (206), East Carolina (250), Davidson (261), UNC Greensboro (263), North Carolina A&T (340).

North Carolina Collegiate Women's Team Results: UNC Chapel Hill (54), UNC Charlotte (60), UNC Wilmington (96), Duke (107), East Carolina (137), UNC Asheville (152), Campbell (197), Davidson (214), Western Carolina (268), UNC Greensboro (333), North Carolina A&T (356), North Carolina State (DNF).

Head Coach: Jim Sprecher (3rd Season)

Next Event: at Colonial Athletic Association Championships, Oct. 29, Williamsburg, Va.

A New Era In Basketball

Coach Jerry Wainwright Prepares His Team

The Jerry Wainwright era in men's basketball at UNC Wilmington begins in earnest Saturday morning when intense pre-season drills open at Trask Coliseum. Wainwright, pegged to lead the Seahawk program in early June following the departure of Kevin Eastman to Washington State, is beaming at the prospect of directing his own program this fall. He'll get that chance when UNCW opens practice Saturday at 9:30 a.m. at Trask Coliseum. "I am extremely excited to finally get some 'court time' with our players," said Wainwright, who previously served 10 years as an assistant at Xavier and Wake Forest. "Kevin and his staff did a wonderful job putting this team together, and I am very lucky to have the opportunity to work with them in hopes of achieving success at the highest level."

Wainwright has a solid group returning off last year's club that finished third in the Colonial Athletic Association with a 18-10 overall record and 10-6 league mark. Overall, the Seahawks welcome back nine lettermen and three starters in 1994-95. Since Wainwright hopes to employ an up-tempo brand of basketball, much of UNCW's success this season will hinge on conditioning. And the new Seahawk skipper couldn't be happier with the results of pre-season conditioning. "I am very encouraged by what we accomplished in our pre-season conditioning program. Our players worked extremely hard and have had total focus on self-improvement. I know that they are committed to being strong physically and mentally."

Wainwright and assistants Kirk Saulny, Jeff Maher and Brad Brownell will put the Seahawks through three-a-day sessions over the weekend before settling into a daily routine next week. Wainwright will be getting his first in-person look at the talent pool available for this season. "Our concentration will be on both offensive and defensive skill building, especially at the full court level. Quick conversion will be stressed in everything that we do on the practice floor."

Seniors Chris Meighen, Corey Stewart, John Spann and Ganon Baker are set to anchor this year's club. Meighen and Stewart started a combined 55 games last season, while Spann and Baker played key backup roles. Meighen, a three-point specialist, enters his final season with the Seahawks after leading the team in scoring with 14.5 ppg one year ago. He was the CAA's Player-of-the-Week twice last year and was named Most Valuable Player of the USAir East Coast Basketball Classic after leading the Seahawks to the title. In Stewart, the Seahawks feature one of the league's best all-around performers. The 6-8, 220-pound forward collected 13.9 ppg and 5.9 rpg en route to first-team All-CAA honors. Stewart was one of only two players to reach double figures in every conference game last season. Spann and Baker also did their part in helping the Seahawks post the most victories for UNCW in seven seasons. Spann came off the bench to contribute 5.5 ppg and 3.0 rpg at power forward, while Baker added 5.2 ppg and 1.9 apg as a backup point guard.

The remaining returning lettermen include Darren Moore (6-9, 255, Jr., Center), Preston McGriff (6-11, 250, Jr., Center), Kenny Avent (6-5, 205, Soph., Guard), Bill Mayew (6-7, 220, Soph., Forward) and Lamont Franklin (6-2, 170, Soph., Guard). Moore, who has battled weight problems his first two seasons, came through the conditioning program in tremendous shape. The bulky center has started every game the last two years and should improve on his career averages of 11.3 ppg and 6.5 rpg. Three newcomers could figure in prominently for the Seahawks. Mark Byington, a sharpshooter from Salem, Va., is the lone freshman this season. Donny Hackworth (Glen Oaks C.C.) and Darrik Ford (Univ. of Cincinnati) each transferred to UNCW.

WOMEN'S GOLF

The Lady Seahawks return to action this weekend after a two-week layoff by playing in the Lady Cougar Invitational, hosted by the College of Charleston in Edisto Beach, S.C.

Two weeks ago, the Lady Seahawks finished 10th out of 13 teams at the prestigious Beacon Woods Invitational in Bayonet Point, Fla., with a three-round total of 990. Leading the Lady Seahawks for the third consecutive tournament, freshman Nicole Flood (Mayfield H.S./Gloversville, N.Y.) shot a team season-low round of 78 on the final day of competition and tied for 25th in the overall standings with a three-round total of 238.

Beacon Woods Invitational Results: Florida State (296-311-302=909), South Florida (306-307-306=919), Georgia (306-304-315=925), Miami (305-308-310=924), Iowa State (310-309-306=922), Louisiana State (307-309-312=928), Central Florida (312-309-314=935), Vanderbilt (317-312-314=943), Illinois State (314-323-315=952), UNC Wilmington (333-335-322=990), Florida International (343-340-330=1013), South Alabama (336-347-332=1012).

MEN'S GOLF

The Seahawks and veteran coach Calvin Lane take part in the 27-team John Ryan-Iron Duke Invitational in Durham, N.C., Oct. 23-24. Led by senior Brian Spencer, the men's golf team recorded its second straight top three finish two weeks ago by placing third in the Hargrove B. Davis Memorial Tournament in Buies Creek, N.C.

Spencer (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.) finished second individually in the 54-hole tournament, shooting a four-over-par 220 over the 6,700-yard course. He led the charge as the Seahawks finished just six shots behind champion Campbell and four behind runnerup UNC Chapel Hill.

Hargrove B. Davis Memorial Team Results: Campbell (298-304-298=899), UNC Chapel Hill (305-292-305=902), UNC Wilmington (312-298-298=908), Virginia Commonwealth (304-306-303=915), Liberty (307-311-303=921), Wake Forest (307-312-302=921), Ohio (316-314-300=930), Appalachian State (315-308-310=933), The Citadel (321-320-320=961).

WOMEN'S SOCCER

The inaugural season is winding down for the UNC Wilmington women's soccer team, which plays just one contest this week and has only two games remaining in the campaign.

The Lady Seahawks, who travel to Lynchburg, Va., this Saturday (Oct. 29) to meet Liberty at 11 a.m., split a pair of games last week, defeating the College of Charleston, 3-1, and losing to seventh-ranked William and Mary, 15-0.

On Thursday, UNCW recorded its first Division I victory by downing Charleston in a road contest. Junior midfielder Meredith Lindsey (South Lakes H.S./Reston, Va.) staked the Lady Seahawks to an early 1-0 lead with a shot from 25 yards out at the 14:20 mark. Freshman forward Margaret Merrill (East Mecklenburg H.S./Charlotte, N.C.) assisted on the goal, which was the first of Lindsey's collegiate career. Charleston retaliated with its lone goal of the contest at 51:21, but 10 minutes later, freshman defender Jaime Betts (Millbrook H.S./Raleigh, N.C.) put the Lady Seahawks up for good with a header off a corner kick sent by junior forward Melaney Marshall (North Brunswick H.S./Long Beach, N.C.). Sophomore defender Missy Ronemus (Page H.S./Greensboro, N.C.) sealed the win with a direct kick at the 70-minute mark.

Last Sunday, W&M launched 38 shots on goal to blank the Lady Seahawks in a CAA matchup. Freshman goalkeeper Isabel Bordo (New Hanover H.S./Wilmington, N.C.) collected nine saves.

VOLLEYBALL

The UNC Wilmington volleyball team, which dropped its first two CAA matches last week, opens a three-match road swing this week against league rival James Madison.

Coach Kathy McDaniel's club has lost four of its last six matches and will be trying to get back on the winning track this Friday, Oct. 28, in Harrisonburg, Va. The Lady Seahawks visit William and Mary the next day at 3 p.m. in Williamsburg, Va.

The Lady Seahawks (13-9 Overall, 0-2 in CAA) opened CAA competition last week with a pair of losses. On Wednesday, UNCW fell to American at home, 9-15, 10-15, 8-15. Freshman middle hitter Sarah DeLair (Lincoln-Way H.S./Mokena, Ill.) led the UNCW attack with seven kills, and three Lady Seahawks-Lealie Noukciak (Walter Johnson H.S./Bethesda, Md.), Josie Youngblood (West Henderson H.S./Hendersonville, N.C.) and Katy Kurt (Notre Dame Academy/Los Angeles, Calif.)-followed with six kills each.

UNCW Wilmington suffered its second loss of the week last Saturday, 2-15, 4-15, 15-13, 8-15, to George Mason. After losing the first two games easily, the Lady Seahawks rallied to take the third and then scored the first five points of the fourth game before George Mason recovered to win the match. Taydus and Youngblood notched 10 kills each to lead the Lady Seahawks. Sophomore setter Ginger Moon (Quince Orchard H.S./Gaithersburg, Md.) racked up a match-high 34 assists.

Youngblood leads UNCW in kills (286) and total attempts (830), while Noukciak is tops in digs with 305. Taydus has team-highs of 22 solo blocks, 50 block assists and 72 total blocks. Moon has amassed 819 assists and a team-best 40 service aces.

Chancellor Quells Rumors: Leutze Not Leaving

Chancellor James Leutze discusses rumors.

BY AMANDA JESSE
News Editor

Since UNC-Chapel Hill began a chancellor search, rumors surfaced on the UNCW campus that Chancellor James Leutze had been offered the Chancellor position at the Chapel Hill based institution.

In an interview Tuesday, Chancellor Leutze quieted those rumors. Leutze said, "I have not been offered that job. That [the rumor] is incorrect."

Leutze did say that there is a chancellor search going on at UNC-Chapel Hill but that he has not been offered that position.

"I have a position here," said Leutze. "I am very happy here at UNCW. I appreciate the welcome I have been afforded here and the positive feeling offered by the faculty members, students and staff."

"When I came here four years ago, there was a feeling that the University was about to take off. Now I feel that was a premature assumption. But I think that the University is now positioned to take off. The next four years are going to be exciting ones for the University."

When asked about UNCW's future, Leutze said, "I have a lot of things I'd like to see done here. I would be reluctant to leave."

UNCW Striving For Higher Standards

BY LAURA A. CORSO
Staff Writer

UNCW is moving away from the party school image and into a new realm of academia. Serious efforts are being made in order to raise UNCW's academic standards and are making quite an impact.

UNCW is currently ranked 5th in the UNC system for SAT scores on incoming freshman and 14th in the region among US News and World Report's America's Best Colleges. Both are dramatic jumps for UNCW's academic rating.

It all starts by attracting more highly qualified students. This has been done by introducing a new honors program and increasing the number of scholarships offered to students.

"Our targets are high school honors students who have higher academic credentials, have taken Advanced Placement courses and are possible merit scholarship recipients," said Bob Fry, director of institutional research.

Targeting begins with stressing the importance of college to younger school age children. They can grow up with the hope of attending UNCW for the essential quality education to ensure a successful future.

The efforts to make UNCW a more academically competitive school allows for better competition with the other UNC system schools. Scholarships and special programs encourage outstanding students to attend UNCW.

As UNCW established itself as a high quality educational institution, it will have additional overall effects.

ably and it will encourage more students to graduate in four years, which will save the state money.

This new plan is most likely to effect regional students. Due to the fact that UNCW is becoming more competitive, it has placed regional students at a disadvantage for acceptance. Students from the area who would have been easily accepted in the past are being rejected or wait listed.

By raising their standards for admission, UNCW is helping to raise the overall regional educational standards. According to Fry, "There is more and more cooperation between high schools and colleges to raise the academic quality of students and to improve SAT scores."

Coordination between the university and the community colleges is also being stressed. This way transfers from the community colleges will be well prepared for university life.

Mark Lenier, Special Assistant to the Chancellor assures, "even though we are accepting fewer students from New Hanover County as freshmen, we are continuing to accept many from New Hanover as transfers. Through their community colleges, they are developing good study skills and are better prepared for the intense workload."

Economic development is also necessary for the region. "Socioeconomic factors have a big impact in the quality of educational We need to work with the school systems in order to work with students earlier to recognize the value of a college degree," Mark Lenier added. The increase of quality jobs the area would provide more of an educational incentive.

The efforts are wide range and effective. UNCW is steadily becoming a prestigious educational facility, in addition to broadening learning horizons throughout the region.

48 Hours Of Aerobics: Look Out Jane Fonda!

BY ANA DEINER
Staff Writer

The members of Alpha Gamma Delta and Phi Mu held their third annual Aerobathon fundraiser on October 18 through October 21.

Approximately 110 young women were sponsored by local businesses and families. Contributors gave donations of $25.00 and $45.00. The money raised will benefit the Alpha Gamma Delta Foundation for Diabetes and Phi Mu's Foundation for the Children's Miracle Network.

The young women who participated exercised in shifts of five girls each from both sororities. Each girl was required to participate in the aerobathon for five hours.

Aerobic videotapes were shown and a few shifts were instructed by Alpha Gamma Delta member Shannon Addy and Phi Mu member Jenny Ball.

Alpha Gamma Delta's philanthropy officer Regina Rudisill said that approximately $900.00 was raised for their cause. Phi Mu's Fundraising chair Joie McDaniel said that approximately $350.00 was raised for their organization.

Jen Brake, a member of Alpha Gamma Delta said, "There was good participation and the first and last hour are always fun because everyone is there and did it [aerobics] together."

Kim Molini Memorial Fund A Project To Remember

BY LAURA A. CORSO
Staff Writer

In order to preserve the memory of a beautiful friend, dozens have collaborated in an effort to build a memorial for the late Kim Molini.

Kim Molini was killed in a car accident in her hometown of Asheville, NC, on June 10, 1994. Her loss was a great one in the lives of all who knew and loved her warm smile and caring way. Molini would have been a junior this semester.

The Kim Molini Memorial Fund has been established to raise money to build a gazebo on Wrightsville Beach in Kim's memory.

"Kim didn't like the water but she loved to sit on the beach to collect her thoughts, so the gazebo will be symbolic of Kim. It is something her friends can appreciate as well as other people," said Jill Mikucki, one of Molini's closest friends and the driving force behind this project.

The first fund raising event, a car wash, was held on Saturday, October 22 at Nation's Bank on South College Road. There was an encouraging turn-out that has "fueled the fire" for future events.

Future events such as a raffle and a formal benefit are planned for later this semester and early next spring.

Mikucki said, "taking on a project like this helps Kim's friends to cope with the loss, as will the end result."

Many of Molini's friends who have volunteered their help to the cause have encouraged the support of various organizations. Lambda Chi, Delta Tau Delta, Sigma Nu, Phi Mu, Surf Club, as well as friends and family, have all taken part to make this project work.

"It's something her friends can appreciate as well as other people."

The Greek Council has agreed to donate a percentage of its proceeds from the annual pledge talent show to the fund.

"I hope everyone will come out and support these events. This is a project that the whole community can benefit from and because Kim was such a beautiful person," Mikucki said.

If anyone is interested in supporting the Kim Molini Memorial Fund in any way, please contact Jill Mikucki at 452-4069 or write to P.O. Box 2886.

DWIs Not Foreign To UNCW Students

BY BILLY PERSON
Staff Writer

Despite the many attempts to educate society on the dangers of drunk driving, it is still a leading cause of death in America.

UNCW is not foreign to the alcohol-influenced drivers that many commercials and organizations fight against. Campus Police records show that in 1993 there were 19 incidents of drunk driving on campus.

Penalties for that violation do not seem to deter people from driving while intoxicated. If you are suspected of drunken driving, you will be tested for the presence of alcohol in the body. Further proceedings would have the arresting officer and a magistrate determine whether you would be served a state citation. If so, the you will be sent directly to jail.

"A state citation requires that you appear before the District Court for a mandatory hearing," said Lt. Hunter Davis of University Police.

Lt. Davis also adds that the decision of whether to send you directly to jail depends on the officer's ability to articulate his reasoning for believing that you are drunk.

So far, 1994 is keeping up with its predecessor. A total of six DWIs have been reported on campus thus far. We are already one-third of the way to matching last year's numbers. There have been no incidents resulting in fatalities or serious injuries.

However, said Lt. Davis, "within the past two years, we have had approximately six car collisions."

Lowes Contributes $15,000 To UNCW

BY SUSAN HURST
Staff Writer

To aid in the repair of the UNCW Wise Alumni House, Lowes of Wilmington contributed $15,000 towards the Association's renovation effort.

Lee McConnell, Lowes of Wilmington's store manager said that he was very positive about the reasons for his store's generous donation. McConnell said, "Lowes has always been a strong supporter of UNCW. We believe UNCW contributes to the overall quality of life in the Wilmington community. Lowes believes in putting money into projects which will benefit the community and enhance the life around it."

The UNCW Alumni Association owes $400,00 on the renovation loan which is being repaid through fundraising efforts. The Keenan family decided their property in 1968 to be renovated for UNCW's use. Although cosmetic work still needs to be done, structural repairs were made in early 1993.

Alumni Relations Director Pat Corcoran said she is excited about the progress on the house but still wants to see more community and alumni support.

About the Wise House, McConnell said, "It looks to be in wonderful shape. Of course, a lot of work needs to be done on it because it's an old house."

There was a short ceremony last week commemorating Lowes contribution. The UNCW Alumni Association moved their headquarters into the Wise House this spring.

SEA LINE to Ease Pre-Registration

Pre registration for Spring 1995 begins this week and will continue through November 15. You will be able to pre register for classes from any touch-tone phone by using SEA LINE-UNC Wilmington's telephone voice response system.

To access SEA LINE you must first make an appointment with your academic advisor. Your advisor will have a copy of your degree audit and also your "authorization to SEA LINE." Your authorization will include your appointment time for using the system and your registration number. You must have this information to access SEA LINE. You may not access SEA LINE prior to your appointment, however, you may access the system anytime after your appointment time.

The Spring Schedule of Classes will be available in your university PO Box the week of October 17. It will include detailed instructions on how to use SEA LINE and a worksheet to assist you in designing your schedule.

The University is excited about the SEA LINE system and how it will help us to better serve you.

Area Economic Activity on Rise

Overall economic activity in the coastal area of Southeastern North Carolina rose during second quarter 1994. The Coastal Business Index (CBI), a measure of overall economic activity in Brunswick, New Hanover, and Pender County, developed by Dr. Claude Farrell and Dr.

William W. Hall, Jr., of the Cameron School of Business Administration at UNC Wilmington, grew at a compounded rate of 5.2 percent over the quarter.

Separately, economic activity grew at an annual compound rate of 7.3 percent in Brunswick county over first quarter, 3.3 percent in New Hanover County, and a rather dramatic 20 percent in Pender County.

The Coastal Business Index is a quarterly measure of overall economic activity in the coastal area. Separate indexes are also calculated for each county. The indexes have a base year of 1982. The components of the indexes are employment, retail sales, and air passenger traffic at the New Hanover International Airport. County-level data are used to construct the county measures. All data used in the indexes are seasonally adjusted, and the retail sales figures are deflated with the Consumer Price Index. - DR. CLAUDE FARRELL and DR. WILLIAM W. HALL, JR.

Students Get Taste of World Hunger

A Hunger Banquet will be held on November 17th from 7-9 PM in the University Center Ballroom. UNCW Volunteers will present an unusual program called a Hunger Banquet to dramatize the inequity of food distribution in the world.

Only a few people will leave this "banquet" with satisfied stomachs. Though most will receive little to eat, all will go away filled with a new understanding about the problem of world hunger. To determine what they get to eat, participants will draw a card from a box as they enter. If they are like the lucky fifteen percent of the people on the planet, then they are treated to an excellent, three course meal. Twenty-five percent of the people will sit on buckets at small tables and eat rice and beans, while the remaining sixty percent will sit on the floor and have just rice (if there is enough for everyone). To highlight the drama of this event we will have music, a video presentation, and a guest speaker.

Funds raised from local businesses will benefit Oxfam America, a famine relief organization.

Chancellor's Student Advisory Committee: Students are encouraged to share comments and suggestions with members of the Chancellor's Student Advisory Committee. Contact Ziggy Nix or Susie Goodrum in the SGA office to get in touch with these student representatives.

Cancellation of Course Registration Policy: The policy which went into effect fall 1993 allows department chairpersons to drop students who do not attend the first class meeting and who do not notify the departmental office within 24 hour of a desire to remain in the class ONLY if the course is fully enrolled and other students are waiting to enroll. If you wish to drop a course you should follow the regular procedure (use the drop/add card) and not presume that you are dropped after missing the first class. If you do not officially drop and your name remains on the class roll, you will receive an "F" in the course!

Toshiko Takaoku, has been named the 1995 National Living Treasure by the University of North Carolina at Wilmington's Institute for Human Potential.

UNCW Chancellor James R. Leutz presented the National Living Treasure Award to Takaoku at a banquet November 1, in the University Center Ballroom. Takaoku was nominated for the award by the New Jersey Governor Christine Whitman.

As National Living Treasure, Takaoku received a bronze medal designed by Stephan D. LeQuire, associate professor of fine arts at UNCW.

In North Carolina, UNCW honors a State of Living Treasure in a ceremony each fall. The National Living Treasure biennial award is an outgrowth of the NC project. Dr. Gerald Shinn, professor of philosophy at UNCW and director of the Institute for Human Potential, founded the award. "It is time that we sought excellence in our country, and this is one small attempt to prize it," Shinn said.

Studying Smarter: Asking Questions I

TOM MACLENNAN

Director The Learning Center

Last week, descriptions of the various services of The Learning Center appeared. The Learning Center has many resources that can show you productive and efficient ways of studying smarter. This series will outline some study skills tips; however, in order for them to be effective, I would recommend that you make an appointment with one of our consultants. The tips we will be sharing with you in these columns really come to life when applied to course material you are currently studying.

Walter Pank's How to Study in College is one of the classic works dealing with organized approaches to studying. Pank thought that the art of asking questions was integral to being a successful student and he traced it back to the ancient Greeks. Pank noted that asking questions served a dual function. First, it kept you mentally alert while you were reading course material. Second, it forced a reader to read for specific answers, rather than for general, undifferentiated answers.

One well-known technique is to ask specific questions. When beginning any chapter, turn the topical and sub-topical headings into questions. For example, the main heading, "Basic Aspects of Memory," could be converted to: "What are the basic aspects of memory?" The sub-topical headings of "The Memory Trace," "Rate of Forgetting," and "Types of Remembering," could be converted to the following questions:

What is the memory trace?
What is the rate of forgetting?

What are various types of remembering?

After turning a heading into a question, you read to answer the questions you have formulated. This technique helps deter skimming or purposeless reading of text.

Next week, we will continue sharing some of Walter Pank's other approaches to asking questions.

Remember, for a concrete application of this technique, call The Learning Center at 395-3549 for an appointment with a consultant who can show you how to apply this technique to your current course work.

Student Profile: Maria Clara Espinosa

BY GREG JEFFREYS
Staff Writer

Meet Maria Espinosa, a twenty-one year old exchange student from Quito, Ecuador. Curious and dynamic, she is a junior studying Environmental Communications.

Maria's visit to UNCW this semester is not her first trip to the United States. After graduation from high school, she visited Rhode Island in an exchange program. Her two trips have given her an interesting contrast between the South and the North.

"People speak a lot, smile when they pass by," she says of Wilmington and notes "impressive hospitality." The North is "locally different," she says. Maria has gotten a new perspective on her homeland from her exchange visits. "You learn more about your own culture from traveling," she says.

In Ecuador, society protects young girls from drugs, according to Maria. "They live in a pink bubble."

"Ninety percent are poor, uneducated, illiterate. Ten percent are well educated, have land, cars, computers," says Maria. "Everyone knows everyone" among the upper class, while they have "no contact" with the lower class.

Among Maria's favorite activities at home are ice-climbing and rock-climbing in the Andes mountains around Quito. She also enjoys photography and has taken many photographs high on the mountains, which she hopes to exhibit.

According to Maria, people in Ecuador move slower than we do here, where we "jump into things." She recalls a class in which she made a suggestion. To her surprise, her classmates immediately wanted to implement her suggestion, she says laughing.

"I like people from Wilmington cause they're very humble," says Maria. "UNCW is not a typical school. They want you to have diverse activities, a balanced education. Teachers are very open."

Maria's plans include graduate school, though she is not sure what she will study yet. However, she is certain that she will travel more, and return to the United States.

Nursing Association Represented At Fair

BY DELAYNE GODWIN AND
KATHY DROMBOSKI
Community Health Coordinators

The Association of Nursing Students (ANS) of UNCW was represented at the New Hanover County Fair this year. An educational booth with the theme "Bike Right: Bike Safety a Must" was installed in the educational tent. Members of ANS worked diligently to give fair goers a brief overview of some simple safety "rules of the road." Thanks go to the Campus Police Department for help in providing a map of bike paths in the Wilmington area. Some of the ideas for safety listed on the map were included in the educational information at the booth. Meghanne Hall, John Stewart, Ronda Davis, Delayne Godwin, Kathy Dromboski, and Kathy's two children, Karen and Sarah, all helped install the booth. Thanks go to the UNCW senior nursing students who provided ideas for a central theme for the booth.

North Carolina's overall state organization of ANS met in Fayetteville recently. The community service project for the year was voted to be the Ronald McDonald House. There are four of these houses in the state. This system of houses provides lodging and support for families of pediatric clients at hospitals where these houses are located. Look for more to come as UNCW's local ANS chapter supports this project.

ANS is going to be at the Castle Hayne Volunteer Fire Department's Barbecue in March with some very important information about good health. Money will be raised for local benevolent projects during an aerobathon. This aerobathon is part of a project that a senior nursing student is conducting in order to emphasize the importance of exercise as part of good health.

Minority Participation In Business And Government

BY PAM WARD

Contributing Reporter
The Cameron School of Business has developed a new internship program as an effort to fulfill the university's diversity commitment. This program, "Minority Participation in Business and Government," gives the students hands on experience in their field and allows them to meet prominent individuals for networking and it increases the student's opportunity to obtain a great job. The program is open to all majors.

There will be a meeting held on Thursday, November 10 in Cameron Hall, Room 104 from 4-6 PM for interested students. Representatives will be present to speak on behalf of their business or organization.

The Dean of the School of Business, Dr. Howard Rockness will be present along with the Director of the program, Robert Cutting, JD and student coordinator, Pamela Ward. Light refreshments will be served.

More information about the internship is available in the Department of Accounting, B.L.A. and the Office of Minority Affairs.

It is important that students who are interested attend this meeting. For more information, contact Pamela Ward at 395-3140

Frank's Place

Frank Tascone

Hey, and welcome back to Frank's Place. Bob and I are on the balcony carving a pumpkin. I just finished cutting out its mouth which is rather wide, but still seems to be frowning. Bob thinks it looks like Rush Limbaugh.

We're trying to decide what to dress up as for Halloween. Bob, who is a cat for you newcomers, wants me to paint him black and draw a white stripe on his back so he looks like a skunk. Bob's been through a few Halloweens and I guess he'd just assume he left alone. A friend of mine gave me some ideas for my costume. She said I could wear tie die and put a pot over my head and be a "pothead." Or, I could put a toilet seat over my head and be... well, it follows the same principle as the pothead idea.

They say Halloween is a holiday for kids. I believe it's a holiday for college students. I'll never forget my undergraduate Halloweens. One year we all dressed up like superheroes. It was a reassuring sight to see Batman and Robin directing traffic on mainstreet. Later that night, we went to the police station, and with hands on hips asked if they needed any help with anything. Another year my roommate dressed up like a beer can. He passed out on the sidewalk downtown. When he woke up there was a $50 citation for littering attached to his tab.

There is a psychological explanation for this college age affinity for Halloween. It harkens back to that dark and repressive time when we are forced to give up our infantile attachments to trick or treat, and go about spending Halloween nights as adults. I'll never forget the dreadful night it happened to me. I guess the worst part about it was that I brought it on myself. My younger sisters were going trick or treating with friends and my parents were going to a party.

"I guess they'll be no one here to give out candy," my mom sighed. "Well, I could stay here and hand out candy to the kiddies," I said and then nudged my sister in the shoulder.

"Loser," my sister replied.

"Are you sure?" my mom asked.

"Yes, no sweat," I answered. My dad just stared into the distance.

As they all went out the door, my dad, who was wearing a Mister Rogers mask and sweater, looked at me and shook his head. When the door shut there was silence. I was alone with the three Jack-o-lanterns that "us kids" had carved. They grinned at me like they had just won my soul (kinda like Bob's Rush Limbaugh pumpkin). I turned on the Charlie Brown Great Pumpkin Special and waited for the doorbell to ring.

Sure enough it did, and there, beyond the glass, were my friends, dressed like the rock group Kiss. "Buuuuddy! I heard you were hangin' in tonight—loser. Now give Ace and the boys some candy."

I closed the door and with teary eyes, watched Linus as he suffered in the pumpkin patch, and Charlie Brown as he uttered that immortal phrase: "I got a Rock."

So as you walk downtown this weekend and you see Gumby and Pokey staggering along front street, and Bart and OJ Simpson are slam dancing at Wave Hog, and Juan Valdez comes slinking out of Caffe Phoenix, and Tony the Tiger tries to make conversation with the "big cat" at Water Street Market, and Wilms Flintstone and Betty Rubble meet Barney for a drink at Rode, please be cautious in passing judgement. Old repressed psychological wounds die hard.

S. Bartlett Student Soliloquies

A few weeks ago a friend and I were embroiled in one of our typical pseudo-intellectual debates when we somehow found ourselves trading light-tipped opinions about the social consequences of androgyny. My friend, who we'll call "Estelle" to spare the humiliation of being recognized by any readers of this column, considers androgyny the most contemptible and destructive trend of America's youth.

She thinks, by allowing or encouraging young people to dress and behave outside of the strict sexual definitions of our society, adults are promoting a variety of what she calls "factors that aid in the downfall of our [collective] morality." Now I've never been sure what the American morality actually is or that such a concept even exists, but Estelle says she knows what it is and that androgyny is what the politicians are screaming about when they jerk around on their family values soapboxes.

Estelle assures me that androgyny has caused the increased numbers of people infected with AIDS and other STD's, a larger homosexual population, violence against women, the lack of prayer in public schools, the popularity of Mighty Morphin' Power Rangers, the recent trend of "ugly" shoes in women's stores, and a host of other equally horrifying social ills. In case you are as confused about some of Estelle's supportive examples as I am, you must read on to be enlightened.

The reason more people are testing positive for STD's, explains Estelle, is because with everyone dressing alike you can't tell who "clean or good" folks are anymore. When women look like they are supposed to—"girlie," then men know they are nice girls who wouldn't sleep around. What's worse, according to Estelle, are men who act and dress like women. So many men have long hair and wear pastels anymore (even non-golfers), regular people can't figure out which have homosexual tendencies and "Bang! A regular person gets a disease and passes it on to another regular person and before you know it, all the regular people will have diseases."

There does seem to be a smattering of logic somewhere in Estelle's arguments, doesn't there? If men and women dress and behave as if they are free individuals—meaning men wearing any color or styles of clothing they want and (possibly) even crying at the end of Madame Butterfly, and women wearing comfortable work shoes, baggy pants, and flannel shirts while they sport short, practical hairstyles, how can the regular people make snap judgments about their peers' sexual inclinations? And, if we're all going to look alike anyway, what difference does it make if men have sex with men and women have sex with women? That, says Estelle, is why the homosexual population in America has grown so staggeringly. "People figure why bother."

Bob Haywood Stillpoint Poverty, Chastity, and Obedience

It has recently been my good fortune to spend two weeks in Italy on a spiritual pilgrimage built around spending time in silence and reflection at many of the places that were significant in the life of St. Francis of Assisi.

St. Francis died at the age of 44 in 1226. Over 20 years earlier, he had turned his back on his family and his family's business, which had the potential of making him wealthy in order to follow Jesus. For him that meant living a life of absolute poverty, chastity, and obedience to God. Living out his intentions with integrity found this little, barefoot holy man increasingly revered by the people of Assisi and the Prelates of the Roman-Catholic Church. He was canonized just a few years after his death.

So what! Well that's I've been wondering since I've been back. Poverty, chastity and obedience - what possible connection could they have with our personal/spiritual journey today? I find no impulse for me to imitate Francis by turning my back on the world in which I find myself living. But I do find dimensions of these three disciplines that seem relevant and meaningful to me.

Spiritual poverty today invites us to become increasingly detached from those values that our world seems to press into our very souls. It means working to detach ourselves from our concerns about the opinions of our peer groups, our reputations in our community, from our hunger for a certain life-style whose pursuit, in reality, most often brings only stress, family conflict, and disappointment. To take the vow of poverty is to seek to detach ourselves from all these things and whatever else we discover that determines how we use our time, energy, and money that result in our being stressed out over work, in debt, and frustrated. In the poverty brought on by turning our backs on these aspects of our world, we can find, like Francis, peace, joy, and the love of God.

The vow of chastity these days, I don't think, is the same as a vow of celibacy. To seek chastity is to seek a kind of purity and simplicity in our relationship to everyone and everything. Seeking chastity finds us struggling to avoid jealousy, mean spiritedness, cynicism. Those who are chaste in spirit are always looking for an angle or a way to be in control. There is a kind of simple mindedness, a simplicity of spirit in the way the pure at heart relate to others. To become chaste is to find within oneself the joy and simplicity with being a lover in the deepest sense of that word, a sense that has little to do with sex and much to do with the joy and freedom to be the best of one's self in every situation and in every relationship.

Thomas Morton once said that a tree gives God glory by being a tree. By being faithful to its internal biological script, a tree is simply what it is. The vow of obedience these days should find us engaged in that life-long quest to discover and be faithful to the Truth of who we are. There is a Truth, a way of life that is hidden deep in the core of every human being on the face of the earth. So many impoverished millions never have any chance of surviving to find their Truth but we do! We at this university are blessed in so many ways so that we can seek to be obedient to the Truth of God that resides at the core of our being. When we plumb that Truth and allow it to unfold in us, then we find meaning, fulfillment, and joy. There is always pain and struggle involved in the search to be obedient to this Truth, but St. Francis learned that the truth discovered in the dark valleys of life is just as valuable and important as the Truth discovered on the sunny slopes of the mountains of Italy.

Poverty, chastity, and obedience, these can be powerful disciplines in our day as much as in the day of St. Francis of Assisi.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor,

The following is a brief response to the letter by Steve Lee in the October 20, Seahawk.

Please allow me to praise your letter of 20 October: your writing reveals the sort of rich stylistic and genuine tone of humility that "one" commonly associates with the guilty babble of liping pedophiles caught red-handed in closets brimming each other into narcissia at local Wednesday night prayer functions. In case there may be no question, I am expiating your shameful bourgeois sensibility.

Although there exist a number of frivolous notions in your letter, I shall expediently grill you on two. First, you monotonously missed a perfect opportunity to guide your daughter into the complex, and often misinterpreted, world of sensual emotion. I cannot think of a better forum for an initiation away from her "inexperience and naivete"; the evening's stimulating poetry should have been a cushion/springboard for otherwise difficult questions between parent and child. Not to worry, however... what the child does not learn at home, she will discover on her own (if you get the drift, dude). Of course, you might have her watch a little MTV as an antidote to your ridiculous probity. The lessons there are simple to follow.

Please do not counter me by starting the obvious—the opinions expressed were those of your wife, yet you admitted the "grain of truth" in her guileless bitching which means you are accountable as well. How terrifyingly sad it is that you find a language based exploration of the "sexual aspects of human relationships" to be "unbalanced" and "unhealthy." Poetry, after all, has no singular program or domain. Suggestions for poets who solemnize the vocational topics of "devotion," "responsibility," "duty" ... "freedom" would be welcome of future event organizers. I am so sure. "Pahit."

My second stab: you stopped just short of contradicting yourself which is infinitely more embarrassing than an actual contradiction. Surely you couldn't believe that readers would not plainly see you poorly cloaked Puritanism in the alleged neutral language of your counterfactual speculation (i.e., use of the universal subject, "one," shows ungraceful cowardice, not to mention bad taste). At the end of paragraph three, it is you that concludes the university had "done a disservice" to the spectators of Ms. Dayve, and the student community of whole (whose tuition pays for such performances). Then, seven lines later (in your real voice), you state that your "conception of the university as a learning opportunity includes the notion of sensory stimulation and the celebration of our physical sides, as provided by Fern Dayve. "Wow, how contradictorily tolerant of you. I do not want to "participate" in a dialogue with you about Ms. Dayve's performance, so do not attempt to contact me.

For your penance, I command you to read the chapters dealing with "Punctuated Equilibrium" in S. J. Gould's Flamingo Smile, along with the first thousand pages of de Sade's Justine. For your wife, I prescribe only the discussions of co-dependent urination in Bantle's Story of the Eye.

Cheers,
Robert A. Variaco

UNCW Gay and Lesbian Association

BY AMANDA ROGERS

UNCW's Gay and Lesbian Association meets every Thursday. Please call Diane Edwards at 395-3577 or 392-4399 for more information.

So far this semester we have had a yard sale in conjunction with Reach Out. The proceeds from the sale went to GROW to help local AIDS and HIV positive people. We elected new officers so we're a little different than last year. So far we have held several social meetings: we had a scavenger hunt, we watched the movie "Threesome" and we had a cookout. The turn out for the cookout was wonderful, there were approximately 35 people there. Hope you were one of them, if not you missed a fabulous time. I would like to thank our gracious host for having us. We've also planned a Halloween party. So if you missed the cookout be sure to come to the party and meet lots of new people. We also held a benefit for GLA downtown on Friday September 23rd. Again we had a good turn out. October 11th was National Coming Out Day. We wore blue, did you see anyone you recognized? Were you surprised? Did you by any chance forget or miss the flyers and wore blue yourself? How did that make you feel? Write or call and let us know. For all of those who are not familiar with National Coming Out Day it has been celebrated every year on October 11th since 1987. It's the one day of the year that is not aside to remind us how important it is to be honest about our sexual orientation, to ourselves and others, all year long. (The above information was from an article that somehow did not get printed for a month so I updated it a bit. Below is the most recent GLA is doing.

November 3 Bob Haywood will be coming to give a presentation: Spiritual Journey, a positive process.

November 10 We're going to have two speakers on safe sex, one for the men and one for the women.

November 17 We're going to have a gathering and celebrate the birthday of one of our officers.

November 24 No Meeting—Thanksgiving Break...So Long Seahawk.

December 1 World AIDS Day, Dr. Bruce will come and talk to us about the HIV virus and AIDS.

December 8 Kathy Beall will come to the meeting to talk about religion and homosexuality, Kathy is the minister at our local Metropolitan Community Church. (sorry if I misspelled your name—it's late and I don't have anyone to call and check, and of course this is due tomorrow to make deadline.)

In closing I would like to leave you with a thought. The percentage of lesbians reporting victimization because of their sex or sexual orientation is 91%. Here's a little quiz we made to see what this campus really knows about homosexuals. UNCW's Gay and Lesbian Association (Hey everyone we're still looking for a new name—one that includes bisexuals and allies) will provide the first person who completes the quiz correctly a $15.00 gift certificate to Rare Cargo, one of Wilmington's gay-friendly stores. 1. What is the name of the famed all-gay army...defeated at the Battle of Chancellorsville in 1862? 2. What year did the American Psychiatric Association remove homosexuality from its list of disorders? 3. Which actor on "Married With Children" is gay? 4. What Baltimore based band stars two sisters, one who is gay and one who is not? 5. What is the name of the bi-weekly national gay and lesbian newsmagazine? 6. What alliance chose the Greek letter lambda to be a symbol of gay pride? 7. What was used to symbolize homosexuals during World War II? 8. Name one of the two "gay" bars in Wilmington. 9. Define Heterosexism! 10. What does the term "passing" mean? \ Answers to the quiz 1. Sacred Band of Thebes 2. 1973 3. "Marcy D'Arcy" Amanda Beare 4. disappear 5. "The Advocates" 6. The Gay Activists Alliance 7. The inverted pink triangle 8. Mickey Ratz or The Palladium 9. The assumption that everyone is heterosexual, and if they aren't, then they should be heterosexual. 10. A gay, lesbian, or bisexual tries to act (or pass for) like a straight person.

Advice to UNCW's Weary

Hola! We've decided our column just isn't headed in the journalistic direction we anticipated at the beginning of the academic year. We doubt we're really helping the faithful dolts who enjoy reading our brand of realistic advice or those who write to us whining about every assinine angst in which they are constantly finding themselves.

Jane seems to think we aren't being nurturing enough. I think we employ too many euphemisms and it's time to get serious about slapping some reality into you ffffoiks. Anyway, the consensus here is that you people to need wake up and sniff the sweet steamed cabbage funk that often envelops UNCW early in the morning.

We've decided to give you a little something to think about each week—kind of like touching your bare brain stem with a warmed up cattle prod. For some of you this could result in, for the first time ever, a GPA over 1.5.

Everywhere I go, I'm asked if the universities stifle writers. My opinion is that they don't stifle them enough.

Flannery O'Connor

(Are you smirking yet, Cameron?)

Dear Emma & Jane: I am writing this in response to a letter I read in your last column, which was signed "Wayne H." I'm not against Southerners—I have no true problem with them, I just don't understand them when they talk. Perhaps some of your readers can help clarify Southern slang for me? The terms I find most interesting/confusing are: fixin' to, down the rud a pece, shug, hone, oooo doggie, wallem' wif de hawgs, she'll rub you wif a chicken foot, ya awnt to, aylight, and a country mihl. I've lived in North Carolina for nine years and I still can't get a straight answer about these sayings. Even my husband, who's from a place near "Back Swamp"—whatever the hell that is, can't seem to help me. Would someone in the knowing educate me?

Signed: Becky

Dear Becky: Is that your real name? While reading through your letter, our first thought was to put you in touch with the answer man of the South—Wayne H., but since you're married we'll have to curb our love-line leanings. In addition to your queries, we're curious to know why so many Southern men call one another "son." You'd get your butt kicked for that stuff up North where they would think it's a hit on their mothers' fidelity. Linguistically speaking, the Southern dialect has a number of intriguing and eloquent patterns. But, since we aren't linguists, we can admit we think some of the slang sounds redundant and silly. Of course, where Emma comes from people say stuff like "ru da wahl" for "through the wall," so we can't laugh too loud at the culture that has welcomed us so warmly. Here's what we think these terms mean: fixin' to = about/ready to, down de rud a pece = as far as you can walk before you have to sit down to rest, shug = sugar, sweetie, or some other stereotypical sexist slam, hone = either honey or hosebag (we aren't sure), oooo doggie = that's neat, wallem' wif de hawgs = date-night Saturday at the local mud-wrestling bar, she'll rub you wif a chicken foot = she'll either put a bad voodoo spell on you or she's not choosy about who she shares her Coleman bag with, ya awnt to = do you want to, aylight = okay/alright, and a country mihl = you've walked far enough to sit down and take a rest or you should have driven. Hope we've helped.

Dear Emma & Jane: Friday night, while working the cash register at my job, a male customer belligerently exclaimed he thought I was a lesbian—as if being called a lesbian was an insult, simply because I had said I thought a certain female was attractive. Before I knew it, we were involved in an ugly debate about sexism, homophobia, and fashion models. Why is it that if a woman makes complimentary remarks about another woman's appearance it makes the speaker a lesbian? Men talk about the physiques of sports figures all the time, without drawing conclusions from listeners concerning their sexual preferences. Is this another double standard I just wasn't aware of until now? I feel that women are more confident as sexual beings than men and to compliment another female's appearance is no different than commenting about a male's attractive features. Am I missing something here?

Signed: R.H.H.

Dear R.H.H.: Ah, yet another startling example of the irregularities plaguing the colon of our wonderful social anatomy. We could go on about this for pages, but June wouldn't print it and most males wouldn't believe it. The guy who became offensive with you was only defending his masculinity. It's certainly not your problem, but his. Unfortunately, some males resent lesbians because they consider them more competition in the wide, wide world of sexual sports. Of course, this only reinforces the "women as trophies" syndrome that is so prevalent in our society. We think it's entirely acceptable for you to find and call other females attractive. Other women are attractive. We see your point about men enjoying the view while watching football and baseball games and boxing matches and we've heard males comment adoringly about the bodies of the players of these sports. And what about these sports guys who rub, slap, and generally fondle the buttocks of their teammates? Maybe we're all homosexuals or, at least, have homosexual desires/tendencies? Not a popular theory, we know, but a number of surveys indicate many men and women have either had homosexual experiences or entertained same-sex fantasies. And, what's so vital about everyone having a strictly defined sexual identity? And, who cares about the sex lives of other people? Is there any subject more boring? We look at second-hand sex talk like we look at someone else's vomit—we briefly ponder over it with remote curiosity, but neither of us really wants to get close enough to decipher its origin or to define it.

Letter To The Editor

To the Editor and the UNCW Community:

How do UNCW faculty members contribute to a sexist and thereby unproductive learning environment for female students? Have any of these things happened to you or other members of your classroom?

- Your professor overlooks your raised hand, or ignores your responses to a question, and in turn calls upon a male student.
- Your professor ignores or belittles your questions but answers in depth any questions posed by male students.
- Your professor only discusses women in physical or stereotypical terms, such as, "We could never trust a woman to be president. She'd press the red button on a bad PMS day."
- Your professor discourages you from working on topics that involve or affect women, or downgrades the value of this kind of research, as in, "Why don't you work on a real topic?"
- Your professor encourages women to occupy stereotypical roles in classroom interactions, and to set stereotypical career goals. For example, women may be expected to act as "recorders" (i.e., secretaries) in group projects, or to major in humanities instead of sciences.
- Your professor discredits the responses made by women of color or directs them towards career goals on the basis of racist stereotypes. For example, Asian-American women might be presumed best suited for mathematical fields.
- Your professor ignores the contributions of women in a particular field, or denigrates those contributions as unimportant. For example, in Political Science 101 your professor refers to Hillary Rodham Clinton as the wife of the president, rather than as an expert on health care.
- Your professor uses words like "him" and "mankind" to describe general populations of people or the "average" person.
- Your professor makes sexist, racist, or homophobic jokes on a regular basis.
- Your professor justifies his/her sexist behavior by saying something like, "I'm from the old school when it was okay to be a sexist pig (chuckle, chuckle)."
- Your professor uses a hostility towards so-called "political correctness" as an excuse to make sexist, racist, or homophobic comments in class.
- Your professor makes inappropriate remarks about your personal appearance, or touches you in a way that makes you uncomfortable.
- Your professor suggests that your good grade is contingent upon your having a personal or sexual relationship with him or her.

If any of these sound familiar, then you may have experienced sexual harassment, and you're not alone. In a recent study, 7% of boys and girls reported having been sexually harassed at school by the sixth grade. And sadly, the numbers only go up from there.

If you think you have been sexually harassed by a teacher or another student, we encourage you to take advantage of any or all of the following resources: The Seahawk (write about your experiences or those of your classmates, and send them to the Editor of the school newspaper); Dean of Students Patricia Leonard (phone 395-3119), whose office investigates sexual harassment complaints; and the Collective for Women, which provides a supportive environment to talk about women's experiences and address issues that affect women. The next meeting of the Collective for Women is a potluck on Sunday, October 9 at 5:00. For more information, call Janet Ellerby at 395-3320.

Check your Seahawk weekly for the voices of women! Better yet, be one of those voices yourself!

Signed,
The Collective for Women

Professors Study Recreational Use of Masonboro Island

Dr. Buerger and Dr. Hill phot by Sam Cathrell

BY VICKIE YEARBY
PR Intern

Dr. Robert Buerger and Dr. Jeffrey Hill of UNCW's Department of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation are assessing the recreational use of Masonboro Island for the third year. The study involves identifying the areas that receive the greatest and least amount of impact from recreational use.

Buerger said, "The main emphasis of the study is to find out what impact recreational use has on the physical features of the island, and to determine the ability of the natural processes to mitigate the impact."

Buerger and Hill completely canvas the island to discover those places where recreational use makes an impact. They found that boat landing sites ruined estuarine grasses, and vegetation sites were lost because of camping. They also want to find out how the island holds up in coastal storms.

The professors received a grant of $5266 from the North Carolina National Estuarine Reserve for their project. Buerger said, "This project is the best way to provide recreational use on the island while at the same time ensuring that activity doesn't have negative long term consequences to the island."

UNCW Leadership Lecture Series

Li Lu Leadership Through Personal Commitment

Li Lu was the deputy commander of the student demonstrations in Tiananmen Square in 1989. He helped lead over a half million students who were nonviolently petitioning the Chinese government to discuss human rights and end corruption. Thousands were wounded and killed. Hundreds of thousands were arrested. Li Lu escaped to the USA where he is currently a student at Columbia University. He remains one of two students on the "21 Most Wanted" list in China.

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

"CREF Stock Account" ★★★★★★
"CREF Bond Market Account" ★★★★★★
"CREF Social Choice Account" ★★★★★★

ISN'T IT NICE WHEN THE EXPERTS DISCOVER SOMETHING YOU'VE KNOWN ALL ALONG.

Over 16 million people in education and research know that choosing TIAA-CREF was a smart move. And now everyone else does too. Because Morningstar, one of the nation's leading sources of variable annuity and mutual fund information, has come to the same conclusion: our retirement investment accounts.

"This comfortable combination of risk and return has earned the CREF Stock Account a five star rating."

After studying CREF's performance history, Morningstar gave five stars - its highest rating - to both the CREF Stock and Bond Market Accounts, and an impressive four stars to the CREF Social Choice Account. In fact, the CREF Stock Account was singled out as having "one of the best 10 year records among variable annuities." Of course, past performance is no guarantee of future results.

"...CREF is far and away the highest variable annuity out there."

Morningstar also called attention to CREF's "rock bottom" fees—something that can really add to the size of your nest egg down the road.

What's more, TIAA's traditional annuity—which offers guaranteed principal and interest plus the opportunity for dividends—was cited as having the highest fixed account interest rate among all annuities in its class.

We're happy to accept Morningstar's glowing ratings. But since as it is to focus on stars, we'll keep focusing on something more down-to-earth: building the financial future you want and deserve.

For more information about our Morningstar ratings or TIAA-CREF, just call 1-800-843-3776.

The ratings are based on long-term results. The top 10% of funds in each class receive the highest rating. The top 20% receive the second highest rating, and so on. The bottom 10% receive the lowest rating.

Among the variable annuities recommended by Morningstar, the CREF Stock Account was 1 of 12 funds and its income to annuitants with 10 years of performance. Morningstar ranked performance of a variable annuity as one of 100 variable annuities based on total returns. CREF's performance was 10th best. TIAA-CREF's fixed and traditional annuities are not complete annuities, so they are not ranked. The CREF Social Choice Account was 1 of 12 funds and its income to annuitants with 10 years of performance. Morningstar ranked performance of a variable annuity as one of 100 variable annuities based on total returns. CREF's performance was 10th best. Handling Group And Individual Situations

BY SHEILA WALKER
Group Situations

Bright, Active, Responsive

Be well prepared. Give it to them fast, ask tough questions, don't pit yourself against them, pit them against each other.

Resistant, Antagonistic, Lack of understanding, experience and interest

Find out the cause and correct it or show sympathy for their situation if possible. If you must, face issues frankly and find one or two who are responsive. Work through their personal solution. Don't break down the stone wall with a bulldozer. Find a loose stone and break the foundation a brick at a time.

Slow, Passive

Do more telling than usual. Ask simple but provocative questions. Thoroughly explain the topic. Use effective aids to understanding. Build on what they know. Don't go too fast.

INDIVIDUAL SITUATIONS

Talk too much

Cut across his/her talk with a summarizing statement and direct a question to someone else. If he/she is difficult, get the group on your side; they'll take care of him/her.

Quick, helpful

This person has the right answers but keeps others out. Cut across him/her tactfully by throwing a question to someone else. Be sure he/she understands you appreciate his/her help. Suggest "let's get several opinions." Use him/her to summarize.

Arguer

If he/she is naturally perverse or is trying to make trouble, get him/her placed in your "blind spot" right next to you. Pretend not to hear. Of course, recognize legitimate objection and side with him/her when possible. Sometimes group will take care of him/her if he/she persists. Talk to him/her privately and ask for his/her help. As a last resort, ask him/her to drop out.

Rambler

When he/she stops for a breath, thank him/her, rephrase one of his/her statements and pass on. Refer to board and ask which topic he/she is discussing.

Obtinate

This is usually someone who does not see the point. Try to get others to help him/her see the point. If he/she is the only one, proceed and tell him/her to see you after the meeting.

Wrong subject (off-the-beam)

Direct attention to topic on the board. Say it is interesting, but would you hold it until later on?

"Gripes" on management

Tell him/her the problem is how best to operate under the present system. Try to get another reliable member to answer him/her. Don't waste too much time on management "gripes."

Has a problem of his own

Tackle his/her problem if it is pertinent. Get group opinion, then question him/her on your subject; to acknowledge worth of his/her problem and ask that it be brought up later.

Race or political question

Frankly state what you can or cannot discuss. Problems do exist, but our work must be done anyway.

Side conversationalist

Pause, let others listen to the conversation, or walk down by him/her and this draw attention to the conversation, or draw him/her into your discussion by asking for his/her opinion.

Poor voice or choice of words

His/her ideas may be good. Help him/her. Repeat his/her idea in your own words. "In other words you mean..." Protect him/her from ridicule.

Definitely wrong

If he/she is contrary to group thought "Well, that's one way of looking at it, and then go on."

Personalities

When they dispute each other make certain it is about an issue and not each other. Bring another member into the discussion. Frankly ask that personalities be left out.

Asks leader for opinion

Redirect question to the group. Don't "pass the buck". If answer is not available, say so.

Bored

Find his/her interest. Call on him/her for his/her experience.

Just wants to listen

Interested but didn't come to talk. Use direct provocative questions.

Shy, hesitant

Ask direct questions which you are sure he/she can answer. Ask for his/her agreement. Build him/her up in the eyes of the group.

Not disposed to help others

The type who would say, "It took me 20 years to find out - let him/her find out for himself/herself." Tell him/her how much the group could benefit from his/her experience. Draw him/her out on a few things. Thank him/her.

New CD Exhibits Exhibits Distinctive Southern Flare

BY J. TRENT LEONARD

Arts And Entertainment Editor

I was first introduced to the Dave Matthews Band in early June when a friend of mine that I also happened to have worked with brought one of the above titled CD to a birthday party that we were guarding (I was assistant manager at a local country club pool). I do not know where Dave Matthews hails from, but I would guess from somewhere in the southeastern United States because of his apparent southern overtures on his latest CD Under the Table and Dreaming.

This particular friend of mine also had backstage passes and saw our good friend Dave lounging quietly in the back while enjoying a few cold ones to take the edge off a long night after the show. He said that Dave was congenial and willing to talk to anyone who had a question for him. This I found astounding because at all the concerts that I have been to, none of the leading acts showed any interest in the backstage pass-holders other than to give one or two autographs.

The third track is entitled "Sate-lite," and is a hauntingly (to use a Halloween word) stunning piece of musical prowess. It begins with a guitar having its strings picked harmoniously to a sonorous beat. Matthews voice is enough to set him apart as unique in his own right, but when accompanied with the music in this song, he is astonishingly fresh and quite exquisite in his vocal range and fortitude.

The next track that makes an immediate impression is the seventh entitled "Ants Marching." It begins with a rhythmic drum beat of one whole note repeated several times and is then joined by a fiddle or two in a stirringly accented southern flare. The song, to properly appreciate its quality, must be listened to while driving down a highway. The beat, coupled with Matthews voice, gives driving an entirely new feeling. WARNING: watch your speedometer when listening to this song!

While all the tracks possess varying degrees of musical versatility, the most impressive of these is the tenth track entitled "Warehouse." It begins with an almost darkly brooding guitar being strummed and picked to initiate the main theme of the song. Later on, the fiddles pick up the beat and carry it to a new level with a rhythm that seems to draw the listener in with flare and vitality. The brooding theme is broken two or three times by an interlude of relaxing tones on a cow bell with Matthews humming and singing along until the fiddles begin anew.

The CD ends with a simple track entitled #34. It requires the CD player to skip from the apparent last track of number 11 and then proceed to number 34 slowly but surely. WARNING: do not listen to this song while driving at night; you may experience sleep and this may cause undue bodily harm to you and/or others! The track is an instrumental and produces delightful sounds with saxophones, guitars, and drums.

The Dave Matthews Band has produced an excellent piece of work and is a must have for any CD library.

Shawshank: Don't Overlook It

Recently I broke away from my usual sports writing and reviewed a movie for my dear friend and colleague Trent Leonard. This time I went and saw Shawshank Redemption at Independence 3 theatre.

Shawshank is a about the conviction and prison term of the character played by Tim Robbins (I can't remember his name). In the movie Robbins, a former lawyer, is convicted of killing his wife and her lover after catching them sleeping together. Despite pleading innocent he is found guilty and sentenced to two life sentences.

Upon arriving at Shawshank prison, which is one of the toughest prisons in the correctional system, Robbins is confronted with the realities of prison life. From finding bugs in his food to getting beat up and sodomized by the "sisters" (they ain't female either) Robbins gets a full dose of fun Shawshank style.

Eventually Robbins adjusts to his new and regrettable lifestyle and seems to find some sort of inner peace with his situation. Robbins becomes the prison financial advisor and pretty much does the tax work for the entire prison guard detail. He also helps improve the prison library by getting monetary assistance after writing to the state governor for six years. Robbins also wins the respect of his peers by getting them eyes. I actually did see a few people crying but I'm not in touch with my feminine side and I'm to damn tough for that anyway.

Overall this is certainly an excellent movie and I definitely recommend it to anybody that enjoys movies. There isn't a lot of action in Shawshank but the thought provoking messages more than make up for that. Morgan Freeman and Tim Robbins do an excellent job, in fact then only thing I somewhat regret about the movie is that Morgan Freeman's character is not explored a little more. I also like the subtle message that is included in the movie about the prison conditions, it gives the movie a little more meaning and I felt like I took more from the movie than just a good story. On the little star system I would give Shawshank Redemption four out of four stars. It's truly an excellent movie so don't overlook it.

some beer for giving some legal advice to the guard captain. Robbins also makes friends with Red, played by Morgan Freeman. Robbins and Freeman become soul mates and a large part of the movie is about their relationship and how it develops.

Finally, near the end of the movie, everything develops and Robbins' full ambitions are realized. The movie takes a surprising twist and ends in a way that should almost bring tears to your

Hip Hop Dance Style Is Happening In Wilmington

BY LESLIE LAMBETH

Staff Writer

Look Out Wilmington, here comes Hip-Hop.

No, it's not a rabbit or some sort of ultra-modern superhero. Hip-hop is a dance style that's sweeping the nation and now it's here in Wilmington.

On Thursday evenings from 6:30 PM through 7:30 PM at the Fascinating Rhythm Dance Studio (on the corner of College and Oleander), you can join these classes. For $37.00 per month, you can learn the latest dance steps. However, instructor, Jean Sexton, is only in Wilmington for a short while before he moves to New York where he has been selected to join the elite Alvin Ailey Performing Company.

"No special equipment is needed for the class," said Tina Poteste, the dance studio's owner. "Just a good pair of shoes, some endurance and the desire to have fun."

UNCW graduate Heather Spreeman, who is enrolled in the class, said, "It's a good hard workout, but at the same time you're having a whole lot of fun. It's better than any aerobics class I've ever taken." Heather also said that you might need some Ben-Gay for after class.

Student enrollment discounts are available at the dance studio. For more information, call Tina Poteste at 791-9585.

Kevin Salem's Soma City Is Energetic and Thrilling

BY J. TRENT LEONARD

Arts And Entertainment Editor

This is the corner I've been painting myself into from the time I was five years old," says Kevin Salem. "I quit working so that I wouldn't have an income, so that I would have to keep doing music until I could earn a living from it. People say, 'Oh, I was starving,'—well, I really was starving. But I got these songs out of the deal, so it's been worth it."

High stakes to be sure, but Salem's Roadrunner debut album Soma City fully justifies such talk. Sporting a dozen of the New York-based singer/songwriter/guitarist's riveting compositions, the album (produced by noted board man Niko Bolas, best known for his extensive work with Neil Young) provides a brilliant showcase for Salem's singular songcraft. Personally charged numbers like "Lighthouse Keeper," "Will," "Shot Down," "Amnesia," "Remain," "Deviner," "Ruin You," and "Forever Gone" (co-written by Salem and Butch Vig, of Nirvana/Urge Overkill production fame) combine lyrics steeped in hard-won human experience with sharp, haunting melodies and a hard-edged, garage-inflected musical attack. The latter comes courtesy of Salem's longstanding band, which features Todd Novak (ex-Dragsters) on guitar, Scott Yoder (late of New York's Blue Chieftains) on bass, Dave Dunton (of Chris Harford/Dumptruck renown) on keyboards, and Keith Levrault (ex-Blood Oranges and Roscoe's Gang) on drums. Longtime pal Syd Shaw provides harmonies on four of the album's tunes.

Salem, a native of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, first made his musical mark in Boston, where he joined Dumptruck in time for that band's acclaimed 1987 album For the Country. He remained with that band for the next three years, until the morass of legal tangles that had stalled the group's career became too frustrating to withstand. After his departure from Dumptruck, Salem relocated to New York City, where he quickly emerged as a presence on the local music scene, performing with his own band while working as a sideman with the likes of Freddy Johnston, Yo La Tengo, and Chris Harford, as well as playing on Johnston's Can You Fly, Yo La Tengo's Fakebook, and Harford's Be Headed. He also played on records by Miracle Legion and the Poob Sticks, produced Madder Rose's debut album Bring It Down and Grover's self-titled debut, and co-wrote four songs with Eric "Roscoe" Ambel for his album Lead and Lonesome.

Despite his varied musical activities, Salem remained firmly focused on his own writing and recording efforts. In 1992, working with plenty of determination and very little money, he recorded 11 songs in a variety of New York-area studios, sometimes sneaking in after-hours to lay down tracks when cash ran low. These songs were never released. Gradually, Salem's live band evolved into its present configuration, a crack ensemble that's been widely acclaimed as one of the city's most incendiary live outfits.

"Once this lineup came together," Salem states, "everything clicked and the songs started pouring out, because suddenly it felt like there was a reason to finish them. The songs recorded in 1992 were pretty much all the songs I'd ever written in my life up to that time. But by the time we made Soma City, there were so many to pick from that we pretty much picked the ones that went on the album by random. Some mornings I'd wake up early, write a new song, call the guys into the studio and hour early to teach it to them, and we'd record the song that day." Soma City was recorded in mere five days at Hoboken's Water Music, with the emphasis on energy and passion rather than technical precision. "The guitars and the rhythm section were recorded live, no headphones, no click tracks, none of the usual studio bullshit," Salem reports. "If someone made a mistake and it sounded good, it became part of the song."

In spite of, or because of, the short recording schedule, Salem and the band's performances carry all of the high-voltage punch that first led Bolas to volunteer his services. As Salem recalls, "Niko was standing outside of Browne's one night and heard us playing, and came up afterwards and said he'd like to record us sometime. While we were getting ready to do this record, he called to say hi. I told him that I'd love to work with him but that I couldn't afford him, and he said 'Don't worry about the money.' It's kind of weird to think that he squeezed us in between Billy Joel and Rod Stewart."

As for the album's offbeat title, "It's just kind of the way it was making this record," Salem explains, "being completely entranced for five days, unaware of the outside world and glad to be that way."

After years of dead ends and false starts, Kevin Salem—who can also currently be heard on Freddy Johnston's album This Perfect World—now intends to pursue his own music with a vengeance. "I just want to keep making records," he says, "As far as this being my life's work, well, I've done a pretty good job at sabotaging every other avenue that's been open to me, so I guess this is it. I'm here till somebody forces me to stop."

Trent Leonard's Trivial Pursuits

BY J. TRENT LEONARD

I was out driving to class much as I do every weekday and finally became fed up with a local phenomena that may or may not be unique to the greater Wilmington metro area: I call it the Wilmington Green Arrow Syndrome.

This syndrome should be up for study soon here at our psychology department because it seems to be attributable to mental states triggered by the changing colors of traffic lights. We have all at some point experienced the annoying older person, younger person, or for that matter my person at all of driving age sitting quietly at the traffic light in the left turn lane apparently waiting their turn. But what happens when the light eventually does turn green? The driver whether distracted or not sits motionless while still applying their brakes waiting for divine intervention to get them through the light. They get angry when someone honks at them, but what else are you to do when you are the second or third car in the line—wait patiently? I think not!

Action is required in this area! If the person in front of you is either to stupid or to ignorant to apply the gas then either honk or move them with your car/truck. Some of us have places to go and don't have all day to wait on those members of the populace lazy enough to just sit and stare at the pretty lights.

This is a point I had to bring out, but will it do any good—not unless I confront someone with this article the next time it happens!

Meanwhile in the entertainment world, another Roseanne TV movie was shown on a major network that shall go unnamed. I hope none of you were caught while scanning through the channels!

Well, that is all for this week. Until next time, do something worth while the next time you are the victim of a green arrow stooge—get out and push the car if you get stuck behind!

Pianist Ned Mills Brings Las Vegas to Wilmington

BY J. TRENT LEONARD

Arts And Entertainment Editor

Piano Follies is a fun-filled action-packed musical extravaganza! The show features four concert grand pianos and a variety of music from Andrew Lloyd Webber to Gershwin to Jerry Lee Lewis. The show includes tributes to the Roaring Twenties, the Big Band Era, the Fabulous Fifties, and a hilarious tribute to Rick Ricardo of the Love Lucy Show.

Pianist Ned Mills has performed in over twenty countries on three continents for Royal Viking, Norwegian, Carnival, and Admiral Cruise Lines. He can be seen in the upcoming motion picture Radioland Murders. Also the show's producer, Mills brings all of Wilmington's finest talent to Thalian Hall on November 11 & 12 at 8 p.m. Comedian Vic Ventura is a seasoned Las Vegas entertainer now reading in Wilmington. Not only has he performed at Caesar's Palace, the Stardust, and Circus Circus, he has also appeared on the Mike Douglas Show.

Ned Mills will be at Thalian Hall on November 11 and 12 at 8:00 PM.

Merv Griffin, and the Tonight Show. Best known for his Rodney Dangerfield impersonation, Ventura notes "I've done sitcoms for twenty years."

Choreographers Brad Moranz and

Jennifer Hammond Moranz have worked for several upcoming motion pictures including Radioland Murders, Road to Wellville, and the NBC movie Margaret.

A feature part of the show is the pianos themselves. The pianos are Ned Mills' original designs. "These are the world's first digital concert grands of their kind," adds Mills. The pianos are as entertaining as the music itself. One piano design is shaped like a 1959 pink Cadillac convertible, capable of special effects. Because of patents pending, Mills would not go into further detail. "You'll just have to see it to believe it."

An expected sellout, tickets are $10 and $12 and can be reserved in advance by calling the Thalian Hall Center Box Office at 343-3664. VIP seating is available through Brenda Venzor at 251-2591.

Seahawks Swimming into the Fast Lane

The UNC Wilmington men's and women's swimming and diving teams started the 1994-95 season on the right foot by downing a pair of Colonial Athletic Association rivals in dual meets on the road last weekend.

On Saturday, the UNCW men defeated Old Dominion, 153-88, while the Lady Seahawks posted a 138-85 victory over the Monarchs. The UNC Wilmington men took first or second place in all but one of the 13 events. Freshman Matt Allen (Lane H.S.) noisiced the first win of his collegiate career when he swam a 4:41.25 in the 500 Freestyle, the seventh-best UNCW time ever in that event. He was runner-up in the 1000 Freestyle as well, swimming a 9:50.99 to grab the fifth-place spot on the UNCW all-time list. Senior Burak Erdem picked up wins in 200 Individual Medley (1:58.19) and the 200 Backstroke (1:55.56).

The Lady Seahawks logged victories in nine of the first 10 events against ODU before exhibiting the final three. Sophomore Christal Smith was the only UNCW double winner, taking both the 200 Free (1:56.83) and the 200 Butterfly (2:14.77). Senior Karla Zick recorded a 2:13.38 in the 200 IM, beating her previous career-best of 2:13.48 as the third-best time in UNCW history. Freshman Leigh Anderson has already made an impact on the school record books by posting the fourth-best time in the 200 IM (2:13.51) and the fifth-best in the 200

Back (2:12.56).

The Seahawks remained strong at William and Mary on Sunday, with the men coming out on top, 152-53, and the women winning, 128-79. For the second consecutive meet, Matt Allen picked up a win in the 500 Free (4:47.31), while Burak Erdem nabbed both the 50 Free (22.23) and the 200 Butterfly (2:00.19). On the women's side, Karla Zick won the 500 Free (5:10.33) and the 1000 Free (10:39.04), and junior Fathom Houtz snagged first in the 100 Free (55.14) and 200 IM (2:15.78).

The UNCW teams have a two-week break in action before going on the road to face CAA foe Richmond on Saturday, Nov. 12, at 1 p.m.

Zick logged four individual first-place finishes while leading the UNCW women's swimming and diving team to dual meet wins over CAA rivals Old Dominion and William and Mary last weekend. She posted a 2:13.38 in the 200 Individual Medley at Old Dominion, beating her previous top career time of 2:13.48. The time now stands as the third-best in UNCW history for that event.

Zick also swam anchor on the 400 Freestyle Relay which took first against William and Mary.

UNCW Cross Country Runs On

Head Coach: Jim Sprecher (3rd Season)
Next Event: at NCAA District III Meet, Nov. 12, Greenville, S.C.

After a strong performance in the Colonial Athletic Association Championships last weekend, the UNC Wilmington cross country teams have a two-week respite before competing in the NCAA District III Meet in Greenville, S.C. on Saturday, Nov. 12.

With five individuals in the top 20 overall, the UNCW women grabbed a best-ever runner-up finish out of eight teams in the CAA Championships, behind 23rd-ranked William and Mary. The point differential between the two teams (41-43) was the closest in CAA history.

Senior Heather Fenton was the overall conference runner-up in the 5,000 meters with a time of 17:42.8, the top finish ever for a UNCW runner. She was second only to W&M's Marlie Homan, a four-time All-American. Lady Seahawk sophomore Shannon Williamson posted a 17:50.9, which was good enough for fifth place. For the second consecutive meet, freshman Laura Rhoads set a new freshman record with a time of 18:19.7, finishing in 11th place. Junior Tricia Callison placed 12th (18:25.2), and senior Cameron King followed in 13th (18:28.9). Fenton, Williamson, Rhoads and Callison earned All-CAA honors for their efforts.

The Seahawks men were third of the seven teams, also their highest finish ever, with William and Mary claiming the men's title as well. Senior Tim Cox was the only Seahawk in the top 20, taking eighth place with his time of 25:10.7 and earning his first All-Conference honors. Junior Jeff Tiegns snagged 22nd (26:10.1), while sophomore Thomas Coughlin came in 24th (26:13.6). Freshman Scott Howe ran a 26:45.6 to take 28th place, and senior Doug Lining was 29th with a 26:47.4.

CAA Championships Men's Team Results: William & Mary (18), James Madison (55), UNC Wilmington (93), George Mason (102), East Carolina (159), Richmond (159), American (166).

Mens Soccer Coming To A Close

Head Coach: Keith Cammidge (2nd Season)
Record: Overall (6-10-1), Colonial Athletic Association (0-4-1)

After splitting a pair of contests last week, the Seahawks return home this weekend for a pair of Colonial Athletic Association matchups to close out the regular season.

UNCW now stands 6-10-1 overall and 0-4-1 in conference play after topping Campbell, 4-2, and losing, 3-2, to George Mason in a pair of outings last week.

In the Campbell win, the Seahawks rallied from a 1-0 halftime deficit with four goals in the second period. Sophomore midfielder Steve Elliott scored two goals to lead UNCW's scoring explosion.

Against George Mason, senior forward Bucky Corban came up with two goals, but it wasn't enough as the Patriots won for the 11th time in 12 tries vs. the Seahawks.

Statistically, Corban and senior forward Joel Myers continue to lead the team in scoring. Myers has 13 goals and three assists for 29 points, followed by Corban with six goals and four assists for 16 points.

Overall, the Seahawks are struggling against CAA opponents. UNCW has not defeated a 'bagat team in the last seven tries and has been outscored this season, 27-4, by conference opponents.

UNCW will have its hands full with both the Monarchs and Eagles. Old Dominion leads the all-time series by a 3-1 margin, and American owns a 5-4-1 edge in the 10-game series with the Seahawks.

After taking on the Monarchs and Eagles this weekend, UNCW awaits word on pairings for the CAA Championships Nov. 10-13 at William and Mary.

Erik Totten's Tales From The Dumpster

I thought I might do a little NBA preview in this week's dumpster but first though, I need to talk about this little Glenn Robinson situation. Now, don't get me wrong, Glenn could be a hell of a basketball player. I watched him play at Purdue and he was actually pretty impressive. What bothers me though is this — I don't care how good you think you are, no rookie is worth 100 million dollars, the whole Milwaukee Bucks franchise isn't worth that much. I mean let's get realistic here, how did Glenn and his agent come up with that number? Can he actually believe that he is worth a 100 million dollars? If he does that's one hell of an ego that is way out of control. I mean, that's actually more than I make here at The Seahawk. I've got a good contract here at the good 'ole paper but let me tell ya baby, there's no way I'm worth 100 million, 30-75 million tops, ok maybe 80 but no more than that.

Actually, in all seriousness I think that this Glenn Robinson situation is part of the problem in many of the professional sports. What I think should be done is that there needs to maybe not be a salary cap for all players but definitely for rookies and maybe even second year players. David Stern, the NBA commissioner and Bud Selig, the acting (and I do mean acting) baseball commissioner should sit down and come up with a nice little proposal. If they want they can call and invite me too, I'd be more than happy to help those two get their crap together. So David and Bud if your listening here's what I have in mind. What I think you two need to do is come up with some sort of mandatory salary cap for rookies that is commensurate (whoa... what a vocab word) with the order the players are drafted. Say maybe 500,000 thousand for the first draft pick and 475,000 for the second pick and so on do the line. Now what this does is, it eliminates those like Danny Ferry from holding out for astronomical amounts of money when they turn out to really suck at their job. This also frees up a lot of money that can be used to pay the established players who have all ready shown that they can play the game. I think it is important though, if beginning players realize that they were going to be paid on the first two years performance they might actually try to be great players again and instead of starting in movies and casting rap albums they might practice their free throws and work on another shot other than a slam dunk (hello Mr. Shaquille O'Neal). Now I know that I'm probably not the only one who has thoughts of this so you guys get your crapola together and figure something out so the fans can watch and actually enjoy their sports again. Ok enough of that, I don't like to whine, but damn, I'm good at it.

Last week I mentioned that I thought that New York will be facing Seattle in next year's NBA finals (as long as there is no lock out). I'm going to stick with that prediction but here are a few other teams that you might want to keep an eye on. In the Eastern Conference I think New York will win it but Indiana is going to be tough. Orlando might also get off their butt and make some noise and maybe even stay in the play offs longer than the first round. I also think Charlotte is going to have a good year and LJ is definitely going to return to his previous all star form. About time he start backing up that 84 million dollar contract. In the Western Conference I think Phoenix, now with Danny Manning, is going to challenge Seattle for the division title. I also look for Portland to give it one last valiant effort with their aging veterans. Houston will have a good season but I don't think they have much of a chance to win another title.

Well, that's enough for now. In a parting note I want to remind everybody to tune into the "game of the century" Nebraska — Colorado on Saturday. My pick is Nebraska 24-21. I know my pick probably surprises all of you but I'm going out on a limb with this one, that's right Nebraska will let Colorado actually score 21 points. I also think Nebraska will once again reclaim first place in not only my poll but everybody else's too. Keep your head out of the dumpster, and on the Nebraska game and I'll see you next week.

Head Coach: Kathy McDaniel (10th Season)
Record: Overall (13-11), Colonial Athletic Association (0-4)

The UNC Wilmington volleyball team seeks to end its four-game losing skid this week with a trio of matches, including its final regular-season tournament. The Lady Seahawks wrap up a three-game road swing at Campbell on Tuesday, Nov. 1, in a 7 p.m. match. UNCW then competes in the Navy-Forrester Invitational on Friday, Nov. 4, in Annapolis, Md. The Lady Seahawks face Manhattan at 4 p.m. and Lehigh at 6 p.m. in back-to-back contests.

Coach Kathy McDaniel's club, which has lost six of its last eight matches, dropped a pair of Colonial Athletic Association contests on the road last weekend. On Friday, UNCW took James Madison to five before falling to the Dukes, 13-15, 15-5, 15-9, 10-15, 9-15. Senior middle hitter Debby Taydus led the UNCW attack with a match-high 15 kills, followed by junior outside hitter Josie Youngblood with 12. Sophomore setter Ginger Moon tallied a match-high of 40 assists and three service aces and had a team-high 12 digs.

The Lady Seahawks suffered their second loss of the week at William & Mary, 7-15, 7-15, 5-15, last Saturday. Junior outside hitter Leslie Noukela led the Lady Seahawks offensively with 13 kills, while hitting a team-best 225 on the attack. Ginger Moon racked up a match-high 14 digs to go with her 29 assists, and Josie Youngblood added eight kills and 12 digs.

Youngblood leads UNCW in kills (306) and total attempts (882), while Noukela is tops in digs with 323. Taydus has team-highs of 23 solo blocks, 56 block assists and 79 total blocks. Moon has amassed 888 assists and a team-best 44 service aces. Youngblood stands fifth on the UNCW career list with 818 kills and ranks fourth in total attempts with 2318. She is sixth all-time with 864 career digs and eighth with 88 career aces. Moon stands second all-time with 2178 career assists, and her total of 119 service aces is fifth. Sophomore defensive specialist Katy Kurt has moved into 10th place with 646 career digs.

This season alone, Leslie Noukela has doubled her career output in kills, total attempts, service aces and digs. She makes her debut this week on the UNCW all-time digs list, standing in 12th place with 642.

Mens Golf Finishes John Ryan Iron Duke Classic

Head Coach: Calvin Lane (9th Season)
Next Event: ODU-Seascope Collegiate Invitational, Oct. 31-Nov. 1, Kitty Hawk, N.C.

The Seahawks and veteran coach Calvin Lane participate in the ODU-Seascope Collegiate Invitational hosted by Old Dominion on Oct. 31-Nov. 1 in Kitty Hawk, N.C. This year's 21-team field includes the 1993 runner-up Georgia Southern. Last season, UNC Wilmington finished 14th out of 21 teams in the tournament.

Last week, the men's golf team recorded an 18th-place finish in the 27-team field at the John Ryan Iron Duke Fall Classic in Durham, N.C.

Sophomore Steve Doucet and freshman John Gaddy (Hogard H.S.) tied for 60th overall, each shooting a two-round total of 157. Senior Greg Cuthill followed in a tie for 70th with his total of 158.

John Ryan Iron Duke Fall Classic: East Tennessee State (292-301-593), North Carolina State (296-299-595), Virginia (303-295-598), Duke (304-296-600), North Carolina (305-300-605), North Florida (306-300-606), UNC Charlotte (304-306-610), Virginia Commonwealth (296-314-610), Northwestern (303-312-615), Virginia Tech (303-313-616), Georgia Southern (308-312-620), UNC Greensboro (311-310-621), East Carolina (312-

NCDOT Presents Parkway Proposal To Board Of Trustees

BY LAURA A. CORSO

Staff Writer

North Carolina Department of Transportation (DOT) Engineer Paul Koch presented a concept model of the proposed Randall Parkway expansion to UNCW's Board of Trustees at its annual meeting Nov. 1 and 2. The Board, still in opposition over the controversial issue of extending Randall Parkway through UNCW's campus, requested an alternative proposal from the NC DOT with an alternative plan on expanding Eastwood Road and Racine Drive.

The proposal Koch offered trustees entails a four-lane boulevard with a landscaped median tapering to two lanes with wide outside lanes for bicycles. Pedestrian overpasses on Randall and College were also included in the model. Faculty, staff and students were on hand to discuss and question this proposal. Campus safety was of major concern to all attendees.

In other actions the trustees considered, it was agreed to establish a model of elementary school/professional development center in conjunction with the New Hanover Board of Education.

New Hanover County Schools will build a school on property deeded by UNCW to replace the decrepit Winter Park Elementary School which UNCW students and staff will benefit from as a professional development center.

UNCW education, nursing, and psychology students will have the opportunity to gain practical, hands-on training within the elementary school.

As a professional development center, UNCW faculty will be able to attend seminars and programs to build upon their own education.

Special Assistant to the Chancellor, Mark Lanier, is confident "this plan will be of great value to the university and at no cost since it will be built by the school system."

If, for some reason, the school and center does not prove effective, the land will be returned to UNCW. The school/development center will now be presented to UNCW's Board of Governors for review.

An articulation agreement with Coastal Carolina Community College was approved, guaranteeing admission to students who have successfully completed two years of study with a GPA of 3.0 or above before applying to UNCW.

This action is part of an effort to work with community colleges, high schools, and elementary schools in the region in order to raise academic standards which will benefit UNCW.

Since UNCW exceeded its initial Capital Campaign goal of $15 million two years early, the Board agreed to raise the goal to $25 million by the university's 50th anniversary in 1997.

The Capital Campaign fund acts as a savings account to build an endowment in which the interest earned is used for development. The money can be used as needed for such purposes as stipends to attract top-notch faculty, faculty development, research and scholarships.

The Board also approved the plan for the new Student Recreation Center to be built sometime in the near future. The plan must now be presented to the Board of Governors in order for further action to be taken.

During their annual meeting, trustees reflected upon university achievements to date. The future construction of the new science building was viewed as a major accomplishment.

Construction of the laboratory facility, which will be the largest building on campus, will begin March 1, 1995. The prospective date of completion is June, 1996.

Along with the new science building, the trustees feel that the establishment of a marine science center in Myrtle Grove will have a positive effect on the university's reputation in laboratory science.

Ranking 14th in the region among US News & World Report's "America's Best Colleges" and fifth in the UNCW system for SAT scores were recognized by the board of trustees as a major accomplishment. It was considered as an incentive to work that much harder to climb in the rankings next year.

Chancellor James Leuter said, "Now the momentum is moving in the direction to strive for excellence. Our opportunities are now far greater than in the past; the growing attitudes and opportunities to attract new staff and higher quality students will bring us still further."

Trustees agreed the emphasis to excel should be on recruitment of high quality and minority students in order to become the best academic institution in the southeast United States.

The next meeting of UNCW's Board of Trustees will be held Jan. 10 and 11. Students are invited and encouraged to attend these meetings and be a part of the decisions made concerning the future of UNCW.

Five years ago a committee was formed to address the need for an on-campus childcare facility. Five years later no such facility exists.

Four years ago, $50,000.00 was allocated by the Board of Trustees for the institution of a childcare facility. Today, the money sits untouched.

Recently the University of North Carolina at Wilmington was rated fifth among the 16 schools in the North Carolina state system. However, UNCW is the only university among the top five schools that does not provide on-campus childcare.

When asked why no facility is available, Special Assistant To The Chancellor Mark Lanier said that in 1991 a committee was formed to organize a proposal for such a facility.

"They were quite indecisive. We knew we wanted a facility, however, we could not decide what the facility would offer," said Lanier. The members could not decide whether to offer strictly day-care, night-care or sick-care. Should it be infants only or only children of school age?"

A proposal was made to the Board of Trustees for an on-campus facility and after meeting the Board decided to grant the committee $50,000.

"$50,000.00 will not allow you to find a building on campus much less renovate to bring the building up to state standards," said Mrs. Aida Toplin, Chairperson of the original committee started in 1991. "Then you would have to hire a qualified staff and use whatever remaining money, if any, to maintain the facility once it is opened."

According to Toplin, the money was never spent because along with it came strict stipulations on how it was to be spent. The money was allocated for what is called a "Parents Co-op." The idea was that a facility would be built, then on a rotation basis, the parents of the children would run it.

"This is just not what we wanted," said Toplin. "The parents would have to be the ones to watch the children, and on top of going to school and working, we just felt that the idea wasn't feasible."

Currently, if someone needs childcare, assistance departments such as human resources will help them to find off campus facilities that will meet their needs.

Toplin said, "There are plenty of childcare facilities in Wilmington. Buildings off campus were even looked at as possible sites. This idea too was just not right for us. We wanted something on-campus so that on breaks parents could interact with their children. We wanted more than day-care. We wanted an educational center for our children that we, as parents, could have an active role in." Toplin recalled one on-campus childcare seeking father as saying, "I want to be able to go and have lunch with my son."

In the past year, the childcare issue has been reassessed. In a recent faculty meeting, Dr. Moss, Provost for UNCW, found that childcare was a major concern to the faculty and staff. He has since appointed a new committee whose chairperson is Dr. John Nasuti. Nasuti did not wish to comment at this time because Dr. Moss and he are to meet before the upcoming Thanksgiving holiday to discuss some new developments in this area. He did say, however that "Dr. Moss has great zeal where this project is concerned."

"I just want to be able to go and have lunch with my son."

5th Annual March Heightens Awareness Of Sexual And Domestic Violence Crimes

BY ANA DIENER

Staff Writer

Wilmington had its annual Take Back The Night March at Riverfront Park on Tuesday, October 25.

Approximately 150 men, women and children marched from Riverfront Park through downtown Wilmington chanting for women's safety. The march ended at City Hall with a rally.

As reported in the Wilmington Morning Star on October 25, the march was sponsored by the local Domestic Violence Shelter, Rape Crisis Center, Chi Omega sorority, Delta Tau Delta Fraternity and UNCW Reconnect!.

Renée Hughes of the Domestic Violence Shelter led the rally activities. Speakers included survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault.

Representative Karen Gotsdiner also spoke on the passage of several bills to help protect victims from abuse.

Music was provided by Calamity who sang about degradation of women in the media with a song about Rush Limbaugh and their empowerment with "What's Going On" by Four Non Blondes. Holly Hughes also provided a solo of Mariah Carey's "Hero."

"It was really emotional when that girl (Holly Hughes) sang," said one of the Reconnect! members. "A lot of people were hugging each other for support."

A candle lighting ceremony was held and the names of victims who had been murdered were read in remembrance.

Student Affairs

BY CYNTHIA HALE
Staff Writer

Our campus is growing by leaps and bounds. At a meeting of the Students Affairs Committee, November 1, five important issues were highlighted, each affecting each student on campus in one way or another.

The first topic on the agenda was the proposed Campus Recreation facility. Supported by the SGA and endorsed unanimously by 4 out of 8 campus councils, the proposal was going to be brought up at the November 1 meeting of the Business Affairs to seek further approval. Director of Campus Recreation, Rex Pringle, did mention that there would be a taxation of $50 per semester for construction costs on the building and a $25 charge per semester for operating fees. Comparison: Students fees at the new Gold's Gym annually - $240; at the YMCA - $180 per year.

The next item discussed was the new on-campus housing for Greek Organizations. Bill MacCartney, director of housing and residence life, said a feasibility study has shown that the campus apartments will comfortably house fraternities and sororities. Fall of '96 is the target date if the trustees give the O.K. Converting the houses would be a phased-in process not all apartments will be converted at one time.

There will be new housing for students in '96 and '97 to accommodate displaced students, and the apartments will be leased by the Greek organizations on a multi-year basis. UNCW will maintain ownership of the building. The renovated apartments will house possibly twenty people each, and the Greeks will decide what to charge live-ins for rent. Each Greek group must qualify for this housing, and have a $10,000 deposit by January 1.

Chairman of Student Affairs, Thomas B. Raybon, discussed the National Student Exchange Program. With UNCW pre-approval, a student from our campus may attend another university in the US and its territories at the UNCW tuition rate. The student must pay the housing and health fees of the other university. This a great opportunity to study a semester somewhere else. This year UNCW has students in such places as Alaska and Hawaii. We have two students on our campus from the program. One from the Midwest and one from a New England state.

UNCW has begun recruiting for next year. Decisions must be in by February and will be taken to the Las Vegas, Nevada conference. Because our campus is in such an attractive location, UNCW can pretty much control placements with other universities.

Sonja Rowe, Senior Class Vice President, stood in for SGA President Ziggy Nix at this meeting. She announced that the SGA has accomplished its budget, and passed around an allocations sheet, as well as a list of SGA's services and special funds.

Between class commitments and graduations, the SGA had many opening and has filled them with many new faces and fresh opinions. Look for good things coming from SGA.

The new Wellness Promotion Center has its focus on the positive. Debra Haywood said she wants the center to help students look at the big picture. They are singling out role models for a strong peer education program. They want to help students see how nutrition not only affect your physical health, but one's intellect and well-being as well.

The Wellness Center has a trained supervisor to give presentations in the residence halls. The topics? Anything the students call in and say they want to know about.

There is a new part-time health educator to speak at freshman seminars. Eating disorders are now getting the concentration they deserve.

Ms. Haywood did mention that the sexual assault program, Reach Out!, is now separate for the Wellness Center, as it is such an important, educational help program.

The meeting was wrapped up by James Braye, director of Career Services. Besides helping students find jobs while in school, the Center is open for career advising. They will also help freshmen decide on a major. A big focus in the meeting was the Career Services Center's Signi-Plus Computer program. This is a user-friendly system set up for students to explore their values assess skills, and pick out career opportunity interests. These computers are located in University Union 104.

Studying Smarter: Asking Questions II

TOM MACLENNAN, DIRECTOR
The Learning Center

Last week's column shared some thoughts by Walter Pauk about asking questions as an aid to comprehending textbook material. Essentially, it advised turning topical and sub-topical headings into questions.

He cautions that if you hold onto a specific question too rigidly, you run the risk of missing new and unexpected ideas and facts with by the author. In other words, by concentrating on a question too narrowly you narrow your perception.

Some readers, according to Pauk, therefore prefer to ask general questions that will elicit specific facts and ideas. Other readers enjoy conversing with the author through the use of the general question-and-answer technique. In either case, an active searching attitude is created, thus making reading an active rather than a passive activity.

Some general questions that Walter Pauk notes may be asked are:

- What does this paragraph tell me?
- What is the main point of this section?
- How does this paragraph fit in with this chapter?
- What questions might I be asked about this paragraph?
- What are the important supporting details?
- Does this example make the point clear?
- How? Can I think of other examples?

Practical readers, Pauk advises, not only ask what the author is saying, but also ask how they can use this information.

Call The Learning Center at 95-3549 for an appointment with a consultant who will show you how to apply this and other techniques to your current course work.

Next week, we will start examining various note-taking techniques.

Frank's Place Frank Tascone

Greetings once again from Frank's Place. Bob and I are feeling a little guilty today. Well, I feel guilty, Bob's asleep. That's about as guilty feeling as he ever goes. Anyway, it seems some genius read our column a few weeks ago and decided to "blow off" a paper in order to check out the Carolina vs. State football game. He's filed a complaint with university authorities claiming that my story, in which I procrastinated on a paper in order to visit friends in South Carolina and watch football, inspired him to do the same.

I guess this is part of the "society of victims" stuff I've been hearing so much about. I'm sure you've all heard about the guy who sued a bike company because they didn't tell him he needed a light when riding in the dark, or about the couple who sued a transit system because they got run over by a subway while making whoopee on the tracks. Hey, being a poor college student again, I'm all for this "big companies should be responsible for their actions and if they aren't, we can make big bucks off them thing" (Unfortunately, the poor sap seeking justice against me won't get very much for his efforts unless he wants to wrestle Bob for our commemorative "Joie and the Pussycats" lunch box collection).

I'm going to sue the Ohio State University and The Cleveland Browns football organization for psychological damages suffered while witnessing painful losses a couple of weekends ago. Of course, I'll need to demonstrate my psychological distress through some bonehead act so that the law firms of Dewey, Cheatham, and Howe, or Shaft, Shaft, and Flinagler will have some concrete evidence to build their cases on. Perhaps I can dig up some old UNCW Football Club uniforms and pads and perform blocking and tackling drills against the library reference collection. Then I can sue the SGA for keeping those old uniforms around and I can sue the library for not holding their shelves to the floor (if, by chance, the shelves are bolted I can sue because said shelves do not "give" on impact).

I think I'm going to change majors and be a lawyer. Bob agrees that I have the imaginative skills necessary for the job. I'll go on TV and say "If you've suffered injury, through no fault of your own, you're entitled to justice..." Then I'll go visit some doctors and company executives and say "If you've been sued by some limatic, through no fault of your own..." Then I'll get back on TV and say, "hey, there's just no one to blame anymore because our government has succumbed to a nation of victims and of course this is no fault of your own..." Then I'll talk to government officials and explain that they've been wrongfully accused, "through no fault of their own..."

Perhaps I can sue the evolutionists. If that primordial amphibious creature had just stayed in the ooze some odd million years ago we wouldn't have the problems we have today. Ah you creationists, don't feel you're off the hook either. I mean seven days to create a universe? Don't you think a little more time and patience should be taken for such a task?

When I get older I'll become reflective. I'll come to a realization that in some instances things happen and there really isn't anyone to blame. And when this voice of reason appeals to me, I'll be sad and I'll contemplate and regret the pain I have caused so many innocent people. And in my moment of personal anguish I'll take action. I'll right the wrongs of my life—I'll sue the law schools. After all, they perpetuate this society of victims—this environment which will have grieved me so, and through no fault of my own.

S. Bartlett Student Soliloquies

Last Friday, in three out of my four classes, we talked about it. I walked into my parent's house about 4:30 and we talked about it for a solid hour. My mom-in-law and companion called long distance, within five minutes of one another, to talk about it. Has anyone not talked about it?

Of course I'm talking about Union South Carolina's Susan Smith and her Thursday afternoon arrest for the premeditated murder of her two small sons. Although I rarely allow myself time to watch much television news, I felt compelled to not only watch, but also to switch channels to view the reports from a variety of sources. One newscaster compared the nationwide response to Smith's arrest to the country's avid interest in an endless summer of O.J. Simpson stories. Unlikely as it may seem, I was more than a little miffed by this Vincent Price-waxen-replica-of-a-human's calousness and idiocy.

What is similar between the two cases? Okay, O.J. is an African American male and Smith initially blamed an African American male, which, I should note, tells us something about our appallingly racist attitude toward African American men in our country. And don't lay that crap on me that "race has nothing to do with it" because if you believe that you're only fooling yourself and the other bigots who agree with you. Sell your twisted, cancer-coated concept of multiculturalism somewhere else, bud. What? The police didn't realize Smith's description was just "too stereotypical to believe" until after they had spent nine days shaking down every African American male within hundreds of miles of Union? I'm not a criminologist, but I recognize a steaming bucket of bull dung when I see it.

Okay, what else? Oh, yes. Two people died in both cases. Yes, I can see the similarity there. Except that in O.J.'s case the victims were adults who were capable of making choices in their lives, capable of defending themselves to some extent, and capable of comprehending what was happening to them. Since we don't know who murdered the victims in the Simpson case, we can't speculate on what their final thoughts may have been. But, we can feel pretty certain the Simpson case's victims were not thinking of their mothers sliding out of cars, halfway immersed in a filthy lake, leaving them behind to die. Does anyone out there really think a three-year-old isn't capable of understanding that his protector/comforter/provider has abandoned him? Talk to my three-year-old for ten minutes—he'll set you straight about a toddler's concept of what a mother owes her kids. Well, having discredited yet another similarity, let's move on. I can think of any other likenesses between the two cases. Except maybe the emotional fervor they cause our population. Even there, the emotions are quite different. Most people seemed either to rally to the defense or to simply react with disbelief. Everyone I've spoken or listened to speak on the subject of Smith don't seem to be offering any support. I haven't seen much disbelief (it helps to be alive since she confessed). What I've seen is rage. People want this woman dead. Smith fooled nearly everyone and many people seem angry about having been tricked, by her murder of those boys. I'm not that bit of rationalization my own and disbelief.

So, newscaster with the painted-Superman hair was wrong, right? I could have forgiven him, well not for his guest psycho's remarks. The professional explained that the Smith cab was how vital it is for fathers to call the strain on mothers, called it "team work." I can see point, but I couldn't help but feel he's lost somewhere with Bea. Who are single parents supposed to pass the child care buck to? Things get too tight? If you're right this, Doc, start reading those books about current family dynast that have been piling up on your shelf since 1959. And, the Smiths weren't living together at the time of the murders anyway, which makes (or made) Smith a single parent. Nice try, Wonderdog.

I guess what nauseates me most about this case is its Susan Smith-Diane Downs angle. You remember Downs, don't you? She is the single mom and former excellent mail carrier from Oregon who shot her three kids because her lover didn't want to be a dad. Now, there's a similarity we see disgustingly too often in America. What does this recurring criminal behavior tell us about the despicable manner in which we socialize our young women? C'mon, you little dears, you know the answer to this one. Obviously, a woman is nothing unless she has a man. She'll murder her children to get or keep the man she wants. She has no discernible identity and, as a result, no conscience. Do you see what I see?

I've batted you enough for one week. I've decided to include this subject in my "No Man is Worth It" list. Just to give you an idea of what other jows I've made to myself and joined down on this list are like: No man is sexually attractive enough to lie for, so regardless of what enters my head, he won't enter my bed without a condom (stainless steel-tipped, preferably). The others are too personal to repeat in this wiffling forum, but you get my message.

Bob Haywood Stillpoint Our Political Process /JGH!!!

I am truly fed up with our political process and my cynicism about our government being able to accomplish anything that calls for a significant change is deepening. (I apologize in advance for my political bias.) I am one who absolutely trusts the integrity of President Clinton's agenda. I genuinely believe that when he was elected to office he wanted to address the major problems he identified in our society: health care, violence, our place in the global economy, etc... He wanted things to get better for America. I

I'm fully aware that he has gotten in his own way with events in his personal history and with his political inexperience. But watching the charade in Washington from afar, has left me shaking my head over the absolute inability of politicians in both parties to get beyond party politics. It was amazingly obvious how dealing with a major social issues like health care gave quickly away to the issue of one's chances for elections in this coming November's elections. And if that isn't bad enough, consider the power of the lobbyists and all the special interest groups. The amount of leverage that a special interest group gains through financial contributions is absolutely sickening. And of course congress is unable to do anything about the reform of the legislative process that would reduce the power of lobbyists. We need to throw the lobbyists out of Washington, not sequestered congressmen. The idea of throwing new congress persons and senators into the lion's den of the influenced peddlers and power brokers of Washington, is scarier to me than trying to get congress to pass the kind of real that could free them up to be truly responsive to the needs of voters as opposed to special interest groups.

All of this leaves me with a sickening conviction that the goal of acting through political process of the health and well-being of our nation has become completely subsumed to self-interest special interests. Of course, it's all true that our elected officials do "We the people" more than would like to admit. We have very very self-centered, very focus taking care of "Me and Mine" leaving others to fend for them. We have lost that sense of civility as America that, in the past, the great social legislation has sustained so many so well worth its faults. I still believe that we are "our brother's keepers".

I would note one small sign of hope. Congressman, Charlie Rose has proposed a program for all those involved in the tobacco industry that would allow farmers to get paid well enough for their tobacco directly that they could choose to get out of the tobacco business. Such an idea probably has no more chance than a snowball in you how because it is an idea that takes sense. And as they Clinton administration has discovered, good ideas can not be turned into effective policy or legislation.

So while in my conclusion, my simple solution to another of the world's greivills? I have none. I am simply frustrated and discouraged. Any ideas? (And yes! I still voted on Tuesday.

Don't Pass The Gren Bills! Joelle Ephraim

The 103rd session of congress came to a close without the reauthorization of a myriad of environmental legislation, among them the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act. Commonly referred to as the "Superfund", first enacted by congress in 1980, it is meant to clean up hazardous waste sites. Relatively 200 sites have been cleaned up since this piece of legislation was born. However, there are currently over 1200 identified waste sites, 57 of which are national priority.

Due to loopholes in the existing act, liability (who pays the bill) has been tangled up in legalities. The Superfund has the potential to be a powerful piece of legislation, but its power lies on reforms that ensure that polluter pays as well as reforming a century old mining law that is costing this country more than the revenue it brings.

This past summer, the Houses of Representatives passed its version of the reform bill, H.R. 4916, which resembled that of the Clinton administration. The Senate version, S. 1334, emerged from the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee as a weaker piece of legislation.

It included exemption of reminders from the liability provision (who pays) of the Superfund.

Re-mining done responsibly can be environmentally sound and lead to clean up of an abandoned site. However, the way this proposed bill was written, an additional loophole was added that would allow radioactive wastes to be dumped at old mine sites. Even worse, the proposed amendment exempts reminders from liability, paying to clean up the site!

Had the Superfund been reauthorized during this year, chances are it would have been another bad piece of environmental legislation, of which we already have too many. Instead, we need legislation that will address the need of public health, not the needs of corporate America, and not the needs of those who own congress!

Is it unreasonable that companies who dump toxic waste should pay for the clean up? Should the taxpayers citizens of this country continue to pay for cleaning up hazardous waste that corporate America placed there? The Superfund expired September 14 of this year, so it will be up to the 104th Congress to reform it while making it stronger and place like where liability is due. Also up for authorization will be the Endangered Species Act, the Clean Water Act (which includes wetlands), the Safe Drinking Water Act (to drink water, don't you?)

Now time to begin our fight for the spring battle next January, so vote, write the media, and launch grassroots lobbying campaigns. Remember, you represent and representatives cannot represent you unless they know what you think!

For more information on any of the above, the Environmental Concerns Organization meets every Tuesday at 6:00 PM, Friday Hall, room 151. All are welcome—See you there!

Reader's Forum

To Robert A. Varisco, c/o The Editor, "Seahawk"

Thank you for your reply to my letter to the "Seahawk" for 10/20/94. I was beginning to think that Fern Davye had failed to excite anyone to the point where they would be willing to discuss her "place" in the university community.

In my initial reading of your letter, it was not clear to me if your purpose in writing was to discuss Fern Davye, or to ridicule me. But I threshed it a bit, and let the chaff of ad hominem sarcasm drift aside in order to get at the essence of your letter. My first point, as I understand it, is that I did my daughter a disservice by failing to bring her to hear and see Fern Davye, maybe even impeding the development of her sensuality. Perhaps I did; my daughter is sufficiently glib into the mystery of the sexual senses to have an appreciation of the power of many of the poems performed by Fern Davye—she could have handled it. In light of what "harm" these poems may hold, however, I am unconcerned with her exposure to any particular poem, however erotic. The concern that I have, and that I hoped to explore in my original letter was the cumulative effect—a figurative bombardment—of so many poems of such an explicit nature.

Would you deny the generalization that our society is preoccupied with sex? I do not, Mr. Varisco. Furthermore, I contend that this culture-wide preoccupation tends to devalue sex while dulling the capacity for fully experiencing sensory emotions. When sex is perpetually robbed of mystery and delight by trumpeting overexposure, then the sensual side of the experience is trivialized into nothing but self-indulgent gratification. In my letter, I offered for discussion the question of where Fern Davye's program fits in all this, if one believes (as I do) that something is disordered in our culture's sexual world view.

Which brings me to your second point. Your analysis of my letter is correct; there are indeed two voices speaking in my letter. But the mistake you make is in assuming that only one voice—the voice you appear to dislike—is my "real" voice. There are two "real" voices in my letter, speaking honestly from my center. (If that is a sort of schizophrenia, then I simply mirror our culture.) One voice lauds the sensuality of Fern Davye and loves her for it. The other voice wonders if she is participating in what I deem to be a culture-wide, deleterious preoccupation with sex. Sex sells these days, and it sells particularly well on campus. In addition to her artistic mission, Fern Davye is out to make a living, just like the rest of us. She has a vested interest in attracting lots of folks to her performances. I do not mean to imply any deviousness or malice on her part; it's just that the one voice in my head—a voice counterpoint to the part of me that was enthralled—wonders why the erotic has to be so emphasized. Are we in some small way allowing ourselves to be used?

Can an individual or a university contain both of these voices? I think so; that is why I wrote that I was carrying around a dialogue in my head. As for the university, its very meaning and purpose, it seems to me, relates to the notion of encompassment of all things, including divergent voices.

I suppose that is why my ultimate response to your letter is disappointed; I'm disappointed in you, and I'm disappointed in me. I am sorry that you choose not to participate further in this tiny corner of the university. The university, it seems to me, is the world of discourse. Failure to embrace dialogue relegates non-participants to the margins of the campus. You're very articulate in your reply to my letter; as you move out of conversational range your silence will articulate with equal power, only you will not be speaking about Fern Davye, sensuality, or the role of the university. Rather, you will be making a statement of disdain for thoughtful and considerate discourse.

As for my disappointment with myself, I am chagrined to find that my written words could be so misconstrued. Your interpretation of my letter makes it painfully obvious to me that I have much work to do in order to improve my writing skills; rather than clearly stating my contention over the above questions, my words seemed to have informed you that I have some restrictive, conservative agenda in mind. That is not the case.

At any rate, thanks for your response to my letter. The Seahawk is becoming more interesting all the time!

PS: Well, it's 24 hours later and I just re-read the above. My god, what a well-reasoned, gentle, but downright wimpy reply to your venomous bias of a letter! So, forget all the above: how about if I just come over to your house and whup your ass! Now, that would be some real American dialogue!

PPS: And now, Robert A. Varisco, you must read another letter that speaks with two voices—the Voice of Rational Discourse and the Voice of John Wayne! Are they both "real"? Go figure.

I would like to claim that beer has become the campus deity at all major universities in this country.

My point of reference though is the University of North Carolina at Wilmington where students chant "beer rules," or I'm drunk off my ass." I have also noticed students that sit around and discuss how drunk they got and how many beers they had before they passed out "stinking drunk." You could go into campus and/or off campus apartments where pictures and icons of students favorite poisons enhance walls and mantles.

Worship means reverence or devotion for a deity's religious homage or veneration, extreme devotion, of intense love or admiration, a title of honor. Could students admiration for beer be called a religious movement? I think a strong case could be made. Students let the pursuit of parties, where they can get drunk, guide their lives like a leashed dog guiding a blind man across a busy intersection.

This secular devotion has all the qualifications of a new religious movement for popular culture, but, is it a desirable icon to worship? Does it not treat you like a floorrag? The question to ask is: why has beer taken off as the American students favorite pastime?

You could ask a student why he or she drinks. The favored come back to this question is because "it's fun." But to have to drug you senses with beer would logically suggest that you cannot have the same good time when you are sober. Another answer to "why do you drink?" is "it's an escape from reality," or "when I'm drinking I can be myself; it's a new perspective."

These answers as well suggest that these people are suffering and need some kind of fix to "escape" the torture of existence and if drinking helps you to be yourself then the majority of the time you are living a lie and lying to everyone else as well. This should be no surprise; we know it's true that people use beer as a cure to end suffering.

Suffering is the disease of life, it is found everywhere in every person but, what causes suffering? The two noticeable forms of suffering are physical pain and mental pain. Most people drink to extinguish mental pain. Mental pain, the majority of the time, is self inflicted anxiety stemming from worries about your job, a test, your love life and what he or she thinks of you. They also emanate from more serious problems like anxieties concerning death, whether you have ever been loved or could love.

So all our lives we hanker and lament, worrying over mundane matters and depend on impersonal scholarship. As a result, we suffer. And because of suffering, there is beer. So if beer is the answer to suffering, why do we still suffer in this world?

In fact, I would contend that using beer as a means of escapism is in effect pulling you deeper into the ocean to suffering. The more you drink, thinking you are solving problems or having a good time, the more you want and need that drink. So, by drinking you become a "slave" to the cure and you worship it and chant the "holy name: Beer.

Thank you for your time,
Scott Leroux

"For the dead and the living we must bear witness"

An elevator door closes behind us. We are taken to the fourth floor, the beginning. Hundred and hundreds of people together for the next six hours, silent. Silent because there are no words that can be spoken. Because of the inconceivable horror we are being told. Because we can't understand, not one of us can understand.

This is the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, in our nation's capital. It is a remembrance of the tragedy that happened not fifty years ago. It is a gaze, a glimpse, into a past I never witnessed, not here for, and cannot imagine. As we are taken through this hall of remembrance, of horror, we pass through the lives of millions of named and unnamed women and men and children; all of these survivors; not all of them survived. We are taken on a tour through a part of the world's history—the rise and fall of a cruel and corrupt dictatorship regime, the blind ignorance and loyalty of its followers, the resistance of the enlightened, the strong, the victims, their struggles, their torture, the camps, the ovens, the abandoned homes and belongings, the exodus of a world, of our own country, as it stood by, as it all happened. And as you walk, step by step, room by room, you are changed, transformed, transported away from everything you know, everything you've ever believed and lived, and nothing, nothing makes sense.

But it does. It does, because we've seen what hatred can do. We've seen it eat away at people, maybe at ourselves, until there's nothing human left. Maybe you saw the white hoods as the Klansmen, women and children crept through the streets of downtown Wilmington a white back. But what about our lives, our daily existence? Walking through the Memorial Museum, I learned a lot about this. I learned that my whole life people have "joked" about me being "stupid" because I'm Polish. That this "joke," this stereotype, originated when the Nazis took away the education from the masses of Poles, in an effort to create an uneducated labor force. I saw the empty shoes of people ripped apart, from each other, from their lives. I listened to the news broadcasts in the United States, telling of the inconceivable exterminations, of the media, the people, not knowing what to believe.

There are millions gone. Never to have children. Never to be children. No one to carry their legacy, except those who carry their torches. And we will. I urge you, if you can visit the museum, go; but no matter, let us remember in our minds and in our hearts what took these people from us. Let us carry their memory. And in our words and in our actions let us never again perpetuate what it was that took them. Empty shoes and barbed wire, clouds of smoke and early graves. This is where prejudice can lead.

Advice to UNCW's Weary by Emma And Jane

Well, faithful readers, it's that time of the week again. Time for us to try and help the clueless find some sort of direction for their lives (However challenging that task may be). We are doing everything we can in order to improve the mental, spiritual, and social well-being of our fellow students. However, we can't abuse you publicly unless you write to us. So, if you are having some sort of emotional crisis and are in need of some guidance; or, if you are just so obnoxious that you have no friends, then write to us at UNCW PO Box #24085.

Note to the advice column impaired: It seems that this week, several of you have questions that relate to one another, so we thought we would try to answer them in one response. We hope our concept of peace through unity will not make it too hard for each of you to decide which answer goes with which question.

This week's intellectual prod:

The power of accurate observation is commonly called cynicism by those who have not got it.

George Bernard Shaw

Dear Emma and Jane:

I need some advice, and I thought maybe you two might actually be able to help me. I'm in one of those freshman survey courses that has about 150 people in it. The other day, we got ready to take a test and I saw at least two people take out cheat sheets. I wasn't sure what to do about it. I didn't want to go to the instructor, because I don't know these peoples names. Besides, if I saw two people from where I was sitting, I am sure there were many more I couldn't see. It wouldn't bother me nearly as much, except that I studied for several days before the test. And, in this class we are graded on a curve, and the grade I make is directly related to the grade everyone else makes. I'm really confused. Could you please help me out?

Signed: Feeling Cheated

Dear Emma and Jane:

I am in my sophomore year here and am enjoying it very much. I love learning and being exposed to new ideas and ways of thinking. I am really excited about reading Whitman, Chopin, and Chaucer. However, when I went home for fall break something very surprising happened to me. I was out with some of my old friends from high school, and we started talking about the kinds of books we like to read. They were talking about authors like Stephen King and Sidney Sheldon. When I told them those books were alright, but that they were nothing compared to some of the literature I had been reading at school—they told me I was an elitist. I don't understand why my considering Hamlet more stimulating than Hollywood Kids, by Jackie Collins, is elitist. I thought everyone considered the classics to be on a different level from pop fiction. If this is not the case, then why am I going to college? Why not just be satisfied to work at Burger King until I am 65? Why should I be ashamed or embarrassed about my appreciation of literature?

Signed: An Elitist

Dear Emma and Jane:

I can't believe this is happening to me. I am failing my history class. I know what you're going to say, but the problem is not that I don't study. I do study and I know the material. The problem is my professor counts off points for every misspelled word. This means even when I get the right King of England, I might lose half of the credit for that question because I did not know how to spell the King's name. I could understand if this were an English class, but this is history. Do you think this is fair? I mean who out in the real world really cares if I can spell Charlemagne anyway?

Signed: Sam

Dear Cheated, Elitist, and Sam,

Or, as we see you, Larry, Curley, and Uncle Joe. All of you seem to be suffering from closely related problems. However, only two of you are victims; the other is contributing to The Cause.

We understand how challenging it is to keep up with your classes and we know you sometimes feel overwhelmed. But, while the temptation to cheat is great (especially in a class the size of the one that Cheated is in), you should know better. Just remember, you won't be capable of making your friends and relatives feel like imbeciles at this year's Christmas party unless you have your facts straight. So, blow off the stinking, lying, non-studying, moral-less cheaters in your class and hold your pointed little head up high. If you are unable to cope with the cheating, perhaps your professor should be clued into the problem. You can accomplish this without pointing any fingers. (We wouldn't want you to get slapped around after class by an angry mob of intellectual thieves.) We do caution you to remain aloof of your cheating classmates, lest you also be implicated when/if they are caught.

After that bit of advice, many of our readers are probably thinking we are elitists and... it's true. If you think having pride in your accomplishments is elitist, then we certainly accept the label with limited humility. We work hard and make sacrifices in our personal lives to earn high grades, and we don't see anything wrong with exposing our intellectual superiority. How screwed up is a society that denigrates people who attempt to better themselves through education? Well, some people needed a news release to make them realize Ronald Reagan has Alzheimer's—that tell you anything? What would be the point of getting a college degree if everyone could figure out stuff like that on their own? Moreover, our society seems to advocate a common misconception which states: If you are smart and make others aware of your intelligence, you are egocentric or elitist. Someone who is driven and actually studies to earn decent grades probably has no life and no hope of obtaining one—so what do they care what their imaginative peers think anyway? Whatever happened to the good old days in academia when bright people, like us, were encouraged to make other people feel inferior without feeling guilty about recognizing their own cerebral superiority?

Finally, does anyone want to admit they are like Sam, who complains about having to know how to spell? Did it never occur to you that learning how to spell correctly could affect more than your history grade? How about filling out graduate school (Har-de-har-har) or job applications? Get a clue Sam—I am, language creates reality—yours and ours. Without a working knowledge of our spoken and written language, you will find life after college more difficult than eating an F in history. (We gotta know, are you one of those people who picks most of their courses simply because someone told you the instructors give only multiple-choice tests?) If you're satisfied with your illiteracy, just sign your "X" on the bottom line of a withdrawal slip and open up a spot for someone who gives a damn.

Wake up people, only the smart survive!

Tanks And Guns Will Never Kill

BY SPENCER WILLIAMS

Staff Writer

Picture this: You and all of your fellow UNCW students (about 8,400), had come together in protest on Brooks Field. Now, imagine that UNCW students were only one corner of nearly half a million students, all gathered to protest the largest Communist government in the world, China.

A speech given last week was the second part of a lecture series sponsored by the UNCW Leadership Center. The lecture series, Leadership for the 21st Century, was hosted for this event by Li Lu.

Lu, a survivor of the June 4, 1989 massacre at Tiananmen Square in Beijing, China, said about the student demonstrations, "It starts with a very simple determination."

Lu, now 28, is continuing the struggle of his fellow students, by speaking to audiences about his experiences at Tiananmen Square. Lu was one of the deputy commanders in charge of overseeing the health and safety of 3,600 people involved in a hunger strike which lasted for more than a week.

An audience member asked Lu about his feelings toward the poor voter turnout in American elections. Lu responded by saying, "We were ready to die for the right to vote and speak freely. And to my great dissolution, people [Americans] don't take that freedom seriously."

In discussing the leadership and determination expressed at Tiananmen Square, Lu related one of the popular student slogans, "I want to live like a real human being."

Another popular slogan Lu said the students used echoes America's Patrick Henry the audience is, "Give me death or give me freedom." He tied that quote to the actions of the student who stood in front of the oncoming column of tanks in order to stop their progress. Lu commented on how that student was ready to die for what he believed and how a whole generation stood behind that student, all ready to die for their beliefs.

Lu spoke about the march out of Tiananmen Square and how his feelings of failure stemming from what the students began to feel of hope when a student said, "A movement of this kind never has an end."

Lu closed his speech by re-emphasizing how the protestors remained non-violent throughout the demonstrations in Tiananmen Square and the importance of non-violence in seeking effective change. Even though violence was used against the demonstrators themselves, Lu said, "Tanks and machine guns will never be able to kill an idea."

Space Adventure in Egypt Works—But Not Always

BY CARYN JAMES

New York Times News Service

There are almost as many plots in Stargate as there are characters, but the idea behind the movie is simple: space adventure in ancient Egypt. It works better than you'd think.

For kids, there are relentless special effects, from a spaceship that looks like a flying pyramid to spears that turn into rocket launchers. For adults, there is smartly designed parallel universe that echoes the Egypt of old Bible movies, and the appearance of Jaye Davidson (The Crying Game) as the sun god, Ra.

Try to imagine him vowing around a party at the Temple of Dendur and you'll have the right image. Juggling all this makes Stargate move more slowly than any action movie should, but it has plenty of enticing moments.

The story begins in Giza, Egypt, in 1928, when archeologists discover a large stone wheel with mysterious symbols carved on it. Leaping to the present, we see James Spader as an Egyptologist, Dr. Daniel Jackson, being laughed off the podium when he suggests that the Egyptians didn't build the pyramids. He doesn't know who did build them, but the answer is lurking in outer space.

Jackson is recruited to work on a project deciphering the symbols carved on the stone, and he discovers that his object is a stargate, a portal to another world. When he translates the seventh symbol on the wheel, its center turns into a curtain of shimmering, watery light and the film takes off into a sequence that includes its best special effects.

Along with a military contingent led by Kurt Russell as Col. Jack O'Neill, Jackson walks through the stargate and is sent whizzing through a dark tunnel, emerging among the stars and landing on a planet that looks like Egypt.

That planet has three moons shining in daylight, a vast desert dotted with pyramids and a slave population dressed like Bedouins, the obvious builders of the pyramids and ours.

There is also a breed of mysterious animals resembling camels with shaggy hair extensions and a language that takes Jackson a while to figure out. When Jackson gives a native a candy bar, the reaction sounds a lot like "bunny wah." (Occasionally the language is translated by subtitles.)

There are laughable holes in the plot. Before going through the stargate, Jackson is asked if he's certain he'll know how to get back. He says yes and no one asks him how, which raises a red flag for anyone who has ever seen a stranded on-a-distant-planet movie.

But Spader holds this film together. After a series of armchair roles (like the junior in Wolf), he seems to relish playing a sincere guy. With his wiryrimmed glasses and blond hair hanging in his eyes, Jackson looks like a befuddled graduate student lost in his work. Russell has a smaller part, as the military leader with the brash cut and a risky secret mission.

The uneven Stargate may not appeal to adults who don't already have a taste for this kind of science fantasy. It borrows too much from other films, some as good as the Indiana Jones trilogy and others as flat as Dune. And the story is bound to be confusing for children.

But Stargate is a clever adventure that should find its audience.

Warren G Strikes Chord All His Own

BY J.D. CONSIDINE

The Baltimore Sun

Warren G's approach to making records is fairly straightforward. "I try to do stuff different from everybody else," says the soft-voiced 23-year-old over the phone from a tour stop in Miami. "I put lyrics, rap lyrics, to music that all people wouldn't usually put lyrics too, you know what I'm saying? That's basically it."

Sounds simple enough, doesn't it? But there must be more to it than that, because G Funk—Warren G's term for the supple, bass-heavy hip-hop style he specializes in—has clearly struck a chord with rap fans around the country.

His debut, Regulate...G Funk Era, dominated the charts this summer, putting two singles in the top 10 so far. "Regulate" and the current "This D.I." Moreover, the G Funk juggernaut shows no signs of slowing, a success story that has made Warren G the hottest rap producer his side of Dr. Dre.

Of course, the irony in all that is that Warren G (born Warren Griffin III) is Dr. Dre's younger half-brother. Moreover, Snoop Doggy Dogg, whose drawing, laid-back delivery and much of the juice into Dre's The Chronic, started out working with Warren and singer Nate Dogg in a trio called 213, back before Long Beach, California, was considered a hip-hop hotbed.

Ask Warren what sparked the Long Beach boom, and he just laughs. "Me hooking Snoop up with Dre," he says. Snoop had cut a demo called "Super Duper" but couldn't get anybody at a record company to listen to it. So Warren slipped a copy of it to Dre, and his older brother was blown away by what he heard.

"Then they seen how talent was jumping off, so all these other record companies started stepping in, trying to get people from Long Beach," says Warren.

Although Snoop Doggy Dogg teamed up full-time with Dre (who produced Snoop's Doggystyle debut), Warren G decided to avoid the "little brother of..." tag and make his own way through the music business. Not only did he produce Regulate...G Funk Era himself, but he also built the album around a sound totally different from Dre's razor-sharp aesthetic.

Funk falls between the sampled sound of modern rap and the live music approach favored by the old school. "I create my own music, and I create my own sound," Warren says. "I do my original music, plus I'll use a sampler in a minute, because it ain't no thing to me."

Even though he isn't a schooled musician—"I can play the keyboard a little bit," he says, "but my main thing is working that drum machine"—Warren has no trouble getting musicians to understand what he wants. "I tell them everything I want," he says.

As for subject matter, Warren felt that simple self-expression would be sufficient. "I just decided I wanted to talk about things that I went through when I was growing up, you know what I'm saying?"

That didn't mean glorifying gang-banging or getting into trouble, though. Even though the song "Do You See" finds Warren admitting that he's flirted with trouble when he was younger, the heart of the rap has to do with how he found a positive direction through his love of music. Could it be that Warren G sees himself as a bit of a role model?

"Yeah," he says, with a chuckle. "I don't want them to look at me as a criminal. I want them to look at me as a good person. Don't you? I don't know nobody that wants people to look at them as a bad person."

Awkward Eroticism, Extras in Underwear—Exit The Audience

BY JANET MASLIN

New York Times News Service

For times when a 900 number isn't enough, there's always Exit to Eden, an sadomasochistic porno-comedy with a lingerie fetish as big as all outdoors. Here's a film that insists on scrambling eroticism with humor, even if most people think sex is better when nobody's laughing.

Having made prostitution look good in Pretty Woman, Garry Marshall takes on the greater challenge of a 1985 novel Anne Rice, who wrote under pseudonyms (in this case, Anne Rampling) when dealing with subjects like naked slave auctions, bondage and bisexuality.

However tempted Marshall was by that material, he sure isn't comfortable with it. Neither is anybody else in Exit to Eden. Just watch the extras fidgeting their way through the movie's awkward party scenes, which suggest the world's first X-rated bar mitzvah, complete with ice sculpture. Those extras are dying.

No wonder: Exit to Eden is an incredible mess, a movie that changes gears so often and so nonsensically it seems to have been edited in a blender.

The most obvious problem is that in a screenplay by Deborah Amelon and Bob Brunner, there are two different films at war. One of them turns Rice's graphic story into a watered-down sexual sitcom, a kind of "Dirty Love Boat" in which hinting about kinky sex becomes one more vacation sport, right up there with Ping-Pong and roller skating.

You will be reminded of sincere nudist-camp documentary scenes in which everyone pleasantly plays volleyball.

Rice's sex slaves are now heterosexual "Citizens" and often the subject of silly jokes. ("Citizen Julie, report to the sticky bum booth.") All this fun is presided over by Mistress Lisa (Dana Delany), who dresses as Bondage Barbie but looks as if she couldn't beat an egg white.

Indeed, the film's only real cry for whips and chains comes when Lisa begins revealing that she is actually a sweet, romantic, old-fashioned girl who fell into this line of work almost by accident. All the Civil Service jobs must have been taken.

Shoehorned into this story is something about an international diamond-smuggling ring and two Los Angeles police detectives, Sheila (Rosie O'Donnell) and Fred (Dan Aykroyd). In a plot that's not Rice's fault and can be generously called demented, Sheila and Fred chase the smugglers and have no choice but to make and undercover visit to Eden, an S-and-M island sex club off the coast of Mexico.

They speak for couch potatoes everywhere as the register both horror and voyeuristic curiosity over what they see.

O'Donnell's performance deserves a Purple Heart. Bravely storming her way through a queasy, unfunny story, she delivers enough wisecracks and voice-over witticisms to paper over the movie's worst embarrassments.

Though the Fred-Sheila subplot is so transparently tacked on to the rest of film that it requires loony editing transitions, it's still a big help. And O'Donnell, a walking sight gag in black leather regalia, is good sport enough to make the best of Sheila's down-to-earth attitude.

Paul Mercurio, the Australian actor who danced his way through Strictly Ballroom, lands the role of Elliot, the photojournalist who inexplicably signs on for a stint at Eden and becomes Lisa's favorite new recruit.

Mercurio is athletic and personable, but the best explanation for his casting is what the film, which avoids graphic language along with graphic anything else, might call his trash.

Mercurio's only real acting challenge seems to be knowing how alarmed to look when he's given the first little smack with a hairbrush.

Acting isn't exactly the point here, anyhow. Delany, and utterly humorless performer stuck in the midst of an alleged comedy, looks good in cast-metal costumes and could at least make her own exercise video. Aykroyd is almost as helpful as O'Donnell, even if he has to mug his way through a ha-ha hernia exam.

Hector Elizondo plays the wealthy character who sends Elliot to Eden, for reasons nobody could possibly explain. Inasmuch, the model (as opposed to the actress-model), looks foxiest and scariest in lace-up vinyl. Only she sounds snappish enough to suit the S-and-M atmosphere.

Exit to Eden includes a couple of sex scenes, one involving butter, cinnamon and a painful Last Tango in Paris reference. It also includes brief nude scenes of Delany and Mercurio, but most of it is remarkably serious.

Horoscopes

BY MADAME ILYANA

Your Resident Psychic

Scorpio October 23-November 22

Even though being possessive is a way of life with you, now is the time to resist those urges. Throw yourself into your work now and your exams will be a breeze.

Sagittarius November 23-December 20

You want something very specific right now (good grades maybe?). Use your charm to get what you want. Try not to let your impulsiveness get in the way.

Capricorn December 21-January 19

As usual, you've got your head on straight. It's okay to party this weekend. Don't be overconfident; it can cause you problems.

Aquarius January 20-February 18

Pay attention to what you are doing! Moving with the crowd isn't always the right thing to do. Be as spontaneous as possible!

Pisces February 19-March 20

LIGHTEN UP! The fascinating exams are not going to kill you. Don't forget what's important but don't forget to have fun either.

Aries March 21-April 20

Don't hold a grudge. Let your inner strength work for you. Things are confusing now, but you'll get what you want in the end.

Taurus April 21-May 20

You've got your eyes on your target. Be careful of who you step on the way to the top. Listen to what other people have to say, because there can be more to one right answer.

Gemini May 21-June 20

You're going to have to buckle down for awhile and concentrate on your work. You can make time for everything. Speak your mind and hold your ground; you'll be glad you did.

Cancer June 21-July 20

It doesn't matter what others say. Do what makes you happy and your real friends will stick with you.

Leo July 21-August 21

Everyone is entitled to their own opinion, so don't try to force yours on others. Be independent but be tactful and maybe someone will let you copy the notes you missed in class.

Virgo August 22-September 22

You are appreciated. Let others know how you feel. Forget about work for now and concentrate on other endeavors that can hold your attention for longer than a few hours.

Libra September 23-October 22

Once you really believe in what you're doing, working hard for it won't be a problem. Showing your feelings can help you get what you want.

Generalleutnant Walter Krupinski, Born: Donau, East Prussia, Date: November 11, 1920, Awards: Iron Cross 1st, 2nd Class, Knight's Cross, Oak Leaves

Walter Krupinski, nicknamed "Graf" or "Count Pinski", scored 97 aerial victories during WW II, flying combat against Russia and the Western allies. He flew over 1,100 missions and never lost a wingman. He was a principle combat instructor, and was the teacher of Erich Hartmann, the greatest fighter ace of all time. He flew with G-52 on the Eastern Front, scoring 56 kills and the Ritterkreuz (Knights Cross) by late October, 1942. He was shot down a couple of times, and crash landed on every one, never bailing out. Promoted to Captain in 7/IG-52 in spring of 1943, and on July 11, 1943 shot down his 90th opponent. On this day he shot down 11 Russian fighters in four missions. Krupinski was transferred to I/JG/5 and later to II/JG-11 on the Western Front, battling the American bomber streams from bases in France. He held positions of Steffelpilota and Gruppen Kommandeur until posted to III/JG/26 Schlager flying Fw-190's. Adolf Galland personally recruited him for his IV-44 in March 1945, and flew into history as one of the first jet pilots in the Messerschmitt 262. He was captured by the French after the war, and handed over to the British. When Konrad Adenauer recreated the Bundesluftwaffe in 1955, Krupinski was recalled to duty, having spent the years after the war with Organization Gehlen. Krupinski will not discuss those activities, not even to me, when I interviewed him. "That is still Top Secret, and I gave my word," he said with a smile. Walter Krupinski served Germany until 1975, when he retired as a Lt. General, and Inspector of Fighters. He replaced General Hannes Trautloft in that capacity in 1971. Krupinski comes to America frequently, and performs seminars with his old comrades. He is a jovial man, with a deep sense of honor, and I am proud to have him as a friend along with many of the other great Luftwaffe aces.

Colonel Robert S. Johnson, United States Air Force, World War II Ace, Europe Born: Feb. 21, 1920, Lawton, OK.

Robert Johnson developed an interest in aviation as a boy, when he saw an air demonstration with his father. He decided that the sky was for him. He finished high school and attended Cameron College, now called Cameron University, majoring in engineering. He played football, boxed and even borrowed money from the Dean of the college to pay for flight lessons. He had been flying since he was thirteen, but wanted to get his license. After enlisting in the Army Air Corps, he was stationed in England flying P-47 Thunderbolts. Assigned to the 56th Fighter Group under Col. Hub Zemke, he scored his first victory, an Fw-190 in April 1943, but received a reprimand for violating every rule of aerial combat. Flying bomber escort, strafing enemy air fields and fighter sweeps were the routine. His pilots flew against some of the best Germany had, in the two Geschwaders (squadrons) of JG-2 and JG-26. These Luftwaffe pilots had in many cases flown combat for three years or more, several with a hundred victories worth of experience. Johnson and his fellow pilots, unlike their adversaries, were flying over enemy territory. The Germans, if shot down were back in the air unless killed or wounded. Captivity or death were the only options to the men of "Zemke's Wolfpack." One of Johnson's kills was a Fw-190 flown by Luftwaffe 206 victory ace Hans Phillip. He saw a pack of Germans rising to intercept, so he rolled over on his back, concentrating a burst into the lead German. He discovered after the war who his victim was. With his rudder cable shot away, and the aircraft heavily damaged, he nursed his "jug" home, landing on another unit's air strip. On June 26, 1943 his plane was so badly shot up he was lucky to be alive. He had taken 2120 millimeter shell hits, and over two hundred 7.92 millimeter rounds. One bullet nicked his nose, another struck him in the right leg. The bullet was split in half, entering just under the skin. He still has those pieces, as a reminder. Robert Johnson flew 91 combat missions and scored 27 aerial victories, with 7 unconfirmed. After breaking Captain Eddie Rickenbacker's World War One record, he was sent home on May 8, 1944. Had Johnson flown longer combat, he may well have been the Allies top ace of WW II. After the war he spent almost twenty years with Republic Aviation, the producer of his trusted P-47, as a liaison and technical representative. When Republic was purchased by Fairchild, he started a third career in the insurance and securities business. Today he is good friends with many of his wartime pilots, including his Luftwaffe adversaries. The late Erich Hartmann, Adolf Galland and Gunther Rall are among some of his closest personal contacts. Today Robert and Mrs. Johnson are retired and live in Lake Wylie, SC. It has been a privilege for me two have had contact with him. He truly exemplifies the hero and the gentleman, who never questioned duty to his country.

Being Safe In: The Holiday Seasons

BY COLIN D. HEATON

Staff Writer

We survived Halloween, the transplanted ritual from the Old World denoting All Souls Day, when the spirits walked and preyed upon the living. However, there are spirits which stalk the innocents during the holiday seasons, and these are called criminals. There are several ways to protect yourself from becoming a victim and a statistic. Here are a few covering various situations. First, when driving to do your Christmas shopping, try to park as close to the entrance of a store and in the brightest light possible, if shopping at night. Women should try and take a trusted male companion along, or travel in groups of two or more for safety. Always keep doors locked whether driving or vacating the vehicle, and engage your car alarm if you have one. Only the most determined professional will try and get around such a system. Place packages in the trunk out of sight, and keep purses on the floor board of the car when driving. If using credit cards, obtain all carbons and destroy them, this protects the upper class white collar criminal from getting your account information. Keep track of your check books and credit cards, not all merchants diligently check I.D.'s when making a sale to a person making large purchases, especially during the high grossing season. Report all losses of credit cards and check books immediately, and never loan your credit card to anyone, they may lose it for you. If traveling, follow a time table, and plan your route to the finest detail, and frequently stop to call your destination, updating your location and estimated time of arrival. This helps locate you in case of a break down, or worse. Drive according to conditions, and keep your car mechanically maintained, right down to the tire pressure. If purchasing toys for children, ensure to check the suggested age on the item, and see that it has the Good Housekeeping seal, or another approved safety label. Check clothing items and toys for fire retarding labels. Follow the guidelines published in Seahawk previously for fire safety, especially during the Christmas season when lights are the fashion, and fireplaces warm the home. Keep doors locked and porches lighted, use exterior lights if you have them. Burglars prefer darkness. Contact the Campus Police for further tips on holiday safety. Using common sense can ensure a safe holiday season, but above all else, remember what the season stands for. Be good to each other, and let's all return next semester safe and sound, with memories of a wonderful holiday season with friends and family.

Being An Indian In North Carolina

BY COLIN D. HEATON

Staff Writer

On November 1 UNC-Wilmington's History Department and Assistant Professor David LeVire presented Mr. Richard L. Welch, council member of the Yellowhill Cherokee Community and editor of the Cherokee One Feather Tribal newspaper. Mr. Welch entertained questions after his seminar, which was held at the Cameron Auditorium. The main topic was Indians in North Carolina, particularly the modern day Cherokee Nation. A concise history of the Cherokee people, insight into the advanced civilization which existed long before contact was made with the Old World was insightful. Valid points were made, in particular the neglect of most education systems outside the reservations proper to instruct students as to Indian culture and history. "Many tribes have lost their identity, and their language, in the process losing their identity. We of the Eastern Band of Cherokees strive to educate and enhance our history, culture and historical contributions made by our people in American history, long before there was an America," stated Mr. Welch. He also described the removal of the Cherokee during the famous "Trail of Tears," when all but eighty eight Cherokee were taken to Oklahoma Territory in the 1820's and 1830's. Today, both Cherokee factions have united to promote their Nation, as have many other native American tribes in the United States. It is also interesting to note that in every treaty engaged with the native Americans, it was the white government who broke nearly all of them, violating the good faith clause inherent in any negotiation. "The Cherokee had a lively local economy, political system and educational form adapted from their culture which was in existence at the time of the Roman Empire," stated Mr. Welch. "It is important for us all to know from where we come, and take pride in our heritage, regardless of the color of our skin. Racism has no place in a civilized society, and racism was not practiced by the Cherokee. That came from the Old World, and is still felt even to this day, whether it is openly acknowledged or not," he said. Good point. Mr. Welch invited anyone who believes that they may carry a Cherokee heritage to contact him at the Tribal Newspaper, and for a $100.00 filing fee, they can verify the authenticity of lineage through tribal and federal records.

Basketball Begins With A Bang

BY ERIK TOTTON
Sports Editor

The UNCW women's basketball team opened its 1994-95 exhibition season Saturday afternoon at Trask Coliseum against the Charlotte Royals AAU club. Despite 76-50 loss, Seahawks coach Susan Yaw saw some things that she thinks the team will be able to build on.

"I thought tonight's game was part of a process that we needed to happen," she said. "This was our first time playing full court this season and I think the girls, especially the freshmen, needed the experience of playing in an actual game."

With the recent dismissals of three players, the Seahawks had only eight players available for the game. The starting lineup included two freshmen who were impressive in their home debut, guard Toni Esposito (eight points, four assists) and forward Stacy Cantley (11 points, seven rebounds). Senior guard Hannah Grady added 11 points and a game-high eight rebounds.

In the first half the Seahawks shot only 19 percent from the field but improved to 43 percent the second half. The Royals hit 49 percent of their shots from the floor. Free-throw shooting was bright spot as the Seahawks made 17 of 22 attempts for 77 percent.

The UNCW men's team also opened their exhibition season Saturday night against the Charlotte Royals. Former UNCW player Antonio Howard made a return to Trask Coliseum as a starting guard for the Royals and new Seahawks head coach Jerry Wainwright made his home debut.

More than 2200 people were on hand to see the Seahawks defeat the Royals 94-48. Wainwright's offense featured a faster pace than last year, 11 players scored in the game and the defense held the Royals to 34 percent field-goal shooting, but the new coach saw room for improvement.

"We played a very good offensive game, but I thought we were a little soft defensively," Wainwright said. "We tried to emphasize taking the open shot and by and large I was pleased with our shot selection."

Returning players are looking forward to playing under a new system that emphasizes offensive rebounding and a strong transition game.

"We all felt really fresh and it showed towards the end of the game and in the final score," said starting senior guard Chris Meighen, who scored eight points in 24 minutes.

When asked about playing under Wainwright's new offense, Meighen replied that "I felt really good — everybody filled the lanes and I thought we ran the floor well."

Senior forward Corey Stewart, who led all scorers with 15 points, is also eager to get started with the new season. "I think we can be a good up-tempo team," he said. "It just takes a lot of practice and that's something we work on every day."

Both players said the team needs to work harder on defense.

Along with Stewart, three other Seahawks starters scored in double figures, including junior center Darren Moore with 13 points and a game-high 10 rebounds. Kenny Avent and Bill Mayhew came off the bench with 10 points each.

The Seahawks play their final exhibition game Nov. 21 when they take on Spartak-Ukraine at 7:30 p.m. at Trask Coliseum. The regular season gets under way Nov. 26 when the Seahawks play host to Coastal Carolina.

This article was previously printed in the Sunday Star-News for November 6, 1994. Erik Totton was covering the game.

UNCW Athlete of Week

Ginger Moon
Sophomore Setter
Gaithersburg, Md.

Moon collected 236 assists, averaging 10.73 per game, in sparking the UNCW volleyball team to a 5-1 record last week, including the championship of Navy's Forrestal Invitational in Annapolis, Md.

The Gaithersburg, Md., product also tallied nine service aces, 48 digs, 10 blocks and 26 kills to help the Lady Seahawks post five straight victories. Moon currently ranks second on the all-time career list in assists (2,414) and fifth in aces (128).

WOMEN'S SOCCER

Head Coach: Keith Cammidge (1st Season)
Final Record: Overall (4-12-0), Colonial Athletic Association (0-6-0)

The UNC Wilmington women's soccer team closed out its inaugural campaign Sunday with a 9-0 loss at home to Colonial Athletic Association foe James Madison, which was ranked ninth in the ISAA Central Region last week. The Lady Seahawks end their first year of competition with a 4-12-0 mark overall, 0-6-0 in the CAA.

In the regular season finale, UNCW managed only two shots against a stingy JMU defense. Freshman midfielder Beth Fincher and senior defender Dori Schofield had one shot each. Freshman Jaime Betts started in the nets for the Lady Seahawks, collecting 10 saves.

Freshman forward Margaret Merrill finished as the scoring leader with five goals and two assists (12 points), starting all 16 contests. Beth Fincher, also a starter in every match, ranked second with two goals and a team-high four assists (eight points). Junior forward Joanna Walker had three goals and one assist (seven points).

Freshman goalkeeper Isabel Bordo (New Hanover H.S.) saw time in 10 games, starting eight, gathering 72 saves, one shutout and a goals against average of 5.33. Betts started in the nets eight contests, tallying 49 saves and a 3.41 GAA.

VOLLEYBALL

Head Coach: Kathy McDaniel (10th Season)
Record: Overall (18-12), Colonial Athletic Association (0-4)

The UNC Wilmington volleyball team returned to its winning ways last week, picking up five consecutive wins, including the championship of Navy's Forrestal Invitational in Annapolis, Md.

Coach Kathy McDaniel's squad improved its record to 18-12 overall and wraps up regular season this week with a pair of matches.

On Tuesday, Nov. 8, UNCW plays its final home match against Coastal Carolina at 7 p.m.

The Lady Seahawks round out the season with a Colonial Athletic Association contest on the road at East Carolina on Friday, Nov. 11 at 7 p.m.

After dropping five consecutive matches, the Lady Seahawks turned things around over the weekend, sweeping five matches in two days to capture the Forrestal Invitational title.

In the first round of tournament competition last Friday, UNCW ran over Manhattan, 15-3, 15-13, 15-5, and defeated Lehigh, 15-10, 15-6, 15-5. Junior outside hitter Leslie Noukela was the most consistent Seahawk in both contests, collecting 12 kills against Manhattan and 10 against Lehigh. Fellow junior Josie Youngblood had seven kills and a team-high 14 digs vs. Manhattan and racked up 15 kills and 12 digs in the Lehigh contest.

On Saturday, UNCW beat St. Francis (N.Y.), 17-15, 15-11, 15-9, then trounced Lehigh for the second time in as many days, 15-11, 15-8, 15-6.

Senior middle hitter Debby Taydus powered the Lady Seahawk win over St. Francis with her team-best 14 kills, and Leslie Noukela led the UNCW attack against Lehigh with 14 kills while hitting .345.

UNC Wilmington faced CAA rival East Carolina in the championship match and claimed a 12-15, 15-3, 15-13, 2-15, 15-9 verdict. Josie Youngblood had a match-high 18 kills and a team-high 14 digs. Debby Taydus contributed 15 kills, and Leslie Noukela added 11 kills and 13 digs.

Youngblood leads UNCW in kills (382) and total attempts (1086), while Noukela is tops in digs with 387. Taydus has team-highs of 26 solo blocks, 78 block assists and 104 total blocks. Moon has amassed 1124 assists and a team-best 53 service aces.

Youngblood has moved into fourth on the UNCW career list with 894 kills and ranks third in total attempts with 2522. She is fifth all-time with 947 career digs and seventh with 91 career aces.

Moon stands second all-time with 2414 career assists, and her total of 128 service aces is fifth. Sophomore Katy Kurt is in ninth place with 736 career digs, followed by Noukela in 10th place with 706 career digs.

UNCW Cross Country To Battle Saturday

Head Coach: Jim Sprecher (3rd Season)
Next Event: at NCAA District III Meet, Nov. 12, Greenville, S.C.

Hoping to ride the crest of a strong performance in the Colonial Athletic Association Championships two weeks ago, the UNC Wilmington cross country teams return to action this Saturday by competing in the NCAA District III Meet in Greenville, S.C.

With five individuals in the Top 20 overall of the CAA race, the UNCW women grabbed a best-ever runner-up finish out of eight teams, just behind 23rd-ranked William and Mary. The point differential between the two teams (41-43) was the closest in CAA history.

Senior Heather Fenton was the overall conference runner-up in the 5,000 meters with a time of 17:42.8, the top finish ever for a UNCW runner. She was second only to W&M's Marcie Homan, a four-time All-American. Lady Seahawk sophomore Shannon Williamson posted a 17:50.9, which was good enough for fifth place. The second consecutive meet, freshman Laura Rhoads set a new freshman record with a time of 18:19.7, finishing in 11th place. Junior Tricia Callison placed 12th (18:25.2), and senior Cameron King followed in 13th (18:28.9). Fenton, Williamson, Rhoads and Callison earned All-CAA honors for their efforts.

The Seahawk men were third of the seven teams, and their highest finish ever, with William and Mary claiming the men's title as well. Senior Tim Cox was the only Seahawk in the top 20, taking eighth place with his time of 25:10.7 and earning his first All-Conference honors. Junior Jeff Tiegs snagged 22nd (26:10.1), while sophomore Thomas Coughlin came in 24th (26:13.6). Freshman Scott Hoverana 26:45.6 to take 28th place, and senior Doug Lining was 29th with a 26:47.4.

CAA Championships Men's Team Results: William & Mary (18), James Madison (55), UNC Wilmington (93), George Mason (102), East Carolina (159), Richmond (159), American (166).

Women's Golf Teams Compete At Landfall

Defending national champion Arizona State heads a list of 22 teams set to converge on the Landfall Club this week for the National Collegiate Women's Golf Invitational at the Pete Dye Course.

The tournament, hosted by The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, will be the only opportunity for collegiate teams to play the Dye Course, site of the 1995 NCAA Division I Women's Golf Championship May 24-27, 1995.

We are very pleased to be hosting this tournament," says Donna Cameron, tournament director. "Many months of preparation have gone into making this a first-class event in every way."

Following a practice round on Thursday, Nov. 10, action gets underway on Friday, Nov. 11, and runs through Sunday, Nov. 13. The 54-hole event will be played on the Par 72, 6,100-yard Pete Dye Course at Landfall.

Teams competing in the tournament include host UNC Wilmington, Alabama, Arizona, Arizona State, Florida State, Georgia, Lamar, Louisiana State, Memphis, Mississippi State, New Mexico, UNC Chapel Hill, UNC Greensboro, Oklahoma State, Oregon, Oregon State, South Florida, South Carolina, Texas A&M, Texas Christian, Texas Tech and Washington.

Arizona State, behind senior standout Wendy Ward, is the odds-on favorite to capture the tournament title. Ward, from San Antonio, Texas, finished second behind teammate and medalist Emilie Klein in last year's NCAA Women's Golf Championship in West Linn, Ore.

Tales From... The Dumpster

You know, I've never liked boxing but that old fatty that won the Heavyweight Championship Saturday night deserves some applause. This guy is older than my parents and he still knocked out Michael Moore. I know a lot of people out there think that this is bad for the sport of boxing. I agree that it might not look great when a 45 year old man can win the Heavyweight title and who's next defense will come against, are you ready for this, Tony Tucker. One thing is for sure though, it's not old George's fault, can you blame the man for wanting 7.5 million dollar paydays? I'd get in there and fight anybody (well ok, anybody but my grandmother) for that much money. If you need another title defense George, give me a call — I might be able to work you in.

I suppose by now most of you think that I must have received some sort of divine intervention when I chose Nebraska number one at the BEGINNING of the college football season. Let me tell you though... I'm just damn smart. Brook Berringer (Tommy Frazier's backup) threw for 257 yards last week against the Kansas Jayhawks, that's the first time since 1976 that a Nebraska quarterback has thrown for more than 250 yards in a season — oops I mean in a game. I have to say that they are looking damn good...

I'll be down in Florida offering live coverage of the Orange Bowl for all my fans here at UNCW. Well it won't be live but at least I'll be able to write all about it. Don't get me wrong there are still a few undefeated team out there that could possibly challenge Nebraska for the title, Penn State, Alabama, and Auburn. Auburn is on probation though and without a bowl game their chances are pretty slim and Penn State and Alabama just haven't played the kind of schedule that Nebraska has.

Now if Alabama can knock off Auburn next week and Florida in the SEC title game then the definitely deserve to be considered but I'll believe that when and if it happens.

On a UNCW note the men's basketball team started playing last Saturday. I don't want to get everybody's hopes up but I think we are a lot better team than where we are picked to finish in the CAA which is third. I don't know about you but I'm looking forward to the CAA tournament — we've got a good chance to be playing in the end. The women's team on the other hand...naaa we won't even get into that. I'll save it for later.

That's it for now so keep your heads out of the dumpster and I'll see you next week.

UNCW Student Qualifies For Triathlon World Championships

BY JAN KELLER

PR Intern

Time is not a problem for UNCW senior Cameron I. King; she swims a mile, bikes 25 miles, then runs six miles—all in two hours and 16 minutes.

King's triathlon ability won her a place on Team USA which will compete for the Triathlon World Championships in New Zealand during November 20-29, 1994. She is currently trying to raise the $3,000 for the trip from private donations and corporate sponsorships, which has proven tougher than athletic discipline.

"I am very excited to have the opportunity to represent the US and to see where I stand against the best in the world," said King.

King qualified for Team USA in August as a result of winning the competition for the 20-24 age group and placing twelfth overall in the National Amateur Championships in Columbia, Md.

"After nine years of competition swimming followed by mountain bicycle racing, I got into team triathlons," explained King. "I swam while another team member competed in the bicycling and another in the running. After doing that a couple of times, I was hooked. I had to do it all."

While setting swimming records a UNCW, King has worked towards a B>S> degree in natural resources recreation management. After graduation next spring, she plans to work with troubled youth in a program such as Outward Bound. King is a Raleigh, NC native.

Donations have been received from UNCW, Kingoff's Jewelers, Alanby's sporting goods, and her parents, Claudia and Jim Thomas and Rodney and Felecia King.

Volunteers Work To Make A Difference

BY LAURA CORSO

Staff Writers

Many UNCW students embark on the service oriented experience through UNCW Volunteers. Now through a new Volunteer of the Month program, students can be publicly recognized for their efforts.

According to the UNCW Volunteers office, the coordinators from each of volunteer programs choose one nominee each month. After the nominees are chosen, Campus Organization Coordinator Tonya Washington chooses one volunteer to be honored as Volunteer Of The Month.

The Volunteer Of The Month for October was Quan Diggs. Washington chose Diggs after looking at the number of volunteer hours she worked and the exceptional tasks she accomplished.

Presently, there are over one hundred UNCW students in the UNCW Volunteers program. The Leadership Center offers a variety of volunteer interests and hours. As for transportation to and from volunteer sites, the Campus Police's Seahawk Shuttle makes daily trips between 2:30 and 5:00 PM each day.

Quan Diggs

According to Washington, the only essential in being a good volunteer is "consistency and commitment." Washington also said, "[I hope students will] take something away with them and continue to make an impact in their community after graduation."

Students who want to volunteer but cannot offer a time commitment can participate in "The Seahawk Plunge." This program gives students an opportunity to take part in one-time monthly volunteer projects.

Bedford Fair Gives a $30,000 Scholarship

BY VICKIE YEARBY

Public Relations Intern

Alan M. Glazer, president and CEO of Bedford Fair, announced today that the company has given a $30,000 donation to create a permanent endowment fund for the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Bedford Fair is a national women's fashion catalog company.

Glazer said, "The company feels an obligation to donate its time, energy and on occasion its resources to worthy programs. We further feel the responsibility to help enrich the community where we are located and where most of our associates live. It is with this commitment in mind that we participate in the University of North Carolina at Wilmington - Wilmington Endowed Scholarship Program."

Dr. Marvin K. Moss, provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs, said, "UNCW is very grateful for Bedford Fair's generosity in establishing this scholarship endowment fund. Gifts such as this one help the university to attract talented students who might otherwise be unable to further their education."

The requirements that determine a student's eligibility for the scholarship are as follows:

- Students who have graduated from a public high school in New Hanover County
- Students who have made a contribution to their community through volunteer or service activities
- Students with a proven academic average of 3.0 or better out of 4.0
- Students with established financial need

In order for a student to retain the scholarship in the second and subsequent semesters, the recipient must maintain a grade point average of 3.0 and must be a full time student.

Glazer also stated, "Bedford Fair has enjoyed an excellent working relationship with the university and employs many of UNCW's fine students at the Wilmington location."

The company, which has main offices located in Wilmington and Connecticut, has several very active community outreach programs.

Rotary Club Presents $2,500.00 To UNCW

Using proceeds from their annual Haunted House, the Rotary Club presented $2,500.00 to the UNCW Ambassadors on November 10.

Rotary Club President Bill Maus presented the check to Ambassador Organization President Cindy VanRiper at the Coast Line Convention Center. The UNCW Ambassadors helped raise the money awarded to them by participating in the Rotary Club's Haunted House as actors and behind the scenes workers.

President Maus said, "We couldn't have done it without the Ambassadors. They were reliable, enthusiastic and great actors." Approximately 18 Ambassadors worked on the Haunted House each night for 10 nights.

The UNCW Ambassadors are a service organization composed of select volunteers who serve the university in special ways under the direction of the Division of University Advancement. Their motto is "Students serving students...past, present, and future."

Ambassadors serve past students by working with the alumni at the Chancellor's Christmas party and pre-game socials during basketball season. They serve present students at Parents Weekend and Commencement. They also recruit future students to UNCW by leading daily campus tours.

Studying Smarter: Taking Notes—I Tom MacLennan, Director The Learning Center

Your need to take effective notes will not end when you graduate from UNCW. As Janet Amos and John M. Downs point out in The Successful Student's Guide to College, we continue to take notes in a number of different settings: meetings, conferences, phone conversations, as well as just keeping track of the thoughts that constantly tumble in and out of our consciousness.

Effective notetaking begins with active listening. That means paying attention in spite of the many distractions we all face during the day. Secondly, you must think about the meaning of what you are writing down in order to select the most important information to remember. Active listening leads directly to another important step: thinking. And finally, when you have completed all of the above, you have to write down the most important information in order to review it later.

Amos and Downs offer some excellent strategies which any consultant in The Learning Center will be happy to illustrate for you if you call us for an appointment at 395-3549. First of all, complete readings and other assignments. Second, leave plenty of space in the margins for additional comments and insights or study clues. It also helps to allow some extra space for any items you might want to clarify or expand upon later. Third, listing the course, date, and page numbers helps you when you assemble your notes for final review. Fourth, note the points your instructor stresses by placing a star or asterisk in the margin next to the items emphasized. Fifth, copy down definitions, diagrams, and drawings your instructor writes on the board. Sixth, develop your own system of abbreviations and symbols to use throughout the class period. Seventh, don't stop taking notes during group discussions; comments made during such a discussion may illuminate some earlier point. Eighth, take notes throughout class and particularly during the latter stages of class; that is the time when many instructors summarize main points and make connections with other course material.

Effective notetaking format will also help you to prepare what Amos and Downs refer to as "study-ready notes." Next week, we will begin examining several different formats.

Diabetic UNCW Students Have A Support Group

BY MICHELLE REED
Staff Writer

Turkey and cranberry sauce—not every UNCW student can tolerate the holiday fare looming on the horizon.

To meet the needs of students with diabetes, the Diabetes Education and Support Group brings students together to learn about new developments concerning diabetes.

The Diabetes Education and Support Group was founded in Spring 1991 by Dr. Kathleen Jewell, medical director of Student Health and Wellness. Judy Dowers, R.N., and Katie Gilbert, R.N., are educators for the Diabetes group.

Students identified as diabetic through registration forms and physical education forms are usually sent a letter encouraging them to become involved with the Diabetes Education and Support Group.

According to Katie Gilbert, R.N., "Students determine which days would be best for them to have the meetings and from there the schedule of meetings for the semester are decided."

For Fall 1994, meetings are held the third Thursday of each month in University Union, room 207 from 7-8 p.m. However, this week's meeting, Thursday, Nov. 10 will be held in the Student Health and Wellness Center from 5-6 p.m.

The theme of this week's meeting is "Bring a Buddy," whether diabetic or not. The topic of discussion will be "Holiday Eating and Nutrition Tips," led by guest speakers.

December's meeting will include a luncheon to be held a few days before exams.

For information, or answers to any questions, contact the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center at 395-3280.

Step Show To Be Held

UNCW's National Pan-Hellenic Council (NPHC), the traditionally African American fraternities and sororities, is presenting its annual STEP SHOW on Thursday, November 17 at 8:00 PM in Kenan Auditorium. The admission fee is $2.00.

If you have ever seen a Step Show, you are in for a real treat. Stepping is an exciting, up-lifting art form which draws in its audience and gets them involved in rhythm and synchronized movement. This is also an excellent opportunity for students to show their support for the NPHC groups.

Frank's Place

Frank Tascone

Welcome to Frank's Place. It's three thirty in the morning—I can't sleep. Bob's out cold on the rug. Cat's never had problems sleeping. I poke him just to let him know how good he has it. He opens his eyes about half way and closes them again. It must be nice. I don't understand this insomnia thing. I figure sleep is a biological function just like going to the bathroom. You gotta go—you go. So why doesn't it work that way?

I've been counting things: cars driving past, ocean waves crashing in my head, new Republicans in the house. No luck. When I get into the thousands I give up. Perhaps this is how "The Count" on Sesame Street got his start. You know, right now being a vampire doesn't sound all that bad. Sleep in the day—awake at night. I'll be a zombie tomorrow—functioning on auto pilot, losing things, forgetting things, getting mad easily. Aaugh!

I try punching my pillow for a while to relieve some anger and maybe wear myself out. I lay down. Now I'm too sweaty to sleep. They should have got on television at night. I now I imagine a golf course with lush and variant shades of green, soft breezes, hushed voices, and quiet clapping. Ah, nice and relaxing. Yes, now I'm falling asleep, I'm falling asleep, I'm thinking about falling asleep, now I'm thinking about my paper due next week, now I'm thinking of the form I forgot to drop off at the financial aid office, now the bills, my car needs an oil change, yeez it's been a long time since I've been on a date, my eyes are open again watching the street light's reflection on the ceiling.

I look at Bob again. He's on his back, front paws leaning to one side, back legs leaning in the other direction—sound asleep. He's purring!

The nerve. I know what's going to happen. At around six I'll drift off and wake up an hour later, at seven.

Tomorrow I'm going to take people up on their advice. I'm going to get one of those relaxation tapes with birds and crickets and stuff. Maybe I'll even get one that says "you are a powerful and successful person. You will get straight A's, make millions etc...." Maybe I can even learn Spanish while I'm at it. I'm going to meditate, lying on the flat floor humming a mantra, or whatever it is that they call it. I'll drink warm milk before bed, even though I am lactose intolerant. I don't ever want to go through this again.

As far as I know, we are the only creatures that suffer from insomnia. Perhaps it is because our brains have eyes too big for their stomachs (say what?). We think we can cram all this stuff inside. During the day, it all seems to fit, but at night our brains sometimes get indigestion, sort of speak. They belch out meaningless thoughts and information and problems blown way out of proportion—expanded like a gas. I propose that someone come up with a maoxol for the mind. If you over indulge yourself with intense quantitative analysis, or music theory mixed with calculus, or literary theory, with a few deadlines thrown in for good measure, take the maoxol, deflate the expanded mass, fit it into chewable pieces. Such an invention would be something we could be truly thankful for!

Who would you be more opposed to dating your teenage daughter, Joey Buttafuoco or Butthead?

Student Soliloquies

I thought I could make it through the semester without addressing this seemingly asinine issue, but I have realized I suffer from a revolting, perpetual hope for peoplehood. For the first time (ever, some might say), I am sincerely asking for your responses to the questions I have concerning the following issue: Why do academics intentionally build distinct, impenetrable barriers between the disciplines in our university community?

I've been told by students and instructors that people in my discipline (English), "have it easy" and we "really don't do anything." Some have asked, with sincere curiosity, "What do English Majors do?" An instructor from another discipline explained their concern that there is no basis for the type of intelligence supposedly learned in English classes. This Ph.D. went on to say students already know how to read, write, and interpret writing. By the time they are Freshmen, students have spent twelve years learning these skills and college English classes are redundant and unnecessary. And, they continued, students can learn these skills in any other discipline, because a working knowledge of all three is required to pass any course. (Since I wasn't taking notes during this enlightening conversation, I am paraphrasing—an worthless skill I learned in one of my useless English courses.)

sive when refuting these charges, because I now understand English is all "bullshit" and bullsh*tting is a skill in which I take immense pride. But, I'm not sold on the idea of slandering my fellow students, even if they are disciples of some other academic discipline.

Try as I might, I can't believe all Math Majors are "geeks who can't match their own socks" or that Biology Majors are "cold, manipulative" types who become "illiterate" when faced with written materials dealing with subjects outside of their lab manuals. No, everyone doesn't know "science people can't read literature or write a complete sentence." At least, I hope everyone doesn't believe the elitist peddler's of such separatist propaganda.

Of course, listening to a Psychology advocate, you'd be compelled to agree "sociologists are flakes" because they base their knowledge on entirely subjective concepts and studies. But, can we trust the psychologists, who some sociologists say "are pseudo-scientists" whose knowledge base is built entirely on supposition and who blame everything bad in our society on mothers? One Sociology Major said the problem with psychology people is they "speak in a tongue meant to be understood only by other pompous psychology types." Are you confused yet?

Probably one of the most beaten down disciplines is Education. I've heard innumerable academics make appallingly negative comments about Education Majors. Some have tried to convince me education people are "less intelligent" than their peers, that they "teach because they have no 'real' abilities or talents." Most people seem to believe teaching is easy and takes no effort or training. Elementary Education Majors appear to be the least respected in our UNCW community because "how hard can it be to play with a bunch of little kids all day?" (Being the anal-retentive [is there a hyphen, June?] mom that I am, I volunteer in my son's kindergarten class every Thursday, so I feel able to answer this final query with an obnoxiously loud "Extremely hard, you dip!")

Doesn't the prevalent logic in this particular set of prejudice comments frighten you? If those of us who are too brilliant to enter teaching know Education Majors are the scum that sticks to the bottom of our academic apple barrel, aren't we the least bit curious about what our nation's children ARE NOT LEARNING?

Or are we, collectively, simply too selfish to care that our future as a country is in the hands of the most ignorant, talentless students on campus? Or, maybe some snobby students and imperious instructors are only concerned with what a person learns in their post-secondary schools? And, if we continue to make the education tract unappealing, who would be willing to appear unintelligent enough to become teachers? (Come over to the English Department—we take anyone and we aren't going to teach you anything of value anyway. See above.)

Now that I've told you what I hear on a UNCW daily basis, I'm interested in your thoughts. Do you think we, as an intellectual community promote peoplehood among our students and faculty? And if not, why do we continue to deride academic disciplines different from our own? Do we need to feel superior or are we afraid our chosen discipline has no reality base? Afraid we won't get jobs after we graduate? Afraid we'll lose our current instructing positions if we can't justify a need?

I just don't understand. I use math skills, in some form, in all my courses. I call upon my knowledge of history, psychology, sociology, and biology every day. Obviously, I employ my limited skills as a writer, reader, and interpreter in nearly everything I do as a student and an animate person. How can anyone, even those who have achieved the degree status most of us only fantasize about, claim each academic discipline is not reliant upon, or at least enhanced by, every other discipline?

What I'd like to know is where I can buy a legitimate looking Ph.D. certificate? From what I've been told I already know all the English bullshit I need to instruct and I'm certainly well-versed in the pathetic policies propagated by post-secondary propagandists. (How 'bout that alliteration? Another English thing you'll never use in your real life. But, ain't it clever?)

Bob Haywood Stillpoint

I Am A Stream

I am a stream. I rush madly through my days tossing and tumbling down the narrow channel, bending around rocky obstacles, finding moments of quiet and ease behind the boulders, slowing and flowing gently in the broader sections where I placidly reflect the world around and over me. If you sink below my surface, you will see with delight all the life that moves back and forth in my water, different shapes and forms of living things, multi-colored and full of life and purpose. If you sink down further, you will find a layer of sediment where visibility is poor and clarity diminishes where the inability to see leaves fear and insecurity. Sink further still, particularly at my source and you will emerge from the murkiness into another pool of clarity where the spring that birthed me flows crystal clear and quiet where, except for the flow, all is still. It is my source and place of birthing, my Stillpoint.

Living, as we frequently do, in the world of our immediacy, the world where our attention is fixed on the tasks and responsibilities and challenges that we are dealing with today, finds us mostly aware of the rushing sense of life. We bounce through our days like a stick in a set of rapids. Sometimes we have breaks and we float in a quieter part of our river. We are probably aware that there is much going on just beneath the surface of our lives which often shows up in feelings of stress and anxiety that suddenly comes upon us when the surface part of our lives seems to be doing okay. Or, we are aware that just beneath the surface is that wonderful sense of ourselves that we would like people to know, to often hide out of some ongoing fear that we won't be accepted if we share our true thoughts and feelings.

Deeper yet is that shadowy world in ourselves where life's twists and turns, life's rocks and whirlpools have churned us somehow so that we simply are not clear or feel fearful or, perhaps, even damaged so that we cannot see how we are to move on down the stream of our personal journey.

But under it all, under all these layers there is a place of wonder and freshness, a place of eternal stillness and peace and clarity. Whether you name it God or soul or spiritual center matters not. It is your Stillpoint and your ability to plumb its depths, your depths, is critical to becoming the wonderful free person that you long to be, able to flow through all the layers and journey down the rapids with fear and delight.

Have you found this place, this center, this Stillpoint in yourself? Are you looking? I hope so.

"No More "Seas"

Anne Minard

The lights were down on College Road today, and I felt lucky. I felt lucky because I seemed straight through the intersection at College and Randall without delay...on a bicycle. Cars were backed up on all sides of the intersection, their drivers' faces grim with frustration.

The light failure happened at a perfect time for me to make a stunning observation. After fuming and steaming for almost fifteen minutes in outrageous traffic, most of these people were headed to within two miles of campus. A five minute bike ride. On average, a fifteen minute walk.

On a recent quest for information about campus development plans, I looked at maps which allocate space for two new parking lots to replace woods in the back of campus. The lots look to be about the size of "T" and "S" in front of the cafeteria. Why?

Mr. Richard Scott of UNCW Business Affairs explains that we live in a car-dependent society. "It's a problem all over the country," he said, "nobody knows how to wear people off of their cars." The only solution, he continues is to accommodate the cars—resulting in roads and parking lots he described as "seas of concrete."

These "seas of concrete" aren't just ugly, busy, loud, smelly and dangerous. They replace what is already an endangered habitat—the long leaf pine forest. Formerly the dominant scenery of North Carolina, the Long Leaf Pines are restricted to just a few areas, including the undeveloped parts of our campus. Furthermore, there are numerous animal species exclusive to the habitat.

Those who aren't naturalists or biologists may not understand the significance of losing a biological habitat. Almost everybody understands, however, the need for beauty, solitude and outdoor recreation. I've heard too many students speak with nostalgia about bike trails and wooded paths already lost to pavement behind the suites. These and other pristine areas are being sacrificed for a lazy dependence on a dirty, loud, fume-spitting machine...the automobile.

I propose that we stop relying so heavily on our cars. We can walk or ride a bike from our apartments to class (and use an umbrella when it rains!). If we live far from campus, we can carpool with friends. We can do it for purely selfish reasons. It saves gas. That means more money. It can even save time (ever waited 10 minutes for a prime campus spot?). Besides, exercise is good for us—we'll feel better and live longer.

Most importantly, though, we'll have trees, birds, bike trails and quiet places to get away. We'll be preserving the scenery that helps to make our university so unique.

Students Use Cooperative Education and Internships

BY BARBARA CALEY

Staff Writer

Cooperative Education Programs and Internships give students an edge when searching for employment after graduation. The average college student has a difficult time breaking into today's job market. The competitive nature of today's job market also makes it even more difficult when the student has no job experience.

It is a case of the classic Catch-22. Graduates can not get experience without getting a job, but graduates can not get hired without experience.

"One of the best ways for students to overcome this obstacle is for them to participate in an internship or cooperative education position while pursuing their degree," said Sandra Harkin, manager of Placement and Experiential Learning at the Career Planning and Placement Center.

Internships usually last for one work period. Students participating in semester internships, while typically unpaid, can often arrange to receive academic credit for their work. Summer internships are typically paid.

One of the largest internship programs is the State of North Carolina Intern Program. "This intern program has opportunities representing all majors and involve working with government," said Harkin.

"Internships can help students develop a work history that will help make them strong candidates when marketed to employers," said Harkin.

This is especially vital to his area of North Carolina, compared to major cities where there are not a lot of corporate offices to provide students with experience.

Cooperative Education Programs offer students the opportunity to gain valuable work experience that is always paid. In these programs students commit to 2-3 work periods prior to graduation. They typically involve pre-professional or professional levels of work and provide the student with unique opportunities to be exposed to management and special projects.

According to Harkin, not only do these programs allow students to explore career fields prior to employment, but can often lead to full-time employment opportunities after graduation.

"One importance that this experience provides for the student is a clearer sense of what one wants to do in a career," Harkin said.

The Career Services Center has information on internships and cooperative education programs.

Job listings can often be converted into internships or cooperative education opportunities. Also, if a student can not find anything in the current listings of internships and cooperative education programs is filling all of the open positions.

"We can become very frustrated when we have wonderful opportunities and we don't get the students response," said Harkin.

Visitation Policy: What Is The Policy?

BY BILLY PERSON

Staff Writer

As most on campus students know, UNCW's residence halls have a limited visitation policy, which requires visitors to the residence halls be checked out by 12:00 AM, Sunday through Thursday, and by 3:00 AM on Friday and Saturday. The reason for this rule is part historical and partly a result of the living arrangement exclusive to residence halls.

Housing and Residence Life Office, together with the Residence Hall Association, examines our situation and determines what the policy should be, and then gets it approved by the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and the Chancellor. Under their close examination, they decided that living arrangements of the suites and apartments could allow a 24-hour unrestricted visitation policy, but the residence halls they could not permit the same rules.

"The suites are private entry," said Director of Housing and Residence Life, William McCartney. "The residents control who comes in and out. There is much more ability to have privacy. Where in the residence halls, the students right to privacy and a suitable academic environment would be lost."

For Students who were wondering why the difference in policies on campus, this is basically it. The policy currently used is more appropriate for group living. It preserves the students safety, privacy and right not to have its academic goals inhibited.

Some students believe in the system we have now.

"I think the visitation policy is fine the way it is," said sophomore James Buie, a Graham Hall resident. "People always complain, but don't realize that some schools don't have any visitation at all."

For students who are still unsatisfied with the policy, Housing and RHA are open to compromise. For evidence, last year was the first year that students were allowed to vote on a 24 hour in hall visitation rule. In addition, visitation was extended an extra hour at the beginning of visitation hours and at the end.

Joe Torry Performance One To Remember

BY BILLY PERSON
Staff Writer

The University Center ballroom was filled to capacity on Thursday, November 10, for one of the world's brightest and up and coming comedians, Joe Torry. Torry's arrival was heavily anticipated by both students and members of the community. This was obvious from the sold out crowd's warm reception upon his introduction.

For weeks before his show, all I would hear from those planning to attend the show was, "I'm sitting up front. He won't be cuttin' on me." Torry has a reputation for being merciless to his audience members within his view and this fact is well known by his fans. Many were hesitant to sit where Torry could make them part of his routine, but, surprisingly, he went fairly easy on them, with light casualties of only four victims. The show was excellent and Torry's style and wit kept the audience laughing from start to finish.

As a youth, Torry always knew he wanted to do. "I knew I wanted to be a comedian since I was about three or four," he explained.

Born in Newport News, Virginia, Torry grew up in a household with two other brothers and three sisters. His childhood, because of it, has been a very influential part of his comedy. "All of them mother@#%ers were crazy!" he adds hastily.

Even Torry's father, whom he reveals to the audience as a Vietnam Veteran, isn't spared from his comedic tales. Torry recollects on his father's war flashbacks in which his father wakes him and his brothers up in the middle of the night in search of P.O.W.'s.

Torry states that Sammy Davis, Jr., Richard in Los Angeles where his future has more television and movies in the works.

As a comic, Torry comes across as a crowd pleasing, wild, say-anything, person on stage. But off stage, he is a straight-up and down to earth kind of guy. His natural speech is hardly as abrasive and he seems to put forth to his audience. His demeanor is very calm, laid back, and likeable even. In other words, Torry is a professional performer on and off stage.

Fame and fortune have not seemed to have changed Torry into some kind of ego-maniac big shot, which is always nice to hear. It isn't like he doesn't have reasons to think highly of himself with all the credits he has accumulated. He co-starred with Janet Jackson in the film "Poetic Justice," co-starred in "Strictly Business" and also made cameo appearance in this fall's release "Exit to Eden" with Dan Aykroyd and Rosie O'Donnell. He has also made appearances on the television shows "Roc" and "Amen."

Torry's career is far from its peak, and we will hear more from him in the future. When asked how he broke into the business, Torry replied, "I'm still breaking in."

Prior, Redd Fox, and George Carlin as some of his comedic influences, but admits that his real influences are his parents. He was raised mostly in St. Louis, Missouri, and attended Lincoln University and later became a member of Omega Psi Psi fraternity. He also was involved in journalism and was a radio disc jockey. After graduation from Liberty, he moved to Los Angeles to pursue his comedy career. Now at age 25, Torry still resides

"Frankenstein": It's Alive But It's Less Than The Sum Of Its Body Parts

BY CHRIS HEWITT

Knight-Rider News Service

"Frankenstein" is romantic, sad, and visually stunning. Call me crazy, but I was hoping it'd be scary.

But the movie's too serious to stoop to showing us a good time. Its full title is "Mary Shelley's Frankenstein," but, more accurately, it would be "Francis Ford Coppola's Kenneth Branagh's Mary Shelley's Frankenstein," referring to the producer, director, and the novel's author.

Somewhere in that show biz version of the telephone game, they lost track of the book, which is very, very scary.

It's a great primal story: In the late 18th century, Swiss doctor Victor Frankenstein (Branagh), tormented by the loss of his mother, vows to cheat death by creating life. A few spare body parts and a needle 'n' thread later and, as Dr. Frankenstein says in every version of this story, "It's alive!"

It's also miffed. And it's on a killing spree, seeking vengeance against its horrified creator, who abandoned it (talk about your post-natal depression!). The operatic sets along with Patrick Doyle's musical score and Roger Pratt's lush cinematography create a dark, creepy mood.

Even so, the movie is weirdly uninviting. Partly, that has to do with the varying quality of the acting. Branagh is fine, and his scenes with Helena Bonham Carter, as his sister/wife (with a perfect tear always poised in her limpid eye), are quite touching. But Aidan Quinn, playing a bystander in the madness, is hilariously overwrought, as if he's in a "Carol Burnett Show" parody of a horror film.

Robert Deniro gives one-note interpretation of the unnamed monster. Visibly struggling to produce sympathy for his tormented beast, DeNiro creates an effect the first time we see him and he keeps repeating it in slightly more over-the-top versions. Stick a fork in it, Bob—it's done.

His choices are defensible, but much of the movie is just plain nuts. Why, for instance, does the good doctor rip off his shirt every time he enters his laboratory? (Answer: to showcase the sharply-etched abs of the newly buff Branagh-negger.) Why is he so loud, even whispering at the top of his lungs? Didn't anybody have a problem with brothers and sisters getting hitched? What gives with the fake-o Arctic sets? And how come there's always a lightning storm when Dr. Frankenstein needs one?

You just can't help giggling at "Frankenstein," especially since it takes itself so seriously, what with Doc F tormenting himself about the great power he commands and the monster shouting that he has needs, too, dammit.

Trent Leonard's Trivial Pursuits

Well to start out, this will have to do with sports, but as a native of the state, I feel it utterly necessary to comment on the BIGGEST rivalry since the dawn of the age of time: Alabama and Auburn, enough said.

When the Crimson Tide takes to the field in Birmingham on the campus of UAB (a neutral site because holding this game in Tuscaloosa or Auburn would be a mistake of disastrous proportions), Auburn fans everywhere will quake in fear because the third or fourth ranked Tide (depending on which poll you see) will march onto the field and cause the War Chickens to run back into their holes in the hills because after their humiliating tie (YES, TIE) versus Georgia (a team that we beat!) they will be begging for mercy by the fourth quarter. Sorry Terry Bowden, but this week, you play the biggest game of your young coaching career and come up on the short end of the stick! Alabama 24, Auburn 20.

Is there anyone left who does not know what is happening the weekend of November 26 and 27? Here is a news flash in case you had not: Hootie and his band of merry men (otherwise known as the Blowfish) will be invading Wilmington (specifically at our beloved Mad Monk) for an entire weekend. If you hurry, I know that Pointexter Records still has tickets available, so hurry before they're gone.

That's all for this week. Make sure to tune in to ABC on Saturday at 3:30 when the world comes to a halt because THE game will be playing and you better be watching!

Tonight at the Mad Monk will be Cravin' Melon with Psychosonic Cindi. All of you ladies get in FREE before 10:30 and all guys get in for three bucks before then. Jimmy Van Zandt: A Lynyrd Skynyrd Tribute will be playing Friday the 18th. And finally on Saturday the 19th, the Sex Police with special guest The Substitutes will rock the stage at the Monk. Go have some fun!

Reader's Forum

To Mr. Steve Lee
c/o The Editor,

It appears that this last exposition relates little fact and mainly reinforces your own weaknesses. Let me begin by explaining the inherent differences between words you seem to use interchangeably. "Sex" is a verb, and whether the impetus is love or lust, it is an action. Sensuality is a state of being, not necessarily involving sex. It means being utterly receptive to the 5 (or more) senses. For example, the sensuality of touch can mean more than stroking the skin of your lover. It can mean caressing fabrics of clothing in a department store—using your hands to mix cookie dough—even training your fingertips across ancient texts to feel the vibrations emanating. It is simple aesthetic pleasure found in all aspects of life, including sex. Sex can only be sordid if you yourself are desensitized; that is what robs it of "mysteries and delight".

Dayve's program was one of exploration—many sides of the human condition. Were you listening? There were poems on the problems of minorities, problems of the female in society, and the wondrous nature of romance. Do you not recall Pablo Neruda and his 100 poems of love, dedicated to his wife? My reaction, even as a somewhat jaded female was—how wonderful—a man in love past the honeymoon.

As far as your attack concerning Dayve's motivation, do you realize how many times she performed? For three days she gave mini-performances to classes; each an hour in length. I was lucky enough to see her twice before I saw her main performance and was completely enthralled each time. Money did not motivate her obvious interest and pleasure. Finally, I would like to address your question of why the erotic has to be emphasized.

My, my, we are a product of the Bush years, aren't we? Can we not celebrate our sensuality? Will the time not come when the students who laugh like Butthead at the mention of the word "breasts" be eradicated? As a result of hindered sexual growth and immature attitudes toward the erotic, people laugh nervously at the mention of a body part. Encourage the part of yourself that lauds her sensuality; deier the parts that condemn. The Gemini complex you speak of, has to find balance. This leads to acceptance of both an anti-promiscuous attitude and also an acceptance and avocation of personal sensuality. (I hope this answers your questions, Bob).

Replies are welcome.
Sincere thank to the editors!

Advice to UNCW's Weary BY Emma & Jane

"Good morning, Starshine..." Another week, another case of hemorrhoids as thick as your thumb. But, we're anticipating our upcoming Thanksgiving Day break with the glee of a child who has just figured out how to jam a chunky peanut butter sandwich into the family VCR. We're (not) interested in knowing how you people are going to spend your holiday. Actually, our knees are raw from the hours we've spent praying you won't waste your free time writing to us. We've got projects and finals coming up too, so have a little sympathy and try not to dissolve into huge shivering masses of human waste (for some of you, that isn't far off) before we have time to address your problems.

For future reference, write to us at UNCW P.O. Box #24095 or you can send your selfish, egotistical, childish, whimpering, irrational complaints/questions/dilemmas to the Seahawk. In the meantime, grow a spine and try to cease in your apparent attempts at drowning the few brain cells you have left in cheap beer. Don't worry, you will surf again before you die.

This week's intellectual prod.

The people are to be taken in very small doses.

Ralph Waldo Emerson

Dear Emma & Jane: This afternoon, some of my friends and I were bitching about not having any coffee machines in the buildings on campus—even though there are soda and/or juice machines in all the buildings. Many students would prefer coffee to these other beverages and, with the cold weather setting in, who wants to walk across campus to buy coffee at the Hawk's Nest? For people whose classes are back-to-back, there isn't even time to go to the Hawk's Nest. I'm specifically addressing this complaint to the UNCW Power People, who have warm offices equipped with automatic pots and secretaries who are paid to bring piping hot cups of coffee to them. Hello! Is anyone listening?

Signed: S.A.A.

Dear S.A.A.: You've got a legitimate complaint. Although the coffee and cocoa those vending machines you are referring to spill crappy excuses for hot beverages, it's better than nothing. I don't indulge in caffeine often, but Emma survives on the stuff (as if you couldn't tell by her sweet demeanor) and you're right, a lot of students want coffee—especially during the severe two-week cold season you have in North Carolina. It's not as if coffee is any healthier than Coke/Pepsi products. When we asked our caffeine expert about it, she rather pompously declared, "Haven't you heard a Coke can dissolve an iron bolt in something like 13 days?" And who wants a lead drink in some of these classrooms, which have thermometers set on "rigid" year 'round? The Hawk's Nest is a long haul in snappy weather and ten minutes certainly doesn't allow much time for a cross-campus sprint. What's worse is walking into hallways which house parking coffee pots and knowing no one would ever consider sharing a cup with a plebeian student. Maybe you should start a petition or, at least, fill out a Chancellor's suggestion slip. We wouldn't look for the immediate addition of hot beverage vending machines—did you notice last week's article on establishing a campus daycare facility? For all we know, there are thousands of dollars allotted for coffee machines, but no one can agree where to put them.

Dear Emma & Jane: Is it just me or has there been an obvious attitude problem on campus this semester? The students are always complaining, the instructors are constantly snarling, and even the usually friendly staff has been continuously whining. What is going on? Is it something in the UNCW water? Things are so depressing and frustrating around here you two are starting to sound like sensitive, helpful advice columnists. Everyone on campus seems so nasty anymore, I have to force myself to get out of bed and come to class. I'm tired of being shot down by smartasses.

Signed: Lynne

Dear Lynne: You are not the first UNCWer to voice their concerns about the prevalent ugly attitude enveloping our once-happy campus. Who knows what's gotten into everyone? This week, we could explain all the whining and bitching simply by reviewing last Tuesday's election results. (Emma has paid to have 500 T-shirts printed up which read "The Road to Hell is Paved with Republicans." Anyone interested?) Actually, we're a bit surprised by the short-temperament around here. Usually we see this anxiety and frustration near the middle-to-end of the Spring semester, when the weather is improving and people want to be outdoors. Jane says her semester has just flown by so quickly, she has never really felt caught up. Maybe that's the problem? It has been a fast-paced few months. We think you should simply look towards your upcoming vacation and concentrate on getting away from UNCW for a while. Instead of feeling offended by all the "smartasses," try to learn something useful from them. They are, occasionally, humorous. Perhaps if we could identify with these sarcastic people about whom you are WHINING, we could help you more. (Are you implying we aren't sensitive, you Jerk?)

Emma & Jane: Before I tell you my problem, I have to say I've been reading your column since the very first issue and I think you all are great. I like your style because you are realistic and you make me think. Keep writing! Okay, here's my problem: I can never open my campus P.O. Box. No matter what I do, the damn thing won't open for me. I've been here for over a year and I'll bet I haven't gotten it opened five times. I get embarrassed because I always have to ask someone to open it for me. I also worry the same person who helps me will later open it when I'm not around and steal my mail, which sometimes includes checks and money orders from home. I'm not an idiot and I do have some mechanical abilities, why can't I get this right?

Signed: A Fan

Dear Fan: We'd be happy to bathe in your adoration if you weren't such a goof. What do you mean you can't open your P.O. Box? Dracula, Emma's junkyard cat, can open her P.O. Box, without assistance. Our question to you is: Who did you pay to take your SAT's? We certainly wouldn't ask strangers to open our boxes for us. Of course they could come back and pillage your belongings, what do you think? Take off those John Denver-rose-colored shades and poke yourself in the eyes, Three Stooges style. There are postal employees behind the counter—you know it's the long flat thing about three-feet high sitting under a big sign that reads "Post Office?" Ask them for help. Also, why don't you try practicing opening your box? Judging from this letter, we doubt you get much mail anyway. Would it kill you to ask for a postal clerk's help once a semester? Jane says you need to reassess your abilities since #1 you may be an idiot and #2 you have absolutely no mechanical skills. Thanks for reading!

Fenton Qualifies For NCAA Championship

Senior harrier Heather Fenton has become the first runner in UNCWilmington history to qualify for the NCAA Cross Country Championships.

The New Hartford, N.Y., product, who qualified with an 11th place finish out of 279 runners in last weekend's NCAA District III Championships, will compete against the nation's best runners next Monday, Nov. 21, at the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville, Ark.

"This will bring national exposure to our program," says Coach Jim Sprecher. "Heather's going to Arkansas with the ambition to earn All-American honors. When they started looking at the different runners for qualifications, she stacked right up there."

"Heather's strong points have been her preparation and mental toughness. She has really put in the time to become a good runner, and she has the mental ability to go out and race against anybody from anywhere and do well."

The field for the NCAA Championships consists of 184 competitors, including 22 teams of seven runners and 30 other at-large entries. The 5,000-meter race begins at 11 a.m. at Prairie Grove Battlefield Park.

Fenton was earlier named to the All-CAA squad following a second-place finish to William and Mary's Marilee Homan in the CAA Cross Country Championships in Williamsburg, Va.

Fenton also played a key role as UNCW's women's team placed a school-best fifth out of 37 schools in the district race, narrowly missing the cut for the NCAA's.

Men's Soccer Closes Out Season With Loss To William And Mary

Head Coach: Keith Cammidge (2nd Season)
Final Record: Overall (6-13-1), Colonial Athletic Association (0-7-1)

UNC Wilmington's men's soccer team closed out its season over the weekend with a 4-0 loss to host William and Mary in the Colonial Athletic Association championship.

The Seahawks battled injuries and inexperience down the stretch, finishing the season with seven losses in their last eight outings. Overall, the Seahawks suffered eight shutouts in '94 as the offense was outscored by a 71-39 margin.

UNCW encountered a particularly tough time with CAA opponents this season. Conference opponents outscored the Seahawks, 42-10, and UNCW went winless for the first time since the 1986 campaign when the team also posted a 0-6-1 mark.

Individually, senior striker Joel Myers was the scoring leader with 31 points on 14 goals and three assists. Nildo Schubert added eight goals and seven assists en route to second-team All-CAA honors. Bucky Corban finished third in scoring with seven goals and four assists.

Shawn McAllister and Josh Hopfer split time in goal for the Seahawks. McAllister, a sophomore, started 11 contests, registering a 3.14 goals against average with 61 saves. Hopfer, a senior, had a 3.33 GAA with 39 saves.

Coach Keith Cammidge wrapped up his second season with the club and stands 15-22-1 overall after two years with the program.

Lady Hawks Complete Inaugural Season

Head Coach: Keith Cammidge (1st Season)
Final Record: Overall (4-12-0), Colonial Athletic Association (0-6-0)

The UNC Wilmington women's soccer team closed out its inaugural season last Sunday with a 9-0 loss at home to Colonial Athletic Association for James Madison, which was ranked ninth in the ISAA Central Region last week. The Lady Seahawks end their first year of competion with a 4-12-0 overall mark, 0-6-0 in the CAA.

In the regular season finale, UNCW had only two shots against a stingy JMU defense. Freshman midfielder Beth Fincher and senior defender Dori Schofield launched one shot apiece. Freshman Jaime Betts started in the nets for the Lady Seahawks, collecting 10 saves.

Freshman forward Margaret Merrill finished as the team's scoring leader with five goals and two assists (12 points), starting all 16 contests. Beth Fincher, also a starter in every match, ranked second with two goals and a team-high four assists (eight points). Junior forward Joanna Walker followed with three goals and one assist (seven points).

Freshman goalkeeper Isabel Bordo (New Hanover H.S.) saw action in 10 games, starting eight, collecting 72 saves, one shutout and a goals against average of 5.33. Betts started eight contests in goal, tallying 49 saves and a 3.41 goals against average.

Fall Invitational Results: Fourth Place Finish

Head Coach: Calvin Lane (9th Season)
Next Event: Conclusion of Fall Season

The Seahawks and veteran coach Calvin Lane ended the fall season by claiming fourth place in the Charleston Southern Fall Invitational last week.

UNCW carded a 295-301=596 to finish nine shots behind champion Florida Atlantic in the 17-team tournament at Pine Forest Country Club in Summerville, S.C.

CSU Fall Invitational Team Results (Top Ten): Florida Atlantic (296-291=387), Liberty (301-289=590), Campbell (300-293=593), UNC Wilmington (295-301=596), Mercer (315-290=605), The Citadel (307-299=606), Charleston Southern (299-311=610), Jacksonville (309-305=614), Tusculum (307-312=619), Radford (309-312=621).

UNCW Individual Results: John Gaddy (71-77=148), T-9th; Steve Doucet (74-75=149), T-16th; Gregg Cuthrell (77-73=150), T-20th; Mike Cato (76-76=152), T-25th; Brian Spencer (74-79=153), T-28th).

Head Coach: Kathy McDaniel (10th Season)
Record: Overall (19-13), Colonial Athletic Association (0-5)

The UNC Wilmington volleyball team, which split a pair of matches last week to conclude regular season play, competes in the 1994 Colonial Athletic Association Championships this weekend at American University in Washington, D.C.

The Lady Seahawks, who meet William and Mary in a first-round pairing Saturday at 2:30 p.m., ended the regular season without a conference win for the first time since joining the league in 1984.

Coach Kathy McDaniel's squad created its longest winning streak of the season - six matches - last Tuesday with an easy victory over a visiting Coastal Carolina, 15-5, 15-12, 16-14. Senior middle hitter Debby Taydus and junior outside hitter Josie Youngblood had nine kills each, with Youngblood racking up a match-high 15 digs. Sophomore setter Ginger

Moon tallied a match-high 25 assists while contributing 14 digs, and freshman middle hitter Sarah DeLair added six kills.

On Friday, CAA rival East Carolina snapped UNCW's six-game string with a 16-14, 8-15, 15-10, 15-10, win over the Lady Seahawks in Greenville. Taydus paced the UNCW attack with 14 kills, followed by junior outside hitter Leslie Nudelak's 13 kills and team-high 12 digs.

Statistically, Youngblood leads UNCW this season in kills (397) and total attempts (1140). Taydus has team-highs of 28 solo blocks, 80 block assists and 108 total blocks. Moon has amassed 1187 assists and a team-best 56 service aces.

Youngblood moved into fourth place on the UNCW career list with 909 kills and ranks second in total attempts with 2576. She is fifth all-time with 967 career digs and seventh with 94 career aces. Moon stands second all-time with 2477 career assists, and her total of 151 service aces is fifth.

UNCW Athletes of Week

Leigh Anderson
Freshman/Swimming and Diving
Marietta, Ga.

Anderson established a new school record in the 200 Backstroke in sparring UNCW's women over Richmond, 127-116, in a dual meet Saturday.

The Marietta, Ga., swimmer clocked a 2:09.87, snapping the old mark of 2:11.02 set by Pamela Denson at last year's CAA Swimming and Diving Championships.

Anderson also swam a leg on the 400 Medley Relay team that took second with a time of 4:04.05. The time represented a season-best that category.

Tales From... The Dumpster

You know recently the women's basketball program has been under some heat for the controversial dismissals of some players and, to put it nicely, their lack of success. I have to say though, it's not for lack of trying.

Recently I had an opportunity to scrimmage against the women's team with some of the members of my intramural football and basketball teams. First off though let me clarify one thing—I have and I think I speak for the other members of my team, when I say that we have always considered ourselves pretty active. I love sports and am always involved in athletics some way or another. Even though I haven't been involved in any structured conditioning program for a while I had still thought that I was in decent shape. What I learned yesterday was a quick lesson in humility by showing myself and my team just how pathetic out of shape we actually are.

Going into the scrimmage I was fairly confident in myself as far as what kind of shape I was in. I thought since I had played flag football for the last couple months I would be ready to roll. I was so confident that I even felt I was ready to play the point even though that meant playing defense full court. "What the hell!" my manly self told me. "I'm in shape." That little myth was heartlessly destroyed about three trips up the court later.

Things got even more humiliating, after about my third time of taking myself out of the game because I was near death from fatigue, when I noticed that the girl I was covering (Denise Marsh—who I now consider a goddess of fitness) was still playing without a rest. I was so awestruck that all I could manage to do was walk out of the gym humbly shaking my head on the way to purchase an oxygen tank from the nearest medical facility. My condition was so bad that at one point, on my way for more water, I actually considered hopping up in one of the basketball courts and passing out for a while. I'm not ashamed to say that those girls won my butt out and then some.

My whole point of this, even though the results of those girls working so hard in practice haven't been seen yet (and I do emphasize yet), I think that it will be. Don't get me wrong. It's going to take some time but those girls and coach Yow are out there everyday working their butt off.

Yesterday reminded me of just how hard it is to be an athlete on the college level. It takes nothing less than complete commitment and a drive to succeed that doesn't quit. From what I saw yesterday (granted it was only one day) the girls and the coaching staff involved with the women's basketball team have it. With the kind of dedication that the girls show and the coaching staff demands it's only a matter of time before it all pays off.

On a more national note Arkansas is the preseason number one team in college basketball. I'm hear to tell you though, remember you heard it here first, it's not gonna happen. I know that they are returning five starters and all the rest of the crap that everybody says about them. I also know though, that they are returning five great players, but I don't think they are a great team. They play as a group of individuals and that is a lot different than playing as a great team. It might have gotten them by last year, but this year as defending National Champions will be a lot different. My preseason pick for the National Champion is Nebraska by ten over Miami in the Orange Bowl. Wait, wrong sport, ok my preseason pick is North Carolina. I think all the young talent they have is really going to mature this year and show the rest of the country that they mean business.

That's it for now, have a good Thanksgiving break and while your home for vacation keep your head out of your local dumpster. I'll see ya back here in the real dumpster.

Sam's Club Donates $500 to UNCW Recycling

BY JOELLE EPHRAIM

Before Thanksgiving break, Dennis Murray and Marilyn Neal of Sam's Club presented the Environmental Concerns Organization (ECO) with a $500 check, to expand UNCW's recycling program. Sam's Club had the opportunity to act locally and contribute to an environmental program. Mr. Murray commented that, "what better place is there than some type of organization, on campus, because we're neighbors."

ECO has been working with Kellie Kanuit, UNCW's recycling director, in order to expand campus recycling. Carson Smith, ECO vice-president, explains that, "expanding campus recycling consists of raising awareness and getting more bins." Up until now, due to limited funds, the main focus has been on education.

Recent data compiled by Ms. Kanuit, show a remarkable increase in campus recycling. Between July-October of 1993, 12,667 pounds were collected. This past July-October: 28,858 pounds were collected. Recycling has more than doubled. According to Ms. Kanuit, "these figures indicate that there is increased awareness of recycling on this campus."

Students living on campus have expressed a need for bins in the recycling halls. The next step, explains Ms. Kanuit, "is to have another shed," similar to the recycling center behind campus police, "that students can get to."

14 Honored With Razor Walker Awards

BY VICKIE YEARBY

Chancellor James R. Leutze, of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, and Dean Robert E. Tyndall, of the Donald R. Watson School of Education, recognized 14 outstanding North Carolinians in ceremonies at 6:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 16. Awards were given in the fields of education, business, medicine, law, the arts, and public policy from across the state.

The Razor Walker Awards, established by the School of Education in 1993, under the leadership of Tyndall, each year recognizes individuals who have distinguished themselves in service to the youth of our state. "Often against great odds, and in the face of personal and professional risk, these individuals have continued to pursue their goal for better life for the children of North Carolina. Each recipient has demonstrated vision, tenacity, sacrifice and courage," said Tyndall.

The 1994 Razor Walker recipients are:

Public Policy: Jane Smith

Patterson, advisor to the Governor for Policy, Budget and Technology, Raleigh.

Educational Administration: Stephen A. Scroggs, principal of Teachers Memorial School in Kinston; Dr. John Murphy, superintendent of Schools, Charlotte/Mecklenburg; Dr. Dudley Flood, educator and executive director of NC Association of School Administrators in Raleigh; Dr. Leonard Beckum, vice president Duke University, Durham.

Teaching: Mary Black, Teacher of the Year for the Southeastern Region, Fayetteville.

Medicine: Dr. Melvin D. Levine, professor of Pediatrics and director of the Clinical Center for the Study of Development and Learning, UNC-Chapel Hill School of Medicine; Dr. Harvey Estes, director of Reynolds Community Practitioner Program, NC Medical Society Foundation, Raleigh.

Law: Edwin M. Speas, senior deputy attorney general, NC Department of Justice, Raleigh; Charles

UNCW Professor Monitors Sea Turtle Nesting on Beaches

BY VICKIE YEARBY

UNCW biology professor Dr. David Webster is in the process of finishing his six month study of 32 loggerhead turtle nests on Wrightsville Beach and Masonboro Island. Webster said, "The study of sea turtles is important because they are an essential component of the beach community."

Webster's project concentrated on the effects of beach renourishment on sea turtle nest site selection. As a side project he began a study on the effects of beach renourishment on ghost crabs, a major predator of baby sea turtles.

This summer 11 sea turtle nests were found on Wrightsville Beach and 21 on Masonboro Island by the project team that consisted of Dr. Webster and several undergraduate and independent study students. The number of nests found on North Carolina's coastline averages three nests a mile. In contrast, Cape Canaveral, Fla. averages 800 nests a mile. Webster said, "The benefit of having fewer nests is that we can protect and keep track of each one." Not only do students watch over every nest, but also tag each female turtle that nests.

Out of the 32 nests found, only seven were lost. One was lost to raccoons, three to erosion, and three to human disturbance. Webster said, "People's inquisitiveness is a problem." Often people remove the stake that the project team has placed to mark each nest. Then the team cannot find and monitor the nest. "Several times I have dug holes big enough for a Volkswagen to be buried in and still have not found the nest," said Webster.

Only one nest is left, and none of the eggs in it will hatch because the weather is too cold.

"The prognosis is good for the future of sea turtles because we are protecting nests better now than ever before. However, it takes 15-20 years for a turtle to reach sexual maturity," Webster said. Once the newly-hatched turtle makes it to the water, it then has to survive threats by predators and commercial fishermen. Another big killer is pollution in the ocean, such as plastic. "When a turtle sees a piece of plastic, it thinks it is a jellyfish, so it swallows the plastic and then its stomach becomes impacted and the animal dies," said Webster.

Webster thinks it is important for the public to know about this project because it relates to their lives. "Sea turtles are a natural resource in our own backyard. Their condition can relate to the condition of the environment. In other words, if the majority of the turtles develop massive deformities, then we can probably tell that something has changed in the environment, most likely due to human actions," said Webster.

Webster.

Students can also benefit from having a professor who does field work. Coming in with live examples of what students are studying makes for better learning and better teachers.

UNCW signed an agreement with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to grant $27,110 for Webster's project.

Because of the $27,110 granted for this project Webster said, "We have gotten two major pieces of research done and had the benefit of being on the beach to protect the turtles. The biggest success of the project is to find out how it will relate to the long term study of sea turtles. Each question leads to five or six more."

Residents' Room Deposit Increases

BY MELISSA SHAW

Staff Writer

The Office of Housing and Residence Life has increased the amount of the deposit that is required to reserve a room, from $100 to $250.

Last summer was one of the worst summers for cancellations. "Enough returning students cancelled [between June 1 and August 10] to fill Beck Hall," said McCartney.

When returning students reserve rooms, they limit the number of rooms that are available to Freshman. Many Freshman are left without housing and have to be put on waiting lists.

McCartney said "one hundred dollars didn't mean what it used to mean." He is hoping that the $250 will make students more serious about living on campus. He also said that he hopes the increase will limit the number of people who cancel their reservations.

The $250 deposit will still go towards the fall room costs.

UNCW Student Interns Get A Foot In The Door

BY VICKIE YEARBY

From MTV to the Charlotte Hornets, interns from the University of North Carolina at Wilmington are gaining experience in the work force across the nation. The number of local businesses hiring interns has also increased tremendously. With a success rate of about 95 percent, internships are becoming more popular each semester.

This past summer UNCW senior Carol Silver interned with MTV (Music Television) in Manhattan, NY. She interned with the producer of Beach MTV. Now, Carol is working as production assistant for a new show that is expected to air in January 1995. The interactive show, that relies on audience participation, is geared towards high school students.

Silver said, "At first, I thought I would be in heavy competition with the other interns, but after working hard I realized that your efforts get noticed." Senior Lee Walker said he had a great experience interning with the Charlotte Hornets this past summer. He worked with the players and helped with team projects for inner city children. Walker said his most rewarding experience was spending time with two HIV positive children. He was part of the committee that arranged for the Dream Team, the 1996 Olympic Basketball Team, to come to Charlotte to shoot a commercial. He became so attached to the children that he arranged for them to meet the Dream Team at the shooting.

The chief of the Charlotte Police Department wrote a letter to the director of the UNCW communications internship program, Dr. Hana Noor Al-Deen, to express his gratitude for Walker's work with the force helping to construct a basketball court in a public housing community. The work was part of an effort to bring positive change to an area where two Charlotte-Mecklenburg police officers were killed in the line of duty in October 1993.

This semester there are 15 communications majors interning with the following: WECT-TV 6, WWAY-TV 3, FOX Television, Fincannon, the Wilmington Police Department, General Electric, New Hanover Regional Medical Center, the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear, and University Advancement at UNCW.

During the semester, students must intern with local businesses so they can still attend classes, but during the summer, they can go as far as California. Such agencies as Big Picture located in Burbank, CA have been approved as participants in the internship program.

Department of Communications Chair Dr. Frank Trimble said many students get their foot in the door with an internship, which leads to a part-time job, which in turn can lead to a full-time job.

Trimble said, "Internships give students the opportunity to deal with real life situations. The students have to work with real clients and budgets."

Students must meet certain qualifications to become interns. Seniors are preferred, but some juniors are accepted and a 2.5 GPA is required.

With a soaring success rate, the department is working to accommodate all the students who qualify. "An internship is the best possible way for students to try their hand at all the skills they are taught in school," said Trimble.

S.G.A. Car Bash: Relieve Some Pre-Exam Stress

By Vickie Yearby, Public Relations Intern

Wilmington—The Student Government Association of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington will sponsor a "Car Bash" to relieve pre-exam stress and raise money to purchase more recycling bins for the buildings on campus. C & K Auto will donate an old car for students to hit with a sledgehammer from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., Friday, Dec. 9, on the University Union lawn.

Several student organizations will be represented at tables placed around the car. Among those are the Biology Club, Geography Club, the Environmental Concerns Organization, Campus Ministries, and the Association of Nursing Students. WLOZ radio station will broadcast from the site.

Each hit will cost $1, or six hits for $5 can be purchased. Participants can enter a drawing for prizes. Student organizations who are present can enter a drawing to win a submarine sandwich.

The proceeds will be matched up to $500 by the Chancellor's Office.

SGA Treasurer Heather Woodson said they hope to raise $500 from the bash. She said, "Dumpster-style bins are greatly needed in the dorms because the students generate so much trash since they live there." Student Government also hopes to place recycle bins in the auditoriums of each classroom building.

For more information, contact Heather Woodson at 395-3553.

Give Less (Alcohol) This Holiday Season!

December Drunk and Drugged Driving (3D)

Prevention Month

They say it's always better to "give than receive." Well, this Holiday Season when it comes to alcohol the trend is to give less. This year practice giving less by giving your guests who are driving less alcohol, fewer drinks, less often. Alcohol related accidents and deaths do not need to be a part of the coming Holiday season. This year remember, when someone seems to be a little too merry, practice "giving less" and arrange for them a designated driver. For more information, contact the Coastal Horizons Center at 392-7306

Study Smarter: Taking Notes

TOM MACLENNAN

This week, we will briefly examine one of the best-known of the note taking methods: The Cornell System, designed by Walter Pauk, the director of the Reading Research Center at Cornell University. There is no way that I could possibly do justice to Pauk's system, which has been around for the past forty years, in a brief article. To really understand how you can incorporate this elegant system into your own attempts to study smarter, make an appointment with either Pat Coughlin or Jane Kirby, Learning Center consultants (395-3549). I can briefly highlight the thinking behind Pauk's approach.

Pauk believes that the notes that you take in class are really a hand-written textbook. If you keep them neat, complete, and well-organized, they will help you achieve a higher grade in your course work. You may even refer to them long after the course grade is recorded on your transcript. When I began my own career as a high school English teacher, I would frequently refer back to my notes in preparing for my classes. I also used them as a starting point when I enrolled in similar graduate courses. For that reason, Pauk advises using a pen when keeping notes and being as clear as possible when recording your notes. If your handwriting is not too legible, you might even consider adopting a modified printing style.

Pauk advises using 8 1/2 by 11 loose-leaf notebook paper. One reason is that when you are reviewing your notes, you can spread them out more easily. Your first step is to draw a vertical line 2 1/2 inches from the left side edge of the paper. You end the line 2 inches from the bottom of the paper. Next, draw a horizontal line across the bottom of the paper, 2 inches above the paper's edge. In the wide column on the right hand side of the paper, you record the lecture notes. In the narrow column on the left hand side of the paper, you record cue words of questions. In the space at the bottom, you summarize the notes. In next week's column, we will summarize some do's and don'ts of taking notes.

Finally, let me invite any interested students to our first Final Exam Review session in the Randall Library Auditorium on Thursday, December 1st, from 7:00 p.m. until 8:00 p.m. Learning Center consultants will be offering some advice on organizing preparation for final essay and multiple-choice exams.

Reserve Implements Water Quality Monitoring Program

Wilmington—Dr. Steve Ross, research coordinator for the North Carolina National Estuarine Research Reserve, is implementing a nationwide estuarine water quality monitoring program.

Ross said the main focus for the first two to three years of the program will be to assess short-term variability of water quality in local creeks in relation to land use patterns and weather patterns. In other words, "When it rains, how fast does the water change?" explained Ross. High tech data loggers will be placed in each of the 21 reserve sites across the country. They will constantly record the temperature, depth, turbidity, acidity and salinity of the water.

Zeke's Island, Masonboro Island, Rachel Carson at Beaufort, and Currituck Banks are the Estuarine Reserve sites for North Carolina. Most of the work will take place at Masonboro Island. Ross, who is an associate researcher with the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, said this was the first year of a long-term program. In order to collect baseline data, the project has to continue for an extended period of time. Ross also stated that new questions for the study would arise each year.

The estimated cost for the first year of the project will be $226,008 and will be financed 100 percent by federal funds from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

UNCW Recognizes World AIDS Day With Campus Activities

The University Of North Carolina At Wilmington will recognize World AIDS Day from 10:00 a.m. until 2:00 p.m. on Thursday, December 1, in the lobby of the University Center. UNCW will focus on the international theme "AIDS and Families." Participants are invited to view current HIV/AIDS video tapes among other activities.

This is the only of coordinated action against the spread of HIV/AIDS observed internationally every December 1. World AIDS Day serves to strengthen the global efforts to face the challenge of the AIDS pandemic, which continues to spread in all regions of the world. Co-sponsors of the event are UNCW's Minority Affairs, Wellness Promotion, AIDS Awareness In The Black Community, and the National Pan-Hellenic Council: Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Omega Psi Phi Fraternity and Zeta Phi Beta Sorority.

Volunteer! Banquet to Fight Hunger

BY LAURA CORSO
Staff Writer

While millions are stuffing the turkey and dressing in their faces this holiday season, one out of every five people will go hungry worldwide. In a time of excess eating, drinking, and buying it is easy for one to take our gifts for granted. UNCW Volunteers! have aimed to stimulate our awareness of all the things most people have that billions do not.

In order to take part in the national campaign to fight world hunger and poverty around the world, UNCW Volunteers! held a Hunger Banquet in the University Center to benefit Oxfam America. Oxfam is a self-help development agency that works in partnership with poor people around the world to fight hunger and poverty.

With the help of local businesses and campus dining, UNCW's first Hunger Banquet was held the Thursday before Thanksgiving, in honor of Oxfam America's annual Fast for a World Harvest campaign. The event embodied the shocking unequal distribution of resources throughout the world by having each attendee represent an income group.

The evening began by a choice of fate before entering the ballroom. Each attendee had the opportunity to randomly select a seat among either the high, middle, or low income groups. Depending on his/her fortune, he/she became a specific individual form a certain area of the world.

Those who were lucky enough to choose the high income group sat in luxury at a table with linen tablecloths and napkins, china and fine silverware. They were served full course meals by waitresses from UNCW Volunteers! and represented 15% of the world's population. This is how most of us have the opportunity to eat each day.

The middle income group represented a larger 25% of the population. They sat on crates and were fed rice, beans, and clean water with minimal utensils.

The majority of the attendees represented the majority of the world being a part of the low income group. Acting as 60% of the population, they sat on burlap, drank dirty water and ate a handful of rice with their hands.

The game of "Fate" was played in order to illustrate how a simple twist of fate can completely change one's life from comfortable and healthy to an unhealthy struggle to survive and vice versa. Some participants moved from higher to lower classes due to their fate while others were lucky enough to move up to higher income groups.

The stark realization came from the shocking contrasts among each group's position on the income ladder. Kevin Kurag, among the guilt-laden high income group said, "It is terrible that the world is so lopsided. This event really helped me to realize just how bad it is."

John Harvey from Oxfam America led the discussion on how we as Americans can make a change. He said that we must educate ourselves to better understand the need for immediate action each day and to regulate our consumption of food, gas and energy and donate what we save to worthwhile organizations. Harvey also said we must vote for politicians who are willing to make a change by supporting relief efforts that fight against poverty.

The evening began by a choice of fate before entering the ballroom. Each attendee had the opportunity to randomly select a seat among either the high, middle, or low income groups.

Steven Mike Waldmann, the keynote speaker and the director for the Society of St. Andrew also attended the banquet. He stressed how we live our lives each day effects the rest of the world and presented means of troubleshooting through various organizations.

Waldmann encouraged individual action. He emphasized the need for self regulation in order to keep a balance in the world. It is up to each one of us the make a change through our daily lifestyles.

Alan Bass, UNCW Volunteer! coordinator hopes the banquet gave people, "...a better understanding of what the root problems of poverty are and the positive action that can be taken to fight it." The event certainly made an impact on the severity of the problem.

UNCW Graduates 709 in December 10 Commencement

BY JAN KELLER
AND FIONA RICE
Staff Writer

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will award 709 degrees at its 49th commencement exercises at 10 a.m., Saturday, Dec. 10, in Trask Coliseum. Presenting the commencement address will be novelist Lee Smith, a North Carolina State University English professor since 1985.

This is the fourth December commencement to be held at UNCW, a development necessitated by an increasing number of students graduating during summer and fall semesters. Even with two commencements a year, the university has implemented a guest ticketing system due to space limitations in Trask Coliseum. This year, each graduate will be allowed six guests each. Departmental receptions following commencement will be open to all guests of the graduates. Diplomas for summer graduates and honorary scrolls for fall graduates will be awarded at the departmental receptions.

In this graduating class, some 664 will receive bachelor's degrees while 45 will be awarded graduate degrees. Those graduating in December will include 199 bachelor's candidates and 21 graduate students who completed graduation requirements during the summer and 465 undergraduates and 24 graduate students who will complete their requirements at the end of the fall semester 1994.

Commencement speaker Smith is author of eight novels and has collections of short stories and has had stories and articles to appear in various periodicals. Her first novel, The Last Day the Dogbushes

Bloomed was published while she was still a student at Hollins College. Her award-winning stories deal with women and their southern life and customs and are rich in humor and wisdom. Her works have been compared to those of Virginia Woolf, Carson McCullers, Flannery O'Connor, Eudora Welty and William Faulkner.

Two of her novels won the Sir Walter Raleigh Award, Oral History in 1983 and Fair and Tender Ladies in 1989. She received the Robert Penn Warren Prize for Fiction in 1991, the O. Henry Awards in 1979 and 1981, and the John Dos Passos Award in 1987. In addition, she has won numerous other awards for her writing.

A native of Virginia, Smith holds a bachelor's degree in English from B. A. Hollins College.

STUDENT PROFILE: ROBERT VARISCO

By Laura A. Corso

UNCW graduate student Robert Varisco is a modern day Renaissance Man. Bob, as he is known, is an English student whose interests are multifaceted which leaves him open to many possibilities and opportunities. He is no your ordinary, run of the mill grad student.

Aside from Bob's studies and work as a teaching assistant for English 101 and 102, he has ventured into directing theatre productions. His first play, by German playwright Peter Weiss, Marat Sade will be performed Sunday, Dec. 4, free of charge, in the University Center's Stage Cafe at 8 p.m.

Although he has had some background in theatre, this is Bob's first attempt at directing. He claims his reason for doing so is "to test the concepts of Antoine Arnaud," an early 20th Century impresario who developed the concept of the theatre of cruelty but "was unable to get his ideas off the ground because he died before he could develop a mythology."

Bob said his experiences in the theatre will also guide him through his future goal of receiving his doctorate in order to teach at the university level. Bob just finished applying to doctorate programs in theatre and literature in such high-ranking schools as Harvard and Yale.

Born in Philadelphia and raised in Delaware, Bob said he feels comfortable in the Northeast and is looking forward to attending school there again. Bob graduated with a Bachelor of Arts and Science in American Literature and Social and Cultural Anthropology from the University of Delaware; after which he worked for a time as an anthropologist doing technical investigative reports and archeology.

In the little free time he has, Bob enjoys listening to underground music. He also likes to read modern and postmodern American and British literature. Bob appreciates surrealist art, theatre, and Harley-Davidson motorcycles. He is presently contemplating making his second Harley purchase which he considers a major priority.

A well-rounded individual not afraid to state his opinion or go after what he wants, Bob Varisco is truly a Renaissance Man.

Simon Spalding Performed "Maritime Music of Coastal Carolina" at UNCW

BY VICKIE YEARBY

Simon Spalding, a maritime and historic musicologist, lectured and performed "Maritime Music of Coastal Carolina" at 8 p.m., Tuesday, Nov. 29, in Cameron Auditorium on the campus of UNCW.

Spalding's lecture on the various types of music that were common among the sailors and fishermen of the Carolina coast. "Different types of chanteys match different shipboard tasks. They tell the story of the sea in the words of men who sailed many years ago."

Spalding is an internationally acclaimed sea chanteyman and fiddler who has performed nautical music at festivals, concerts, and special events throughout North America and Europe. He is an accomplished musician and singer who accompanies his performances with such instruments as the fiddle, banjo, and mandolin.

The performance was sponsored by the UNCW Department of History and the College of Arts and Sciences. It is part of the Department of History's public programs for this semester which focus on North Carolina "History, Culture, and Community."

UNCW Concert Choir to Perform in First Presbyterian Vespers Musical Series

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington and First Presbyterian Vespers Musical Series will present the UNCW Concert Choir in an all-Mozart concert at 8:30 PM on Sunday, December 4, 1994 at the First Presbyterian Church at 3rd and Orange Streets in downtown Wilmington. Admission is free and the public is invited.

The Concert Choir will perform Mozart's Coronation Mass with soloists and orchestra. The program will also feature soprano Joan Heller in a performance of the motet Exultate, Jubilate and organists Gregory Bell and John Conston in tow of the "Epistle Sonatas" for organ and orchestra. Associate Professor of Music, Joe Hickman, will conduct the entire concert.

Joan Heller is a visiting Associate Professor of Music at UNCW. She came to Wilmington in Fall 1994 after a number of years experience teaching at Boston University and at Yale. She is well known internationally as a performer of contemporary music and is considered one of the most outstanding voice teachers in the United States. This year, she has appeared as performing clinician for the North Carolina chapter of the National Association of Teachers of Singing, at Meredith College, and at Duke University. She will appear in recital at UNCW in the spring, together with pianist Barry Salven and guitarist Rob Nathanson. Two of the soloists for the Coronation Mass are students of Ms. Heller.

The Church Sonatas for organ and orchestra were composed by Mozart for use at the Salzburg Cathedral. They would have originally been played between the reading of the Epistle and the Gospel, and each shares an occasion with a major Mass composition by Mozart. Gregory Bell will perform the sonata from the same occasion as the Coronation Mass. He is a part time faculty member at UNCW and full time music director at St. John's Episcopal Church. "The beautiful surroundings of the First Presbyterian Church and the marvelous acoustics of that space will make this an excellent setting for a magnificent evening of music," according to Joe Hickman. "I consider First Presbyterian and Thalian Ballroom as the two most suitable acoustical spaces in our community. The combination of warmth, provided by the wood floor and the presence allowed by the spacious ceiling height reinforces the sound produced by the ensemble. Likewise, they are able to hear each other better than anywhere else we sing in the community."

The program is part of the Vespers Musical Series of the First Presbyterian Church. For additional information, contact Joe Hickman at 395-3390.

National Student Exchange Lets Students Travel

BY MELISSA SHAW
Staff Writer

The NSE is a nationwide program which lets students study at other universities for the same amount of money as it costs to go to the students' home school. A student can study away for a year or a semester.

For what it costs to go to this school, a UNCW student could go to Alaska, Texas, Wisconsin, Florida, Guam, almost anywhere!

It is a little known program at UNCW, that only a few students take advantage of. Only two UNCW students left last year and 5 are gone right now.

Ken McSwain, a senior at UNCW, went to the University of Hawaii at Manoa for his junior year through NSE. "The experience that I received, you can't put a price on it," he said.

He said that his year in Hawaii was the best time of his life. The program is designed for sophomores and Juniors. There is a small interview process to go through with UNCW administrators and an application that must be filled out before a student is selected to go.

Applications will be available in December from the Housing and Residence Life Office. General information about the program can also be found there.

UNCW Professor Discovers Endangered Shrews In Dismal Swamp

BY VICKIE YEARBY

UNCW biology professor Dr. David Webster has discovered an abundance of the endangered southeastern shrew in the Dismal Swamp State Natural Area. Because of this finding, the State Natural Area Swamp's remnant population of Atlantic White Cedar trees, which are home to the shrew, will not be logged for commercial purposes. The southeastern shrew is considered endangered because its geographic range is restricted to swampy areas.

The N.C. State Parks Administration hired Webster to assess the plants and animals in the Dismal Swamp because it wanted to transfer the Atlantic White Cedar trees located in the swamp to another area.

The species we studied are small mammals that most people don't think about," said Webster. Among the animals found in the swamp were bats, rabbits and shrews. Webster said, "About every other week we would encounter a black bear."

In addition to discovering an abundance of southeastern shrews, Webster was able to take tissue samples from enough shrews to find out about their population structure. "No one has been able to catch shrews in the quantities needed for genetic studies," said Webster, who is very pleased he was able to do so. He trapped the shrews in large cans set in the ground. The animals got curious, jumped into the cans and couldn't get out.

One unexpected finding was the pygmy shrew, which is the second most abundant small animal in the swamp. This animal's body is about one inch long. Webster said, "Twenty years ago this animal wasn't thought to occur in the swamp at all, and now we find that it is one of the most abundant yet." The pygmy shrew is not considered endangered, but is listed as a special concern at the state level.

The 1,700 acre Dismal Swamp State Natural Area is located in northeastern North Carolina west of Highway 17. There is no road that leads to the swamp. The natural area is administered by State Parks.

Webster received a grant in the amount of $7,000 from the N.C. Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources for his project.

He feels good about the project findings because of the data collected on the shrews for genetic testing. Also, now that it is determined that the swamp is home to a federally endangered species, the southeastern shrew, the state can better manage the property to insure the shrew's survival. He said, "It's a beautiful piece of property. I would hate to see the State Parks lose it."

Research Coordinator Implements Monitoring Program In Estuarine

BY VICKIE YEARBY

Dr. Steve Ross, research coordinator for the North Carolina National Estuarine Research Reserve, is implementing a nationwide estuarine water quality monitoring program.

Ross said the main focus for the first two to three years of the program will be to assess short-term variability of water quality in local creeks in relation to land use patterns and weather patterns. In other words, "When it rains, how fast does the water change?" explained Ross. High tech data loggers will be placed in each of the 21 reserve sites across the country. They will constantly record the temperature, depth, turbidity, acidity and salinity of the water.

Zake's Island, Masonboro Island, Rachel Carson at Beaufort, and Currituck Banks are the Estuarine Reserve sites for North Carolina. Most of the work will take place at Masonboro Island.

Ross, who is an associate researcher with the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, said this was the first year of a long-term program. The project has to continue for an extended period of time. Ross also stated that new questions for the study would arise each year.

The estimated cost for the first year of the project will be $226,008 and will be financed 100 percent by federal funds from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Ancient Manuscripts Discovered

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS
Staff Writer

Professor George Greenia, director of the medieval and renaissance studies program at the College of William and Mary, is accustomed to sorting through old documents.

But according to the College Press Service, even he was surprised with what he found during a tour of the Hill Monastic Library at St. John's University this summer.

When library researchers at St.

John's, Maručen and Paul Watry, showed Greenia some scrolls and parchments, he realized two were unique historical documents from medieval Spain.

Greenia and the Watrys soon found more than 40 uncatalogued Spanish documents dating back to the 13th century stashed away in the library's vault.

"This is a very thrilling and unique find for an American library," Greenia said. "The discovery of a major collection of documents like this has not happened in the United States for several decades."

Greenia was touring the St. John's special collections library as part of the Summer Apprenticeship in Archival Skills for Medieval and Renaissance Studies. St. John's collection is an integral part of the program and features the largest collection of microfilmed manuscripts in the world.

"We were very fortunate to have these specialists here and that they were able to recognize the potential value of these documents," said the Rev. Eric Hollas, director of the Hill Monastic Manuscript Library. Hollas said the discovery will undoubtedly draw more researchers to the St. John's Collegeville campus.

Although Greenia has since returned to his own campus in Williamsburg, Va., he said he plans to keep researching the documents. "Other medieval researchers have told me to drop everything and get to work on this collection," Hollas said.

Fitzgerald's "Gatsby" Manuscript Donated to U. of South Carolina

BY JUNE RAPP ORAVITS
Staff Writer

There's only one copy of the galley proofs of F. Scott Fitzgerald's The Great Gatsby, and the University of South Carolina will soon be its proud owner.

According to the College Press Service, the USC library will pay English professor Matthew Bruccoli $800,000 over the next 12 years for the world's largest collection of Fitzgerald's printed work, less than half of its $2 million value. The rest of the collection is a gift from Bruccoli and his wife. Arlyn.

"I'm delighted that the collection will be kept together in one university library," Bruccoli said, "and that researchers will be able to go there and use the materials."

The collection includes about 10,000 Fitzgerald books, manuscripts, letters and personal items, such as the author's whiskey flask and briefcase.

Bruccoli said he first got hooked on Fitzgerald in 1947 when he heard a radio play of the short story, "A Diamond as Big as the Ritz." He didn't begin collecting Fitzgerald documents, though, until he was married 10 years later and "had a home to put them in."

Some of Bruccoli's favorite items—other than the galley proofs he obtained at an auction while worrying that "some millionaire was going to bid me out of existence"—are the inscriptions Fitzgerald wrote to friends in his books.

"His inscriptions are almost always literary acts," Bruccoli said. "He wrote something witty or said something about the book."

Bruccoli said he regards his collection as a tribute to his friendship with Fitzgerald's daughter Scottie, which he calls "the best thing to come out of my Fitzgerald work." The pair co-wrote and co-edited several books on the author. Bruccoli has also written and edited dozens of books on his own about Fitzgerald.

Bruccoli teaches an annual graduate seminar on Fitzgerald and "sneak[s] him into any course I can."

Other scholars can use the collection at the university's Thomas Cooper Library after it has been catalogued, which Bruccoli estimates will take about a year.

Princeton University, Fitzgerald's alma mater, has most of the writer's private papers.

Frank Tascone Frank's Place

Greetings and welcome again to Frank's Place. I hope everyone had a happy Thanksgiving. Bob and I hit the road over break. We took our annual trip "up north." Yes fans, if you have not guessed as much already, Bob and I are Yankoes, although I feel a need to qualify that statement by pointing out that we are Ohioans—a kinder gentler version, as compared to those venturing south from places like Jersey, Philly, and "The City."

We split our trip into two days in order to lighten the burden. (A word of wisdom: when you split your one day trip into two days, your one day trip becomes a two day trip—it's the same principle which allows a gas to always expand to the limits of its container.)

So Tuesday evening, in the romantic tradition of Steinbock and Kerouak, we head down route 40—myself, a cat, and a friend who has asked to remain nameless. We make our first stop at a Wafflehouse on 95. Ah, the glory of the American road. I do the eggs and bacon for dinner thing. It's so satisfying to break from tradition when you're on the road. There's country music playing on the jukebox, a man with a cowboy hat smoking a cigarette staring into the distance—must be a trucker contemplating the lonesome drone of the highway. I'm convinced Willie Nelson has eaten here. My friend thinks one of the Wafflehouse cooks looks like a jazz musician—"the clickety clack-o-the-plates, the clickety clack-o-the-plates." I drink coffee, the enlightening effects of the caffeine opening my mind—I love the road.

After 45 minutes and at least ten apologies—"I'll be right with you!"—we get our food. By this time I wish I'd have gotten the chicken—it comes with a salad and fries—the breakfast for dinner thing has lost its appeal. But it's not the food I'm here for, it's the environment. I look over at the trucker. I follow his gaze to the greasy ceiling lamp—he's watching the fluttering and banging of a large katydid against and around the light. The bug breaks it's tie with the light and glides down to the counter at the edge of my plate. I don't want to make a scene, but it's cleaning its mandibles with its front legs. I tell the waitress, "Don't smash it," I ask. She beckons one of the busboys. He grabs the insect and carries it into the kitchen—I'm glad I didn't get the

Soon we're on the road again. As we pull out, I see the "katydid watching" trucker climb into his rusting Chevy Luv pickup. Not the driver of an 18 wheeler, but a road warrior just the same. It's now 9 PM. Two hours later we're stopped again. There's been an accident on 95. I feel like I'm in a living artery—red cells ahead going my direction, white ones coming the other way. I dash through a rest area hoping to get by the congestion, but the congestion has arrived there first.

At midnight we're still there. I get out to get a closer look. There's dozens of ambulances—flashing lights of all colors, a helicopter lands and takes off again. A girl comes up to me and says, "Let's go see what's going on." I don't know her but I figure I'm on the road—a great place to meet exciting people. "This is wild," she says. "I've got to see what's going on." When we get to the scene there's a van that has smashed into the back of a semi. It's pretty gruesome. The girl says, "I hate to see this kind of thing."

I say to myself "like what did you expect to see?" I'm reminded of the katydid at Wafflehouse attracted by the lights. She goes on to tell me she's drunk. She doesn't know me. It's lucky I'm a nice guy.

After another couple hours I'm checked into a motel—I sneak Bob in. I close my eyes and look forward to another day on the road.

June Rapp Oravits Here's What I Think About It...

Sometimes, actually often times, I think students at UNCW are perceived as being too stupid or not important enough to know what's going on in the world and on campus by non-student campus community members. I maintain that every decision made on this campus affects students, directly or indirectly and not always in positive ways.

Recently, important decisions were made as to which professor or professors on campus will receive tenure. One of those whose tenure was declined is Dr. Donnaltee Frega. The Reappointment, Tenure and Promotion (RTP) committee's decision not to offer her tenure opposes everything I've been taught at this university and sends a contradictory message to all students on this campus.

I received my undergraduate degree at UNCW and am now a graduate student with a teaching assistantship in the English Department. I have achieved a number of personal goals and have established challenging new goals for myself due, in large part, to Dr. Frega. Her excellent performance as a teacher and her sincere interest in my achievements and progress as an inquiring person have inspired, challenged, and even goaded me at times to always question, probe, and think critically about my studies. Dr. Frega taught me the value and necessity of allowing myself the freedom of asking difficult and tantalizing questions about everything around me.

In representing the quality of education present at UNCW, she bears witness to our university motto, "Discere Aude," emphasized by Dr. Gerald Shinn during my undergraduate commencement exercise in May. Dr. Shinn said the role of the university is to teach us to think for ourselves. Our responsibility as students, Dr. Shinn urged us is to "always, everywhere, do everything in your power to discover, unlock, and realize your own human potential."

If this is true, and apparently sanctioned by the university, why deny tenure to a professor who actually meets and achieves success in performing that responsibility?

However, the RTP committee's decision, and the historically agonizing process of seeking tenure, sends me a message contradictory to what Dr. Shinn said.

Excellent teaching no longer seems to be held as a real value at this university. Instead, there seems to be a caveat involved which modifies excellent teachers as those who have published sufficiently. I do not believe this stance to be valid.

Unfortunately for students, as well as Dr. Frega, the message is clear. In order to succeed in academia, you must publish—extensively and in approved ways. I have worked hard to reach the point where I can legitimately consider working towards a Ph.D. in English. But now, I find myself having to question whether or not I should do so—I have to wonder about whether my existence as a teacher will only be validated by my number of publications. This is, in itself, problematic; problematic in that my ideology is not one of politics. An effective teacher serves as guide and mentor in the learning process. An excellent teacher continuously strives to engage students in the act of learning. Learning is an act of reciprocity. Dr. Frega knows this and she never lets herself, nor her students, forget it.

If publishing is the conclusive means of evaluating my ability to teach at the university level, I feel I will lose something in my learning process. Instead of studying teaching methods, maybe I just need to write a lot and make sure it gets published. But even then, if Dr. Frega is denied tenure, how do I know the same thing won't happen to me? Do I need to worry more about publishing than whether or not I have helped a student achieve the human potential Dr. Shinn promised is there? In what way does the RTP committee encourage or inspire me to want to spend countless hours and endless dollars struggling to achieve my so-called human potential if a tenure committee somewhere will invalidate my efforts because I haven't published enough or patronized the "right" people?

Dr. Frega isn't the only victim, other wonderful teachers are lost during the desperate attempt to grab a slippery rung on the tenure ladder. The other victims of this archaic system are the students. We suffer under the constraints of poor teaching at times from tenured professors, overzealousness of "inspired" and hard-tense-track teachers, and we suffer when the really excellent professors disappear. This problem isn't unique to UNCW, it's all over America. I'm sad we suffer by losing teachers like Dr. Frega who have much to offer me and all other students coming behind me at UNCW.

I challenge the RTP to please not break faith with the reason we are all here at the university in the first place—to learn and be taught by professors with excellent teaching skills.

Bob Haywood Stillpoint: Between Blessing And Blessing

We are in that wonderful uplifting season between the blessings of Thanksgiving and Christmas. Most of us have had the opportunity to gather around a wonderful Thanksgiving dinner with family or, at least, with friends and become mindful of all for which we were thankful. There is an old familiar hymn that begins, "Count your blessings, name them one by one..." When I stop and think about the variety of ways that my life is blessed, particularly this year which has brought me unusual opportunities to travel, I am overwhelmed with a sense of gratitude and appreciation for God's grace. If I sat down and named the blessings of my life one by one in my journal, it would certainly take more than one page! What about you? Back from Thanksgiving and facing all of the end of the semester responsibilities which are followed by exams, it is very easy to lose our sense of blessedness. Stop for a moment; put aside your studies for five short minutes and simply let yourself be aware of the many ways in which your life is graced.

Even when things go wrong such as an illness, family struggles, failing a test or even a class—even then, if we let ourselves, we can still make a long list of our blessings.

Even more valuable than "counting our blessings" is the possibility of feeling blessed. I happen to be at a time in my life when almost every aspect of my personal life feels together. It is so not by my own merit, but only by grace. Still, I love to wallow in such a state of well-being. More than thinking about it, I enjoy feeling thankful and blessed. If stress in its many forms brings shadows into your days, there is almost nothing more effective in bringing brightness that dissolves shadows than wallowing in your own awareness of the goodness you can find in your life.

To feel blessed has energy that can shape our days and nourish our spirits.

Now as we take leave of Thanksgiving and turn to face into December, what do we find but another source of blessing. One vision we all have is a Christmas tree bedecked with lights and trimmings surrendered by a floor full of gifts. And many of us have already been asked to "turn in our Christmas lists."

But the scene that generates my sense of blessings is the scene of a rude manger surrounded by shepherds, wisemen, animals and a mother and father. Here is where, as prophets of old foretold, Light as shined into darkness. Here in the mystery of this incredible moment in time when the love of God became incarnate in a little child. Here blessedness becomes available and flows into our lives from the outside without reference to our worth or merit. We are loved just as we are without condition by the creator of heaven and earth. Such truth is the fountainhead of all blessings and provides a strong foundation for image itself and our dreams about what we might yet become.

So we live between Blessing and Blessing, between Thanksgiving and Christmas. On the surface of our daily lives we may feel a lot of craziness and stress; our lists of things to do may seem awfully long. I would encourage you to take some moments each day to sink down into that wonderful layer of blessedness that awaits you just below the surface of your daily life.

S. Bartlett Student Soliloquies

It's Thursday—Seahawk is, and time for another slamfest, right? Not this week. After 5 relaxing days away from UNCW intellectuals, I'm simply too mellow to be caustic or even moderately abusive. Avoidance therapy sometimes works. For 120 hours I have not allowed myself to think about projects, final exams, or last minute papers.

But, alas and churl, Monday is slithering across the horizon, leaving behind a slimy trail of intellectual horrors waiting to destroy my serenity. A phone call from a fellow UNCWer tonight only added to my back-to-classes angst. We spent 30 minutes discussing the Michigan custody battle being fought between Jennifer Ireland and Steven Smith over their daughter Maranda.

For those of you not familiar with the specifics of this case, Circuit Court Judge Raymond Cashen revoked Ireland's custody because she was taking Maranda to a licensed day care facility while she was attending college classes and working. Cashen thinks Maranda will be better cared for by Smith's mother, with whom he lives. Maranda, according to Cashen, needs a stable, traditional home where the female is the constant care-giver while the male works and attends college.

Forget that Ireland became pregnant at the age of 16, graduated from high school with honors, and was awarded a scholarship from the University of Michigan—all while providing a home for and raising Maranda and without ever receiving assistance from Smith or government programs, such as welfare. And does it really matter that Smith's wages had to be garnished because he refused to pay child support or that he only sought custody after money became an issue or that he has court charges pending against him for assaulting Ireland?

Obviously, Cashen's decision to revoke Ireland's custody was meant to punish and denigrate single mothers while exonerating fathers who refuse to pay child support. The friend I was discussing Ireland's case with expressed her disbelief that blatantly discriminatory rulings would be uttered by an appointed judicial official of our nation's government. Once I had slapped her about for 10 or 15 minutes, she got past being shocked and now and only seemed mildly angry and appalled. I was astounded by how poorly informed this friend is—especially considering her status as a single mother who is constantly hounded by unfriendly ex-in-laws who threaten to sue her for visitation under what they call their "rights as grandparents."

How can women remain so uniformed and indifferent about national issues directly affecting the most vulnerable aspects of their lives? Do some UNCW women think their student status elevates them to a plateau of untouchable righteousness? Do others believe if they study hard, graduate with honors, get a great job, and become reliable, diligent employees nothing rotten will ever stink up their lives? They'll never be denied promotion on a technically reserved for women like them? They'll never have to fend off sexual harassment from co-workers? They'll never know the humiliation and pain caused by offenders of the variety of violent crimes committed against women every minute of every day in this country? What? They'll never divorce Mr. Wonderful and lose custody of their children or try to survive on the minimal amount of child support he may not pay anyway? Do these situations really occur with frequency?

Case Study. I know a woman, who in the past 10 years, has experienced the following: She was fired from a $60,000 a year job (by a female supervisor) because she wasn't a team player—after she complained about her immediate supervisor's habit of groping her breasts and buttocks in front of fellow employees and customers. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission passed her sexual discrimination complaint to 12 different caseworkers, who never bothered to read the 10 affidavits she had collected from employees witnessing the sexual harassment, and allowed the statute of limitations to run out on her complaint.

She was let go from her next job 2 days after they would have had to offer her full-time benefits, because she was eight months pregnant and was considered "counterproductive cost-wise" to the company. Two years later, during her second pregnancy, her husband leaves. She begins attending college to secure the skills she needs to provide her family with financial security. While a student, she is harassed by an instructor at the college. When she asks the administration to protect her from her pursuer, they question her morality and warn her not to "go public" with her story, since she might earn a bad reputation and find gaining acceptance to another school difficult. Now attending classes at a different college, she is wary of reporting sexual harassment or misconduct because she fears the same reprisals.

And always in the back of her mind, she is nagged by the thought that silence is safer—for her as a student and a parent. Because, as the local police informed her when discussing her option to file a formal complaint against her former professor, "50 percent of the people will think you're a slut and that you asked for it." She is afraid that 50 percent will influence the grandparents of her children and she could lose a custody battle.

But this is only one Case Study, right? This couldn't happen to you, could it? Or to me? And stuff like this would never happen on our lovely UNCW campus, would it?

Don't Wear A Red Ribbon Superficially

BY AMANDA JESSE

News Editor

We walked the 10 kilometer AIDS Walk pushing her in a wheel chair most of the way. Cindy would get out of the chair occasionally, but fatigue would consume her quickly. During the walk she was young, excited and sick with AIDS.

At the finish line, her support group gathered around the wheel chair and helped her stand. She wanted to walk across the finish line. She was too stubborn to cross the line in the wheel chair. She wasn't going to let the disease overcome her, even though it did many times.

Cindy Gibson acquired the HIV virus from a life-saving blood transfusion on New Year's Day in 1984. This blood transfusion that saved her from dying of Sickle Cell Anemia would also high school lifestyle after she went public.

Cindy was scared to graduate. She felt safe in the confines of high school with people who loved and accepted her. She knew graduation would change everything. She always said that she didn't want to lose touch with her friends and that she wanted to die with all her friends around her. Two days before graduation, Cindy died suddenly. After all the pain Cindy went through, she never had to deal with the pain of losing her friends.

Today is AIDS Awareness Day. I can be found wearing a red ribbon signifying support for people with AIDS and hope for a cure. I will also be wearing another red ribbon with a strip of black sewn through the middle to remember my friend Cindy and show that AIDS patients don't need "fair weather friends," they need friends who will stick by them until the end.

I encourage you to take a look at yourself and ask if you are really immune to getting AIDS. I can assure you give you the answer. "No." How many times have you made an unsubstantiated, discriminate remark such as, "She deserved to get the disease because she was not practicing safe sex," "Why should I support someone who obviously did something wrong," or "This is just God's way of punishing him for his acts?"

Step back. Take a look at the big picture. You could be the one lying in bed dying from a cold most people could easily fight off. You could be the one who wastes away in a hospital bed with tubes and monitors charting your decline. Maybe you made a mistake, maybe you were an innocent victim. It really doesn't matter how you got the disease. What matters is that people need love and support when they are struggling with AIDS. You would too if you were in their shoes. That is what AIDS Awareness Day is all about. It isn't a day for superficial supporters who simply put on a red ribbon for the "hell of it." AIDS is not a one day thing. Being supportive of people with AIDS is not a one day thing. AIDS Awareness Day shouldn't be a one day thing. Show your support all year.

Statement By President Clinton About AIDS Victim Pedro Zamora

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

Hillary and I are deeply saddened by the news of the death of Pedro Zamora.

In his short life, Pedro educated and enlightened our nation. He taught all of us that AIDS is a disease with a human face and one that affects every American, indeed every citizen of the world. And he taught people living with AIDS how to fight for their rights and live with dignity.

Pedro was particularly instrumental in reaching out to his own generation, where AIDS is striking hard. Through his work with MTV, he taught young people that "The Real World" includes AIDS and that each of us has the responsibility to protect ourselves and our loved ones.

Today, one in four new HIV infections is among people under the age of 20. For Pedro, and for all Americans infected and affected by HIV, we must intensify our efforts to reduce the rate of HIV infection, provide treatment to those living with AIDS, and, ultimately, find a cure for AIDS.

Our hearts are with Pedro's family in this difficult time. In the months ahead, let us rededicate ourselves to continuing Pedro's brave fight.

Advice To UNCW's Weary Dear Emma And Nora

Welcome back to all you eager beavers dying to sink your bucky little teeth into final exams. They're coming, you know. Faster than you can sputter, "I want a martyr just like the martyr that married Dear Old Dad."

We're back—although you may have noticed the "we" is now halfway different, and ready to finish off this semester with a brighter, more people-loving column. Emma says it's time to give you folks a break from the sarcasm and blatant hostility with which this column usually assaults its readers. We are going to be nice. Really. Well, at least until after Christmas. We figure why push that "making his list and checking it twice" crap?

You have one last Fall Seahawk in which you may see your confidential woes published. Write to us at UNCW P.O. Box 24095 or the Seahawk Office, in the University Union.

This week's intellectual prod:

The whole world is a scab.

The point is to pick it constructively.

Peter Beard

Dear Emma & Nora:

This is in response to the feminist who wrote to bitch about her perceived injustices in the system. She questioned why the men's soccer team was playing on Family Weekend instead of the women's. It could have been just a scheduling necessity, or it could have been that the men's team is better, more competitive, more interesting and playing on a higher level than the women's team. I would compare watching the men's team as opposed to watching the women's team with driving a Mercedes as opposed to a Nova.

In reference to her gripe over the uniforms of the women's cross-country team, I would like to say that we men love looking at these women and appreciate the uniforms and would like them to stay just the way they are. If she wants to bitch about uniforms, she should be bitching about those of the men's swimming team. Those uniforms are no more than a pair of women's panties. They are degrading and objectify men's bodies. The women's swimming team wears a full torso-covering one piece.

One more thing she could bitch about is that the women's basketball team receives 15 scholarships, and the men's team only receives 13. This is sexist and unfair. The men's team is much better, more exciting and it brings in more money to the University than the women's team.

Emma and Nora, I wrote this letter because I am tired of men getting dumped on. Please do the honorable thing and print.

P. In one of your previous issues, you said that you never tampered with the context of letters and if we did not believe you to send a letter of our own and watch for its printing, I am doing just that.

Signed: FEMINISTBUSTER

Dear FEMINISTBUSTER:

Thanks for giving us the chance to prove our trustworthiness. We think you were courageous to write to us—especially since you are obviously aware of our feminist-humanist convictions. You must also know you are about to get, at least, mildly slammed on some of your more disgusting and idiotic points. Just as we responded to the letter you are addressing (Frustrated with this White Male Campus, October 6th Seahawk), we will take your issues point-by-point and attempt to be as fair with you as we were with her.

Okay, maybe the men's soccer team played on Family Weekend for the exact reasons you specify. "Frustrated's" point was the unfair regularity with which women's sports are delegated as less important or entertaining as the men's sports. The issue is equitable recognition of all sports events on campus. Maybe more people would watch and enjoy women's sports if they were raised to the same level of availability and validity as the men's.

Maybe we, as a nation, are consumed with men's sports because we have been socialized to believe men are better athletes than women? Maybe you'll have ten daughters and no sons and get angry when your kids' teams are ignored? Most people do not become aware of the limitations caused by the sexual definition fostered in our society until they are somehow inhibited by them. We're not trying to "dump" on you, we're just inviting you to see your issues from our perspectives.

Once again, we have no definite ideas concerning sports attire and, what's more, we do not care what athletes wear during their bouts of organized bestiality. We believe sports uniforms are designed to provide wearers with the maximum freedom for movement and minimum bulk for speed. That just seems sensible and realistic to us. We DO NOT think women athletes dress in skimpy uniforms solely to benefit your late-night masturbatory visions. You seem to think so and we are appalled (although not surprised) you consider fondling women's bodies with your eyes the cool thing to do.

As far as your Speedo gripe goes, we agree: Men look ridiculous in those swimsuits. We find these suits silly, not sexy. But, Speedos are constructed to enhance speed (thus the name) by decreasing water resistance. We think it's apparent why women's suits cover their breasts. If women swam bare-chested in meets, they probably would not swim as quickly—if thinkers like you allowed them to compete at all. The problem is our society's sexualization of not only women's bodies, but also men's. We're not saying breasts can't/shouldn't be considered appealing or erotic, but are you aware the primary purpose of breasts is physiological, not psychosexual?

Finally, why is it "sexist and unfair" that the women's basketball team receives 2 more scholarships than does the men's team? We applaud UNCW's effort to attract good female athletes. Overall more scholarships are allocated to males—in fact, 70% of federal, state, and private monies distributed annually are given to male students. Is this fair? Should a single white male with a 2.0 GPA receive educational funding instead of a single Hispanic mother with a 3.5 GPA? Sadly, it happens all too frequently. And why shouldn't it? According to recent educational studies, people of color don't perform as well intellectually as do whites. And, everyone knows women—mothers in particular, are unreliable and unlikely to complete a four year degree. (Are you really swallowing this, FEMINISTBUSTER?)

In conclusion, we don't try to dump on specific males. We do take issue with the patriarchal conventions that have been used to blanket our nation's mentality while it suffocates our women. We don't want to take away what men have or think they have, we simply want to nurture the freedom and abilities inherent to every human upon birth. It's not you against me, it's all of us against a destructive, illogical system.

Dear Emma & Nora

My friends and I have been complaining that this semester has been the most horrible we've experienced at UNCW. Everyone, teachers and students, are short-tempered and bitchy. As an English major, I've noticed this happening at Morton. My friends (education, biology, and communication majors) have said the same things about their departments? What's going on?

Signed: Sick of everyone's nasty attitude

Dear Sick,

You're sick of everyone's nasty attitude and you write us? Are you into some sick sadomasochistic trip or something? Hoping for some whips and chains in your stocking, maybe? Thank God we're not on your Christmas card list. We can't speak for those hallowed halls in the education, bio, and communications departments, but we have noticed some odd goings on over at Morton and think maybe, just maybe, we know what the attitudinal problem stems from. Could it be the Tenure Gods are placing pressure on the tenure godlets? It's that time of year, you know (or maybe you've actually been doing all the readings and research papers listed on your syllabi and your shiny red nose can't get out of your books long enough to smell the dissent in the air). We suspect, just suspect mind you, that those faculty members jockeying for position in the tenure dole lines have a bit much on their paper plates right now and, therefore, no time to play nice with you or anyone else. You reckon their collective noses are looking a shade tan these days? TENURE is a major big deal in the Game of Academe.

The game begins with student evaluations (those forms we're forced to complete under promises of anonymity at the end of each semester) and suddenly one of the Judging Tenure Gods makes a (ho, ho—surprise?) visit to your professor's class. You know it's the big evaluation day when your prof suddenly appears in the shiny Sunday suit and actually has a class plan—and USES IT! From then on, the player who outwits and is cognizant of playing nice with other players and Game Monitors, moves closer to the finish line. By answering the right questions, you, too, can win the grand prize of tenure forever. Questions such as how many publications have you on your vita? Anything current coming up in the publishing world from your magic keyboard? Does your blood and sweat appear in the appropriate prestigious journals (we don't think Popular Mechanics counts)? No, well, go back 10 places. Pissed off anybody who may actually count in whether you win or not? There's more to the Game of Academe, but we think you get the point.

In case you don't get the point, and maybe you don't since you bothered us with your petty grievances about the bad attitudes smelling up campus these days, think about this—if something so smelly is really going on over at Morton, it must be sticking to the walls and doors; maybe that's why they're so busy over there these days getting the building painted. Let's hope the new paint job covers the stench!

Dear Emma & Nora,

Who is Ziggy Nix and why are the people on SGA so miserable? A friend of mine was on SGA, turned in a resignation letter, and nothing has been done about it. Does the SGA do anything for the students at this university?

Signed: Confused Freshman

Dear Confused,

Do you know how many letters we get signed Confused? Does no one out there have any real identity? We suggest you get unconfused, locate a Self in your center of consciousness, and maybe get active in SGA. Then we wouldn't have to threaten (Ziggy?) or bribe, excuse us, console sweetly (hah!) people to answer the stupid questions you people ask. The SGA actually does have a functional purpose. If you want to know more, ask them. We do know they sponsor a used textbook sale each year which is actually helpful. We also know they get us these fifty little cards so we can get discounts at places around Wilmington. The SGA also manages and does out money so organizations can either do good things on campus or not, depending on your viewpoint.

Who is Ziggy? Well, he is our SGA President Extraordinaire busy with graduation plans and a possible new restaurant (or so we hear through Rumor Control). Don't bother him right now, he's keeping a very low profile this year (after all, election days for Ziggy are over).

One project the SGA has been working on for what seems forever is our so-called Freedom Monument (or whatever the new name is these days), you'll have to ask the Zig what it is (if you can find him, try the SGA office upstairs at the University Union). We do know our illustrious prez went on an important trip to D.C. on behalf of SGA, so we reckon he's been busy doing something. By the way, he has the power to sign out for financial support of such trips using only his signature; unless, of course, the trip is more than $500, then he has to get approval. There were murmurings about $250 or something, but we were so impressed with the power behind such a grand privilege as writing your own check, we are still too amazed to continue this discussion. Emma and I really need to go to Elizabeth Arden's spa to do a little research on the beauty myth in America, can we sign for the money ourselves? After all, it would be purely for journalistic purposes.

The letter of resignation you whined about came from the freshman representative at large. The letter was ignored for a month, which left the position not only vacant, but without any potential means of filling it. Last we heard, that position was open (of course, since we don't hear much from the SGA other than ads in the Seahawk, they could have filled the position by now). Why don't you call the SGA people and put some action behind your complaints? Get involved.

One other action the SGA has been considering is the Lead or Leave project. Apparently, there was some national resolution to have polling places on campuses with voting registration privileges. By the way, that's why Ziggy went to D.C., to a big "conference" about this project. Anyway, we think Lead or Leave presents logistical problems which may open the way for voting fraud. Now, Emma and I are not saying anyone would commit fraud, so back off! But think about it, you'd have to have representative ballots from all over to meet the needs of all students. How can you effectively manage hundreds of ballots meeting district needs for all these students without some error or another creeping in? Does this smell like maybe a little personal aggrandizement for its founders? Oh well, maybe Morton will have some paint left over.

The Ticket Man Is Coming

BY JOEL ZIMMERMAN
Staff Writer

Everyone (student, faculty, administration), is in some form or another affected by parking here on campus. Although to most the issue of ticketing seems to be the only concern, it extends much further. However, in most cases it is the ticket man whom receives all of the heat. The scene is all too familiar to students, when they return from class/library to find a man in blue uniform (somewhat resembling a police officer, even though he is not), mounting a yellow three by five carbon copy to their windshield. We've all witnessed the situation, if we ourselves have not participated in it. The hands go up, and the pleading goes on, until the student is either forgiven for their wrongdoing or they have been slapped with a eight, fifteen, or even fifty dollar fine. Many have claimed that parking should pay them for damage that has occurred to their vehicles from the "five foot speed bumps" scattered throughout campus.

In truth, Charles Malmone

(Director of Auxiliary Services) points out that The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has one of the best parking facilities available, compared to other universities. He points out that, "Traffic plays a major role in parking administration. It is a big job for the officers to manage the amount of traffic that comes in and out of campus." It is also the responsibility for the auxiliary services to repair parking lots and keep up the lighting throughout campus. He goes on to address that if it were not for fines issued with ticketing, along with the money brought in from the selling of parking decals, then none of the repairs could be made to our parking lots on campus.

The fairness of parking tickets, which seems to be questioned by many students/faculty, can only be partly answered. After the tickets are issued, they can either be appealed or paid. If they are appealed, they are brought in front of a board comprised of two students (S.G.A. appointed), one faculty member, and one staff member (appointed by the chancellor). This board then has the choice of granting the appeal, or going on to fine the student/faculty member the original designated amount. Mr. Malmone has stated that he is making more of a conscious effort to see that the appeals board carefully reviews each ticket, so that there will be "less voiding of tickets." As of October twentieth of this year there were three hundred and fifty-four tickets appealed (just the month of September alone) of those, two hundred and fifty-eight were approved, and ninety-six were denied.

Parking tickets on campus is an issue at hand, and as the future will mostly likely prove, it is an issue that will remain here on campus. There will always be students/faculty that will be outraged at the fines they receive, and most likely the parking services will continue to claim that they are "just doing their job." Unfortunately there is little that can be done to change this policy, as long as ticketing remains a source of income to update parking here on campus.

Reader's Forum

Dear Editor,

I am writing to inform you of my feelings concerning a couple of articles featured in The Seahawk of October 27, 1994.

The first article that I would like to address is "Profile in History," written by Colin Heaton. The article summarized the military like of one LT. General Gunther Randall. This person (and I use the term "person" loosely) was decorated for killing our fighting men. This Nazi was awarded medals for murdering our young, virile men that thought that they were fighting for democracy free choice.

Then, after the war, he was installed in a position of power in West Germany, for which the US funded re-armament. The US, after fighting so hard to take guns out of the hands of this man, and others like him, gave a more powerful gun back to him.

I know that there are people like this in this world, possibly on this very campus. What really angers me is that The Seahawk gave this man the honor of being in our newspaper. This man fought for all of the things that this campus is fighting against: racism and dictatorship. I have always considered this a liberal campus with the ideals of freedom for all, regardless of race, creed, or religion. This article, just by its printing has helped the Nazi ideal.

I also took offense to the picture that accompanied the article. The last thing I want to see when reading this paper is a picture of a man in a Nazi uniform smiling back at me. This photograph makes him look like a human when the uniform screams IGNORANCE!

Having vented myself on that particular article I now move on to my other "beef" with this issue.

There was a question put to Emma and Jane concerning a meal plan while living on campus. Emma and Jane did not even answer the question. Instead they started in on a bashing session of Wagoner, after only eating there once, ad of living on campus, which they have never done.

I am a tour guide on campus and suggest that visiting students take on issue of The Seahawk. What are they going to think when they read an article like this, especially after I tell them that they should live on campus during their first year? Emma and Jane have no right to comment on something they know nothing about. That is a sign of ignorance. Why didn't they just call Wagoner and ask why a meal plan is necessary? I thought that Emma and Jane were there for help and advice, but all the were was rude. Those workers in Wagoner do the best they can with what they have and all you do in insult them for their effort. Grow up Emma and Jane.

To answer LGIA's question, the bond that was issued to the university for the on-campus living arrangements included a section that concerned meal plans for every student that lived on campus. In other words, in order for the university to get the money to build the on-campus living arrangements, the university had to promise that every student would be required to buy a meal plan.

Thank you,
Cynthia L. Coulter, Junior

Reach Out Educates UNCW Students About Sexual Assault

BY ANNA DIENER

Heard a sexually discriminating joke lately? Have a friend who was "uncomfortable" on a date or at a party? Do you know someone who's significant other hit them during an argument? Know about someone who has been sexually assaulted? Each of us is affected by sexual, mental and physical violence. Yes, us, college students. It seems as if we are living in a bubble here at UNCW where nothing can affect us, but the statistics tell us that 1 in every 6 women will be raped this year.

The 1990's is supposedly the "Decade of the Women," yet women are still beaten and raped on the streets, on college campuses and in their homes. We hear this kind of information thrown at us all the time, but so what? Right?

Wrong! It is so important that I joined Reachout, UNCW's educational program for sexual assault.

Reachout was formed 2 years ago and until last year was known as STAR, Student Team Against Rape. Diane Edwards, Reachout coordinator and Julia Brandt, who works for Reachout, say sexual assault is more than just rape.

The Reachout office is located in Westside Hall's Wellness Promotion office. Each Wednesday at 4 P.M. men and women meet in University Union room 100 for presentations and programs. This year we have heard from Hunter Davis, the University Police, Dee Hamilton and Yael Gold counselors from the Student Development Center, Amy Feath from the Rape Crisis Center and Regina Randolph from the Domestic Violence Shelter. Sounds pretty heavy doesn't it? Well, the facts are serious and sometimes I go home and pray to whatever is out there and listening, that nothing like this ever happens to me or someone I know. Through the information I am learning, the role playing, and marches I know that someday there will be no fear of being insulted, raped or beaten. The point of the training we are receiving is to eventually be able to give presentations, although it is not required. I know we're busy with school and work, but try not to forget that we are at a prime place, college, to make changes in ourselves and others. Sexual violence is like being blinded by a light. We know it's there, but no one wants to look at it, and it will not go away until we unite and turn it off.

Dear Dr. Simmons:

For a large portion of my life I grew up in a world that did not encourage the questioning of decisions. I had been taught, by these same authorities, that the seat of knowledge and the ability to make decisions was something not to be questioned.

At the age of forty-six, I enrolled at UNCW and my eyes were opened. Dr. Donalee Frega took an interest in me during my sophomore year, and since that first meeting, she has been one of my mentors. My own assertions, thought patterns, and approach to critical thinking have been expanded as a direct result of Dr. Frega. She has not told me how to think on a particular subject or what the correct position was in relation to some social problem, but she never failed to make me consider all sides of an issue.

I will graduate in May, 1995, with a B.A. in English and my teaching certificate in hand, ready to face the world. While I could also list many other fine instructors at UNCW who had a significant impact on me, I can truly state that Dr. Frega instilled in me, more than any other instructor, the absolute necessity of teaching these critical thinking skills to the students I would be instructing. I feel that I will perform well because of her interest and conviction that these skills are paramount for young people.

As a student, I am asking you to reconsider your decision regarding tenure for Dr. Frega. As a parent of twin-daughters at UNCW, I can assure you that they too have been positively influenced by Dr. Frega. Dr. Leutze has publicly stated that the teaching college must prepare our young people to compete, and critical thinking is certainly the cornerstone of what is necessary in the coming years.

I am aware that the granting of tenure is not supposed to be based on popularity—either from the students or other faculty members. But, Dr. Frega is respected and liked by her present and former students from what I have been able to discern. I assume you can confirm that fact. And, I am also positive that students learn best from those they respect and admire, as opposed to those who may be well-published and highly respected in academia, but are complete and utter bores, lacking the experience of effective teaching.

Thank you for your re-consideration.
Sincerely, Harry Van Essendelft

Trent Leonard's Trivial Pursuits

Welcome to another installment that deals with everything and nothing in particular.

Well, did you join the nationwide audience in the viewing of the Iron Bowl? Even if you didn't and have had your head in the books (or sand), here is the great news: Alabama 21, Auburn 14. What a game it was! I missed the prediction by a few points, but the outcome was close as I expected it would be. (I said we would only win by four, not seven.) Once again, join the nation in watching the Crimson Tide take on the Florida Gators in the SEC title game on Saturday at 3:30 on ABC. This one will be another hard fought battle, but yet another team loses to the Tide on its way to yet another national title: Florida 28, Alabama 31.

I hope Thanksgiving treated everyone well, and I also hope that everyone at least made it to one of the two fabulous concerts that were given by Hootie and the Blowfish over this past weekend. Congratulations to those members of the UNCW Swimming and Diving Team that made it to both shows and got the team's name mentioned on Sunday night. I do not know who they were, but they were right down front yelling at the guitarist the entire time. If you missed this one, then you missed a great time, although Monday morning was a bit rough.

Meanwhile, Dahmer is dead and the world is a better place. Until next time...

Theatre of Cruelty

In the beginning, shadows danced across cave walls and there were no words. Then, there were words, and over time the theatre deteriorated into monologues, dialogues, sermons, words—harmless, cerebral masturbation.

Luckily, Antonin Artaud (1896-1948) invented the Theatre of Cruelty.

Come celebrate Cruelty in a brief production of Peter Weiss's play, Marat/Sade, Sunday, Dec. 4, Center Stage Cafe, University Center, 8 p.m. Doors open at 7 p.m. Free.

Nirvana Fans: Geffen to release unplugged album and tour video Nirvana is about to return to music store shelves for the first time since the April suicide of the band's leader, Kurt Cobain.

In addition to putting out an album documenting to group's performance on MTV's "Unplugged," Geffen Records is to release an 83-minute video, "Nirvana Live! Tonight! Sold Out!" in stores now.

The video, conceived of by Cobain, chronicles the band's tour in 1992, after the album "Nevermind" came out. It shows Cobain bashing a Dallas bouncer over the head with his guitar and eviscerating "Smells Like Teen Spirit" during a performance on the English television show "Top of the Pops."

Woodstock '94 Album

A&M Record's Woodstock '94 live album will be released Tuesday. Of the 60 acts recorded for the two-CD set, 27 made the final cut, including Nine Inch Nails, Metallica, Crosby, Stills, and Nash, Bob Dylan, and Seattle rock group Candlebox, according to a record company executive.

Snow White could outdo "Aladdin" as champion

Snow White may be a petite thing, but she is making a big noise in home-video sales and looks likely to drown out the roar from "Jurassic Park."

Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," hyped as the most anticipated release since the invention of videotape, was released with 27 million copies shipped to stores nationwide. The studio says it expects "Snow White" (list price $26.99, 84 minutes) to outdo the sales champion, "Aladdin," which sold just 24 million copies.

"Jurassic's" distributor, MCA/Universal, isn't talking numbers, but the video trade press has reported that 21 million copies of dinosaur tale were ordered by retailers before its arrival in stores the week of October 2.

"Congo" Filming in L.A.

Principal photography has begun on Michael Crichton's "Congo." Filming is taking place in Los Angeles before the company moves to Costa Rica and Uganda. Starring are Dylan Walsh, Ernie Hudson, Tim Curry, and Laura Linney. Frank Marshall directs.

Pulling of scheduled releases may be sign of troubled movies

No sooner had newspapers and magazines printed their fall previews than titles started falling off the schedule, usually as sign of troubled projects.

Gone until further notice is "Pontiac Moon," the Ted Danson-Mary Steenburgh road trip; and "Trapped in Paradise," a putative yukfest starring Nicolas Cage, Jon Lovitz, and Dana Carvey.

Paramount has pulled "Nobody's Fool," a Robert Benton comedy-drama starring Paul Newman, from a planned October release but insists there's no confidence crisis involved.

Jamie Lee Curtis to star in "Inflammable"

Jamie Lee Curtis just can't get enough action. She'll be starring in "Inflammable," a story about a Navy investigator who finds herself in hot water when she tricks to the South Sea to investigate an accusation of attempted rape. Curtis has been in the business for 18 years, but she's not one of these actresses who moans about the paucity of female-driven scripts. "I have yet to get into a debate about the accessibility of roles for women," she said.

"Interview" A Story With A Little Bit Of Bite To It

BY J. TRENT LEONARD

Arts and Entertainment Editor

When Anne Rice initially decided that she didn't want Tom Cruise to play the role of L'Stat in "Interview with the Vampire," she must not have thought that he could play such a fundamentally challenging role. But Cruise has done an excellent job of portraying a dark, almost demonic figure in the film—seemingly existing only to "infect" others whom he deems would make good companions in his world that exists somewhere between life and death, good and evil.

Brad Pitt, who plays the role of Louis, is the main character of the film and after the initial scene that describes the situation in which he lost his wife (and his will to continue living), we are presented with his passage into the life of a vampire after L'Stat bites him asking, "Have you had enough of death?"

The film is based on the novel by

Rice and is a most captivating piece of cinematography, but I do not know how closely it follows the book or how Rice feels about the outcome of the production. I do know that after watching the only episode of "Oprah" that I have seen all year, Rice apologized to Cruise personally and is most pleased with his adaptation of the role of L'Stat to the silver screen. In this particular episode of "Oprah," Cruise was berated by several members of the studio audience for making a dark and violent film. "How could you make such a movie in these days and times?" a particularly belligerent woman asked. "I don't think we need to see this kind of film anymore. It is morally irresponsible."

Cruise defended the work by stating that it is a fictional account and is based in the realm of imagination. After all, it is about VAMPIRES!

Despite the many and often graphic displays of blood appearing from rats, poodles, whales, erotic women, a piano teacher, a dress maker, and so forth, the film moves with clarity and vision. It lags in no noticeable areas and quickly invites the viewer to experience through the eyes of a mortal-turned-vampire what it must be like to be turned into one, even if it was by his own free-will.

Louis is a vampire with morals, more or less. The movie deals with what his plights and tribulations and at one point, he refuses to take anyone human lives even though he must have live blood to survive. He takes to rats in the sewer to survive instead (for awhile at least).

The movie does away with the historic notions of vampires. Christian Slater plays the role of an interviewer discussing the life of Louis with him and the movie is then shown in flashback form. From the outset, Louis is questioned about crucifixes, stating that he is quite fond of them, the stake through the heart (not true at all), and the other things that vampires die from. The sun, however, is a most undesirable thing for a vampire. A little girl bitten by L'Stat and her female companions who has also been infected are taken quite by surprise when the sun appears overhead in the chamber in which they are being held in against their will. Coffins are also a necessity for a vampire to spend the day in (quite a cumbersome existence indeed).

While the film does not uphold the epic proportions of say "Dracula," it does show vampires in a new fashion that I have not seen before—the view of the mortal turned dark. A most enjoyable film for the money—

UNCW Museum Of World Cultures Displays Artifacts

BY DEBORAH BARBOUR

Staff Writer

If you're walking through any of the classroom or other buildings and you see a collection of unusual artifacts on display, don't be surprised. No members of any ancient civilization have settled on our campus; the objects on display are part of the UNCW Museum of World Cultures.

If you're interested in masks and their connections to shamanism, you can visit Hogarth Hall, where you can view examples of masks and read about the superstitions and beliefs behind them. If you like dolls, you might want to try S&B, where a fantastic collection of dolls from countries including France, Spain, Portugal, India, Persia, Panama, and Mexico are exhibited.

The purpose of this museum, whose artifacts are divided among displays in fourteen locations across campus, is to promote understanding of those societies that have contributed to the culture of the United States. The artifacts on display are entirely authentic and, for the most part, donated to the museum by members of the surrounding community. They range from minerals, dolls, photographs, and artwork to statuettes, carvings, masks, and archaic tools. Whether you have an interest in other countries and their cultures or you don't know where China is in relation to Spain, I strongly recommend that you take the time to stop by one of these exhibits and discover something new about another culture.

Renowned Composer Visits UNCW

Composition scholar, theorist, and author Dr. John Schilb was guest lecturer at UNCW on Nov. 18. Sponsored by the Graduate English Association (GEA), Schilb spoke about the field of English composition and its changing role in the world.

Schilb holds that composition must entail an active humanistic inquiry. The goal of helping students learning to write clearly and effectively should be focused on helping students to engage in an inquiry of the world by "stimulating exploration of global forces."

To illustrate the importance of humanistic inquiry, Schilb presented an unfinished poem to the stand-room only crowd of graduate and undergraduate students and faculty members and challenged them to create the finishing lines.

A reception immediately followed Schilb's presentation and the GEA sponsored a dinner the same evening in honor of Dr. Schilb.

Alive And Well On The "Road to Wellville"

BY BOB THOMAS

The Associated Press

In the late 19th century, a rare eccentric named Dr. John Harvey Kellogg propounded his theories of nutrition and hygiene to avoid followers.

A fierce vegetarian, he dined against the customary American diet of red meat, thick gravies, and rich desserts.

The patrons of his Battle Creek (MI) Sanitarium were fed granola, Bulgarian yogurt, stewed raisins, okra soup, and other healthy delicacies. They also were given peanut butter and corn flakes, which Kellogg reportedly invented. (His younger brother, W.K. Kellogg, founded the cereal empire.)

The weird world of Kellogg provides the basis for "The Road to Wellville," a richly textured social comedy written, directed, and co-produced by Alan Parker. Zestfully acted by a talented cast headed by Anthony Hopkins, it is a dazzling feat of movie-making.

Matthew Broderick and Bridget Fonda are a married couple who enroll at the sanitarium at her insistence. They occupy separate rooms, since Kellogg preaches that sex is unhealthy (???). Kellogg, arriving on the same train is sleepy-eyed John Cusack, who aims to start a breakfast cereal company with his aunt's money.

Broderick is at first amused and then appalled by the sanitarium's regimen of enemas, electro-shock baths and cattle-feed meals. Fonda is entranced by the place and drifts away from her husband. Cusack is led astray by a hunch, Michael Lerner, and loses his money.

Dominating all is the demonic Kellogg, an outrageously hilarious portrayal by Hopkins, hiding behind bunny-rabbit teeth, goat-like and creaky. He seems to have stored all the unused energy of his recent low-key roles and poured it into the bombastic, bulbheaded messiah.

The only obstacle to the doctor's crusade is his demented adopted son, and inspired creation by the protean Dana Carvey.

"The Road to Wellville" gives Broderick, Fonda, and Cusack a chance to show that they can handle period comedy as well as contemporary drama. The huge cast (56 speaking parts) is filled with clever caricatures.

The production design by Brian Morris captures the splendor of resort living in the last century.

Alan Parker handles his triple duties with skill, especially in paring down T. Coraghessan Boyle's lengthy novel.

Only in the latter stages does Parker roam afield, depicting sex therapy that is glaringly unfunny.

Hawk's Push Past Campbell

Chris Meighn scored 14 of his game-high 16 points in the second half as UNCW overcame 27 turnovers to escape host Campbell 75-60 Tuesday in the Cumberland County Civic Center.

The Seahawks (2-0) used a 10-0 run midway through the second half to erase a 35-31 halftime deficit.

Darren Moore added 15 points and hauled down a game-high 10 rebounds for UNCW while Bill Mayhew came off the bench to chip in nine points, all in the second half.

"We were helped by two things," first-year UNCW coach Jerry Wainwright said. "First, Campbell played very well in their opening win at Richmond. That presented to our kids a significant challenge. Second, we were nervous in our first outing (a 66-65 win over Coastal Carolina Saturday). I think getting away helped. Then our size wore them down in the second half."

Trailing 43-39 with 15:36 to play the Seahawks ran off 11 straight points including four from Moore and a 3-pointer from Meighn, to take a 50-43 lead with 11:20 to play. Cannon Baker's bucket with 13:54 to play gave the Seahawks the lead for good.

After a Corey Best field goal cut the Seahawks' lead to 52-47, the Camels went scoreless for more than five minutes while UNCW used a 12-1 spurt to run its lead to 64-48. UNCW's highest lead came on Lamont Franklin's free throw with 2:31 left that pushed the score to 71-53.

Lady Seahawks Prepare To Face Wisconsin-Green Bay

Continuing to struggle against inexperience, the UNCW Wilmington women's basketball squad seeks to end its season-opening three game losing skid this weekend when it travels north to compete in the Wisconsin-Green Bay Days Inn Classic. The Seahawks Women face host team Wisconsin-Green Bay in the first round on the Friday, Dec. 2, at 6 p.m.

Head coach Susan Yow's squad, which boasts four freshmen on an eight-person roster is in the midst of a season-opening five game stretch that spans only eight days.

UNCW made its 1994-95 season debut last weekend in the Navy Tip-off Tournament. The Seahawks Women suffered losses to host team Navy (50-42) and Davidson (68-39). Freshman forward Tara Spencer had an impact off the bench in both contests, including 12 points in the second half of the Navy game. Fellow freshman Stacy Cantly was the team leading scorer against Davidson with 10 points.

In its home opener on Tuesday, UNCW fell to Charleston, 71-57. The Seahawk Women came out fighting in the first half, scrapping their way to leads as great as 15 points before the half-time advantage of nine (39-30), but they were unable to hang on. A 23-3 run by Charleston in the first nine minutes of the second half gave the Cougars all the momentum necessary to roll to their win.

Senior center Hannah Grady tallied 16 points and nine rebounds in the contest to lead UNCW in both categories. Tara Spencer again came off the bench to score in double digits, dumping in 13 points.

Spencer holds the UNCW scoring lead with an average of 11.3 points per game, followed by Grady with 8.0 points per contest. Grady is also the team's top rebounder with 5.7 per game, and freshman guard Toni Esposito is second, averaging 5.0 boards per game.

Hannah Grady has moved into ninth-place on the UNCW career rebounding list with 447 boards and 22nd in scoring (356 points). Junior center Tiffany Stacey is sixth in blocked shots (45), moving only one block to move into seventh place. She is also 17th in career rebounding (257) and 25th in scoring (285 points). Junior guard Denise Marsh is 21st all time in assists (92) and 25th with 39 career steals.

Tales From...

The Dumpster

Well here we are, all back from a Thanksgiving break that was much to short. Now all we have to do is tough it out until Christmas break and then we can watch all the bowl games. This week there are quite a few topics worthy of their own special place in the Dumpster. Let's see here, we've got the little Riddick Bow scuffle (those boxers don't know how to play nice), the Florida-Alabama game (an overrated game to be sure but important to that little misled faction of the population who actually enjoy watching not just one, but two over ranked teams play), and oh yeah, did I mention Nebraska made it to the Orange Bowl?

First off the Riddick Bow thing. I suppose I should admit to everybody that I am not a big boxing fan, to me it just doesn't make sense. If I wanted to get beat up I would stand outside the University Center and call people names until somebody popped me. To me that would be more fun than running around a tiny ring with somebody who wanted to do nothing else than to knock me unconscious. I guess, no, way, not fun for me. I enjoy thinking too much. Anyway, on with the story. For those of you who missed it here's what happened. Riddick Bowe and Larry Donald were at a pre-fight press conference (that just sounds dumb—who in their right mind gets together with somebody they want to beat up just to talk about it? If they really wanted to beat each other up they would just do it instead of talking about it). The two fighters, or into a little trash talking match like all idiot boxers do and out of nowhere Riddick pops this guy with a nice looking hook combination. Poor Larry didn't know what to do, here he was trying to be nice and to just talk about Riddick's mom and about how he was going to beat the crap out of Riddick and Riddick here just winds up and pops him. If you ask me I don't think Riddick ever learned proper manners because that's just not polite. The only reason I can think for it happening is that Riddick just wanted a little extra practice because I have to admit, that was his nicest punch combination in over a year. Riddick, if that's your excuse I understand, practice never hurt anybody (except Larry Donald). If that's not it though feel free to respond Riddick but only by letter or phone, no personal visits. I don't want to have to rough you up.

I guess it all comes back to me just not understanding boxing, to borrow a line from Cavan Lawler, "my simple mind can't comprehend it." You couldn't pay me enough money to get in a tiny ring with Riddick Bowe in the first place—let alone letting him chase me and hit me. I wouldn't even want to duke it out with those little fly weights. When they fight it reminds of two little Speedy Gonzalezes fighting. Those little pip squeaks move their hands so fast I'm not even sure their actually fighting. Their probably just moving their hands and every now and then one decides to fall down.

This weekend we also have the Florida-Alabama game coming up. It's going to be a good game but I think both teams are images of their tradition rather than actually being good teams. This game decides who goes on to play in the Sugar Bowl. For Alabama it could mean a possible shot at a National Championship, although Penn State or Nebraska would have to lose in order for them to even get a chance at a piece of the title. For all you Alabama fans out there you need to remember that going undefeated through a weak schedule doesn't necessarily make you good. This is still a tough game to pick since they are playing for the SEC championship and all. If I had to choose though I would take Florida 28-17 over Alabama.

Last but not least we have Nebraska and Miami in the Orange Bowl. I know there are skeptics out there who think Nebraska can't beat a Florida team at the Orange Bowl and that's fine. Your entitled to your opinion, this is America, but I'm here to tell you, you're wrong. This is the year for the boys in red. Just wait, you'll see and then you'll tell your parents about the wonderful sports editor from college. OK maybe not, but it could happen. Good luck on exams and I'll see you next week, same time same place.

Happy Holidays!

Wilmington West Rotary Establishes a $25,000 Scholarship For UNCW

BY VICKIE YEARBY

The Wilmington West Rotary Club established a $25,000 scholarship fund for the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. President of West Rotary Bill Maus presented Barbie Cowan, UNCW Loyalty Fund coordinator, with a check for $5,000 for the first installment of the endowed fund at noon, Thursday, Nov. 10, at the Coast Line Convention Center.

Maus stated, "Our Rotary Club wants to focus on the area's youth. We all have a keen interest in promoting higher education, especially for those students who lack the financial means for a college education."

The Club also presented President of the UNCW Ambassadors Organization Cindy Van Riper a $2,500 check for the group's participation in the Rotary Club's annual haunted house. Fifteen to 20 Ambassadors worked the haunted house each night for 10 nights as actors and behind-the-scenes workers. The UNCW Ambassadors are a service organization composed of select volunteers who serve the university in special ways under the direction of the Division of University Advancement at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

The Wilmington West Rotary Club is an outgrowth of the world's first service club, founded in Chicago on Feb. 23, 1905. Today, Rotary flourishes with 27,000 clubs and 1.2 million men and women as club members, providing community service in every nation worldwide. The Rotary Club members strive to develop acquaintance as an opportunity for service, promote high ethical standards in business and professions, apply the ideal of service by every Rotarian to his or her personal, business, and community life, and advance international understanding, goodwill, and peace.

Education Network Awards $98,727 For UNCW Teaching Projects

BY VICKIE YEARBY

The Mathematics and Science Education Network, through the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, is funding three projects at UNCW totaling $98,727 designed to improve teaching methods for middle and high school teachers.

Dr. Ann Crawford of the Department of Specialty Studies and Dr. Karen Wetherill of the Department of Curricular Studies in the Watson School of Education received $34,858 for their project entitled "Pre-Algebra: Collaboration for Instructional Change."

Crawford stated that the traditional middle school curriculum taught in preparation for algebra is arithmetic driven with little time devoted to pre-algebra concepts. The primary goal of this project is to provide inservice training for middle school teachers emphasizing the use of manipulative calculators and computers to integrate problem solving and investigation as major teaching strategies. Teachers from the school systems of Brunswick, New Hanover, and Pender Counties will be eligible to participate. Two teachers from each school will attend the 10-day course including 60 contact hours of instruction during the summer of 1995.

The project entitled "Improving Teaching Skills in Basic Botany" will also be funded by the Mathematics and Science Education Network. Dr. David Padgett of the Department of Biological Sciences and Dr. Charles Ward of the Science and Math Education Center are the project coordinators. This course is a 50-hour hands-on learning experience in plant biology and will involve 24 middle and high school teachers recruited from public and private schools from Columbus and Bladen counties.

Padgett stated, "Conversations with high school teachers confirm that minimal instruction on plants is given to their classes because they lack enough understanding to be 'comfortable' teaching the subject." This workshop is designed to educate teachers about plant biology so they can better educate students. The professors received $28,905 for this project.

The third project funded by the Mathematics and Science Education Network is entitled "Environmental Education Institute." Project Coordinators Dr. Richard Huber and Dr. Ann Lockledge of the Department of Curricular Studies in the Watson School of Education received $34,964 for this workshop to be held June 19-30, 1995, on the campus of UNCW.

Huber said, "Many schools in southeastern North Carolina have little science materials, other than a text, to educate students about environmental problems. Furthermore, the teachers are often ill-trained to help their students understand the nature and magnitude of environmental problems."

The institute is designed to provide 25 fourth through eighth grade teachers with increased knowledge, strategies, and materials for teaching environmental education concepts. The institute will also provide participants with the skills, materials, and techniques necessary to conduct inservice activities within their school systems.

UNCW To Graduate 709 In December 10 Commencement Ceremony

BY JAN KELLER AND FIONA RICE

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will award 709 degrees at its 49th commencement exercises at 10 a.m., Saturday, Dec. 10, in Trask Coliseum. Presenting the commencement address will be novelist Lee Smith, a North Carolina State University English professor since 1985.

This is the fourth December commencement to be held at UNCW, a development necessitated by an increasing number of students graduating during summer and fall semesters. Even with two commencements a year, the university has implemented a guest ticketing system due to space limitations in Trask Coliseum. This year, each graduate will be allowed six guests each. Departmental receptions following commencement will be open to all guests of the graduates. Diplomas for summer graduates and honorary scrolls for fall graduates will be awarded at the departmental receptions.

In this graduating class, some 664 will receive bachelor's degrees while 45 will be awarded graduate degrees. Those graduating in December will include 199 bachelor's candidates and 21 graduate students who completed graduation requirements during the summer and 465 undergraduates and 24 graduate students who will complete their requirements at the end of the fall semester 1994.

Commencement speaker Smith is author of eight novels and two collections of short stories and has had stories and articles to appear in various periodicals. Her first novel, The Last Day the Dogbushes Bloomed was published while she was still a student at Hollins College. Her award-winning stories deal with women and their southern life and customs and are rich in humor and wisdom. Her works have been compared to those of Virginia Woolf, Carson McCullers, Flannery O'Connor, Eudora Welty and William Faulkner.

Two of her novels won the Sir Walter Raleigh Award, Oral History in 1983 and Fair and Tender Children in 1989. She received the Robert Penn Warren Prize for Fiction in 1991, the O. Henry Awards in 1979 and 1981, and the John Dos Passos Award in 1987. In addition, she has won numerous other awards for her writing.

A native of Virginia, Smith holds a bachelor's degree in English from B. A. Hollins College.

UNCW Study Abroad Opportunity In The Land Down Under

Students can extend their knowledge of Australia beyond kangaroos, boomerangs, and Crocodile Dundee this summer by travelling to the Land Down Under with a UNCW study-abroad program.

Three UNCW faculty members will direct the three-week July program, which is based at the University of Newcastle, Newcastle, located on the Pacific coast a hundred miles north of Sydney, is Australia's sixth largest city.

The program introduces students to many aspects of Australian life and culture. "Courses will emphasize getting out of the classroom and coming face to face with the real Australia," said English professor Richard Veit, who will teach a course called Australia through Literature and Film.

Students can take three to six hours for UNCW credit through the program. Another of the three courses being offered is Introduction to Multinational Business, taught by Robert Keating of Management and Marketing. "The emphasis will be on how culture affects business, focusing on Australia and East Asia," said Keating. Students in the course will visit several Australian businesses.

Anita Veit of the Sociology Department will teach the third course option, Australian Society and Culture. Students will have direct contact with Australian customs and institutions as they discover differences between Australian and American life.

The projected cost of the program is $2600, which includes airfare, in-state tuition and fees, housing and most meals. "This is a great bargain, especially for this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," said Ms. Veit. "Many students have told me that they are asking their parents for money toward this trip for Christmas."

In addition to class work, participants will have ample opportunity to travel. Included in the fee are a field trip to Sydney, Australia's largest city, and a tour of the Hunter Valley, the country's leading wine-producing region. Students will also have time to explore the outback and coast of Australia.

Those who wish to extend their trip can stop over at one of the South Pacific islands, at no additional airfare. Tahiti, Fiji, Hawaii, New Zealand, and Samoa are some of the optional destinations.

Students who want to learn more about the trip should contact one of the three faculty directors or visit the International Programs office in the Union for an application. A $200 deposit is required during January.

Attention Poets

The National Library of Poetry has announced that $12,000 in prizes will be awarded this year to over 250 poets in the North American Open Poetry Contest. The deadline for the contest is December 31, 1994. The contest is open to everyone and entry is FREE.

Any poet, whether previously published or not, can be a winner. Every poem entered also has a chance to be published in a deluxe, hardbound anthology.

To enter, send ONE original poem, any subject and any style, to: National Library of Poetry, 11419 Cronridge Dr., P.O. Box 704-1982, Owings Mills, MD 21117. The poem should be no more than 20 lines, and the poet's name and address should appear on the top of the page. Entries must be postmarked by December 31, 1994. A new contest opens January 1, 1995.

The National Library of Poetry, founded in 1982, is the largest poetry organization in the world.

Union Creative Works Exhibit

Wilmington residents are invited to exhibit their creative works in the upcoming Healing Works art exhibit, scheduled for April 3-14, 1995, in the University Union at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

This exhibit is a special art display of creative works celebrating survival and healing from sexual assault and child sexual abuse. Healing Works is open to all area persons who wish to display paintings, drawings, writings and other creative works which address this healing and survival process.

The exhibit will be open free of charge to the public with a reception planned for the evening of Friday, April 7. To participate or for more information, please call Diane Edwards at 395-3577. Exhibitors are asked to register by March 1.

Healing Works is sponsored by UNCW, Rape Crisis Center, and other community groups. For additional information, please contact Diane Edwards at 910-395-3577.

Children Needed

The UNCW School of Nursing needs happy, healthy children to practice a preschool advanced developmental screening test for Fall workshop participants. If you have a child between the ages of three months and five years, you are invited to bring the child to the South College Road McDonald's between 9-11 am, on Friday December 9, 1994. There will be a treat for the children and moms or dads.

For more information and to schedule an appointment, call (910) 350-4027 or (910) 395-3205.

Study Smarter: Note Taking Do's And Don'ts

Tom MacLennan
Director, The Learning Center

Last week's column sketched out details of the Cornell method of taking notes, one of the oldest, most effective organized ways of taking notes. In employing any system, particularly the Cornell method, there are some simple dos and don'ts to consider.

First the dos. It helps maintain continuity if you take the time to review the previous class notes before class. Also, use a large, loose-leaf binder for a number of reasons. First, it will give you ample room to record your notes. Second, you can insert instructor's handouts or other supplementary material. Third, you can carry lined, loose-leaf (8 1/2 x 11) to class and later insert them into your notebook. You will also want to write on one side of the paper only because it helps later when you spread your notes out for review.

One of the most compelling reasons I know for recording the course, professor, and date on each top page is in the event you drop your notebook and spill the pages. It also helps when, after reviewing, you want to put them back in your notebook in order. Make sure you copy material instructors place on the board. Develop your own system of abbreviations and symbols. If you miss what your professor says, you might want to write down as much as you can and record a question mark in the left margin to remind you to clarify the material in question. Finally, while the lecture is still fresh in your mind, go back over your notes and make sure your handwriting is legible enough to read prior to your review.

Now the don'ts of taking notes. Don't just wait for the professor to say something "important," record whatever is being said. Don't stop to ponder over concepts you don't yet understand; you might want to do that later in your room. Don't use spiral-bound notebooks because it is difficult, if not impossible, to insert handouts in them. Don't consider any example that might come up in class too obvious; copy it down. Finally, avoid too many abbreviations because you may have a tough time translating them later.

Early next semester, we will begin a series of workshops which will involve concrete applications of much of the material being covered in these columns. If you have questions about note-taking, please contact The Learning Center (395-3549) for an appointment with one of our consultants. Best wishes for success in all of your final examinations and term papers.

A New Option To Buy Used Textbooks

BY AMANDA JESSE
News Editor

Beginning with the upcoming semester, students will have a new alternative to purchasing their books at the campus bookstore.

Located in University Landing next to Krazy's Pizza, Seahawk Book And Supply will sell all the textbooks UNCW requires. In addition, the store will be selling used textbooks to keep textbook costs low for students.

Owned by Alison and Pat Keenan, Seahawk Book And Supply hopes to create a comfortable atmosphere for the students. "We basically listen to the student. We go out of our way. Whatever you want, we'll get it for you," said Pat.

"It's right for the students and relieves pressure on the campus bookstore," said Allison. "We are going to be the economy version of the (campus) bookstore."

Owning two other college textbook stores, the Keenans will offer students different options to make their college textbook buying easier. For example, the store will reserve books for students, offer no lines, and have convenient parking. The Keenans said that their goal is not necessarily to make money. Their goal is to give students another outlet for buying their textbooks. Over 90 percent of their stock will be used textbooks.

In addition to selling used textbooks, Seahawk Book And Supply will buy books back. According to Allison, this is one of the major differences between them and the campus bookstore. Allison said, "We will buy books back everyday."

Seahawk Book And Supply is open 9:00 AM - 6:00 PM Monday through Saturday. The store is located in the University Landing Shopping Center at 415 South College Road.

Happy Holidays

Frank's Place

Frank Tascone

Hi and welcome back to Frank's Place. Our friend, Angela, was here again and promptly decorated Bob with a holiday ribbon and bells around his neck. Bob does not look festive or pleased. I think he senses the calico across the way is about to go into heat and well, his new decor may really hurt his chances—I really do need to get him fixed, huh?

Yes, it's the holiday season and quite frankly (pun intended) I'm not at all up for it. I'm not ready for the songs, the lights, Santa Clause (who seems to have forgotten me the past few years—by the way is Santa a dependent or independent clause?).

I guess I'm humbugging this year at this moment because I just don't have time for the holidays. I mean it's finals for Pete sakes (point of information—can someone tell me if it is a sin to take Pete's name in vain?). The Christmas tree in the library is a mockery to me—while the world is preparing to celebrate and is existing in its guise of jovial bliss, I'm worrying about papers, tests, reading assignments, and whether I've got enough change to make copies.

behind schedule—perhaps then I'll have time to get into the holiday spirit. Actually, I'm not such a Scrooge—I know that it will take only two small events to bring me into the spirit. First, I need this semester to end. Don't get me wrong, I love my classes, and I'm glad I'm back in school, but that inertia thing is getting to me. It's time for the deep breath and the good night's sleep. The second thing I really need is to hear the Porky Pig version of "Blue Christmas." You know the one where the guy in the background laughs like a hyena. If you've not heard this—do yourself a personal favor and find a copy or listen to the radio closely. I know it may not be politically correct, or nice to laugh at the expense of one with a speech impediment, but sometimes funny is just funny.

Well folks, this marks the last meeting here at Frank's Place for the fall semester. It's been great havin' you over each week and I hope you can see your way clear to visit again next semester—Bob and I are planning to install a wood stove. We'll keep you informed as to our progress. Before I shut the door, I would like to thank all the folks who, wittingly or unwittingly, contributed in some way to Frank's Place over the semester. I've elected to withhold names in order to protect reputations and careers. Good luck on finals and have a great holiday break. By the way—if you need a little perspective, take a look at the photo's from Hubble—they make you think that somehow everything is going as planned.

Here's What I Think About It...

June Rapp Oravits

Last week I wrote an editorial about excellent teachers denied tenure (Dr. Donmale Frega) and have since been patted on the head for being "so brave, so very courageous." I've heard comments such as "I hope this doesn't affect you in the future," or "I hope they don't take your T.A. away from you next year." I would like to clear up some problems with this here and now.

First, I'm not brave, nor am I courageous. I am merely me. June, I am a living, breathing, THINKING person interested in all that occurs around me. Why? This should be obvious to any college student (faculty member, whatever), because ultimately I am affected by the actions and reactions of others.

Second, what in the hell do you think people can possibly do to me? Shoot me at dawn? I think not, it would make too much of a mess, don't you think? Seriously, no one's going to do anything bad to me just because I wrote about something I believe in. I may take issue with certain policies on campus, but that doesn't mean I think the whole university sucks. Indeed, I would not have applied to this school if I thought I would be unable to actually learn anything. Remember this—UNCW knew what I was like when they accepted my graduate school application—I was here as an undergrad, so they already know I'm not afraid to say what I think. Could it be they actually want students here who get involved instead of scurrying around campus like some meek little mouse? Trust me, people, mouse is not my style!

I think I made it perfectly clear in my editorial that I have the ability to think critically. Isn't that why we are here? I'm merely exercising my God-given right to think for myself. My opinions do not have to agree with yours or anyone else's. The world would be awfully boring and terribly tedious if we all thought just alike.

There are many people who disagree with me, which is fine. I truly do welcome and even consider other people's points of view. If I'm wrong, I'll admit so—and I'm not afraid to do so publicly. The point of editorials is to invite open discourse—you know, give and take in conversation. Language is how we all communicate. I write my editorials in hope of saying—look, here's what I think about it (gee, do you think my editorial title gives you a clue?) and my purpose is to invite, urge and, if need be, severely prod you into thinking for yourself. If that means arguing with me, good. If it means I've given you something to think about you would not have previously considered, great, that's even better. If it means you don't give a shit, well then, why are you here?

I care about my "human potential" (courtesy of Dr. Shimm), I care about my education (courtesy of Dr.

Frega and many others), and I care about the quality of my life and my children's (courtesy of my own creative skills). As such, I have to care about what is happening in the world around me. UNCW is part of the world. We have to care what happens here now. If the fact that I care makes me brave or courageous, okay—I'm June of Arc.

The short and tall of all this babbling is that you have the right to make your opinions known, as do I. It's not an issue of bravery or courage, it's an issue of taking some control of your own life by making a constructive difference in how things are and should operate. I'm lucky because, as editor of The Seahawk, I have a weekly forum in which to voice my concerns. But so do you, via letters to the editor. I've said this all semester and I mean it.

It's rather ironic that many of you think our student newspaper sucks, but you're not up here working your ass off trying to improve it. We aren't perfect, I'm not perfect, and neither the hell are you. Not many of you (although a few do—and they're the ones who work themselves to death because no one else will help) make any effort to challenge what happens on campus or try to make any positive contributions to this university.

What is okay is to say, I think the newspaper, junk mail, teaching policy, whatever, sucks—but then you try to do something constructive to improve it. Don't whine to me or anyone else about how sorry things are and then, when asked to do something to help, moan and groan about what a heavy schedule, class load, or whatever your major malfunction is as a means to justify why you won't put meaningful action behind your words. I don't want to hear it and neither does anyone else, because guess what? We also have schedules from hell.

There are many fine people on this campus who care—about themselves, UNCW, and you. In order for them to help you, you've got to care as well. Make your voice known. Get up and shout, kick, scream—just do something. If you would rather whine, then you are nothing—you're a deadweight in my world and I want you to go away—permanently.

My final words this semester are borrowed from Pastor Martin Neimoller, but I think they say best (and much briefer) what I'm trying to tell you: "In Germany they first came for the Communists and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me—and by that time no one was left to speak up."

Still Point: Present For Presence

Bob Haywood

For the Christian world, the whole of the Advent and Christmas season is focused around one incredible and momentous reality - the presence of God upon the earth. The foundational experience of Christianity is rooted in our belief that God was present in Jesus in such a fashion that God's power of love could be unleashed.

The whole of Advent tells story upon story of people like Zachariah, Mary, wise men and shepherds, all people who were drawn into the unfolding drama of God's love becoming present upon the earth. They were present. They were there not only physically present but emotionally and spiritually present. They were available to be touched, changed, affected in some very powerful ways.

It is oftentimes difficult to be present and available in life. You probably know the common experience of being present when the role is taken in a class but not really being "present". You're there but for a number of reasons your mind is totally somewhere else.

Part of the powerful Christmas message is that the love of God is available to us not only as a fact, not only as a belief, but available in a way that has power to change you. If you have ever cared deeply for another person then you know the power that lies in that person to affect the way you think and behave. With the love of God no longer being some distant idea, our lives can be affected in a similar fashion; but we have to be present. We have to be open at the very deepest levels of our lives.

There is a love that wants to be born and live in your heart. It is a love that brings joy and strength, freedom and direction, sustenance and vision for service. It is a gift. It is the Greatest Gift.

I hope you will join all of the rest of us on the road to the manger and be PRESENT FOR THE PRESENCE that waits there for you.

Do you hear what I say?

Said the feminist to the Senator.

Do you hear what I say?

I'm sick of your crap, Senator.

Do you hear what I say?

A scream, a scream high above your whine

it's a plea for all humankind.

it's a plea for all humankind.

Said the Senator to the President.

Did you hear what she said?

In your White House warm, President.

Did you hear what she said?

A girl, a girl striking out in rage

let us free her from our social cage,

let us free her from our social cage.

Said the Pres to the people everywhere

Listen to what I say.

Demand equality for people everywhere.

Listen to what I say.

For the girl, for the girl screaming in the night

She will fight us with all her might,

She will fight us with all her might.

Do you fear what I fear?

O come all ye Righties,

The UNCW Big Band Performs Holiday Concert

The UNCW Big Band, under the direction of Frank Bongiorno, will present its final concert for the fall semester on Thursday, December 8 in Kenan Auditorium at 8 PM. General admission is $3.00 and free to UNCW students with valid ID.

The UNCW Big Band, an 18 piece jazz ensemble, is a unique blend of musicians composed of UNCW students as well as area musicians including talented high school students. The concert will feature ensemble soloists throughout the evening on a variety of compositions and styles. Selections to be performed include arrangements of standard jazz compositions such as Chick Corea's 500 Miles High, Cedar Walton's Bolivia, Sonny Rollins' St. Thomas, as well as original big band arrangements by Quincy Jones and Sammy Nestico. The UNCW Big Band will also perform different and unique arrangement of Jingle Bells by Ray Brown to conclude the concert.

Housing Article Corrections

BY AMANDA JESSE
News Editor

The following are Corrections to "Residents Room Deposit Increases" which appeared in last week's Seahawk. We apologize for any inaccuracies.

The Office of Housing And Residence life will be increasing the standard housing deposit for returning students. The increase will be from $100 to $250. Note, the increase will only affect returning students. Freshman and new transfer students will still pay $100 to reserve their room.

When asked about why the increase was implemented, Housing And Residence Life Director Bill McCartney said, "For the last two years in a row, return students have been booking space on campus and it appears they are holding that space while they look for a place off campus." McCartney also said that Housing had over 200 returning students cancel their room reservations this year.

Returning students, if they decide to cancel their room reservation will be able to get a $150 refund if they notify Housing And Residence Life by May 15. Previously, once a room contract was signed, students could not get a refund of their deposit.

Leadership for Leadership

The first program of its kind on campus, Leaderships, initiated by The Leadership Center, finished up the semester with its last workshop on Nov. 16. Each participant was given a certificate of attendance for each Leadership in which they participated. Twenty-three students received a Leadership Center t-shirt for attending three or more programs.

The Organization for Latin American Students (OLAS) won a $50 gift certificate for having the most members present at a majority of the Leaderships. The Leadership Center cites program facilitators and participants as instrumental in making the pilot program successful.

Spring semester '95 will feature three of the most popular programs presented during Fall semester. Beginning Jan. 25, 1995, Dr. Richard Mullendore will present "There's No #5%&@! Way I'll Get It All Done!" Mullendore will present ways to deal with time management.

On Feb. 22, Dr. Steve Harper will discuss "The Impact of Leadership Style on the Character of an Organization." Dr. Paul Johnston will present "On Your Own: Financial Skills for Young Adults" on Mar. 29.

Anyone wishing to attend Leadership presentations may contact The Leadership Center in the University Union for more information.

Advice for UNCW's Weary By Emma and Nora

Farewell! We're through with you for a month. If finals leave you looking more like a living replica of Edward Munch's The Scream than a Regular College Jill or Joe—don't write us. We'll be on our way out of town. There are advantages to being obsessive-compulsive, like having your end of the semester stuff completed a week in advance.

Of course, the obvious disadvantage is having to nourish our larger-than-the-average-Nobel Prize winners-brains on low fat, high fiber diets to avoid explosive bouts of flatulence and gastroenteritis. Ah, but you're probably not interested in such mundane details about us.

Try to stay alive during your winter vacation and, if there's any time left over, enjoy. Why not do something extraordinary? Read a book. Who knows, maybe your feeble brains will generate an original thought.

This week's intellectual prod:

I am sorry to have to introduce the subject of Christmas. It is an indecent subject; a cruel, gluttonous subject; a drunken, disorderly subject; a wasteful, disastrous subject; a wicked, cadging, lying, filthy, blasphemous and demoralizing subject. Christmas is forced on a reluctant and disgusted nation by the shopkeepers and the press: on its own merits it would wither and shrivel in the fiery breath of universal hatred; and anyone who looked back to it would be turned into a pillar of greasy sausages.

George Bernard Shaw

Dear Emma & Nora: Recently approximately 200 students of the Education Department listened to "Cowboy Andy Hayes" begin a presentation with a reference to a former female teacher who had been "beaten with an ugly stick"—sexism or humor?

DonnaFregia is being denied tenure (after three miscarriages and in the middle of a pregnancy). Donna has not even received the consideration of a prisoner on Death Row. Perhaps employment applications should require female professors to state they will not allow conception to interfere with academic progress. Should UNCW applications read: Only those who have had hysterectomies need apply?

New topic: Reference to Ziggy Nix (is that his real name?)—does Ziggy receive special dispensation from Dr. Leutze to miss more classes than the rest of the student body combined?

Signed: Time for Some Real Answers

Dear Time: Do you feel purged now? (We think you left out the pistol-packing anti-abortion zealots.) We don't know jack about this Hayes person, but his comment was insidiously insensitive and entirely sexist. What we want to know is how you reacted to Hayes' comment? Did you just sit quietly and shake your head with solemn self-righteousness? Did you giggle along with everyone else? Or did you react honorably by making your convictions obvious to the other 199 attendees? Did you walk out or speak out? Don't whine to us unless you're about to do more than write an anonymous letter days after the crime was committed. You didn't have to listen to the kind of verbal bile Hayes was spouting—but if you stayed and didn't confront him, you deserved to be splattered.

We think sexist folks end up in a new circle we've created in our version of Dante's Inferno. Picture this: They're impaled on huge salted skewers and placed over an open fire. They spend eternity being turned by victims of spousal abuse who are in hell for murdering their abusers. Every now and then, the turners squirt lighter fluid on the fire—just enough to make the flames lick the flesh of "those who have committed crimes against equality." Cool, huh?

Part two of your letter is pretty much a rehash of last week's column. Because we are mere students, we don't know the exact criteria professors are required to meet to be granted tenure and hypothesizing about Fregia's tenure denial wouldn't exactly be fair to her or any of the other parties involved. If you're interested in learning how the R.T.P. committee of the Faculty Senate decides tenure issues, why don't you ask a member or write to Marvin Moss, Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs? We know many employers consider pregnant career women a financial liability and, while sexual discrimination is no longer a social secret, many women still wait to have children until after they achieve job security. We can't, however, claim to know more about Fregia's tenure problems than you—go fish.

Finally, what's up with all this Ziggy bashing? We wrote a rather satirical response to another writer last issue, but we guess that didn't satisfy your curiosity about the S.G.A.'s man-on-high. We don't know if he's allowed to miss a certain number of classes or if he's only required to breathe in the buildings where his classes are being held. And, why the hell would we care what Ziggy's doing? You people are like a pack of rabid mutts. Can't you ever let go of anything, Cujo? For the record, further questions regarding Ziggy Nix should be sent to the S.G.A. office. We don't even know what he looks like, how are we supposed to tell you if he goes to class? Get over it, Sweet Pea.

Dear Emma & Nora: I think you were way too hard on Feministbustler last week. Was it just because he's a man? What's the big deal about fun bags?

Signed: Bag Lover

Dear Bag Lover: Is your letter for real? We're supposed to approve of guys who eyeball women's breasts for fun, yet complain about athletic uniforms exposing guys? Do you not see a problem with this—and you're in college? How would you like it if women made fun of your penis, completely forgetting you might actually have a brain? Somehow seems unfair to us, how come not to you?

For those readers who don't know, "fun bags" is an expression originating on the Rick and Ryan Show (96.3 HOT FM). It's a derogatory remark aimed at women like Paula Jones (Clinton's alleged paramour). Recently, a judge decided it was okay for Penthouse to publish nude pictures taken of Jones when she was 19 because they are "newsworthy." R and R said the judge let permission to publish the pictures go through because Jones "had a great pair of fun bags," e.g., her breasts.

R and R also made mention of a fund being established to supply Jones with money to get a nose job due to the hideous one she presently has, despite the fact she has great "fun bags." Now, what kind of intelligence do you suppose is behind the term "fun bags." Fun for whom? If R and R are referring to Clinton, they're assuming they know whether or not Clinton thought of her breasts as fun, and you know what the old cliché is about "assuming." It must be nice for R and R to be privy to our president's innermost thoughts. We're glad we're not.

The major point is that terms like "fun bags" equates to female body parts as objects for men to freely oggle with or without a woman's permission, a clear case of sexual harassment. If you ever dare to oggle our "fun bags," we're going to knock the crap out of you. Reckon you can call that physical harassment?

Another point of contention with us is we could not care less if Clinton is sleeping with his favorite oak tree or his wife, that's his own business; just as we couldn't care less who you may or may not be sleeping with, as it is none of our business. What is our business, and should be the business of every intelligent human being, is that women are NOT, NOT, NOT objects to be sexually exploited.

Having a judge allow nude pictures of a 19 year old to be published because they are "newsworthy" is a horrible case of injustice to all women. Newsworthy for whom? Emma and Nora do not read Penthouse, how is it newsworthy for us or any other women?

You think we were too hard on Feministbustler because we oppose his ogling women's breasts? Our best guess, judging from your immature attitude, is that you're about 19 going on 12. Well, why don't you wait for a few years of solid maturity to set in, get married, have kids—especially daughters, and then think about how you feel when your daughter's breasts are ogled by guys your present age. Do you think maybe then you'll see our point and want to punch the guys out or would you be ogling your daughter's breasts as well, you little piggy, you? Well, you'll have lost your chance at fighting against this problem because you've allowed and even perpetuated the problem's existence.

Give us a call in a few years, DAD!

Getting the Point: NABI BioMedical Center

BY CHARLEY LLOYD

I approached the door of 102 S 17th Street and read the world NABI BioMedical Center. I started having second thoughts, but hesitantly walked inside. Instantly, I was taken aback by a medicinal smell. It was a very clean smell, but not like an Ajax clean, more of a hospital, sterile clean. The area directly in front of me looked as if I was visiting an emergency room.

I immediately became scared, and being new at this, I had no sense of where to go. I forced myself to walk to a large, round, open desk with people in white coats running around behind. A nurse took my name and made sure I had eaten a good meal in the last hour, which I had. She then handed me brochures and asked me to wait. I sat patiently with the many others who had come to donate blood plasma.

I read the brochures and found out that North American Biological Inc. (NABI) is the world's largest collector and supplier of blood plasma. The company uses donated plasma in research and in helping people with many medical needs. NABI makes prevention and treatment of serious conditions possible, while helping to produce immunizations and laboratory tests. NABI helps save lives everyday.

The NABI mission: "To improve the quality of human life by providing superior products related to diagnosis and therapy of the immune system." The goal: "To strengthen the quality of our products and services through on-going process improvement, research and development."

According to the brochures, the need for plasma is great. The proteins found in plasma are one of "nature's richest raw materials for health care products." Donated plasma is used for the treatment of medical conditions such as "hemophilia, RH immunity, burns, shock, open heart surgery, small pox, tetanus, rabies, German measles and emphysema. Plasma is also used for health prevention, such as its use in medicines and in the search for new medicines. It is hoped that plasma will be used in the future to prevent the spread of AIDS from pregnant mothers to their fetuses."

As all of this information was soaking in, a nurse finally called my name and we began a series of musical chairs from section to section in the big open room. In one section, a nurse took my temperature and blood pressure and pricked my finger for a blood sample. Then she asked several personal questions: "Do you have AIDS?" "Are you an intravenous drug user?" "Have you ever been paid for sex?" These are only a few of many. After answering no to them all, I was moved into yet another room, the exam room. Here I was asked the same questions, but by a different staff member.

Finally, I was directed to the donating section. The beds were very modern, nothing like the hospital beds used for blood donating. These beds were curved to fit the contours of my body. As I lay down and got myself comfortable, I tried to ignore the cabinet-sized machine to my right. I knew I would soon be attached to it.

The nurse came and it all began. She took my arm and hooked a large vein in the bend, and as I looked away, she punctured it. Instantly I felt a burning in my arm, and I saw the blood rushing into a tube that connected me to the machine. Whoa, I figured I had better watch the movie on the television in front of me for a while, but I kept sneaking peeks at my arm. Maybe that is why I cannot remember what movie I was watching. What I was concentrating on was my blood being spun in a centrifuge at the top of the machine. Since plasma is the liquid part of blood and consists mainly of water and proteins, the centrifuge separated my plasma from my blood. What was left of my blood then dripped back into a plastic container. After several minutes of this, the machine I was hooked to made a loud clicking noise, which was not at all comforting to me, then it started restoring my blood to my body. Along with the blood came chemicals. They left my lips numb and also a bad taste in my mouth. After 45 minutes, I was finished. I was a little light-headed when I stood up, but I was ready to get out of there. So I picked up my bag of warm, yellow plasma and walked slowly back to the round desk and gave it to the nurse.

Not only did I get free tests on my plasma, such as drug screening, ALT, syphilis, hepatitis B and C, and AIDS testing, I also got a free physical exam. And cash! I received the regular payment of $20, plus a $5 bonus for going on my birthday and a $2 rebate for having a coupon. I left NABI $27 richer just by losing a little plasma.

Donating plasma is perfectly safe for the contributor. Your body is replacing plasma every second, so it takes only 48 hours for full reproduction. Anyone can give plasma twice a week, with a 48 hour period between donations.

I went out those damn doors that just two hours earlier I was reluctant to walk through. A flood of relief my body. It was all over and I was still conscious! Although I felt so different physically after donating plasma, I left feeling a little richer. Not because of the money, but because by giving a little of myself, I could be giving someone else a chance.

Marat/Sade Makes Debut

An unusual play made its debut Sunday night at UNCW. Directed by Robert Varisco, English graduate student, Marat/Sade depicted the "persecution and assassination of Jean-Paul Marat as performed by the inmates of the asylum of Charenton under the direction of the Marquis de Sade."

The cast of Marat/Sade included: Mark Hossfeld as Marquis de Sade, Jeb Thoms as Jean-Paul Marat, Traci Sym as Charlotte Corday, Todd Squires as Simone Evrard, Alex Wharf as Masr. Coulmier, and Susan Sadler as Herald.

The play, written by Peter Weiss, tests the concepts of an early twentieth century theatre movement called Theatre of Cruelty. Antonin Artaud, progenitor of the new movement, believed that universal symbols were infinitely more useful and powerful than actual language in the context of the stage. According to Artaud, language evolved over time as the center of the dramatic script, and with it the Theatre of Cruelty.

Spectacle, the spontaneous

Play Review

and rapid juxtaposition of primal symbols, was proposed as theatre's new language. The aim is catharsis, a purging of civilization from the theatrical arena.

Enshrouded in a tent, playgoers were subjected to a bombardment of visual, oral, and physical symbols. Toasters hung suspended in the air, popcorn rained on heads, screams and groans were punctuated by eerie moanings from off-stage; all while a cacophony of sound swirled around actors and audience in hope that combinations of symbols, fortuitous or divine, would spiritually transform individual spectators.

The play, sponsored by the Graduate English Association and the Campus Activities Office, serves as a test of Artaud's theoretical concepts of which he never provides a methodology in his writings. Artaud's descriptions border on an esoteric sign language for the psyche.

The cast was superb, successfully forcing the audience to reject preconceived notions of civilization. The play moved smoothly, albeit insensitively, from beginning to end without once letting up on its momentum. A difficult and challenging play, the cast handled the bedlam superbly.

Film Offer with String Attached Lures Star to Small-Screen Role

So what do you do if you want Michael Caine to star in an original movie for your premium cable channel but he's more interested in making feature films? If you're the executives at Showtime, you give him a feature film—provided that he shoot the follow-up cable TV sequel for Showtime.

Caine just completed work on two projects in Russia, reprising the Harry Palmer spy character who made him famous in director Sidney J. Furie's "The Ipcress File" in 1965.

"I did the TV movie because it was the only way they would make the feature," said Caine. The actor has only played a handful of roles for television in three decades, his last this year as Stalin in the NBC miniseries, "World War II: When Lions Roared."

"Bullets to Beijing" and "Midnight in Saint Petersburg" were both filmed for 12 weeks in areas around St. Petersburg for a cost of $9 million. "Beijing" is expected to receive a limited theatrical release next fall.

Macy's Isn't Buying Remake of "Miracle"
Is a "Miracle on 34th Street" without Macy's like a Christmas without Santa Claus? Moviegoers, R.H. Macy & Co. and 20th Century Fox are finding out. The remake of Fox's 1947 fantasy-comedy about Christmas, commercialism, childhood, and faith opens without any of the original film's many references to the legendary New York department store.

In place of Macy's is a fictitious retailer, C.F. Cole. The venerable Macy's Thanksgiving Day parade was even restaged with floats and balloons festooned with Cole's logos.

Macy's says it declined an invitation to participate in the remake because it believes that the original is "a one-of-a-kind classic that just gets better with age."

But the producer and writer of the remake, which follows the first film's Oscar-winning story, and screenplay, says it's more likely that Macy's disdained new subplot about the department store's financial woes, deeming it too much a case of art imitating life.

Attraction is a Funny Thing, Says Carvey

Dana Carvey has some advice for guys who want to meet girls. "The best thing you can do is get a stand-up act together," says Carvey, who has been married nearly 12 years and barely dated before that.

"It's just sheer numbers," he says, sounding like your fifth grade math teacher. "You go to a club for a week, 1,600 people see you, 800 are women. So if five out of 800 like you, you're overflowing with women. Five women like you that week!"

Hatfield to Perform on "So-Called Life"

Singer-songwriter Julianna Hatfield ("My Sister") will guest Dec. 22 on ABC's "My So-Called Life," on which she'll perform a brand-new composition. If you haven't discovered "My So-Called Life," tune in. If you are a teenager, know a teenager, or ever WERE a teenager, this show tells it like it is. It's orchestrated by Marshall Herskovitz and Edward Zwick, the guys who gave us "thirtysomething."

Accent Won Jennifer Jason Leigh a Trip to a Re-Recording Session

Many actors get slammed for bad accents or, in the case of Kevin Costner in "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves," not bothering to try one at all. But Jennifer Jason Leigh has been rapped for mastering an accent all to well.

Leigh nailed Dorothy Parker's affected, clipped mid-Atlantic brogue so well in Fine Line's forthcoming "Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle" that audiences who saw an early cut of the film—especially at its world premiere at the Cannes Film Festival—simply couldn't understand her.

Parker's snippy upper-crust delivery was her signature. Leigh, known for her thorough research of every part she plays, grabbed every tape of Parker's voice she could get her hands on to master her character's intonation.

Trent Leonard's Trivial Pursuits

What happened? What in the world happened? What could have possibly gone wrong? Has the world gone mad? It was simply not meant to be.

These questions and many more filled my head at approximately 6:30 p.m. last Saturday. I sat by with intense anticipation and saw the dreadful end to a fantastic national title chase given by the Alabama Crimson Tide.

What incredible heroes they all are, especially one Jay Barker who entering the game had a near perfect record of 32-1-1 as a starter. Jay has now suffered his second loss in an incredible four years at "Bama, but still can go out to a winner whenever the Tide faces the Ohio State Buckeyes in the Citrus Bowl. Watch out Buckeyes (what exactly is a "buckeye" anyway?) because Jay and the Gang will not be beaten twice. They have already missed a chance at their second national title in three years by ONE POINT, so do not even consider the possibility of a bowl victory. I believe the boys have earned this one! I suppose one national title will have to suffice for Jay and the other seniors. I mean, how often does a guy get a chance at two national titles? They are not greedy men, but are still winners nevertheless.

Meanwhile, my streak of mourning is almost concluded. Monday was very hard, but I am much better as of today.

Have a good Christmas break. I believe that after all of the holiday hub-bub is spent and done with, I will have to hit the slopes of the NC mountains for about three days of glorious skiing. Hope something interesting and fun envelops you over the holidays.

I will, however, be thinking of all of the athletes that will be spending part, in not most of their Christmas break training or traveling for games, or both (i.e. the Swimming and Diving Team, the Basketball teams, etc.).

Have a nice break and I hope to see you back in the hopefully colder month of January!

Oh, and before I forget, here is the Mad Monk schedule for the remainder of the year. If you have a chance and can spare the time before, during, or after exams, there are some good bands playing.

Thursday, December 8, is Ladies Night with Psychobilly, Phantom Rockers, and Wreckin' Ball (dollar beer and $.25 draft). Friday, December 9, Souls at Zero will perform with Squeal. Saturday, December 10, The Amateurs will be in town with a Reggae flare. Wednesday, December 14, Biohazard will appear with Unsub and Stomphop. Friday, December 16, Lecwaw, with Boneyard and Hate Campaign comes to the Monk. Saturday, December 17, Black Uhuru. And finally, Sunday, December 18, is Public Enemy!

Hughes' Try Shy of Real "Miracle"

BY MICHAEL H. PRICE

New York Times News Service

John Hughes has done his doggedest to put a modern-day spin on "Miracle on 34th Street," but the venerable Santa Claus yarn resists, remaining rooted in a pre-1950 homesickness even as the Hughes remake yanks it bodily into the troubled present day.

A "Miracle in the Heartland" approach might have made this version really fresh, especially when one considers that producer Hughes' rewrite takes pains to identify his villains with the discount-retail industry—a quantity-over-quality racket that has caused more economic distress in small-town America than it has in the big city where "Miracle" takes place. A touch of ethnic diversity, too, would have broadened the new film's appeal beyond measure. But even though the new "Miracle" offers little improvement over the 1947 original or an equally fine mid-1950's television version, Hughes' heart is in the right place, and he has found an ideal Santa Claus in the English actor-director Richard Attenborough. Kriss Kringle (Attenborough), a.k.a. Santa Claus, is cooling his heels in New York around Christmastime when he becomes embroiled in a controversy over a drunken impostor. Enlisted to "impersonate" Santa Claus by desperate department-store executive Elizabeth Perkins, Kringle seizes the opportunity to test the extent to which people believe in him.

A warm glow suffuses the proceedings...

This strategy puts him to work for a classy old-line department store, whose future is jeopardized by a predatory discount chain. As Kringle's very presence seems to stabilize the old store's prospects for survival, the discount goons move in, ultimately landing Kringle in a sanitarium that could cause him to be locked away on grounds of derangement.

Believers abound in the story, which derives from George Seaton's 1947 adaptation of the Valentine Davis novelette. But it is the non-believers who bring out the fiery spirit in Santa Claus, whom Attenborough plays as a figure of surpassing good will and selfless missionary dedication. Perkins is very good as the fast-track business executive who refuses to trust anyone.

A warm glow suffuses the proceedings, and "Miracle" must be the first Hughes production where his sentimental streak takes precedence over his fondness for rude slapstick. The story brings out the best in Hughes, who falls only a tad short of the beloved old tale.

Based out of Chicago, Illinois, popular local band Hello Dave has carols to an a cappella version of "Silent Night."

Released a Christmas CD that will not only get you into the Christmas spirit, but will also help charity.

Hello Dave is one of the fastest rising bands in Chicago. And according to Michael Stipe of REM, Hello Dave is one of the best new bands in America. Songs on the "A Hello Dave Christmas" include songs ranging from traditional Christmas

Examples, and Paul Boiger of Mr. Blotto.

Benefitting Camp Heartland, a Wisconsin based camp for children infected by HIV/AIDS and their siblings, the project attracted both local and national talent. Appearing on the CD with Hello Dave are: Cary Pierce of Jackpierce, Ralph Covert of The Bad

Music Brings Out Tragedian In Singer

BY DAN DeLUCA

Knight-Ridder News Service

Jon Mitchell doesn't mean to be so melancholy.

"I just can't help myself," says the quintessential singer-songwriter, with a giggle. "My music forces me to be a tragedian."

That's right, a giggle. Mitchell may well be the ultimate icon of depressed professionalism, the creator of heart-sick classics that have served as emotional blankets to a generation of sensitive souls. But she's no sorrows.

"I just like beautiful music, and most beautiful music is sad," Mitchell said cheerily one recent evening (she's a late riser, no interviews before 4 in the afternoon) at an Upper East Side hotel. The subject of her visit to the East Coast is the darkly "Turbulent Indigo." The recently released album is her first collection of new material since the 1991 return to form "Night Ride Home," and her first record for Reprise since her 1971 masterpiece "Blue."

"I remember the first place that really made me swoon," she says, on the edge of the sofa, chain-smoking Marlboro Lights and drinking coffee, her straw-colored hair falling over her shoulders.

"I heard it in a Kirk Douglas movie called 'The Story of Three Loves.' It was Rachmaninoff, 'Variations on a Theme of Paganini.' I was just a baby"—10 years old, in Saskatchewan, Saskatchewan, in Canada—"and I didn't have any money. So I would go downtown to the record store where you could go into a glass booth, take the 78s out of their brown paper and listen to see if you liked them. And I would listen to that over and over again. To this day, it's the saddest and most beautiful piece of music I've ever heard."

It's the kind of melancholy that Mitchell, 50, was drawn to while composing the 10 songs of "Indigo," which considers such weighty topics as teenage pregnancy, battered women, AIDS, and the ozone layer, and finds a spiritual center in the biblical sorrows of Job. (The title of her 17th album does not intend any association with "Blue," Kringle quickly points out—it's merely meant to describe the volatile artistic life.)

At home in Los Angeles, she built guitar and piano parts that are central to the album's sparse arrangements, which feature the bass of Mitchell's husband, Larry Klein. (The couple have been separated for nearly three years, but still work together.) Additional nuances are provided by the soprano sax of Wayne Shorter and the husky soul of British vocalist Seal, who contributes to a bittersweet cover of "How Do You Stop," written for James Brown in 1986. All are sung, of course, in Mitchell's often-imitated but immediately distinctive voice, which age and cigarettes have turned dark, but which remains capable of bursts of brightness like those on the despairing "Last Chance Lost."

While the music isn't as free or inspired as that of "Blue" or "Ladies of the Canyon" or even "Night Ride Home"—and it's too weighed down with topicality, to boot—its emotional timbre and acoustic setting will be familiar to devotees of classic Joni.

"Every piece of music, as melancholy as it may sound, I play for love," she says. "It's like petting a cat. I sit up late at night and twist songs into new tunings. ... It's a very joyous experience. And for the most part, my love of melody tends toward those kinds of complex, emotional chords. You can't put jolly little words to that kind of thing."

Indeed, the words are not jolly. "Sex Kills"—inspired by a "JUST ICE" license plate that Mitchell found herself behind during the L.A. riots—begins as a rumination on justice and devolves into a laundry list of the late-20th century ills ("Little kids packin' guns to school/The ulcerated zone"). In the extended set piece "The Sire of Sorrow (Job's Sad Song)," Mitchell speaks in the voice of the biblical figure and questions the logic of the Lord ("I've lost all taste for life/I'm all complaints/Tell me why do you starve the faithful?/Why do you crucify the saints?").

And the song that's likely to garner the most attention, "Not to Blame," Mitchell plays somber piano and addresses the plight of battered women, her outrage seemingly centered on singer-songwriter contemporary Jackson Browne.

"The story hit the news from coast to coast/They said you beat the girl you loved the most/Your charitable acts seemed out of place/With the beauty with your fist marks on her face" goes the first verse, an apparent reference to tabloid reports that Browne had beaten his girlfriend, actress Darryl Hannah.

Mitchell declines to discuss the lyrics, saying only, "There's no need to reduce such a general subject to any specific person. My songs are composites."

UNCW Admissions Strengthens Recruitment For Freshmen

BY JAN KELLER

In quest of high academic ability and a higher percentage of minority students for its student body, the University of North Carolina at Wilmington has hired two new prospectors for its admission office.

As admissions representatives, Rolanda Burney and Cathryn Helms will seek out high school students with strong scholastic records, particularly African American, native American and students from foreign countries. In addition to representing the university at state and regional college fairs, they will also meet with and counsel prospective students when they visit UNCW.

A Wilmington native, Burney earned her B.A. degree in English from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She has publication and public relations experience.

A Fayetteville native, Helms earned her B.A. degree in education from UNCW where she participated in a variety of student activities. She received additional education at Peace College and Fayetteville State University.

Recent Renovations Enhance Kenan Auditorium

The magic of performances at UNCW's Kenan Auditorium will be enhanced with recent renovations including a state-of-the-art computer-controlled lighting system and new rigging.

"These staging improvements are just the beginning," said Don Hawley, Kenan's manager. "With community involvement in the Adopt-A-Seat Campaign, we will bring Kenan up to the federal standards for wheelchair access to performances, while replacing well-worn 25-year-old seating."

Sponsors of the new seats donate $150 (100% tax deductible) to the campaign. In return, a plaque is affixed to the new seat identifying the donor or the donor's dedication.

Wilmington lighting technicians from theatre companies and other organizations are currently being trained to use the new lighting system. The first group to use the new system was Ujamma Black Theatre Company from New York for its performance Nov. 19 of "For the Love of My Black Woman."

The renovations included the addition of two new stalls in the ladies restrooms. For further information, contact: Don Hawley 910-395-3442

McGriff Scores Big

by Eric Totten

Preston McGriff made sure UNCW remained perfect on the season and in the USAir East Coast Classic Basketball Tournament. The 6-foot-11 junior center had the biggest game of his career with highs in both points and rebounds to earn tournament MVP honors as the Seahawks beat Murray State 81-73 for their third straight East Coast tournament championship Saturday night.

In the opening game of the tournament UNCW took to the Bulldogs from UNC Asheville. The Seahawks defeated the Bulldogs 73-60 but Coach Jerry Wainwright was not impressed. "I would like to tell you that we improved tonight, but we didn't. I thought our play was very inconsistent at times."

In the opening game Chris Meighen led all scorers for the Seahawks with 17 points and McGriff added 13 points and seven rebounds. Freshman guard Mark Byington also had a career-high 12 points. The Seahawks dominated the boards, outrebounding Asheville 35-22.

With the win Friday night UNCW advanced to the championship game Saturday night against Murray State, which defeated Troy State 107-97 in a record setting tournament opener. Murray State was last year's fifth leading scoring team in Division I basketball, averaging 90 points per contest.

In the championship game UNCW jumped out to an early lead, with tough defense and sharp shooting, at half time UNCW led by 15, 43-38. The Seahawks were up by as much as 13 with 10:36 to play, but the Racers fought back and cut the lead to 3, 70-67 with 2:27 remaining on a 3-pointer by William Moore from the top of the key.

That was when McGriff came up big down the stretch.

The strong 255-pounder dunked the ball to give UNCW a 72-67 lead with just 1:51 left and then was fouled while rebounding a missed Murray State shot at the other end. McGriff sank the two free throws to ice the game. McGriff finished with 25 points and 12 rebounds.

Ganon Baker also had career highs in points and rebounds with 20 and six respectively.

Coach Wainwright commented on the teams play after the game. "I think we looked ahead last night (Friday night). I challenged them this morning to take a step ahead and that's what they did."

Despite the play of McGriff and Baker, Wainwright thought the difference in the game might have come from guards Donny Hackworth and Lamont Franklin.

"I thought the key was Donny and Lamont, who came out and really played some tough defense on their best player, Marcus Brown. That got us in the game from the start and Donny really set the tone for us tonight."

McGriff was joined on the All-Tournament team by teammates Chris Meighen and Ganon Baker. Their apparent success satisfies Okonkwo and his fellow tribe members.

Visions Of Football At UNCW

The hollow ting of the aluminum bat as the DH rips a single down the first base line, driving in the game-winning run in the ninth inning; the awesome quiet of the coliseum as the point guard arches a desperation three pointer into the air just before the final buzzer sounds, the snap of the net as the ball goes through, then the thunderous explosion of cheering and yelling as a bunch of half-crazed students swarm the floor; the pop of shoulder pads above the din of cow bells and chants of "De-fense-De-fense!" as the opposing running back is met head on at the line of scrimmage on the last play of the game, thus preserving the victory. Ah, the sights and sounds of college athletics. Hey, wait a minute. I must be dreaming. I'm not at Chapel Hill or Duke or even Tar Heel High School. I'm at UNCW. There aren't any running backs around here. What was I thinking? The only popping of shoulders pads you're going to hear at this college is if the person in the dorm next to you has his TV turned up so loud that it's ridiculous. "The give is to the tailback who goes right side trying to find a hole but is gonna be stopped short of the goal line as he is met head on by a wall of defenders!" If you're looking for some Saturday afternoon football excitement in Wilmington you'd better get that remote handy or else call up all those guys you played intramural ball with for a bone crushing game of flag football. UNCW fields a lot of variety teams and that's great. It really is. Some of the teams receive a lot of recognition: basketball, baseball, soccer. Of those, some even have a generous amount of fans at the events: basketball and, well, basketball and, let's see, well, just basketball. The other teams have to toil away in relative obscurity. How many members of the soccer team can you name? Two, maybe three? How about swim or track? Hey, how many basketball players, men or women, can you really name? Come on, now. Be honest. Don't lie. Chances are that you can't even name many of our round ball players. That's not so good. Don't get me wrong, though. I'm not knocking any of those athletic teams. I'm just trying to make a point about a very popular sport with a high degree of attendance (which translates into more $$$ for the school) and the fact that we do not compete in that sport. So, back to my point. Football, along with basketball and baseball, is a traditional college sport that tends to draw large numbers of spectators, yet we don't have a team. I know that it's supposed to be cool and all to break tradition. I guess that's part of being young and in college. With that being the case, why don't we break the tradition that we have developed here at UNCW, that of not having a football team, and demand that we get one? With over 8,000 students and an increasing popularity and presence among incoming college freshmen in the state, why do we not field a football team? It certainly can't be said that we do not have the property for a football stadium. I don't know about you, but the last time I looked there was a whole lot of grass out there on Brooks Field. And who needs a stadium? All you need is a big field with two goal posts and some bleachers on each side. Could lack of student interest be the problem? I don't know. I haven't conducted a formal survey of student opinion, but this can be considered a call for you to respond with your opinions and ideas. The excuse I've heard most often from those that I have asked is that it would cost too much money to start a football program. It wouldn't be cheap, but it doesn't have to cost an arm and a leg, either. We don't need a Bobby Bowden coaching and we don't need the Orange Bowl to play in. We just need the basics to begin with. If the program is financially successful and necessity requires it, make improvements to the facilities in the future. I do know this much: remember Tar Heel, the high school that I mentioned earlier? Well, that's where I went to high school. It's a very small middle-high school with about 450-500 students. It's a county school in a rural county. Bladen, that is not exactly known for its broad tax base. However, despite its small size and limited financial resources, each season, for as long as anybody around here can remember, Tar Heel High School has played varsity football every Friday night during the regular season. On top of that, they've also been able to field a junior varsity team as well. That's two, count them, two football teams. If a tiny, poor, county supported school like UNCW can field two football teams, why can't a large, state supported institution like UNCW field just one? With all the things that college has to offer, we're still missing out on a lot here at UNCW. Millions of college students and alumni across the country go out to their respective football fields each Saturday and cheer on their teams. That's something we can't do here at UNCW, and that's a shame. UNCW is a great school with a lot to offer, but a football team is not one of them. As attractive to incoming freshmen and the community as UNCW is, imagine what a football team would do for our image. Would you like to be able to go see UNCW play football on Saturday afternoon? Write the paper, write the chancellor. If nothing else, rip off a corner of a piece of paper, write "Yes-Football," or "No-Football," whatever your preference, stick it in an envelope and mail it (no stamp is required if you mail it through the campus post office) to the Seahawks. And Thank You for your support.

Coaches Attack On Cancer

Coaches from seven major North Carolina institutions announce their Three-Point Attack on cancer. This new partnership with the North Carolina Division of the American Cancer Society is a part of the nationwide Coaches vs. Cancer program adopted by the National Association of Basketball Coaches in memory of Jim Valvano. The Three-Point Attack combines the excitement of the three-point shot with raising funds for the American Cancer Society's three-prong cancer control program (cancer research, education, and patient services). North Carolina Schools participating include Duke University, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, UNC-Wilmington, UNC-Charlotte, Wake Forest University, North Carolina State University, and East Carolina University.

Kenny Dennard, Coaches vs. Cancer team leader, former Duke basketball player and cancer survivor announced, "We were so encouraged by the overwhelming response by coaches in this state who have dedicated themselves to fighting cancer. I am delighted that Coach Mike Krzyzewski has emerged as a national leader and we are sure fans will share the same enthusiasm for this cause as they do for the game. We hope to generate a lot of interschool competition to see who can score the most points and raise the most money."

According to Duke basketball coach, Mike Krzyzewski, "Cancer touches all of us and this is one way that we as coaches can help fight this deadly disease. It's also a way for fans to support their favorite team while helping their community. I would like to invite all basketball fans to join Dean Smith, Dave Odom, Les Robinson, Jeff Mullins, Eddie Payne, Jerry Wainwright and me in fighting this battle on and off the court."

Anyone can participate by pledging an amount per three point shot made by their team during the basketball season. To pledge, fans (individuals and/or corporations can call 1-800-345-TEAM or sign up during some home games. Groups are encouraged to form their own teams. Pledges will be collected at the end of the season. This program is financially supported by the Doctors Health Plan, Inc., a North Carolina health maintenance organization.

Erik Totten's Tales From... The Dumpster

It's safe to say we're on the home stretch, only one more week of classes and then those damn exams and then we're out of here for awhile, some of us longer than others. You fools that are graduating... I really envy you. I would give my right arm (my dribbling arm) and various other parts of my anatomy to be leaving and actually earning some real cashola. Good luck, all of us stuck back here at Good ole UNCW Wanker will be jealous of you. Oh, it's not that bad - but I sure will be glad to finally graduate.

Anyway, this is not a social commentary this is sports so let's get to it.

I guess all of you saw the result of the Florida - Alabama game. I hate to say I told you so, but well, I did. After Nebraska wins the national title I don't think any of you will be able to help but worship me and my abundance of football insight. I've heard a few words by a few misguided souls (I won't say who - Trent, your entertainment editor) that actually believes Penn State will get a share of the National Title if Nebraska wins. For all of you that might actually entertain this notion let me help you out. First off Nebraska is number one in both major polls and they are going into a bowl game in which they will play a much higher ranked team than Penn State. Nebraska will be taking on number three Miami at Miami's home field, Penn State, on the other hand will be playing the Oregon Ducks. I think it's obvious here which game is a tougher match up (they called Ducks for god sakes - they quack). Second, Nebraska has played much tougher schedule than Penn State. Just for you amateurs here is who Penn State played who is worth talking about - Michigan (who used to be good but where are they now), and the only other team that is actually ranked anymore is Ohio State, probably their best opponent even though Illinois played them tough. Nebraska on the other hand has played Texas Tech. (who is in a bowl game), Kansas St. (who is ranked and also in a bowl game), Colorado (ranked 2nd at the time and in the Fiesta bowl), and Oklahoma (who just lost their coach and is a tough rival). From my shaded eyes this is a hell of a lot tougher schedule than those imbeciles from Penn State. OK that's my little speech about Nebraska and their divine right to win the National Title should they beat Miami in the Orange Bowl.

Speaking of football we have a little guest writer this week who has written about the often voiced desire by many students to have a football team at UNCW. The article raises some good points. Speaking for myself I would love to see it, but I don't look for it any time this decade. I would like to hear what the rest of you out there in UNCW land think though so write me here at the Seahawk and let me know.

On a closing note I am proud to announce that I am in some kick butt shape due to my training regiment that I am following by scrimmaging against the girls basketball team. I have gained some more valuable insight into scrimmaging against girls. The most important thing I have learned is to not even try to be nice. There have been a few times out their when in the heat of practice I have actually (by mistake: of course) knocked somebody over or fouled somebody. Due to me always being such a nice guy I try to apologize or to help them back up but let me tell you, that won't have any of that. And even worse - God help you if you try and make a joke, I know I'm not the funniest guy in the world (I'm sure your all surprised to find this out) but I like to joke around but I'll tell you what. I don't joke around when I scrimmage anymore. There have been a few times out there when I was actually afraid I was going to get beat up. I almost took my ball and went home. I can't tell you how many times I have been beaten to the floor on a drive or smacked around when I was trying (I emphasize trying) to rebound. I have to admit it has all been a lesson in humility. I've gone from thinking I was an all right player to thinking I basically am not that good. I have also come to the conclusion that I am pretty much a wimp, I never would have thought that I would get beat up by so many people in a two hour span. I like to play on the outside courts a lot but let me tell you, their nothing out their compared to these girls, these girls are tough.

All right that's it for now, all of you enjoy your break and make sure and watch the bowl games (especially the Orange one - look for me - West End Zone, seats 33 & 34). I'll have a full update when I get back but until then keep your head out of the Dumpster and I'll see you back here, same time, same place.

For all of you that might actually entertain this notion let me help you out. First off Nebraska is number one in both.
